5. "Kate Carnegie." By Maclaren. Dodd, Mead & Co.
6. "Quo Vadis." By Sienkiewicz. Little, Brown & Co.

BOOKSELLING NOTES.

ON Wednesday, the 17th, Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, & Hodge will sell by auction a number of printed books and MSS., including a small collection of books printed in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the property of a gentleman. The sale will include first editions of Shelley, Keats, Lover, &c. We observe that the last lot of all, No. 666, is Our Gutter Children, by George Cruikshank—a work which some admirer of Mr. Phil May should have the wit to secure for comparison with Gutter-Snipes.

THE same firm will dispose, on the 19th and 20th, of the library of Mr. George Shaw, which is also plentiful of first editions, and includes long series of works illustrated by George Cruikshank. We notice also many first editions of Dickens and Thackeray. A book in this sale which we should be curious to see is Hollar's Ornatu Muliebris Anglicanus: or, the Several Habits of English women as They are in these Times (1640). There are twenty-six plates, and the bookplate is Speaker Onslow's. Hollar joined grace and accuracy in his etchings of London, but we are not familiar with his figure subjects.

THERE has recently died an aged literary worker whose career should not have passed, as it did, unnoticed by the public press. We refer to Mr. Joseph Smith, the Quaker bookseller and bibliographer. For more years than we can estimate Mr. Smith has been a familiar figure in the world of second-hand books. His Catalogue of Friends' Books ranks high among bibliographies, and we believe that few works of its kind are in more constant use in the British Museum Reading Room. Its 2,000 pages, filled with the names of books written by Quakers, are invaluable to all students of Puritan history and literature, and to many biographers and compilers whose work lies outside the Quaker sphere.

THE Catalogue appeared in 1867, and it was Mr. Smith's amiable boast that it soon lay in every library from the Vatican to the Capitol at Washington. Mr. Joseph Smith was too keen a bibliographer to be a successful bookseller; at all events, he failed to combine these two branches of his calling successfully. A grant of £50 from Mr. Gladstone cheered his old age, but raised hopes of a pension which were not realised. Three years ago he brought out a Supplement to his Catalogue of Friends' Books, which had already been followed by his Anti-Quakeriana—a voluminous catalogue of works directed against the doctrines of the sect to which he belonged.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THERE is a noticeable activity in theological publishing just now which may not be wholly unconnected with the approach of Lent. Under the heading of History we place only one book, but it is a host in itself. It will be interesting to compare Mr. John Burroughs' lengthy study of Walt Whitman from America with the English study of the same poet by the late Mr. John Addington Symonds. In Fiction, Mr. Stephen Crane's The Little Regiment, and in Essays the late Dean Church's Occasional Papers, are books that will be welcomed.

THEOLOGY.

- THE NICENE CREED. By J. J. Lias, M.A. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 6s.
- THE APOCALYPSE OF ST. JOHN: New Syriac Version. By John Gwynn, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co.
- "HIS DIVINE MAJESTY": or, the Living God. By William Humphrey, S.J. Thomas Baker 6s. 6d.
- THE SYMPATHY OF THE PASSION. By the Rev. F. W. Isaacs. S.P.C.K.
- THE SPIRIT OF THE WATERS. By Edwin A. Abbott. Macmillan & Co.
- FROM OUR DEAD SELVES TO HIGHER THINGS. By Frederick James Cant. James Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE EVOLUTION OF THE UNIVERSE. By William W. Howard. James Nisbet & Co. 12s. 6d.
- S.P.C.K. PUBLICATIONS: GODFATHERS AT CONFIRMATION—THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY—THE INTERNAL EVIDENCE OF THE LETTER "APOSTOLICAL CURE" AS TO ITS OWN ORIGIN AND VALUE—THE BEARING OF THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION ON CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE.

HISTORY.

- LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Arranged and catalogued by James Gairdner and R. H. Brodie. Eyre & Spottiswoode.

SCIENCE.

- ELEMENTS OF THEORETICAL PHYSICS. By Dr. C. Christensen. Translated by W. F. Magie, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. 12s.

BIOGRAPHY.

- NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1851-72. By the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff. John Murray. 18s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS: A MANUAL AND DICTIONARY OF THE FLOWERING PLANTS AND FERNS. By J. C. Willis, M.A. 2 vols. Cambridge University Press. 10s. 6d.

- ATHENÆUM PRESS SERIES: CARLYLE'S "SARTOR RESARTUS." Edited by Archibald MacMechan. Ginn & Co. (Boston). 5s. 6d.

ART, POETRY, AND BELLES LETTRES.

- WHITMAN. By John Burroughs. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.
- THE TEMPLE DRAMATISTS: ARDEN OF FEVERSHAM. Edited by Rev. Ronald Bayns. J. M. Dent & Co.
- THE MAGIC KEY. By Isaac Willcocks. Digby, Long & Co. 1s. 6d.
- OCASIONAL PAPERS. By the late Dean Church. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. 5s. each.

- BEAU AUSTIN. By W. E. Henley and R. L. Stevenson. New Edition. William Heinemann. 1s. 6d.
- LONGMAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS: COLERIDGE'S THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER. Edited by Herbert Bates, B.A. 1s. 4d. And Macaulay's ESSAY ON MILTON. Edited by James Greenleaf Crosswell. Longmans, Green & Co. 1s. 4d.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- ROMANTIC RICHMONDSHIRE. By Harry Speight. Elliot Stock.

PHILOSOPHY.

- THE RATIONAL OR SCIENTIFIC IDEA OF MORALITY. By P. F. Fitzgerald. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 7s. 6d.

FICTION.

- GILBERT MURRAY. By A. E. Houghton. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
- AGAINST THE ODDS. By Frances Home. Jarrold & Sons. 2s. 6d.
- THE OLD ECSTASIES. By Gaspard Trahern. Bellairs & Co. 3s. 6d.
- A DAUGHTER'S GRIEF. By Francis Henry Cliff. Bellairs & Co. 3s. 6d.
- A MISSING WITNESS. By Frank Barrett. Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d.
- AN AUSTRALIAN DUCHESS. By Amyot Sagon. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
- THE SPOILS OF FOXTON. By Henry James. William Heinemann.
- PHOSCO. By Anthony Hope. Methuen & Co. 6s.
- LONGMAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS: WOODSTOCK. Edited by Bliss Perry, M.A. 3s. 6d. And TALES OF A TRAVELLER. With an Introduction by Prof. Brander Matthews. 2s. 6d.
- THE SUPPLANTER. By B. Paul Neuman. Methuen & Co. 3s. 6d.
- MANGILD AND DUST. By Björnstjerne Björnson. William Heinemann. 3s.
- THE LITTLE REGIMENT. By Stephen Crane. William Heinemann. 2s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- GREENWOOD'S LIBRARY YEAR BOOK, 1897. Edited by Thomas Greenwood. Cassell & Co.
- THE LAND OF CAKES AND BRITISH SCOTS. By T. B. Johnston. Alexander Gardner (Paisley).
- DEMON POSSESSION AND ALLIED THEMES. By Rev. John L. Nevins. George Redway. 7s. 6d.
- COLLECTANEA HERMETICA: Vol. VIII., EGYPTIAN MAGIC. By S. S. D. D. Theosophical Publishing Society. 3s. 6d.
- CHRONOLOGIES AND CALENDARS. By James C. Macdonald. William Andrews & Co. 7s. 6d.
- THE HORSE IN ART AND NATURE. Part III. By Cecil Brown, M.A.

PHILOLOGY.

- A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL LIST OF WORKS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE DIALECT OF NORTHERN IRELAND. Compiled by R. Oliver Hislop. English Dialect Society. Henry Frowde. 4s.
- A WARWICKSHIRE WORD-BOOK. By G. F. Northall. English Dialect Society. Henry Frowde. 15s.
- TWO COLLECTIONS OF DERIVATIVES. By Samuel Pegge. With Introductions by Prof. Skeat and Thomas Halliwell. English Dialect Society. Henry Frowde. 12s. 6d.
- LAKELAND AND IRELAND. By Rev. T. Ellwood, M.A. Henry Frowde. 5s.

FOREIGN.

- ETUDE CRITIQUE DU MATÉRIALISME ET DU SPIRITUALISME PAR LA PHYSIQUE EXPÉRIMENTALE. Par Raoul Pictet. Félix Alcan (Paris).
- LA CHRONIQUE DE SULPICE SEVÈRE. Livre I. Par André Lavertujon. Librairie Hachette et Cie.
- ALTPREUSSISCHE MONATSSCHRIFT. Herausgegeben von Rudolf Reicke und Ernst Wichert. Ferdinand Beyer (Königsberg in Pr.).
- NUOVA ANTOLOGIA RIVISTA DI SCIENZE, LETTERE ED ARTI (Roma).

MILITARY.

- TOWARDS KEANTOUM. By A. Hilliard Atteridge. A. D. Innes & Co. 16s.

ANTIQUITIES.

- MONOGRAPH OF THE CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF WELLS. By Alfred A. Clarke. Arthur G. Young (Wells).
- THE CHURCH AND OTHER BELLS OF KINGDOMSHIRE. By F. C. Eeles. W. Jolly & Sons (Aberdeen).

PERIODICALS, PAMPHLETS, &c.

- THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, THE FORUM, THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THEOLOGY, LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.
- AMERICAN ACADEMY OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCES. The following pamphlets: Crime and the Census—The First Apportionment of Federal Representatives in the United States—Current Transportation Topics—Values, Positive and Relative.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

A NEW book by Alphonse Daudet is always an event of interest. The Trésor d'Arlatan is a pretty trifle, prettily illustrated, and if it lack much of the old charm that captivated us in the delightful Contes Choisis, and possesses none of the humours of Tartarin, it still has the exotic perfumes of Provence to lend it some resemblance of the witchery of Daudet's earlier manner. The old familiar words are there: the arid plain of the Crau, the Camargue, the Rhône, and the mistral. These suffice to create a kind of mirage of remembrance, and evoke vague, floating images of the South. Quaint names like Mitifio, Charlon, Nais, and coloured pictures of blonde Arlesian peasants complete the illusion. A betrayed Parisian goes down to Provence in search of cure and forgetfulness. Zia, the maid who attends him, is a slip of a girl waiting to make her bon jour, as the Provençals call the first communion, which is mysteriously put off each year by the priest, to the desolation of her family. "Ah, what passes through the heads of these kittens!" cries her brother-in-law, Charlon. "Yet she's a good child in every way. None the less there is something wrong. Nais and I don't know what to make of it." It was a queer tale, he sighs, but surely now that the little one is away from the town temptations of looking-glasses, shops, ribbons, and laces, matters would run straight; for in Camargue there is nothing but the mysterious treasure of Arlatan. Arlatan is a horse-keeper and inventor of pomades for the cure of rheumatism and malaria—a village scoundrel and extinct Lothario, whose treasure consists in a box of dry herbs and evil photographs. It is the thought of this treasure that haunts poor Zia, and cruelly retards her first communion, which is felt to be a public disgrace and scandal.

"I have never done any wrong," she sobs to the Parisian, "but I have a great misfortune to bear—I see things—oh, such things! It's terrible. Two years now; and all I have done to cast these horrors from me. But it is finished now. I feel it. I have nothing to hope for. There is no rest for my eyes but at the bottom of the Vacarès."

A little while afterwards the waves of the Vacarès floated her young body to the bank, and she lay among the sands wrapped in her long Arlesian mantle, pallid, with the haunted look in her eyes they had held in life. Little Zia died from her desire to see the treasure of Arlatan. Slight as the sketch is, with its strange and pathetic meaning, there are some delightful descriptions in it, luminous and broadly tinted, and little scenes of charming suggestiveness and melancholy grace. M. Daudet's touch may tremble, but its delicate perfection in impressionism does not fail him. He describes a walk across a silent field, "velvety, elastic, where scarce bushes, appearing now and again, kept the impress of the mistral and remained twisted, leaning southward, in an attitude of perpetual flight"; before the pond of the Vacarès—

"two leagues of water without a boat, a sail; two leagues of flashing waves, with a soft ripple that attracted quantities of black duck, herons, rosy-winged flamingoes, sometimes even ibises, the real ibis of Egypt, at home in this resplendent sunshine and amid this silent landscape. What, above all, the solitude disengaged for him was the impression of soothing, of security, which he felt for the first time since his departure for Paris."

Might not this be one of Millet's pictures, broad, and noble, and quiet?

"As the sun descended slowly over the water, the wind went down. One only heard the light furling of the waves, and the voice of the drover gathering his troop dispersed along the edges of the pond. 'Lucifer!' 'Estell,' 'l'Esterel.' At the call of his name each beast ran, its mane lifted by the wind, and came to eat its hay from the drover's hand, who, dismounted, his fustian jacket across one shoulder, big spatter-dashes reaching above the knees, leant against the heavy saddle, and began to read from a little pink-covered book. Beneath the setting sun, how beautiful all these flying manes and the majestically absent gesture of the drover distributing hay as he drew it from a leather bag, without interrupting his reading."

Again he writes of "the grandiose frame of this heroic pose," and describes the drover's head as "Assyrian, with large, correct features, a long greyish beard, a complexion of old ivory all wrought with little wrinkles."

How much wiser M. Bertrand, the Director of the French Academy, would have been to procure the collaboration of M. Gaston Deschamps in his reply to M. Gaston Paris at the Academy the other day, in place of relying upon his own resources. Instead of a dull discourse, the audience would have had a light and witty one. Here is one pleasant suggestion M. Deschamps offered M. Bertrand in sketching beforehand his probable speech:

"A mathematician replying to a philologist, who in turn succeeds a chemist, is, I admit, a fact to disconcert the prejudices of frivolous persons who come to our séances solely to be amused. This singular conjunction will rouse, I fear, bad humour in those who reproach us with being obdurate to the glories of the vaudeville and inclement to the solicitations of pornography. It will be said, perhaps, that men of letters are lacking here to-day, that the Academy is inexorable for the makers of literature, that, in a word, we are wrong not to elect in a mass, once for all, so many novelists who make a perpetual income with the revenues of adultery indefatigably begun and re-begun; so many comic moralists, who pretend to excite us to virtue in disrobing the eternal and vulgar sin upon the stage; finally, so many poets, symbolists, decadents, instrumentists, naturistes, animalists, arrivists, who have marched off noisily to war against grammar, against prosody, against all powers, human and divine, and who, having profited by their little scandal, employ their fortieth year in practices of repentance, in a zeal of conversion, in excesses of grammatical correction and prosodical docility that would have astonished Boileau himself."

Sur les Ruines, by Maurice Paleologue, a book just published by Messrs. Calmann Lévy, appeared in the Revue de Paris. One wonders why, because the novel is by no means up to the level of the work that brilliant review usually publishes. It is a cheap and commonplace tale of the inevitable situation, without style, characterisation, freshness of observation, or originality of any kind to justify the hackneyed subject. We are meant to find pathos in the deception and sorrows of the heroine, the usual married woman with the usual duty to perform to herself, her husband, her country, and her biographer; clandestine visits to the hero's entresol, in order to furnish the novelist with constant repetitions of all the usual nauseous details. Another lady, a blonde and beautiful Englishwoman, visits the hero on the same errand, and the blighted heroine is stabbed to the heart (metaphorically), goes down to the South, and dies of consumption, leaving a letter for the perfidious lover to assure him that love is the greatest and holiest thing in life. She has a daughter, a husband, and a mother; but these seem to be inanimate objects in her existence.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Le Maître de l'Heure. Hugues Leroux.

Amitié Amoureuse.

Le Haut. Edouard Rod.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

VOLTAIRE expressed the opinion that the study of mathematics, while abnormally developing in a lopsided manner one solitary faculty, left the mind at large very much as it found it; and experience and candour compel us to admit that only by a stretch of courtesy which would do violence to our conscience could we describe anyone whose training had been exclusively mathematical as being a person of education. It is possible, therefore, that the remarkable successes recently achieved by the Manchester Grammar School in the arena of mathematical examination call rather for commiseration than for congratulation. Still, of its kind, the record would probably be hard to beat. At Oxford, both the Senior and the Junior Mathematical Scholarships, and the proxime for the former, together with the Herschell Prize for Astronomy, have just been carried off by Old Boys of Manchester School. In 1896 also the Senior Mathematical Scholarship, and during the last three years the Junior twice, and two proximes for each scholarship, fell to the same school. Nor have the exploits of Mancunian mathematicians at Cambridge been inconsiderable. Since 1891 the school has three times won the second place among the Wranglers, besides many mathematical prizes, while two mathematical fellowships—one at Trinity—have been secured. We hope that these examine specialists, jam rude donati, will read their Voltaire, and make leisure for such compensatory measures as may establish their mental equilibrium.

A FIRST portion of the expected series of "Oxford Classical Texts," to be issued by the Clarendon Press, has now been arranged for. Each text is to be based on those MSS. to which the latest palaeographical and critical research assigns the greatest authority. The authors and editors so far settled upon are: Homer (the Provost of Oriel and Mr. T. W. Allen), Pindar (Prof. Hardie), Æschylus (Mr. Arthur Sidgwick), Euripides (Prof. G. G. Murray), Aristophanes (Mr. Geldart and Mr. F. W. Hall), Demosthenes (Prof. Butcher), Apollonius Rhodius (Mr. R. C. Seaton), Lucretius (Mr. Cyril Bailey), Juvenal and Persius (Mr. S. G. Owen), Cicero (Orations: Mr. Albert Clark, Mr. S. G. Owen, and Mr. W. Y. Faussett; Rhetorical Works: Prof. Wilkins), Velleius Paterculus (Prof. Robinson Ellis), Tacitus (Mr. Furneaux). The editions of Apollonius Rhodius and Velleius Paterculus will be specially welcome.

SCHOOL libraries will have an opportunity between now and the end of March which will never occur again. Owing to the recent union of the Camden and Royal Historical Societies, the stock of the Camden Society is to be removed from the present place of deposit, and as it is desired to reduce the bulk, most of the valuable publications known as the Camden Series can be secured at considerably reduced prices. It is a fleeting chance only, for before the removal, about April next, it is proposed to destroy all unbound copies of the works still remaining on hand. There is, therefore, a prospect of single copies of the Series fetching fancy prices in the future.

A RECENT letter in The Times, followed by Mr. Weldon's letter, raises again the important question as to whether the candidates for naval cadetships cannot be passed from the public schools direct. Of the sixty-three lads who were successful in the recent competition four only came straight from school, but three of these four passed 1st, 8th, and 9th respectively. This is proof, if proof were needed, that the schools can do the mere work of preparing for the examination better than the crammers; and when we add to this the advantage to a boy of as extended a contact with public school life as can be given him, and the advantage that would accrue to the Naval Service by securing for its cadetships youths who have been trained throughout under such conditions, it is clear that all parties would gain by such modifications on the part of the Admiralty, and such corresponding arrangements on the part of the schools, as would place the preparation for the Navy entirely in the hands of the schoolmaster and extinguish the crammer. The Head Master of Harrow points out that, in order to give a boy a sufficiently long stay at school to be of any real value to him, the entrance age for cadetships would have to be materially raised. It is also suggested that an obstacle in the way of the success of such a change, desirable as it obviously is to an ordinary intelligence, would probably be found in the ignorance and stupidity of the parent, who would be slow to appreciate and to avail himself of the beneficial alteration that is recommended. Doubtless, however, the parent would eventually, if gradually, learn to grasp the situation and discover where his interest lies, very much as, after the torpid fashion of Mr. John Willet, he is slowly coming to the conclusion that the schools, when he permits them, can prepare for Woolwich and Sandhurst as efficiently as can the Army crammers, and that, too, amid surroundings physically and morally considerably more healthy for his son.

MR. DE BRATH replies to the assistant masters of Abbotsholme, who last week charged him with plagiarism, in a letter, which, owing to the pressure upon our columns, must be held over till next week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HIGGINS—THE INVENTOR OF EVOLUTION.

St. Andrews: Feb. 6.

It is indeed a common error of "the averagely well-read man," as you quote Mr. Grant Allen, to credit Mr. Darwin with having invented "The Theory of Evolution." The name of HIGGINS is (in this connexion) forgotten by the averagely ignorant citizen, yet I claim for Higgins priority to Mr. Darwin, and even to Mr. Spencer. In fact, unless either of these savants published his theory before April, 1798, there can be no doubt about the matter.

Higgins, with an unequalled modesty, put forth his epoch-making conjecture in a periodical publication, and in a mere foot-note to a poem. After briefly showing how (as he expresses it) "space was obtained" (itself a difficulty unsolved by Mr. Spencer), and giving a short but masterly sketch of the development of the heavenly bodies, as they are superstitiously styled, Mr. Higgins introduces protoplasm or "the filament of organisation." "This filament, after an infinite series of ages, would begin [why not?] to ramify, and its viviparous offspring would diversify their forms and habits, so as to conform themselves to their various incunabula."

We say "environments," but Higgins's meaning is the same.

"Upon this view of things it seems highly probable that the first effort of Nature terminated in the production of vegetables, and that these, being abandoned to their own energies, by degrees detached themselves from the surface of the earth, and supplied themselves with wings or feet. . . . Others would become men, who, in time, would restrict themselves to the use of their hind feet; their tails would gradually rub off by sitting in their caves or huts; . . . they would invent language," and so on. If this is not "the Theory of Evolution," or a theory of it, I don't know what it is. There is here no pitiful accumulation of mere peddling facts. Higgins, I have reason to believe, from his interest in the Druids, his dissatisfaction with things in general, and his habit of quoting Howell Dha, was a Celt, his grandmother being a Miss Mactavish, who, in 1746—but why reveal the excesses of a youth now buried in oblivion? You will remark that Mr. Spencer, following Higgins, writes that "any existing species—animal or vegetable—when placed under conditions different from its previous ones, immediately begins to undergo changes of structure fitting it for its new conditions." That is Higgins, nearly word for word. Things "would diversify their forms and habits, so as to accommodate themselves to their various incunabula . . ." These changes demand, says Higgins, perhaps with Celtic hyperbole, "an infinite series of ages." So Higgins on "organic evolution."

The averagely well-educated man will find the brief essay of Higgins in The Anti-jacobin for April, 1798. It is a note to a somewhat erratic poem, "The Loves of the Triangles," by the same author. Of course, I do not accuse Mr. Spencer of pilfering from Higgins, whom he probably never read. Great wits jump, that is all.

ANDREW LANG.

"A NOTICEABLE MAN WITH LARGE GREY EYES."

Dublin: Feb. 6.

May I point out a twofold mistake into which Mr. Francis Thompson has fallen in his delightfully genial appreciation of Coleridge (ACADEMY, February 6)? Mr. Thompson writes: "It is by a curious error that even De Quincey attaches to Coleridge the famous line of Wordsworth about the 'noticeable man with large grey eyes'"; and in a note he adds: "As De Quincey himself shows elsewhere, the passage in question refers probably to Sir Humphry Davy—certainly not to Coleridge." Clearly, Mr. Thompson is not aware that, in her Journal, under May 9 and 11, 1802, Dorothy Wordsworth writes of the poem from which the "famous line" is taken: "After tea William wrote two stanzas in the manner of Thomson's Castle of Indolence, and was tired out. . . . William finished the stanzas about C. and himself." Here C. is plainly Coleridge, whose name appears twice under May 9, once under May 10, and twice (i.e., once as "Coleridge" and again as "C.") under May 12. The line must therefore refer either to Wordsworth himself or to Coleridge; and that it (and the whole description of which it forms a part) refers to the latter there is not a particle of doubt. Sara Coleridge applied it to her father; and that the author of the line himself "attached" it to S. T. C. we have the clear and express testimony of the late Mr. Justice Coleridge (Memoirs of Wordsworth, ii., p. 309). De Quincey thrice over quotes it with reference to S. T. C.—in the Confessions, in the article on Coleridge contributed to Tait's Magazine, and in Coleridge and Opium-Eating (De Quincey's Works, Masson, iii., p. 228; ii., p. 162; v., p. 209). Moreover, he speaks of the poem as "Wordsworth's exquisite picture of S. T. C. and himself as occasional denizens of the Castle of Indolence" (iii., p. 228, note). Poor chronologist as he was, De Quincey was yet scarce likely to blunder so grossly as Mr. Thompson's note would seem to suggest. The Castle of Indolence stanzas belong to May, 1802; while Wordsworth, though in July, 1800, already in correspondence with the Theo-mammontist (as Coleridge dubbed him)—who, indeed, revised the sheets of the Lyrical Ballads of 1800—did not actually meet Davy until some subsequent date—probably the autumn of 1805, when Davy and he, with Walter Scott, ascended Helvellyn; though the two men may have met in London during the days (August 30—September 22, 1802) which Wordsworth spent with Basil Montagu on his way northwards to be married. Wordsworth cannot be credited with the bêtise of giving a detailed description of a countenance on which, up to the time of writing, he had never set eyes. By the way, a letter from Coleridge to Davy, dated February 3, 1801, furnishes yet another proof, and one which has, I believe, never yet been adduced, of the identity of S. T. C. with the "noticeable man." Coleridge writes: "I take quantities of bark, but the effect is zero, and I shall not gather strength, or that little suffusion of bloom which belongs to my healthy state, till I can walk out." Compare this with what follows Mr. Thompson's "famous line":

"And a pale face, that seemed undoubtedly
As if a blooming face it ought to be."

On the meaning of the Castle of Indolence stanzas, see my article in the Fortnightly Review, November, 1894, pp. 685-704, and the Eversley Wordsworth, vol. ii., pp. 308-311. Verbum sap.: "Cujusvis hominis est errare, nullius nisi insipientis in errore perseverare."

THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

P.S.—De Quincey says (iii., p. 16), of S. T. C., that women of quality would sometimes exclaim audibly in Davy's public lecture-room: "Oh, those eyes! those brilliant eyes!" and that the philosopher was weak enough to be pleased with this homage. Probably this is what Mr. Thompson was thinking of when he wrote the footnote.

Pembroke College, Oxon: Feb. 7.

One slip of no great importance is discoverable in the penetrative "Academy Portrait" of S. T. C., contributed by Mr. Francis Thompson to your last issue. Coleridge never "left Oxford and enlisted." He was one of that glorious band of poets who have adorned the younger University. But although Coleridge himself was a sometime undergraduate of Jesus College, Cambridge—and the acts of him and his peers, are they not written in that charming chronicle, Obiter Dicta?—yet three of his brothers, so he tells Thomas Poole (Letters of S. T. C., pp. 7 and 8), were educated at Pembroke College, Oxford: to wit, the second brother, William; the fourth, Edward, "the wit of the family"; and the fifth, George, "worth all the rest of the family in a lump."

A. R. BAYLEY.

"THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."

Evesham: Feb. 5.

I have noticed the following corrigenda in vol. xlix.:

- P. 25 b. For "Hawick," read Hewick.
- P. 33 a. For "Wolcott," read Wolcot.
- P. 34 b. For "Dalbran," "Fellcroft," read Walbran, Fallcroft. For "sub-dean," read sub-deacon.
- P. 92 b. For "Stamford," read Stanford.
- P. 121 b. For "Prosse," read Prosser.
- P. 137 a. For "Londini," read Londinium.
- P. 145 b. The "prolonged tour" could have been only from June to October.
- P. 152 a. For "Belfreys, Yorkshire," read the Belfrey church, York.
- P. 221 (bis). For "Haworth," read Naworth.
- P. 252 a. For "Hobbs, Hervey, Raleigh," read Hobbes, Harvey, Raleigh.
- P. 332 b. For "Tangiers," read Tangier, as on pp. 400, 414, 482.
- P. 347 b. For "Hawker," read Hawsker.
- P. 371 a, l. 11. For "Rede me not," read Rede me and be not wroth.
- Pp. 440, 488-9. The statements about the Russells of Birmingham do not agree.
- P. 457 b. "To summarily dismiss"?
- P. 473 b. How can "P. P." mean "the clerk of the parish"?

W. C. BOULTER.

DRAMA.

WHAT constitutes a "religious" play? The question occurs to me because I have seen in the papers discussions about "the religious drama," of which "The Daughters of Babylon" is adduced as an example. The plot of this play is of the romantic order: I should have supposed that the interest of time and place in it was historical, possibly, or archaeological—not religious. The place is Babylon, the time that of the Jewish captivity, several of the characters are Jews, and an important feature of the play is a portion of the law of Moses. I can understand that to a Jew, professing Judaism, these things may constitute a religious drama, the law of Moses being part of his religion. I do not profess to be a theologian, but the sacredness of the subject for other people seems to me to be at least dubious. I am interested in the point, for I wish to be able, without any irreligious bias, to confess that throughout the play my sympathies were not with the captive Jews but with their Babylonian oppressors.

ONE may say loosely, of course, that there is a religious air about the play, because the dresses of the ancient Israelites suggest the chromolithographs on the walls of a Sunday-school, and because the diction of the play will suggest the Bible to many people: though, by the way, there is something more in biblical diction than the use of the vocative "O" and the second person singular. But whether the play be religious or not, I will maintain to the death that it is not a moral play. Two people are condemned to death, and are let off because somebody arrives to remind their judge that he, too, in his youth was guilty of their offence. They are really innocent, but the judge believes them to be guilty all the time: consequently the moral lesson is that two blacks make a white. I am no theologian, but I know enough of ethics to affirm with confidence that this is not a good moral lesson.

As a play, "The Daughters of Babylon" waters down an effective plot of the improbable, romantic kind with overdoses of talk. The end is distinctly weak, and the great scene, the selling of the hero and heroine as slaves in Babylon, is marred by the comic effect of the bidding. But the scenic effects are often admirable. The first scene of all, "By Naomi's Well in the Plains of Babylonia," was very pretty, and its effects of changing light fascinating. The "Terrace in Ishtar's Palace," suggesting the view of a great city by night, was another extremely pretty scene. The impressiveness of the Babylonian scenes was, I confess, a little spoiled for me by the wooden-looking beards of the men—exactly like the pictures, but incredible in life. As is usual in Mr. Wilson Barrett's productions, the crowds showed careful and experienced drilling.

Of the acting I liked Miss Lily Hanbury's the best. I see she has been blamed for over-emphasis, but surely emphasis, and a great deal of it, is necessary to such a play. I thought her robust and vigorous style of acting quite in the right vein. In her gorgeous robes as Ishtar, the famous "strange woman," she was a most imperious and imposing picture, and gave distinction to the colour and gorgeousness of her scenes. She and Miss Maud Jeffries produced a charming effect—I apologise for the personality—of contrasted beauty, a contrast increased by the fact that Miss Jeffries took her part in, if anything, too low a key. Mr. Wilson Barrett's histrionic skill never fails him, but his part leant itself too little to his virtue of versatile effect, too much to his vice of posing. Mr. Ambrose Manning was clever as a dashing "lord of Babylon." The rest all played carefully and intelligently and without distinction. The piece is too long and too thin for the sort of effect at which it presumably aims, but its gorgeousness is pleasant.

"THE PRODIGAL FATHER," an "extravagant farce," produced on the 1st inst. at the Strand Theatre, is not vastly diverting in its extravagance. Given an unlimited use of coincidence and impossible procedure, it is not difficult to devise "situations," which have the air of being comic, but unless they seem to come naturally, an effect of woodenness makes itself felt more and more. In this play the central situation, the arrival in a country house of a music-hall singer who has been followed about by the father and secretly married by the son, is, in its way, diverting enough. But the rest of the plot, which turns on the father's pretended explorations in Africa and the arrival of a pretended African chief, is too mechanical to be funny. However, the piece is brightly played and should have some moderate success. Mr. Paulton is fairly amusing as the father; Mr. Charles Collette gives an imaginary but very clever burlesque of an interviewer; Mr. Weir is vivacious as the chief, and Miss Florence Gerard gives a really careful and effective study of the music-hall singer:

THE piece was preceded by what it pleased somebody to call a "petite drama"—"A Merry Christmas." The idea is that all her rich friends desert a distinguished actress on Christmas-day and go to dine with their mothers. A poor artist offers to take her to his humble home. She thinks she is not good enough, and dines alone. The idea is thoroughly French, and no doubt pretty in a French expression of it; in an English guise both the sentiment and the incidents are too unnatural to pass.

If I had to choose a theatre for the delectation of an intelligent person who was fond of simple sentiment and cheerful fun, I should take him (at the moment of writing) to the Court. "Sweet Nancy"—of whose revival at a Criterion matinée I wrote some time ago—is being played there, and is preceded by a charming little one-act play, by Mrs. Oscar Beringer, called "A Bit of Old Chelsea." "Sweet Nancy" is old-fashioned in its stage conventions, but its sentiment is natural and its fun is spontaneous. The best element in it, the little "conseil de famille" formed by the heroine's young brothers and sisters, is delightfully true and gay, and the plot itself, so far as Nancy and her old husband are concerned, is sympathetic. The caste is almost the same as at the Criterion. Mr. Martin Harvey plays Algernon, as before, with absolute ease and naturalness; Mr. Maurice is as lifelike an old general as before; and Miss Annie Hughes is as true as ever in the part of the merry, unselfish girl—a distinct and individual creation.

"A BIT OF OLD CHELSEA" gave her an opportunity of showing genuinely histrionic versatility. In this she was a flower-girl, who had fainted outside an artist's studio in the middle of a November night, and was carried in by him and given supper. The part is not, of course, absolutely realistic; but, at least, so far as manner, and almost so far as accent, went Miss Hughes played it to the life. The sentiment at the end, when she crept out while the artist slept, was just a trifle strained, but it was most delicately done. Mr. Maurice played the artist cleverly, and Mr. Harvey was pleasant as a rollicking friend.

G. S. S.

SCIENCE.

IT is fashionable to be a little weary, already, of the fuss about Nansen. The best cure is to see him, and hear him. For some obscure racial reason he appeals irresistibly. No Briton-born, for one thing, can withstand his extraordinary pluck and physical endurance; for another, he has cut us out on ground which from time immemorial has been indisputably our own. He told us how it could be done, and went and did it. There is a charm of modesty about Nansen's delivery of his own narrative which applause has not yet spoilt. I heard him at the Royal Geographical Society's meeting in the Albert Hall, and the following night at St. James's Hall; and this trait was especially conspicuous. The glamour of the first occasion, and the enormous sea of faces, seemed to inspire him, for he lectured more fluently and spontaneously than on the second night, while his command of English also was better. But he committed such a solecism as "this game [cards] was liked very much—I mean, was very fond of." As for the scientific results of his work, his book will be out in a day or two, and then will be the time to criticise them.

THE system of technical education pursued under the auspices of the London County Council is a source of annoyance to many thoughtful people, of amusement to others, and of satisfaction, I imagine, to no one. Almost any change in it would be an improvement, from abolition upwards; and that the Technical Education Board themselves are aware of its deficiencies may be inferred from the fact that some time ago a committee of experts was appointed to report upon them. This report, which has lately been issued, is a document of no small importance. It bears out fully the complaints which have been made as to the futility of the old system, it upholds the views of what I may call the new technical school, and it throws light on the true relationship of German to English methods.

AMONG the witnesses examined, indeed, were two men of German extraction whose evidence and whose opinions it would be foolish to ignore. These are Dr. Ludwig Mond, who has given to England the only perfect research laboratory she possesses, and Dr. Messel, a chemist of great experience engaged in manufacture in this country. Both of these gentlemen condemned the present system as useless, and the latter gave it as his opinion that chemical industry abroad is beating us because foreigners have the elementary good sense to place men of science at the head of affairs. The unanimous view taken in the report is that too much attention is paid to the practical side of chemical and scientific education in schools; that the practical side can only be developed in colleges of university standing, under proper professional direction, and by three or four-year courses. The scientific training in schools should be practical in the sense of being experimental, not commercial, and should aim simply at developing the faculty of observation and the reasoning powers. Above all, the examination system is vigorously condemned. Anyone who wants an example of the superiority of a non-examination over an examination system might do well to inquire of Prof. Meldola as to the results obtained by Finsbury Technical College students. I believe it is a fact that boys from this well-managed but unexamined institution are received as properly qualified chemical assistants in works which, rather than take the over-examined product of the Science and Art Department, are in the habit of applying abroad for their technical staffs.

How many people coupled the name of Napoleon with the "beet-sugar" case at North London last week, or reflected upon the far-reaching importance of the issues that lay behind it? The case itself was simply one of beet-sugar trying to palm itself off, by means of a yellow dye, as "Demerara." Poor Demerara has herself matter enough to protect at present without the added injury of fraudulent imitation. The whole sugar question was ably discussed in Science Progress for January, on the double ground that Great Britain was the largest consumer of sugar (per head of population) in the world, and that the British colonies engaged in growing sugar-cane were to all appearance threatened with not far-distant bankruptcy. This is the object at which Napoleon was aiming when, early in the century, he introduced beet-factories into France and put a high tariff on British sugar. The discovery that beet-sugar was chemically identical with cane-sugar dates from 1741, and is due to Andreas Sigismund Marggraf, a professor at Berlin. The rise of the beet-sugar industry, however, was hampered by imperfect methods, and though Napoleon's tariff might have hit our colonies somewhat for the time being, the beet-factories were unable to support themselves after his downfall.

THE present crisis is, again, largely due to political considerations, the Kriegs-prämien, or war-bounties, having given beet-sugar an unfair advantage in competition with our free cane-sugar; but in addition, the canes have suffered largely from rats and other enemies, and Cuba, the greatest producer of canes, has been prostrated by war. A strong Royal Commission is at present on its way to seek a remedy for the distress of our sugar-growing colonies, and meanwhile events are happening nearer home which may not be without important bearings on the question. The Continental nations are becoming heartily tired of the bounties. What is a boon to the fostered beet cultivator is an intolerable tax to the people who contribute it, and efforts have been made to arrive at an international understanding with a view to its abolition. France, as usual, is the cantankerous member of the concert, and coercion has been put upon her in the shape of an increased bounty by Germany and Austria, which must either ruin her or compel her to follow suit. The latter is believed to be impossible, as France is already taxed to the uttermost in this direction. There is hope, therefore, that the climax has been reached, and that the British colonies will soon be relieved from this unequal competition. In the meantime, sugar is abnormally cheap, and the consumption is rapidly rising in these islands. Whether it will fall proportionately when prices become normal remains to be seen.

H. C. M.

MUSIC.

BRAHMS' "Requiem" was performed at the fourth "Henschel Concert" last Thursday week, and in English. The solo vocalists were Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. George Holmes, and both sang intelligently; yet neither seemed quite at home in the music. The choral numbers were well rendered, although the upper notes of the sopranos were at times shrill, and the tenors not altogether sans reproche. "The German Requiem," so writes the analyst in the programme-book, "reveals not its fulness of beauty to a first glance." Neither does it to a second, nor even a third; the work only reveals its fulness of beauty, also of power and solemnity, after much study and many hearings.

THE programme included Brahms' Piano-forte Concerto in D minor, another work which slowly makes its mark. The opening movement, in which a struggle seems going on between thought and feeling, is said to have been written after the composer received the news of the insanity of his friend and protector Schumann. The Adagio is sad, but breathes a spirit of resignation. The Concerto was admirably rendered by Miss Fanny Davies. I never remember to have heard her to greater advantage.

MR. HENSCHEL announces that after the present series his orchestral and choral concerts will, for a time at least, be discontinued. And the reason assigned for this is the following: The directors of the Philharmonic Society have decided, in addition to their usual spring series, to have an autumn series commencing in November. And Thursday is the day of the week selected for the concerts, a day on which Mr. Henschel has for years past given his concerts. His orchestra consists largely of members of the Philharmonic orchestra, so that, even if disposed, he could not set up opposition concerts. But why discontinue? Could he not change his day, say to Wednesday? If he announced attractive programmes, he could draw the public without doing the slightest harm to the Philharmonic Society. The more orchestral music the public gets, the more it seems to want.

MENDELSSOHN'S Quintet in B flat was beautifully played at the Popular Concert on Monday evening by Lady Hallé and MM. Ries, Gibson, Kreuz, and Piatti. How fine is the Adagio, and how commonplace the Finale! Miss Adela Verne gave a highly vigorous rendering of Chopin's Ballade in A flat. Some passages, no doubt, demand vigour, but there are others in which charm and refinement are the prevailing features; in the latter Miss Verne was not satisfactory. There is no doubt that she was nervous, and this will in a measure explain any over-emphasis. The lady was much applauded, and deserves high praise for the determined manner in which she refused the encore. Miss Alice Gomez sang Schubert's "Erste Verlust" in excellent style, but I cannot say I admired the jerky and hurried rendering which she gave of "Ungechild." Besides, it is, properly, a man's song.

LAST week I quoted a sentence from the programme-book about Schubert and Beethoven having been dead "fifty years," and concluded it was originally in the programme-book of 1868. I had the catalogue of works performed at the Popular Concerts before me, but copied the date of the first performance instead of the second, in January, 1879—i.e., just fifty years after the death of Schubert. This mistake of mine does not, however, affect my contention that the programme-book of this year was not properly up to date. It would seem as if that sentence about the fifty years which had passed was specially inserted for the jubilee performance, as it were, of 1879. If so much care was taken then, surely for the centenary a new sentence ought to have been framed.

MR. FREDERIC LAMOND gave his last pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The programme was too long. I for one, and no doubt many others, would have given the pianist credit for being able to play the Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Handel with rare intelligence and neat technique, and have asked him to pass straight on to the next piece on the programme. Pianists often forget—so it seems to me—that what interests them does not always interest the public. I do not refer to the great, the non-musical public, but to those amateurs who are in the habit of attending recitals, and who show a certain discrimination. At one period of his career Brahms—in his writing for the pianoforte—made virtuosity an end rather than a means. Weber and Chopin were raised to a higher grade of difficulty, while Handel was subjected to treatment which, however clever, disfigured him beyond recognition.

MR. LAMOND'S rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111) displayed great ability. There was a tendency to make too much of the brío, whereby the Allegro lost something of its dignity. Then, again, in the Arietta con Variazioni the playing seemed the result of thought rather than of feeling. This was often the case with the late Dr. v. Bülow, of whom, indeed, in his interpretations of Beethoven Mr. Lamond reminds us. After the Sonata came a group of short solos. One solitary Lied (Book iv., No. 2) of Mendelssohn received somewhat rough treatment; Hensett's Si Oiseau J'étais was neither as smooth nor as swift as one could have wished; while in the Chopin pieces the letter was more satisfactory than the spirit. The Berceuse was given with rare delicacy and at a really reposeful rate; some pianists hurry through it in a most alarming manner.

NEXT to the Beethoven Sonata Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia was the chief feature of the afternoon. I am glad Mr. Lamond decided to play one great work of Schubert's, I might indeed say the composer's greatest work for the pianoforte. And I was delighted to hear a magnificent rendering of it. Had the pianist remained faithful to the text, he would deserve nothing but praise. Unfortunately, however, there were certain touchings up for which there is really no excuse. I believe they emanate from Liszt. Schubert's Fantasia ought to be played as written. The passages altered were few in number, and the additions are tawdry. I hope some day to hear Mr. Lamond again in this work, and perhaps, great pianist as he is, he will not be too proud to acknowledge the error of his ways.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THIS book "will enable many to realise," says the Times, "the qualities which make a great military organiser." ". . . To the general reader, perhaps its chief charm will be the glimpses which it gives, with a certain Cervantes-like naïveté, of the personality of the author." "The personality of 'Little Bobs Bahadur,'" writes the Pall Mall, "has completely fascinated every man in the Indian Army: no reader of his book will need to ask why." The book is described as "one of the most fascinating and important of recent years." ". . . To those who love records of daring and adventure, or who have not yet learned . . . what the British soldier is, may be recommended as second to none." The Manchester Guardian makes it "almost a ground of complaint that Lord Roberts has been content in so many cases to hide his own personality behind the men and events among which he has moved." "The interest becomes much wider in the second volume" when the author writes "as an administrator and general, with clear, well-defined plans of his own." The Spectator says "the story produces the vivid impression which comes out of accurate knowledge and strange personal experiences," and that it deserves attentive study not only by those who look backward, but also by those whose duty it is to look ahead." The National Observer places the writer "in the foremost rank of those gifted alike to wield sword and pen": "in literary style the advance on The Rise of Wellington is of the most distinct character . . . Even more noticeable is the courteous and kindly spirit breathed from every page." The Telegraph says it is "truly wonderful how Lord Roberts has managed to tell so much about the stirring events in which he took an active part, and often a first place, without for a moment intruding his manifest wisdom in council and patent bravery in the field upon the reader."

"MR. LONGUEVILLE," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "is a lively writer, but his latest venture hardly gives him scope for his real talents. Yet he has produced a most readable book, and his delightful impartiality flavours the volume with a kind of alert vitality. He succeeds in making the narrative illustrative of the character." This "impartiality" the Spectator calls "indecision," and discovers in it a proof of Sir Kenelm's evasive character. But as true portraiture only begins "when the details are subordinate to a preconceived (or prejudiced) aspect, the author has given us, instead of a picture, a list of qualities." "The most entertaining episode is the love-making and marriage with Venetia Stanley," says the Pall Mall; and on the whole concludes that Digby, if not a great man in the full sense, was at least a "great contemporary." The Spectator sums him up as "the last of the Euphuists," declares his dominant quality to have been a "magnificent conceit," and adds: "Had he possessed the gift of concentration, he might have been a great writer or a distinguished politician; but he preferred to devote his talents to the art of life, which he practised with the utmost skill." The Manchester Guardian admires the biographer's "impartiality," and is convinced that the portrait is but the more human "for the little irregularities of feature." The Chronicle congratulates the author on his literary skill, and as to the subject of the memoir writes: "Never had the novelist better material to his hand."

Lord Roberts's
"Forty-one Years in India"
(Bentley.)

JARROLD & SONS' LIST FOUR POPULAR NOVELS.

THE GREEN BOOK; Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.
Translated by Mrs. WAGNER (Ellis Wagner).
With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

First Two Editions exhausted on publication.
"The Green Book" is an historical romance of the early part of the century, and depicts in a graphic and sometimes lurid manner the political life of Russia during the conspiracies of 1811 and 1813. Pushkin, the well-known Russian poet, is the hero of the book, and the majority of male characters, at least, are personages who figured in the stirring events of the time. At a moment when Russia and things Russian figure largely in the public press, and exercise so powerful a sway over the national imagination, the publication of this brilliant picture of Russian Society will be specially opportune.

LADY JEAN'S SON.

By SARAH TYTLER.
Author of "Lady Jean's Vagaries," "The Bride's Pass,"
"Lady Bell," "Buried Diamonds," &c.
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"The glimpses of Edinburgh Society, while the Northern Athens was still the seat of fashion, are lifelike and clever." "Lady Jean's Son" is from first to last a delightful story. — Full Mail Gazette.

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.
THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.
"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. . . . Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment." — Daily Chronicle.

COLOUR-SERGEANT No. 1 COMPANY.

By Mrs. LEITH ADAMS. Author of "Bonnie Kate,"
"Louis Draycott," "Geoffrey Stirling," &c.
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.
"In this story Mrs. Leith Adams deals with materials which she has treated with distinguished success. The scenes of barrack life in Ireland during the Fenian war are good, and it would be difficult to conceive anything of the kind that is better." — Saturday Review.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
Of all Booksellers and at the Libraries.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.	COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS,
BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COL-
LECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE
AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—
ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—
NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CON-
TINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS
ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW
BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF
BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND
AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—
BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED,
AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES
the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS,
the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS
NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line
Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print
Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the
FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (6s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications." — Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day." — Athenaeum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume." — Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome." — Scotsman.
"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. . . . The entire work is, indeed, a precious record." — Notes and Queries.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SEELEY & CO.'S BOOKS

JANUARY PORTFOLIO. THE PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS OF ALBERT DÜRER.

By LIONEL CUST,
Director of the National Portrait Gallery.
Price 3s. 6d. net.

"A very complete account of the great artist's paintings and drawings." — Times.

"One of the best numbers that have yet appeared in this invaluable series." — Manchester Guardian.

VELAZQUEZ

A Study of his Life and Art.
By WALTER ARMSTRONG.

Price 9s. net.

"A really important contribution to critical study." — Guardian.

AT EVERY LIBRARY.

PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON Autobiography and Memoir.

Price 16s.

"A remarkable book, gracefully written, and full of interest and variety." — Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION.

ANIMALS AT WORK AND PLAY Their Emotions and Activities.

By C. J. CORNISH.

With Illustrations. Price 6s.

"A charming bit of leisure reading." — Full Mail Gazette.

"It would be difficult to find a more fascinating book." — Daily News.

EVENTS OF OUR OWN TIME.

THE WAR in the CRIMEA. Hamley. 5s.
THE INDIAN MUTINY. Mallet. 5s.
THE AFGHAN WARS. Forbes. 5s.
ACHIEVEMENTS in ENGINEERING. Harcourt. 5s.
DEVELOPMENT of NAVIES. Keadley Wilmet. 5s.
REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE. Mallet. 5s.
THE LIBERATION of ITALY. Cesareo. 5s.

London:

SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, 38, Great Russell Street.

IMPORTANT WORK RELATING TO GLAMORGANSHIRE.

HISTORY of MARGAM ABBEY.

From the Original Documents in the British Museum,
H.M. Record Office, the Margam Monuments, &c.
With numerous Illustrations and Reproductions.

By W. DE GRAY BIRCH, LL.D., F.S.A., of the British Museum.

Nearly ready, in 1 vol., large 8vo.

Price to Subscribers before issue, One Guinea.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

FORD MADOX BROWN.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

FREDERIC J. SHIELDS.

A series of Autotype Reproductions of the Chief Works of these Masters is NOW ON VIEW at THE GRAFTON GALLERIES.
They include the chief Cartoons made by Ford Madox Brown for stained glass, his "Coriell's Portion," "English Boy," "Shake-spears, Homer, etc.," Rossetti's "Beata Beatrix," "Lamp of Memory," "Monna Rosa," "Proserpine," "The Annunciation,"
"The Blessed Damozel," Studies of the Oxford Frescoes, etc., etc.—
Particulars on application.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING.

Painted by D. G. ROSSETTI in 1855. Reproduced in Autogravure from the Original in the possession of C. Fairfax, Esq. Size of Work 4½ inches by 4½ inches. Proofs on Vellum, 11s.; on Japanese,
10s. 6d.; Prints, 5s.

THE WEST FRONT OF

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.

From a negative specially taken before the erection of the scaffolding, by R. G. SCRIVEN, F.S.I. Printed in sepia or warm black, 18 inches by 15 inches, price 10s. 6d.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

A large series of the Chief Works of this Master, including the great Allegorical designs, and many others. Full particulars on application.

FRENCH PAINTERS OF THE

NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Permanent Carbon Reproductions of Works by Jean François
Millet, Theodore Rousseau, Jean Baptiste Corot, Daubigny, Jules
Breton, Daguerre, W. Bouguereau, Meissonier, Carolus-Duran, Cabanel, Debat Polman, E. Adam, etc., etc., in various sizes.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL OF

LANDSCAPE PAINTING,

Including the Chief Works of John Constable, R.A., J. M. W.
Turner, R.A., Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., E. P. Bonington, Old
Crome, W. J. Müller, David Cox, Elkin, Samuel Prout, etc., etc.

Abridged Catalogues on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street,
London, W.C.

PENS AND PENCILS.

A pocket pen—namely, a pen containing nib and automatic ink supply, is a convenience; but only if one can be quite sure that it will not, on occasion, fill the pocket with ink through the feed-hole. A fountain pen saves the trouble of dipping, enables the user to have his own pen always at hand without the necessity of having recourse to his desk, and saves persons who have to write away from home the disagreeableness of using strange nibs. The objections to a pocket fountain pen are the tendency already mentioned to spill the ink, and the necessity of shaking the ink down on to the nib before the pen can be used.

THE CAW FOUNTAIN PEN dispenses with both these objections. It cannot be put away without being hermetically closed; it can be carried in any position, and subjected to any amount of shaking, and not one drop of ink can, by any possibility, get out of it. The nib—which is a gold one of fine quality, and can be selected to suit any hand—is carried actually in the ink, and the pen is thus ready for use the moment it touches the paper. The price is 12s. 6d.

From the foregoing remarks it will be seen that the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN has all the advantages of a stylographic pen, with the additional one of having a nib instead of a style point, so that one writes one's own hand with it; but for people who still prefer a stylograph, the same Company makes the CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN. It is better than any other style of stylographic pen ever made, and is, in fact, a perfect ink pencil. The price is 5s.

And now about Pencils. About half the lead of an ordinary lead pencil is wasted in cutting the cedar, about two-thirds of the lead of an ordinary coloured pencil is wasted in the same way, and by breaking while in use. In either case, the point of a pencil, whether black or coloured, is troublesome to make, and, except in the hands of a few skilful persons, irregular and unsightly. THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is not made of wood at all; it is just like an ordinary pencil, but the lead is covered with paper, and by an ingenious device it can be resharpened by simply pulling off a little of the paper. The sharpening is absolutely automatic; you cannot take off too much or too little of the cover; it is always just right. The point is easily made perfectly symmetrical, and beautifully tapered. There is no possibility of the lead being broken in sharpening, because the lead has only to be lightly touched. The lead is round instead of being square, as in many lead pencils, so that there are no awkward corners to disfigure the writing.

Nobody who has to use a blue pencil, or any coloured pencil, would ever be content with an ordinary one after using a BLAISDELL pencil; and the BLAISDELL black lead pencil is also better than any ordinary black lead pencil ever made. Samples of each kind of pencils will be sent post free, on receipt of 1s., to any address in the United Kingdom by the BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C. British Depot for the CAW pens.

BLISS, SANDS & CO.

Beg to announce for publication during the Spring the following New Copyright Works.

NOVELS.

S. R. CROCKETT.

LADS' LOVE.

S. R. CROCKETT.

An Idyll of the Land of Heather. A Novel. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "Bog Myrtle and Peat," &c.

With 16 Illustrations by WARWICK GOBLE, and a Frontispiece Portrait of the Author by FRANK RICHARDS.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s. [Day of publication, March 15.]

WALTER RAYMOND.

CHARITY CHANCE: a Novel. By WALTER RAYMOND, Author of "Tryphena in Love," &c. With a Frontispiece by T. H. Robinson. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

OLIPHANT SMEATON.

OUR LADDIE: a Novel. By OLIPHANT SMEATON. Illustrated by Anthony Fox. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

FREDERIC CARREL.

THE ADVENTURES of JOHN JOHNS: a Novel. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The City."
Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

RICCARDO STEPHENS.

MR. PETERS: a Novel. By RICCARDO STEPHENS, Author of "The Cruciform Mark." Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

ARABELLA KENEALY.

BELINDA'S BEAUX, and other Stories. By ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Janet of Harley Street," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

PORTLAND BOARD AKERMAN AND NORMAN HURST.

TRISCOMBE STONE: a Romance of the Quantock Hills. An Historical Novel. By PORTLAND BOARD
AKERMAN and NORMAN HURST. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

BIOGRAPHY.—H. D. TRAILL.

LORD CROMER: a Biography. By H. D. TRAILL. With Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

3/6 THE APOLLO POETS. 3/6

A Series of EDITIONS DE LUXE of the Classic Poets.

THE FOLLOWING ARE NOW READY AND WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISHED:—

POETICAL WORKS of HENRY LONGFELLOW.

POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BURNS.

POETICAL WORKS of JOHN MILTON.

POETICAL WORKS of LORD BYRON.

POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

Each work is re-set from new type. Title-pages and other ornaments in red and black designed by M. H. Robinson.

SIZE.—Extra large demy 8vo, 6½ by 9 inches. PAPER.—White high-class antique laid. BINDING.—Solidly bound, with heavy bevelled boards, in red buckram, with inlaid panel on the front, and richly decorated with gold on front and back, and gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

LONDON: BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, BURLEIGH STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1294.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES:-
No. 31 SEMITIC—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1442 lots.)
No. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (762, 732 lots.)
No. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POST Free.—CATALOGUE of Sets of Magazines and Periodicals; also CATALOGUE of Books on Folk-Lore, Astrology, Alchemy, and kindred subjects.—ALBERT SUTTON, 8, Deansgate, Manchester.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
18, Boarers Street, London, E.C.,
Invite AUTHORS (Popular or otherwise) to submit their MSS.
(Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) for prompt consideration.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 6512. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating subjects required.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE COUNCIL of the ROYAL INSTITUTE of BRITISH ARCHITECTS are prepared to receive APPLICA-TIONS for the APPOINTMENT of SECRETARY. Applicants must be gentlemen of culture and literary attainments, with a knowledge of architecture, but not necessarily Architects. Proficiency in French essential, and German desirable. Age not less than about 20, or more than 45. The Secretary will be required to devote his whole time to his official duties. Salary £400 per annum.
Full particulars can be obtained at the Offices of the Institute,
No. 9, Conduit Street, Hanover Square, London, W. Any canvassing will disqualify. Applications addressed to "The Hon. Secretary, R.I.B.A.," No. 9, Conduit Street, W., must be delivered not later than March 20th.

UNIVERSITY COURT OF ST. ANDREWS.

The COURT propose to appoint a PROFESSOR to the BERRY
CHAIR of ENGLISH LITERATURE, recently instituted by the Scottish Universities Commission. The Salary will be £500 per annum, and the Professor shall have such claim on the Fee Fund as if his normal salary had been fixed at £500.
Applications, with twenty copies of testimonials will be received by Mr. STUART GRAOE, Secretary of the University Court, until 10th March next.
St. Andrews, 11th February, 1897.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE.

FACULTY of MEDICINE.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of ANATOMY. Eighty copies of application, together with testimonials, must be in the hands of the undersigned on or before March 8th, 1897.
Further particulars may be obtained on application to
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A.
University College, Cardiff.
February 8th, 1897.
Secretary and Registrar.

JUNIOR LEADER WRITER.—Experienced
Journalist (22), University man, at present Editor of a large and old-established Conservative Paper (weekly), desires to join the Staff of an important Provincial Morning Paper. Strong, sensible writer; good literary style; thoroughly reliable. Capable Sub-Editor and Reviewer. Moderate salary if prospects good.—W. W., Academy
Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

This day is published, in 1 vol., price 4s.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR 1897.

Also, price 4s.

DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS:
BEING
A SUPPLEMENT to the "UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1897."
HODGKIN, FISCH & CO., Ltd., Dublin.
LONGMANS & CO., London.

IMPORTANT WORK RELATING TO GLAMORGANSHIRE.

HISTORY of MARGAM ABBEY.
From the Original Documents in the British Museum,
H.M. Record Office, the Margam Monuments, &c.
With numerous Illustrations and Reproductions.
By W. DE GRAY BIRCH, LL.D., F.R.S., of the British Museum.
Nearly ready, in 1 vol., large 8vo.
Price to Subscribers before issue, One Guinea.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospectuses post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR-
ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agent wanted.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,

Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars
apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.

An EXAMINATION will take place at UPPINGHAM on the 30th and 31st March and 1st April, 1897, for SIX OPEN SCHOLAR-SHIPS, Two of £70 per annum, Two of £50 per annum, Two of £30 per annum, each tenable at the School. Candidates entertained free of charge if application be made by 13th March, 1897.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HERR, Bienne.

TYPE-WRITING.—All kinds of Copying AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS, &c. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); or 5,000 words, and over, 1s. per thousand, paper included.—
Miss NIGHTINGALL, Springfield, Waltham Road, Stevenage.

MANUSCRIPT TYPE-WRITTEN with care and precision by experienced operator and returned promptly,
10d. per 1,000 words. Translations made.—"OPERATOR," 2, Rendlesham
Road, London, N.E.

"THE CHEAP BOOKSTALL."—Vide Athenaeum, 1891.
BARGAIN LIST.—No. 2.—PREVIOUS to EXTENSIVE ALTERATIONS.
VALUABLE COLLECTION of THEATRICAL AUTOGRAPHS
Fine Series of Ackermann's Coloured Plate Books.
THE FINE PICTURE GALLERIES OF EUROPE.

Old Books on Gardening, Angling, Metal Work, Bookbinding
Pageants, Costume Tapestries, Textile Fabrics, Pottery Coins
Heraldry, Architecture, Stained Glass, Ornament, Decoration Carved Woodwork.

RARE SPORTING, FENCING, NAVAL and MILITARY WORKS
Illustrated Books by Cruikshank, Leech, Rowlandson, Caldecott, Hogarth, Callot, Turner, Claude, Coxway, Cipriani, Bartolozzi, Eisen, &c.

A Fine Collection of Etchings, Ancient and Modern, Portraits, Engravings, Scrap Books, Cur. cabinets, &c.

EDWIN PARSONS & SONS,

45, BROMPTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.
All Cash Orders Carriage Free to any Railway Station in the United Kingdom.

Bookbuyers on sending Name and Address receive Catalogues regularly
FREE OF CHARGE.

LIBRARIES PURCHASED.—To EXECUTORS, ADMINISTRATORS, AND OTHERS.—Books, Engravings, Portraits, Old Paintings, Drawings, Miniatures, Bronzes, &c., Purchased, in Town or Country, for their utmost VALUE in CASH. Removals without trouble or expense to the Vendors.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

REV. T. SHACKLETON, Hereford.
Damasus and Palmyra, by Addison, 2 vols., 1838.—Esop's Fables, by James, 1848.—Agatha: a Novel, 1869.—Alice in Wonderland, 1865.—Naturalist on the Amazon, 1864.—The Malay Archipelago
2 vols., 1869.

G. GREGORY, 5, Argyll Street, Bath.
Badminton Library, large paper. A set.
Army Lists. 1789, 1793, 1794.

J. T. GOLDIE, Bookseller, Athenaeum Buildings, Leeds.
Darwin's (C.) Works. Set, or any Stevenson, First Editions. Any
Burns (R.). Any Early issues.

C. H. CATTLE, 2, East Circus Street, Nottingham.
Hissey's Drive through England, 1880.—Watson's Prince's Quest, 1880.—Watson's Epigrams, 1884.—Watson's Poems, 1882.—First Editions by Hardy, Meredith, Stevenson, Barrie, Kipling.

R. F. COLLARD, 42A, Broad Street, Bath.
St. Ven's Medical Botany. (6 copies).—Nod Barker's Cold Views Bath and Neighbourhood.—Burns's (R.) Croonian Song Book.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of WHATLEY,
LIVIUS, HALL, CHAUNCEY, DANA, and any Old
Specimens; also Funch's Pocket Books.—MOORE, 4, Trelawn Road Leyton, Essex.

REV. S. JOHNSON, Melplash, Bridport.
Partridge's Almanacks, 1868, '69, 70, 71.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1897. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

(Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

E. S. FOWLER, Bookseller, Eastbourne.
Munro's Lucretia. 2 vols. 18s. 6d. (pub. 14s.).—Lew's
(G. H.) First Book. Ranthorpe. Orig. cl. 1847. 7s. 6d.—Froissart's
Chronicles. 2 vols. 4to, full tree calf, fine, 18s. 6d.

J. T. GOLDIE, Bookseller, Athenaeum Buildings, Leeds.
Seebohm's British Birds, 4 vols., half-morocco, uncut. £8 10s.
Kingsley's Novels. Everyday Edition. 11 vols. as new. 27s.
(pub. 23 15s.).
Harrison's (F.) Annals of an Old Manor House. 4to, as new, 16s.
(42s. net).

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c.,
&c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Office: 14 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LIBRARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-lined Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY. BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages, whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL, ENTITLED THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

By Dr. MAURUS JÓKAI.

Translated by Mrs. WAUGH (ELLIS WRIGHT). With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)

Crown 8vo, art linen, 6s.

First, Second, and Third Editions exhausted.

FOURTH EDITION now ready.

"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, every one of whom it is not too much to say is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is an interesting and knowledgeable narrative of a puzzling political period, and it is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle. Mr. Courtenay says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book this latest novel dealing with the early years of the present century and with that world of inarticulate romance—the empire of all the Russias. In force and fire and prodigal variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."

BY MAURUS JÓKAI (Uniform with the above).

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.

Authorised Editions, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. each.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN.

'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

PRETTY MICHAL.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C. At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

Just published price 2s. 6d., post free.

GOUT and its CURE. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D.—"The author has had a wide experience in Gout, and presents us with a very readable little book."—County Gentleman.

London: JAMES EPES & Co. (Ld.), 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Threadneedle Street.

AUTHORS of NOVELS and SHORT STORIES adapted for Serial Publication are invited to communicate with Mr. J. P. S. SAMPSON'S NEWSPAPER SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

FORD MADOX BROWN.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

FREDERIC J. SHIELDS.

A series of Autotype Reproductions of the Chief Works of these Masters is NOW ON VIEW at THE GRAFTON GALLERIES. They include the chief Cartoons made by Ford Madox Brown for stained glass, his "Cordelia's Portion," "English Boy," "Shakespeare, Homer," etc., etc., Rossetti's "Beatrice," "A Lamp of Memory," "Monna Rosa," "Proserpine," "The Annunciation," "The Blessed Damozel," Studies of the Oxford Frescoes, etc., etc.—Particulars on application.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING.

Painted by D. G. ROSSETTI in 1855. Reproduced in Autogravure from the Original in the possession of O. Fairfax, Esq. Size of Work 4½ inches by 4½ inches. Proofs on Vellum, 21s.; on Japanese, 10s. 6d.; Prints, 6s.

THE WEST FRONT OF

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.

From a negative specially taken before the erection of the scaffolding, by R. G. SCRIVEN, F.S.I. Printed in sepia or warm black, 18 inches by 15 inches, price 10s. 6d.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

A large series of the Chief Works of this Master, including the great Allegorical designs, and many others. Full particulars on application.

FRENCH PAINTERS OF THE

NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Permanent Carbon Reproductions of Works by Jean François Millet, Theodore Rousseau, Jean Baptiste Corot, Daubigny, Jules Breton, Daguerre, W. Bouguereau, Meissonier, Carolus-Duran, Cabanel, Debat-Ponsan, E. Adan, etc., etc., in various sizes.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL OF

LANDSCAPE PAINTING,

Including the Chief Works of John Constable, R.A., J. M. W. Turner, R.A., Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., R. F. Bonington, Old Crome, W. J. Müller, David Cox, Girtin, Samuel Prout, etc., etc.

Abridged Catalogues on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. HENRY & CO.

will have pleasure in forwarding on application full particulars of each of the following important Publications:—

'THE STANDARD WORK ON MODERN ART.'

THE HISTORY OF MODERN PAINTING.

By Professor RICHARD MUTHÉ. 3 vols., fully illustrated, £3 15s. net; Library Edition, half-morocco, £3 15s. net.

As the Times rightly says, "this is the most complete, the most exhaustive work on modern art in existence. It is essential to the perfection of every library."

MR. GLADSTONE "SETS A HIGH VALUE ON"

THE RECOLLECTIONS

ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE.

With a Portrait. 13s. net; 10 copies (very few remain) on Japanese vellum, vellum-bound, £3 15s. 6d. net.

"Excellent translation.... a wonderful picture of the Revolution.... His sketches of the leading men of the day are wonderfully incisive, and none the less entertaining for being a trifle acid."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"BRIGADIER GERARD IN REAL LIFE."

MEMOIRS OF MARSHAL OUDINOT.

With 2 Portraits. 17s. net; 10 copies (very few remain) on Japanese vellum, vellum-bound, £3 3s. net.

"These delightful souvenirs. We have devoured them, every word."—Bookman.

"THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE FUTURE."

See the Quarterly Review on

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE.

Now ready.

Vol. XI. THE CASE OF WAGNER; NIETZSCHE CONTRA WAGNER; THE TWILIGHT OF THE IDOLS; THE ANTICHRIST. 10s. 6d. net.

Vol. VIII. THUS SPAKE ZARATHUSTRA. 17s. net.

Ready shortly.

Vol. X. A GENEALOGY OF MORALS: POEMS. 8s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

"THE NOVEL OF THE SEASON."—Academy.

THE PASSION FOR ROMANCE.

By EDGAR JEPSON. 6s.

THE PASSION FOR ROMANCE.

By EDGAR JEPSON. 6s.

THE PASSION FOR ROMANCE.

By EDGAR JEPSON. 6s.

"Nothing quite so audacious has ever been put before the reading public."—Westminster Gazette.

THE CHILDREN OF THE HOUR.

A PAPER FOR THE FEW.

This is a Paper published twice a week in a strictly limited number of copies, to Subscribers only, at a high price. Full particulars and Preliminary Number will be sent, post free, on application to the Publishers, at the address below.

THIRD THOUSAND NOW READY.

THE GERMAN MENACE and its ENGLISH APOLOGISTS. By ERNEST E. WILLIAMS, Author of "Made in Germany." Price 3d. net.

LONDON: H. HENRY & CO., LIMITED, 93, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

DOWNEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MISS EMILY SOLDENE'S RECOLLECTIONS.
MY THEATRICAL and MUSICAL RECOLLECTIONS. By EMILY SOLDENE. Demy 8vo, with Seven Portraits, 10s. 6d.

"I hear everybody is buying the book."
Illustrated London News.
"A veritable mine of anecdote."—Newcastle Leader.
"One of the most diverting and readable autobiographies of recent years."—World.

"A DELIGHTFUL VOLUME."—BRITISH REVIEW.
SIR ROBERT PEEL'S NEW NOVEL.

A BIT of a FOOL. 6s.

"A Bit of a Fool" indeed, though it wears the form of a novel, may safely be said, from the moralist's point of view, to have no equal in literature more recent than 'The Confessions of St. Augustine.'—British Review.

MR. JOHN O'LEARY'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.
RECOLLECTIONS of FENIANS and FENIANISM. 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Portraits, 21s.

"The whole book is full of interest."—World.
"I do not remember to have read a more honest book."
The Sketch.
"Not only of exceptional interest, but also of historical value."—New York Herald.

"TWO HANDSOME VOLUMES."—TIMES.

PACATA HIBERNIA. Edited, and with an Introduction and Notes, by STANDISH O'GRADY, With Portraits, Maps, and Plans. 2 vols., medium 8vo, half calf, 42s. net.

* * * Edition limited to 500 Numbered Copies.
"The new edition will undoubtedly attract hundreds and probably thousands, to properly study a subject hitherto confined to the class of historical students. The introductory matter is full of information and sound sense, and treated in a thoroughly workmanlike manner."
Daily Telegraph.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

SONGS and BALLADS of YOUNG IRELAND. Edited by MARTIN MACDERMOTT. Fcap. 8vo, with Portraits and Biographical Sketches. 2s. 6d.

"This beautiful volume is the most complete collection that has ever appeared of the poetry that gushed so copiously out of the heart of Ireland."—Irish Monthly.

THE POEMS of JOSEPH SHERIDAN LE FANU. Edited, and with a Memoir, by ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES. Fcap. 8vo, with a Portrait of Le Fanu. 3s. 6d.

"Publishers, printers, and editor are all to be thanked for this well-timed, well-printed, and well-edited little book."—ACADEMY.

NEW SIX SHILLING NOVELS.

DID HE DESERVE IT?

By Mrs. RIDDELL. [March.

A JUSTIFIED SINNER.

By FITZGERALD MOLLOY. [This day.

DINAH FLEET.

By JOHN HILL and G. F. BACON. [This day.

The DUNTHORPES of WESTLEIGH
By CHRISTIAN LYS.

A LONELY GIRL. By Mrs. Hungerford.

THE STAR SAPPHIRE. By Mabel Collins.

A TRAGIC IDYL. By Paul Bourget.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

THE UGLY MAN. By the Author of "A House of Tears."

YOUNG MRS. STAPLES. By Emily SOLDENE.

THE BISHOP'S AMAZEMENT. By David CHRISTIE MURRAY.

THE CIRCESSIAN. By Morley Robert and MAX MONTESOLE.

TWO NEW EDITIONS.

A HOUSE of TEARS. By the Author of "The Ugly Man." Fancy cloth, 2s. Twenty-first Thousand. [This day.

THE ADVENTURES of a SHIP'S DOCTOR. By MORLEY ROBERTS. New and Cheaper Edition. Fancy cloth, 2s. [This day.

DOWNEY & CO., LIMITED,
12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MESSRS. WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW BOOKS.

SIR GEORGE TRYON'S LIFE.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—The FIRST EDITION of "The LIFE of VICE-ADMIRAL Sir GEORGE TRYON, K.C.B.," by REAR-ADMIRAL C. C. PENROSE FITZGERALD, having been exhausted before day of publication, a SECOND EDITION is in preparation, and will be published on Wednesday, 24th inst.

BEATRICE HARRADEN'S NEW BOOK.
NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—On Saturday, 27th inst., will be published "HILDA STRAFFORD AND THE REMITTANCE MAN," TWO CALIFORNIAN STORIES, by BEATRICE HARRADEN, Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," "In Varying Moods," &c, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PERIODS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.
Edited by Professor SAINTSBURY.

SHORTLY WILL BE PUBLISHED.

THE FLOURISHING of ROMANCE,
And the Rise of Allegory.

(12th and 13th Centuries.) By GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A., Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in Edinburgh University. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

SECOND SERIES.

PROFESSOR CAMPBELL FRASER'S GIFFORD LECTURES. PHILOSOPHY OF THEISM.

Being the Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1895-96. By ALEXANDER CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.C.L. Oxford, LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Professor Fraser has done a notable service to the spiritual interpretation of the universe, and to the best interests of a really rational religion, by his singularly clear, temperate, and convincing statement of the grounds of a philosophic faith."—Glasgow Herald.

"No competent critic will deny that Professor Fraser, in the two series of his Gifford Lectures, has made a contribution of great value and importance to the philosophic study of the foundations of theistic belief."—Times.

"We have read this book with great and ever-increasing admiration. It is a book to read over and over again, and to make a companion of until we master it.... This is a great book, the greatest Gifford Lecture we have yet had." Professor EVERACH in the Aberdeen Free Press.

CHEAP RE-ISSUE IN SHILLING VOLUMES.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.

Edited by Rev. W. LUCAS COLLINS.

I. HOMER—THE ILIAD. By the EDITOR. [Ready.

II. HOMER—THE ODYSSEY. By the EDITOR. [March 1.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE DONGOLA EXPEDITION.
LETTERS FROM THE SUDAN.

By the Special Correspondent of The Times (E. F. KNIGHT).

Reprinted from The Times of April to October, 1896.
With Illustrations and Plans.
Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

THIRD THOUSAND Now Ready.
MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

By MISS MARY H. KINGSLEY.

With 16 Full-page and numerous Text ILLUSTRATIONS
Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

LAND AND WATER.—"Her book is the brightest and most readable work of travel that has ever fallen into our hands."

Royal 16mo, 5s.

The MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.
Lenten Readings selected chiefly from Unpublished Manuscripts of the Right Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D., late Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts. By W. M. L. JAY.

BY EDWIN A. ABBOTT.

8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE SPIRIT on the WATERS.
The Evolution of the Divine from the Human. By EDWIN A. ABBOTT, Author of "Philochristus," &c.

BY THE LATE DEAN CHURCH.
OCCASIONAL PAPERS selected from The Guardian, The Times, and The Saturday Review, 1846-1890. By the late R. W. CHURCH, M.A., D.C.L., sometime Rector of Whitley, Dean of St. Paul's, Honorary Fellow of Oriel College. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s. [EVERLEY SERIES.

BY GOLDWIN SMITH.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

GUESSES at the RIDDLE of EXISTENCE, and Other Essays on Kindred Subjects. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L., Author of "Canada and the Canadian Question," &c.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS OF CHARLES KINGSLEY'S WESTWARD HO!

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION. With 8 Illustrations by Charles E. Brock. Med. 8vo, cloth, 1s.

THE "PEACOCK" EDITION. With 50 Illustrations by Charles E. Brock. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s.

THE "ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS" EDITION With 50 Illustrations by Charles E. Brock. Cloth uncut edges, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, Revised throughout.

Medium 8vo, 14s. net.

THE ELEMENTS of POLITICS.
By HENRY SIDGWICK, Author of "The Methods of Ethics," &c.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

THE HALF-CROWN EDITION
OF
Mrs. Henry Wood's Novels.

Each Story Complete in One Volume, crown 8vo, red cloth, gilt lettered. The following volumes are now obtainable.

Each Story sold separately, price 2s 6d.

SALE OVER TWO MILLION COPIES.

East Lynne.	430th Thousand.
The Channings.	160th Thousand.
Mrs. Halliburton's Troubles.	150th Thousand.
The Shadow of Ashlydyat.	90th Thousand.
Lord Oakburn's Daughters.	90th Thousand.
Verner's Pride.	65th Thousand.
Roland Yorke.	115th Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow.	First Series. 50th Thousand.
Mildred Arkell.	68th Thousand.
St. Martin's Eve.	68th Thousand.
Trevlyn Hold.	54th Thousand.
George Canterbury's Will.	65th Thousand.
The Red Court Farm.	60th Thousand.
Within the Maze.	85th Thousand.
Elster's Folly.	50th Thousand.
Lady Adelaide.	50th Thousand.
Oswald Cray.	52nd Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow.	Second Series. 33rd Thousand.
Anne Hereford.	45th Thousand.
Dene Hollow.	45th Thousand.
Edina.	40th Thousand.
A Life's Secret.	48th Thousand.
The House of Halliwell.	15th Thousand.
Pomeroy Abbey.	40th Thousand.
Court Netherleigh.	26th Thousand.
The Master of Greylands.	40th Thousand.

These Novels may also be had in green cloth, price 2s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

FAMOUS SCOTS—New Vols.
Price 1s. 6d. each; or cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT.

By OLIPHANT SMEATON,
Author of "Allan Ramsay." [This day.

THE TRUTH ABOUT BOSWELL.

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith
LEASK, Author of "Hugh Miller."
The Morning Leader says: "The defence of Boswell in his delightful study is one of the finest and most convincing passages that have recently appeared in the field of British biography."

THOMAS CHALMERS. By Professor
W. GARDEN BLAIKIE, D.D.
The Bookseller says: "Dr. Blaikie gives us a very complete view of Chalmers's wonderful career."

SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By his Daughter, EVE BLANTYRE SIMPSON.
The Daily Chronicle says: "It is indeed long since we have read such a charmingly written biography. There is not a dull, irrelevant, or superfluous page."
List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.
Eleven Volumes now ready.

THE TIMES says of "A Cycle of Cathay": "It is, perhaps, the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

A CYCLE OF CATHAY.

China, South and North. With Personal Reminiscences. By the Rev. W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., Ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and numerous Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

FROM FAR FORMOSA:

Its Island, Its People, and Missions. By GEORGE LESLIE MACKAY, D.D., Twenty-three Years a Missionary in Formosa. Edited by Rev. J. A. MACDONALD. Third Edition. With Portraits, Illustrations and Maps. 7s. 6d.

THE FAR

EAST. PERSIAN LIFE and CUSTOMS.

With Scenes and Incidents of Residence and Travel in the Land of the Lion and the Sun. By S. G. WILSON, M.A., Fifteen Years a Missionary in Persia. Second Edition. With Map and Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

FOR STARK LOVE and KINDNESS:
a Story of Flodden. By N. ALLAN MACDONALD.

The British Weekly says: "A romantic tale of Flodden, boldly conceived, with plenty of love, villainy, and adventure."

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

A GIRL in TEN THOUSAND. By
L. T. MEADE. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS

OF
ANNIE S. SWAN'S POPULAR NOVELS.

The following are now ready:—

3/6 SHEILA.

Handsomely By ANNIE S. SWAN.

3/6 THE GUINEA STAMP.

Bound. By ANNIE S. SWAN, Author of "Aldersyde," "The Gates of Eden," &c.

DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.—Price 3s. 6d., gilt top.

BIBLE CHARACTERS—ADAM to ACHAN. By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.
CONTENTS: Adam—Eve—Cain—Abel—Enoch—Jubal—Noah—Ham—Nimrod—Terah—Abraham—Lot—Sarah—Isaac—Esau—Rebekah—Jacob—Joseph—Aaron—Miriam—Moses—Pharaoh—Balaam—Joshua—Achan.

By THE SAME AUTHOR.—Second Edition, 3s. 6d.

LANCELOT ANDREWES and his PRIVATE DEVOTIONS. A Biography, a Transcript, and an Interpretation.

"It is a volume to be placed beside one's Bible and Thomas à Kempis—an example of devotional utterance of singular power and beauty."—Scotsman.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

THE STORY OF AN AFRICAN CRISIS.

By EDMUND GARRETT,

The Editor of the Cape Times, the leading paper in South Africa.

In this book Mr. Garrett has produced a highly valuable and authentic history of the stirring episodes which took place in the Transvaal at the beginning of the year 1896.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

AN ESSAY ON COMEDY.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

WHITMAN: a Study.

By JOHN BURROUGHS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

MADGE O' THE POOL.

By WILLIAM SHARP.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SONGS OF THE MAID.

By JOHN HUNTLY SKRINE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NATION'S AWAKENING.

By SPENSER WILKINSON.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

THE POPULAR
RELIGION AND FOLKLORE OF NORTHERN INDIA.

By WILLIAM CROOKE.

With numerous Full-Page Plates.

2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

A BOOK FOR DANIE STUDENTS.

The CHRONICLE of VILLANI.

Edited by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book, picturesque and instructive reading as it is, is not less interesting and still more valuable, for readers of Italy's greatest poets."—Scotsman

"Sure to have a warm welcome."—Globe.
"A thoughtful introduction gives a general outline of the Florentine problems of the period."
—Western Morning News.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS, 1546-1548.

By A. F. LEACH, M.A., F.S.A.,

Late Fellow of All Souls, Oxford, Assistant Charity Commissioner.

Demy 8vo.

A very remarkable contribution to the History of Secondary Education in England, not less novel in its conclusions.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

With Frontispieces by ALX. ANSTED, a Reproduction of Sir Joshua REYNOLDS' Portrait.

6 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per vol.; also half-morocco, 3s. net per vol.

Sold in Sets only.

"Far and away the best Boswell, I should say, for the ordinary book-lover now on the market."

—Illustrated London News.

"... We have good reason to be thankful for an edition of a very useful and attractive kind."—Spectator.

"The volumes, which are light, and so well bound that they open easily anywhere, are exceedingly pleasant to handle and read."—St. James's Budget.

"This undertaking of the publishers ought to be certain of success."—The Bookseller.

"Read him at once if you have hitherto refrained from that exhilarating and most varied entertainment; or, have you read him?—then read him again."—The Speaker.

"Constable's edition will long remain the best both for the general reader and the scholar."—Review of Reviews.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, S.W.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
Dr. Nansen's "Farthest North"	225
The Graves of a Household	227
The Fall of the Congo Arabs	228
An American Historian	229
For Dante Students	229
Mr. Le Gallienne's Romance	230
The City of London	230
In Lands of Sunshine	231
FICTION:
Phroso: a Romance—The Little Regiment—The Idol-Maker—The Dowager's Determination—An Anxious Moment—Blind Bats	231
IMPRESSIONS OF NEW BOOKS	233
SOME MEMORIES OF PAUL VERLAINE	234
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XV., Michael Drayton	235
NOTES AND NEWS	236
ANNOUNCEMENTS	237
EDUCATIONAL NOTES	237
THE BOOK MARKET	238
CORRESPONDENCE	238
DRAMA	239
ART	240
MUSIC	241
SCIENCE	241

REVIEWS.

DR. NANSEN'S "FARTHEST NORTH."

Fridtjof Nansen's "Farthest North": the Record of a Voyage of Exploration in the "Fram," 1893-96, and of a Fifteen Months' Sleigh Journey by Dr. Nansen and Lieut. Sverdrup. With an Appendix by Otto Sverdrup. Numerous Text Illustrations and Thirteen Coloured Plates from Dr. Nansen's Sketches. In 2 vols. (Westminster: Archibald Constable & Co.)

IT has been nothing but "Nansen, Nansen," for so long that lips and ears are beginning to be weary of the nasal name, and one feels inclined to inquire, What is it after all that Nansen has done? He has been farther north than anyone ever went before; but this is a record-cutting age, and we do not lionise our cycling champions or professional sprinters. He has proved the truth of his theory that a current flows north-westwards across the polar regions; but Newton who proved the law of gravitation never had such a world-wide reception as this. He has conducted the most successful expedition that ever broached the Arctic regions; but Livingstone did an even greater work in Africa, and men like Parry, who sowed where Nansen has reaped, achieved their epoch-making discoveries under infinitely more trying circumstances, and without all the nineteenth century comforts and conveniences that Nansen was able to make use of. These men were not honoured with the Albert Hall or with special gold medals; while Nansen—well, perhaps, it is due to the man's own personal charm. He is genial, strong, of splendid physique, and ignorant of what fear means. Above all he is young. He has shown powers of endurance that would be impossible for most men, and a capacity for leadership that is akin to genius. He has carried out a forlorn hope in the teeth of keen opposition, backed by all the authority of experience; and he has carried it out exactly as he said he would do. This alone stamps Nansen as a man outside the common mould, and constitutes a claim to greatness. It is a pity he has become so popular!

Here, however, we are dealing, not with Nansen the man, but with his book, and for this we have little but praise. It tells from beginning to end, making one feel successively the thrill of excitement and adventure, the triumph over difficulty, the love of the chase, the longing for home, the monotonous waiting, and at intervals the deep, mysterious fascination of that great ice-bound world with its thundering floes and flaming skies. These two prodigious volumes—whatever may be their scientific value—are packed full of interest which hardly ever flags. Let us follow the narrative from the day when Nansen, with his heart full of the thoughts of home and of the wild beauties of his native coast, turned his helm from Norway in the grey of a June morning, 1893, and set sail for the New Siberian Islands in the far east. That voyage alone furnishes material for the better part of one volume. Amid the fog and ice of the Kara Sea the Fram had to fight her way, dodging a host of unmapped islands and currents, until at last she rounded the formidable Cape Chelyuskin, and her leader breathed again, for the endless difficulties had produced a dread that a way out would not be found, and that the year would be wasted. On September 18, at a point west of the New Siberian Islands, the course of the Fram was directed northwards, and on the 20th she was anchored to a floe on the edge of the ice-drift just north of Sannikof Island.

Now was the critical moment when the theory of the expedition was to be tested. Would the great north-westerly current which Nansen believed set in from Behring Strait across the polar region bear them along on its icy bosom, or would they remain drifting about, a sport of winds and ice-floes? For a time they went steadily northwards; then came an anxious time. The wind set steadily from the wrong quarter, and the ship drifted south. By the end of November the lost ground was hardly made up, and the leader was in the depths of despair.

"It is no good trying to take the thing philosophically," he writes in his diary. "I cannot deny that the question whether we are to return successful or unsuccessful affects me very deeply. . . . I can bring myself to believe honestly that it is all a matter of indifference, but none the less my spirits change like the clouds of heaven, according as the wind blows from this direction or that. When I think of the many that trust us, of the friends that gave us their time, their faith, their money, the wish comes that they may not be disappointed, and I grow sombre that our progress is not what we expected it would be."

Time was not wasted in misgivings, however. On board the Fram all was activity in preparation for the long winter night, the first of three.

"We cleared up the hold to make room for a joiner's workshop; our mechanical workshop was in the engine-room. The smithy was first on deck and afterwards on the ice. Tinsmith's work was done in the chart-room, shoemaker's and sailmaker's work in the saloon. All these occupations were carried on with interest and activity. There was nothing, from the most delicate instruments down to wooden shoes, that could not be made on board the Fram, and thoroughly well made too."

Then there were daily observations to take, a point in which the expedition never relaxed even when it meant cutting through many feet of ice to get a sounding, or dredging through a hole that at any moment might close up, or running up on deck at all times in a temperature many degrees below zero. But they were a hardy lot these picked Norsemen. What are we to think of men who deliberately strolled up in shirt sleeves and pants to take a reading in the bitter cold, who faced the icy water like seals, and who complained of nothing but the heat of the ship? The spirits and appetites of such men were unconquerable. Where other crews have wasted and sickened they laid on flesh till it became a standing joke. The doctor's post was a sinecure, and he was reduced first to studying bookbinding, and finally to editing a comic paper. On this point of healthiness, which is one that future explorers cannot afford to ignore, Nansen writes as follows:

"An English Arctic authority, with whom I had some conversation, expressed himself very discouragingly on the subject of life in the polar regions, and combated my cheerful faith in the possibility of preventing scurvy. . . . For my own part I can say that the Arctic night has had no ageing, no weakening influence of any kind upon me. I seem, on the contrary, to grow younger. This quiet, regular life suits me well, and I cannot remember a time when I was in better bodily health. I differ from other authorities to the extent of feeling inclined to recommend this region as an excellent sanatorium in cases of nervousness and breakdown. This in all sincerity."

In another passage he becomes apologetic after reading the terrible experiences of Kane's expedition:

"I am almost ashamed of the life we lead, with none of those darkly painted sufferings which are indispensable to a properly exciting Arctic expedition. We shall have nothing to write about when we get home."

In the meantime, the Fram had undergone what, for her, was the severest trial of all, the dreaded ice pressure. Suddenly one afternoon it came—first in short, sharp cracks, then in moans along the side of the ship.

"Now it is a high plaintive tone, now a grumble, now a snarl, and the ship gives a lift up. The noise steadily grows till it is like all the pipes of an organ. . . . Many a ship would have been crushed long ago; but outside the ice is ground against our ship's sides, the piles of broken-up floe are forced under her heavy invulnerable hull, and we lie as if in a bed."

So callous did the crew become to this danger that they ceased to take any interest in it; yet there was one occasion during the following winter, not this one, when the pressure became so enormous that even Nansen thought it wise to make all preparations for abandoning the ship:

"To-night everybody sleeps fully dressed. . . . I was called at 5.30 by Sverdrup, who told me that the hummock had now reached the Fram, and was bearing down on us violently. There was a thundering and crashing as if doomsday had come. I jumped up. Nothing was left but to call all hands, put the remaining provisions on the ice, and then put all our furs and equipments on deck so that they could be thrown overboard at a moment's notice. . . . At about eight o'clock in the evening, when we thought the ice pressure had subsided, it started crashing and thundering worse than ever. Masses of snow and ice rushed on us high above the rail amidships and over the tent. Peter seized a spade and started digging away at the ice, and I followed, to see how matters stood. I saw more than I cared to see; it was hopeless to fight that enemy with a spade. I called out to Peter to come back, and said: 'We had better see to getting everything out on the ice.' Hardly had I spoken when it pressed on again, and, as Peter said, laughing till he shook again, 'nearly sent both him and the spade to the deuce.'

Finally things became so alarming that the ship was actually emptied; yet when the tremendous mass of ice was cleared away she was found to be uninjured. It is a record incident in a record history; but to show the entire absence of panic which prevailed, it is mentioned that the laconic Sverdrup, at the worst crisis of all, had to be summoned clothes-less from the bath!

A few experiences like this, and the steady drift of the Fram to the north-west in the direction which Nansen had predicted she would take, soon made it clear that the object of the expedition would be attained. By August of 1894 the leader was able to calculate that in two years he would reach home. Then it was that he began to revolve a plan which had formed itself in his mind of sending an expedition with sledges and dogs northwards, to the Pole if possible, fitting it out with provisions, and leaving it to find its way southwards to Franz Josef Land or Spitzbergen, since return to the ship would be out of the question. This expedition he eventually decided to undertake himself, the risks being considerable, and for his companion he selected Lieutenant Johansen as possessing physical endurance which was remarkable even in that band of giants. The story of their adventures forms one of the most realistic and exciting chapters in the whole range of Arctic history. But it is not so much the exciting part of it that commands attention as the almost inconceivable toil and endurance. The ice after the first day or two became broken up into rough hummocks and ridges intersected with long lanes and pools where the water was barely frozen over. Frequent falls into these meant chilled limbs and stiffly frozen garments, while the continual violent exertion produced almost the same effect.

"During the course of the day the damp exhalations of the body had little by little become condensed in our outer garments, which were now a mass of ice, and transformed into complete suits of ice-armour. They were so hard and stiff that if we had only been able to get them off they could have stood by themselves, and they crackled audibly every time we moved. These clothes were so stiff that the sleeve of my coat actually rubbed deep sores in my wrists during our marches; one of these sores—the one on the right hand—got frost-bitten, the wound grew deeper and deeper, and nearly reached the bone. I tried to protect it with bandages, but not until late in the summer did it heal, and I shall probably have the scar for life."

As the dogs became thinned down to furnish food for the remainder the toil became more and more severe. At last it became evident that no good was to be obtained by further progress. From the highest hummocks the same chaos of ice-blocks could be seen stretching endlessly northwards, and if a retreat was to be made to Franz Josef Land that summer it became necessary to turn at once. On April 8 Nansen advanced to his most northerly point, 86° 14', 200 miles nearer the Pole than anyone had ever been before.

The return journey began well, but soon became more difficult. The dogs grew famished, and threw themselves ravenously on the warm limbs of their slaughtered comrades, which at first they could hardly be induced to touch. This killing of dogs was one of the episodes that most revolted the two travellers, but it had to be done. Their own food was not plentiful, and in those latitudes—despite the astounding occurrence of fresh tracks—warm-blooded animals were hardly to be found. To add to their troubles their watches had run down, and though Nansen took observations to reset them by, they could never again feel absolutely sure of their bearings. Here is a description of the kind of travelling they endured:

"There seemed to be no end to it; wherever we turned there were yawning channels. On the overcast sky the dark, threatening reflection of water was to be seen in all directions. It really seemed as if the ice was entirely broken up. Hungry and almost tired to death we were, but determined, if possible, to have our troubles behind us before we stopped for dinner. . . . As a last drop in our cup of misery, the weather became so thick that one literally could not see if he were walking up against a wall of ice or plunging into a pit. How many lanes and cracks we went across, how many huge ridges we clambered over, dragging the heavy sledges behind us, I cannot say, but very many. . . . Altogether, we had now been at this sort of work for nearly twelve hours, and I had, in addition, followed the lane for three hours in the morning, which made fifteen."

Narrow escapes and duckings in the icy channels were of common occurrence. No wonder the toil-worn travellers rejoiced to get eventually into a land where bears could be shot to furnish meat, and after that to the open water, where kayaks could be floated, and the labour of dragging the sledges dispensed with. In a chapter called "Land at Last," this portion of the route is described. The chief danger now to be dreaded was the upsetting of the light canvas kayaks, or the not infrequent attacks of walruses. The heroes were not born to be drowned, however, and finally ended their adventurous journey on an island which they were unable to locate, but which turned out subsequently to be one of the Prince Rudolf group, to the north of Franz Josef Land. Here, as the summer was so far spent (it was August), they determined to remain for the winter in a hut which they constructed of stones. A larder of bears' flesh and walrus-blubber had next to be prepared. Fortunately, both were plentiful, bears in particular having an unpleasant way of raiding the hut at night. But their worst enemies were foxes. The bears stole blubber and devoured their own kind; but the foxes made off with thermometers and even with the kayak sails. During the long dark winter it was impossible to do anything but eat and sleep. Nansen's diary, kept throughout under the terribly trying circumstances of the journey, was neglected, except when some anniversary like Christmas Eve caused him to enter in it the thoughts which carried him back to home.

When spring came, release came with it, and the journey southwards was resumed. Shortly after starting, the two experienced the narrowest escape of the whole trip. The kayaks, made fast to a lump of ice, broke away and drifted off, leaving the explorers helpless and destitute even of pocket-knives. In the emergency Nansen plunged into the icy water, as everyone knows, and, swimming till his limbs lost consciousness, was just able to rescue them. It was a fine feat, worthy of the man. But the end came soon after, when good luck brought them right into the arms of the Jackson-Harmsworth expedition, then engaged in mapping Franz Josef Land. From that moment their hardships were at an end, and scarcely had the news of their safety penetrated to Europe when it was followed by the remarkable arrival of the Fram, whose adventures form a separate and most interesting narrative.

Such are the outward facts of the expedition, a memorable one in itself, inasmuch as it has broken all records of penetration towards the Pole, and that without loss of life or so much as a single case of sickness. Scientifically, what has it contributed to our knowledge of the Arctic problem?

The first thing one might expect is a mass of information relating to the age and structure of the polar ice, over which Nansen travelled for so many miles, and on which he spent three years. In this respect we are disappointed. He gives us, it is true, some interesting notes upon the tidal opening and closing up of the ice-pressure north of the New Siberian Islands, the influence of moon changes, and so on. The tidal action has long been known to exist, though, possibly, not on such definite grounds. Again, Nansen claims to have dispelled for ever the theory that the Pole is covered by an ice-cap of hoary age of which the drift is an outward fringe. In point of fact he can only speak for a region considerably distant from the Pole, and even there he encountered huge remains of ice that he describes himself as finely palæocrystic. He has certainly established his own special theory of the great drift of the ice in a north-westerly direction from Siberia across the polar region and down the east coast of Greenland. His interpretation of the finding of the Jeannette relics where they were cast up may now be regarded as conclusive; moreover, it seems probable that, as Nansen himself says, anyone starting from still further east than he did, say from the mouth of Behring Strait, would stand a chance of being carried even nearer the Pole than the Fram was carried. The proof of this fact alone was worth the expedition.

Geographically, Nansen has opened our eyes to what he considers some important errors in existing maps. He has noted a few discrepancies and entered some new islands in the desolate regions of the Taimyr peninsula east of the Kara Sea; but the dense fog and mist prevailing along the northern shore of Asia rendered it impossible for him, as it did for Nordenskiöld, the geographer of those parts, to do more than guess at the coast lines, and the work of correctly mapping that inhospitable archipelago is still to do. In their southward retreat, again, Nansen and Johansen were constantly disappointed to see no signs of the northern projections of Franz Josef Land which Payer had marked down in his admirable map and christened "Petermann's Land." Nansen believes that this northward projection does not exist, and that Payer was deceived by mist banks. He supports this belief by pointing out that the sea to the north of Franz Josef Land is deep, like the polar basin in general; whereas in the regions of land it is shallow. The deep soundings taken by the crew of the Fram are not the least remarkable of their observations. They have revealed a depth of water under the comparatively thin ice which was never before suspected, 2,000 fathoms and upwards having been registered.

Beyond noting the presence of foxes and narwhals in the 85th parallel Nansen has not yet given us much zoological information. He has apparently discovered the nesting-place, in Prince Rudolf Land, of the rare Ross's gull (Radostethia Rosea), and he has made dredgings of star-fish, algæ, and even bacteria from the pools in the drifting ice. His sketches of luminous phenomena, though interesting and beautiful, are not in themselves important. Every Arctic traveller knows the look of mock moons, auroras, and the northern lights, and, besides, Nansen's sketches were all made in comparatively low latitudes.

The map at the end of the first volume should be a useful guide to future expeditions, although we may be prepared for considerable additions to and alterations in it as the route taken by the Fram is more thoroughly explored. It would not be fair to criticise the get-up of the book itself too closely, as it must have been done under pressure almost as severe as that undergone by the Fram. The text illustrations in particular leave something to be desired. The type, however, is well chosen, well printed, and the book for its bulk is not heavy. Certainly it will remain for many a year to come as an Arctic classic, and the narrative which beats its record will be the sensation of a future age.

THE GRAVES OF A HOUSEHOLD.

The Thackerays in India. By Sir William Wilson Hunter. (Henry Frowde.)

ABOUT ten years ago there appeared in the Englishman a couple of articles on "Some Calcutta Graves," which were recognised at the time as coming from the brilliant pen of Sir William Hunter. One of the tombs there specially described was that of the father of Thackeray, who died in 1815, four years after the birth of his famous son. Those newspaper articles form the germ of the present book, greatly enriched by the author's travels through India, by his study of original records, and (above all) by the use of a family book of the Thackerays, which was compiled chiefly by an aunt of the novelist. Hitherto, for reasons which it is impossible not to respect, comparatively little has been published about the family history of Thackeray. It was known, of course, that he was born at Calcutta; and no reader of Vanity Fair or The Newcomes could doubt that his early life was deeply imbued with Anglo-Indian traditions. Sir William Hunter now lifts the veil, and shows that for two generations the Thackeray family played a not undistinguished part in laying the foundations of the British empire in the East. Incidentally we learn at what cost of lives that empire was purchased. Out of seven Thackerays who went to India, only one came back. Two died fighting, a third at sea, and three of disease.

The first Thackeray in India was the grandfather of the novelist, who bore the familiar Christian names of William Makepeace. It was his good fortune to obtain a writership on the Bengal establishment during the period when there was really a pagoda tree to shake. Though the Company at that time gave beggarly salaries to its servants—Sir W. Hunter calculates that Thackeray's total official income during ten years did not amount to more than £2,000—they permitted them to engage in private trade. The grandfather of the novelist seems always to have had good billets—notably at Sylhet, on the Assam frontier, where he contracted to provide elephants for the public service. Hence, he was able to retire at the age of twenty-six with a competency, if not a fortune.

Of the seven sons of "Sylhet" Thackeray, six followed him to India. The second of these was the father of the novelist, who was called Richmond, after the ancestral name of the Webbs, his mother's family, the most illustrious member of which was the General commemorated in Esmond. His service in Bengal was cut short by death after seventeen years. But he, too, held good appointments, and appears to have left his only son a fortune of £20,000. His widow married Captain Carmichael Smyth, whom we have always supposed to be the original of "Colonel Newcome," though that honour is here assigned—apparently on authority—to a first cousin of the novelist, Colonel Shakespear. We may add that another Carmichael (a brother of Carmichael Smyth), who died quite recently at the age of over ninety, is believed to have sat for the portrait of "Dobbin."

Of Thackeray's uncles, three entered the Madras Civil Service. One performed distinguished work in pacifying the Ceded Districts, and in introducing a revenue settlement throughout the Presidency, under Sir Thomas Munro. Another was killed when bravely attempting to suppress an insurrection caused by a disputed succession to a petty Mahratta chiefship. A fourth brother fell at the head of his Sepoys in one of the hardest fought engagements in the bloody war with Nepal. A fifth went out to Calcutta as a barrister, but drifted into journalism, being remembered mainly for his wasted talents. The only brother that stayed at home wrote the Life of Chatham, which was reviewed by Macaulay in the Edinburgh Review.

This is but a bald summary of the lives of the Indian Thackerays, told by Sir William Hunter with a sympathy and charm that half conceal the labour expended on the task. Prefixed is a general chapter, on "Some Calcutta Graves," which displays a yet wider range of study, while it also introduces one or two controversial points. It is out of no disrespect to the learned author that we venture to challenge some of these obiter dicta.

In noticing the grave of Admiral Watson, he says:

"Yet even on his tomb . . . the reptiles of that age did not fear to spill their slaver. They had forged the Admiral's name to Clive's fictitious treaty, and found a confederate to aver that it was done with the dead hero's connivance and cowardly assent."

Passing over the extravagance of language, which recalls that used by Burke against Warren Hastings, we would ask: Who are the "reptiles," and who is the "confederate"? Lord Clive himself, when interrogated on the subject before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, deliberately testified:

"It [the fictitious treaty] was sent to Admiral Watson, who objected to the signing of it, but, to the best of his remembrance, gave the gentleman who carried it [Mr. Lushington, Clive's secretary] leave to sign his name upon it."

And Clive went on to declare that he would have ordered Watson's name to be attached, whether he had consented or not; that he thought it warrantable in such a case, and would do it again a hundred times. Admiral Watson seems never to have repudiated the transaction. He certainly accepted his personal share of the plunder that was stipulated for in the treaty.

There are two references to the parentage of Warren Hastings. In one we are told that Macaulay's story is "an iridescent bubble from the scum of the slanders of the last century." In the other, after mention of a real slander started by Lady Anne Monson—for which, after all, there is only the authority of Francis—we are told of "the falsehood to which Macaulay has put the seal of history. Macaulay informs us that Hastings' father, 'an idle, worthless boy, married before he was sixteen, lost his wife in two years, and died in the West Indies.'"

Macaulay was, no doubt, here misled by a mistake of Gleig; but where is the "falsehood"? Gleig, the authorised biographer of Warren Hastings, whose work Macaulay was reviewing, expressly states that "the youth could not have been at the date of his marriage more than fifteen years of age." As a matter of fact, the birth register of Warren Hastings' father is yet to be discovered. In the ACADEMY of February 23 and April 27, 1889, will be found two letters telling all that is really known on the subject. He is there for the first time identified with one Penyston Hastings, who matriculated at Balliol College in 1724, aged sixteen. He would, therefore, have been about twenty-two at the time of his marriage in 1730. It was, however, added that a pedigree in the possession of the family makes him out to have been born in 1704. As to his character, there may be some exaggeration in Macaulay's epithets, but certainly no "falsehood." According to Gleig, Warren Hastings never voluntarily alluded to his own father, but when questioned about him said:

"There was not much in my father's history that would be worth repeating, except that, when he became old enough, he entered into holy orders, and went to one of the West India Islands, where he died."

A more damaging piece of evidence has been brought to light by the industry of Sir Charles Lawson (The Private Life of Warren Hastings, 1895). He there prints a draft petition to Chancery, dated when Warren Hastings was not yet one year old, alleging that the father had abandoned his children, and combined with the trustees of his marriage settlement to divert his wife's fortune towards the payment of his own debts. These allegations, of course, may not be true; but the document was carefully preserved by Warren Hastings himself until his death.

We would not leave this book with a flavour of adverse criticism. In our judgment, it shows on every page a fine literary craftsmanship. As a chip from an Anglo-Indian workshop, it takes rank with The Annals of Rural Bengal and The Old Missionary. It might have borne for its motto the title of that most pathetic poem: "The Graves of a Household."

AMONG CANNIBALS.

The Fall of the Congo Arabs. By Sidney Langford Hinde. (Methuen.)

It was at the suggestion of the late Dr. Parke, of the Emin Relief Expedition, that Capt. Hinde was induced, in the autumn of 1891, to accept a commission as medical officer in the service of the Congo Free State. Soon after his arrival at Lusambo, on the Sankuru affluent of the Kasai, he was attached to the expedition under Commandant Dhanis, which started in July, 1892, to explore the lately acquired mineral district of Katanga, on the south-eastern confines of the Congo basin. But momentous events were pending, and this party of mining prospectors had not gone far on their way when they suddenly found themselves transformed to an armed force engaged in active hostilities with numerous bands of fierce Arab slavers and their native allies. Thus it happens that, instead of prosaic reports on Katanga copper mines, Capt. Hinde presents his readers with a vivid account of a series of military operations in which he took a prominent part, and which resulted in the final triumph of Western over Muhammadan culture throughout the Central African regions under Belgian administration.

Instead of following in detail the vicissitudes of this memorable struggle for ascend.

ency between Cross and Crescent, it must suffice here briefly to state that the war lasted altogether over fifteen months (October, 1892, to January, 1894), during which the flag of the Free State was successfully carried in the teeth of greatly superior numbers from Goinuyasso's, on the Lomami (October 26, 1892), to Nyangwe, on the Lualaba (March 4, 1893), and thence to Kasongo (April 22, 1893) and Kambari (January 25, 1894), within measurable distance of Lake Tanganyika. With the fall of the last-mentioned place the war was brought to a close, and a rapid survey of the field of operations showed that the Arab power had not merely been shattered, as more than once before, but actually effaced throughout the Upper Congo region. Some seventy thousand of the Arab and native hordes had perished, together with their great chief, Sefu, son of Tippu-Tip, while his successor, Rimaliza, of Uji, was driven across Tanganyika; all their strongholds had fallen; Nyangwe (Livingstone's Nyangwe) and Kasongo, the great centres of the slave trade, had been razed to the ground. The description of the loot obtained in the latter place almost conjures up visions of the sack of Delhi by Nadir Shah, and those who are accustomed to regard the Arabs as little better than savages will read with astonishment of the common soldiers sleeping on "silk and satin mattresses in carved beds with silk mosquito curtains. . . . Here we found many European luxuries, the use of which we had almost forgotten: candles, sugar, matches, silver and glass goblets and decanters, were in profusion. We also took about twenty-five tons of ivory, ten or eleven tons of powder, millions of caps, cartridges for every kind of rifle, gun and revolver. . . . The granaries throughout the town were stocked with enormous quantities of rice, coffee, maize, and other food; the gardens were luxurious and well planted; and oranges, both sweet and bitter, guava, pomegranates, pineapples, and bananas abounded at every turn."

Others will be no less surprised to learn that most of the State forces by which these successes were achieved were themselves savages, or at least cannibals of a very pronounced type. In one place we are told that when orders were given to bury the dead after a hotly contested engagement there were none to bury, because all had either been eaten on the spot or else carried off for future consumption, so that of those sent on this duty it might literally be said, "sero venientibus ossa"! Elsewhere, when they are threatened with the vengeance of the formidable chief Mohara (the Arabs not knowing of his death), they jestingly retort: "Oh, we know all about Mohara; we ate him the day before yesterday." Again, we read that in the ill-starred chief Gongo Lutete's camp

"the sights were so appalling that even he did not care to put himself in the way of seeing them unnecessarily. He told us that everyone of the cannibals who accompanied him had at least one body to eat. All the meat was cooked and smoke-dried, and formed provisions for the whole of his force and for all the camp followers for many days afterwards. A volunteer drummer who had been with us for some time disappeared and we imagined had been killed. A day or two afterwards he was discovered dead in a hut by the side of a half-consumed corpse—he had apparently overeaten himself and had died in consequence."

Capt. Hinde, who has given special attention to this subject, describes many other almost incredible horrors connected with anthropophagy, which he assures us is not only still rampant but even on the increase in the Congo Free State, though the explanation given seems scarcely adequate (p. 66). The increase was foreseen, and it was pointed out that this would be the inevitable consequence of the suppression of the traffic in slaves unless employment were found for the redundant population in some other way.

"The natural growth of the population, no longer kept under by the raids of the slave traders, must cause a further depreciation in the value of human life, and, in the absence of regular employment, the increasing number of idle hands must bring about a corresponding increase in the practice of witchcraft and of cannibalism in the extensive regions where anthropophagy is still rife. Hence these practices must continue to flourish until the native chiefs discover by experience that their subjects are more valuable as producers than as food for the market."

Capt. Hinde gives other details, which go far to confirm the conclusion recently arrived at by Dr. Rudolf Steinmetz, that cannibalism was most probably practised by primitive man, and that its association with religious or superstitious beliefs was "eine secundäre Erscheinung."†

Another distressing revelation made by Capt. Hinde directly affects the character of the Belgian administration of the Free State. On this subject he is for obvious reasons generally reticent. But he evidently could not find it in his conscience to suppress all reference to the tragic end of the above-mentioned loyal chief, Gongo Lutete. The judicial murder of Mr. Stokes by Capt. Lothaire gave rise to international complications, because he was a civis Britannicus. But the far more cruel and iniquitous murder of the hapless Lutete by Commandant Duchesne has scarcely been heard of outside the Central Bureau of the Free State at Brussels, because he was "only a nigger." Even Capt. Hinde is (perhaps necessarily) silent on some important details; but the world will here learn, for the first time, that towards the close of the war this faithful ally of the Free State, after rendering yeoman's services, was for no assignable reasons sentenced by Duchesne to a shameful death, and that the sentence was enforced under peculiarly horrible circumstances:

"When, after the court-martial, poor Gongo was told that he would be shot the following morning at eight o'clock, he appointed Lupungu his successor, and when left in his cell hanged himself with a rope plaited from part of his clothing, to avoid the disgrace of a public execution. Unfortunately he was discovered before life was extinct, and was cut down and resuscitated, and, as soon as he was sufficiently recovered, marched out and shot" (p. 212).

After the war Capt. Hinde was still able to do an excellent piece of exploring work on the Lukuga affluent of the Lualaba.

* A. H. Keane, Africa (1895, vol. i, p. 19).

† Endokannibalismus (Vienna, 1896, p. 60).

But we need not here dwell upon this expedition, full particulars of which will be found in a paper on the subject contributed by the author to the Geographical Journal for May, 1895—not March, as wrongly stated at pp. 6 and 287. The work is provided with a few useful diagrams of battlefields and two excellent portraits of Commandant (now Baron) Dhanis and Capt. Hinde, besides a somewhat meagre index, and a map of the scene of the warfare reproduced from that in the Geographical Journal, but rather overcrowded with itineraries crossing and re-crossing one another in an inextricable tangle.

AN AMERICAN HISTORIAN.

The Historical Development of Modern Europe.
By Charles M. Andrews. (Putnam.)

A GOOD example of the excellent work, which is being done by the younger school of American historians is found in this, the first volume of Prof. Andrews's study of the growth of modern Europe. Now that foreign affairs are attracting a much closer interest in this country than they usually do, a patient and impartial examination by so independent an observer is peculiarly valuable. With no more prepossessions than are natural to an American, a preference for republicanism over monarchy, and for liberal constitutions over centralised autocracy, Prof. Andrews traces the effect of the French Revolution and the Reaction of 1815, on the constitutional progress of the states of Western and Central Europe down to 1850. In a subsequent volume he proposes to bring the inquiry down to the present time. He does not profess to have gone behind accepted authorities or to have sifted anew the original materials, or to write a detailed history such as, for example, the late Mr. Fyffe's. He keeps to his main point, traces the currents of constitutional changes, and examines their causes without troubling to record any events but those which serve to illustrate the matter in hand. It cannot be said that his book, interesting as it is, produces a very enlivening effect on a reader's mind. Constitutional theories in foreign lands and the evolution of foreign political parties that have now passed off the stage, are topics always a trifle dry. Add to this a somewhat clotted and opaque style, often due to the fact that Prof. Andrews is practically translating his foreign original into a language composed of American words and exotic idioms, and the result is one which needs a little forbearance on the part of the average man. "Bourmont, Minister of War, old chief of the Chouans," "the rehabilitating of autocracy," "the Revolution was antagonising the nations," "a scheme of dismemberment and despoilation"—these are expressions that are hard to stomach. They are not, however, very serious matters. It is enough to give warning that the book is not without occasional rocks of offence.

From 1815 to 1848 the international history of Europe is the story of the struggle between the national idea and the legitimist idea. Austria, in the hands of Metternich, for years barred the way with extraordinary skill and success to the aspirations of Germany and Italy towards national unity and constitutional government. France attained to popular freedom only at the price of revolution at home and frequent isolation abroad. Profiting by the enthusiasm which the Revolution of 1789 excited among the neighbours of France, the Directory and Napoleon were able to bring the populations of Germany and Italy under French control, largely because to them the French generals were deliverers from their own sovereign oppressors. But the national sentiment, thus awakened, presently turned against the Empire, and Napoleon, blind to what was taking place, at the same time met with a new opposition abroad and was being found out at home.

The ideas of 1789 had been abandoned by the Empire; France accepted its best gift, orderly and efficient administration, but was loyal to the giver only so long as his career was one of unchecked glory and success. Napoleon's reverses in 1812, 1813, and 1814 left him nothing to fall back upon. Contrary to the general view, Prof. Andrews thinks that in 1815 Napoleon's personal powers were in their prime, and his army one of hardened veterans, but, even if that had been the case, he must have fallen before long, for the idea of nationality at home and abroad was turning against him. It was the office of Austria from 1814 onwards to play upon the prejudices of sovereigns, on the apparent overthrow of the Revolution in France, and on the want of political experience and self-control among those who were animated by the spirit of nationality and freedom, and so to undo for a time the work of the French Revolution in Europe. The principles of intervention in defence of legitimacy, of opposition to every change which questioned or diminished the rights of sovereigns, were for fifteen years parts of the public law of all Europe, and till 1850 obtained in Germany, Austria, and Italy. To Metternich and Talleyrand Prof. Andrews does full justice, but other statesmen of European eminence figure less in his pages. He traces separately the rise of nationalism and constitutionalism in France, Italy, and Germany. His best chapters are those on the monarchy of July, though he is rather hard on Guizot, and relies perhaps too implicitly on that not very impartial observer, Lord Normanby. The Italian chapter, too, is full of movement and interest, and promises well for his account of the emancipation of united Italy in his future volume. Of the futilities of the Diet of Frankfurt and the squalid manoeuvres of small German states round the feet of Metternich, it would have been hard to write attractively. One thing is noticeable: in all this book England's part is treated as of small account, a tribute perhaps to our isolation, a rebuke possibly to our national self-pride. Prof. Andrews has the advantage of looking at Europe from across the Atlantic; Englishmen will, however, be apt to think—it may be wrongly—that Castlereagh, Canning, and Palmerston deserved a fuller mention than he thinks fit to give them.

There are a number of inaccuracies and blemishes in the book, which are to be regretted. The index is very partial, and omits numbers of names of the first importance. What "Canning, home secretary of England, and other clear-sighted Liberals believed" about the congress of Troppau seems a little cryptic. "The English representative in Sicily, Lord Bentinck," is better known as Lord William Bentinck. Napoleon's grievances in Elba must have been bad indeed to have "made his return more sudden and precipitous than it otherwise would have been"; and these two sentences—"The various attempts of the king to obtain a marriage alliance with one of the Great Powers was in itself reasonable and pleasing to the French people," and "it was to Austria redivivus that the failure of the revolutionary movement was in the last instance due"—would set even Board school children's teeth on edge. It is a pity not to keep so good a book clear of irritating mistakes, and perhaps an extra revision may serve to eliminate them from the next volume.

FOR DANTE STUDENTS.

Selections from the First Nine Books of the Cronica Fiorentina of Giovanni Villani.
Translated for the Use of Students of Dante, and Others. By Rose E. Selfe.
Edited by Philip H. Wicksteed, M.A.
(Archibald Constable.)

THE idea of this book is an excellent one, and it has for the most part been well carried out. The selections are taken from the first half of Villani's Chronicle, with the object, primarily, of illustrating the works of Dante, the date of whose death forms a convenient stopping place. Copious marginal references to the Divina Commedia and minor works (as printed in the handy "Oxford Dante") are supplied throughout. This part of the work (including an index of passages referred to) has been very thoroughly done, and will be of great service to Dante students. We have noticed omissions here and there; for instance, Villani's account of the destruction of Luni (i. 50) should have a reference to Par. xvi. 73, where the disappearance of this city is specially alluded to by Dante; another reference (to Inf. xxx. 74) is needed on p. 161; and one to Par. xiii. 127 might have been given on p. 39.

For the translation (the first attempt, we believe, of the kind), except in one particular, we have nothing but praise. The clumsiness of many of Villani's sentences, with their awkward "hanging" constructions, has been cleverly got over, without sacrificing the literalness or unduly modernising the style. We take exception, however, to the rendering of the proper names, which in many instances is slipshod in the extreme. For example, the name of the last of the Hohenstaufen appears as "Conradino," a form which is neither Italian nor English. If the Italian must be Anglicised, the recognised English form is "Conradin." Again, the names of four Frenchmen mentioned on p. 234 are given, one in English (King Charles), another in Italian (Alardo di Valleri, properly Erard de Valéry), a third in French (Jean de Cléry), and a fourth in a mixture of English and French (William de Ville); on the same page occurs the mongrel "Conradino." These barbarisms and inconsistencies, together with sundry bad misprints (such as "Vita Nuovo," "Quaestia," "Namûrs," and so on), are serious blemishes in the otherwise scholarly appearance of the book, and we hope that in a future edition an attempt will be made to remove them. We may observe here that the index of proper names might with advantage have been made somewhat more comprehensive; and occasional cross-references might have been given.

Mr. Wicksteed, under whose supervision the work has been prepared, and who is responsible for the selection of the passages translated—a selection which could hardly be improved upon from the special point of view of the Dantist—supplies a helpful introduction, based in part upon Prof. Villari's valuable Researches into the Early History of Florence. He gives a much needed word of warning to the uninitiated as to the untrustworthiness of Villani in certain particulars.

Altogether the volume, which is handy and well printed, is a welcome addition to the now rapidly increasing library of Dante books published in England, and it deserves to be received with favour, not only by professed Dante students, but also by a wider circle of readers to whom Villani hitherto has been little more than a name.

MR. LE GALLIENNE'S ROMANCE.

The Quest of the Golden Girl. By Richard Le Gallienne. (John Lane.)

MR. LE GALLIENNE has many virtues: he has vivacity and radiance; he has love of lovely words; he has the gift of appreciation; he has good humour and alert sympathy; he has a gay fancy; of certain books he is a capable critic. Yet with all this he lacks dramatic imagination; and, like so many critics, no sooner essays a work of construction than his judgment departs; he esteems fashion and frippery above desirable things, and displays complete ignorance of what is right matter for the pen and what is not. His Quest of the Golden Girl fails from such a want of instinct and knowledge. In workmanship it is deft and sparkling, but the matter is puerile and ill-digested, leaving us in doubt as to whether a romance is within Mr. Le Gallienne's power at all.

The scheme of the book is charming. We meet on the threshold with a sentimental vagabond of thirty, with a full purse and nothing to do, who determines, in the merry month of May, to wander through England from inn to inn, seeking the ideal woman of his heart. What could be better? Cœlebs, it is true, had adventured thus before; but Cœlebs cannot at the outset compare for picturesque interest with Mr. Le Gallienne's hero. We find, however, only too soon that the modern author has overweighted himself; his bright, superficial pen is inadequate to the task; he has too narrow a range; he knows too little; his prettinesses but half disguise poverty of thought; his ideals are second-rate; his models—Sterne and Stevenson—can endure no imitation. When his hero would be philosophical, he reminds us of school; when he would be cynical, he reminds us of college; when he would be Rabelaisian, he achieves only impropriety and silliness. From a hero of thirty we expect more, especially from one who travels with a copy of Tom Jones. Yet so little do we get, that no rightly developed reader over twenty could, we hold, find The Quest of the Golden Girl anything but tiresome. The half-baked, the perpetual boys, it may attract, but men and women and clear-sighted girls must meet with tedium there. They know; Mr. Le Gallienne's hero does not know—that is the difference. They know that no part of female anatomy resembles "two happy handfuls of white cherries" (or unhappy either, for that matter); they know that gipsy children are not "snarling, filthy little curs"; they know that no man worth a second thought would ever buy a petticoat and a pair of stockings from a clothes-line for travelling companions; they know that Mr. Le Gallienne's hero would never have married the woman he did marry. The book is not proven. Nothing in it is proven. Mr. Le Gallienne may reply that he has guarded against this charge by labelling it a "romance," but to that we retort, "Then why not have kept it sweet?" What right has a romance-writer and avowed admirer of Aucassin and Nicolette and As You Like It to tell us that the best women are made of beefsteaks; that all barnmaids come from Manchester; that the Alps are greasy from so much climbing; or to devise anything so ugly and ridiculous as the relations of the "new" Rosalind and Orlando? No, it will not do. Mr. Le Gallienne has forgotten his honesty and his duty to the Muses he would serve. He has aimed, as no artist should, at two publics—that which desires romance and that which desires lubricity, and, being one half in earnest, he has fallen between the two.

We are sorry to have to write in this strain of the first considerable story by one of the most debonair of living writers. But there is no alternative. We find, however, one scrap of comfort: the faults of taste and discretion in this book are, some of them, so glaring (and we are disposed to hope, so insincere) as to persuade us that Mr. Le Gallienne has been flattered into their committal. Were they purely Mr. Le Gallienne's own, and not the result of outside influence, he would, we feel, have made them years ago in his first book rather than in an eighth or ninth. Exotic, however, we hold them to be, and some day we expect Mr. Le Gallienne to regret them as cordially as we do now.

THE CITY.

Modern History of the City of London. By Charles Welch, F.S.A. (Blades, East, & Blades.)

THIS book is magnificent, but it is not a history. Mr. Welch says truly that the reader must decide how far the promises of the prospectus have been fulfilled; and that he may do so the more readily the prospectus is reprinted at the end of the volume. In it we read: "The aim of the present work is to give a history of the City of London from the accession of George III. to the present time." We are further informed that the work sets forth the material transformation of the City, its government, &c., and political and social features; and that "the changes which have been in operation are concisely and accurately traced." We cannot admit that this programme has been fulfilled in the real sense of these words.

Mr. Welch gives us simply a diary of the City's history since 1761. Under each year he has written down whatever happened in that year, great or small, ephemeral or momentous. If some intelligent Old Parr had begun to keep a diary in the City in 1761, and had kept it to this day, jotting down what was interesting in his morning paper, and what he saw in his morning walk, he would have produced a record very like this "Modern History" of the City. Thus, the account of events in 1830 runs in this sequence:

"A man was badly injured by one of the leopards in the Tower menagerie (January 2, 1830).—The House of Commons passed an Act establishing a horse market at West Smithfield every Thursday (April).—The Common Council decided to petition for mitigation of the laws relating to capital punishment (May 28), and on June 17 further resolved, &c. . . —King George IV. died, June 26, and on the 28 William IV. was proclaimed, with the customary ceremonies at Chancery-lane, Wood-street, Royal Exchange, and Aldgate."

This book, then, is a chronology. But now let it be declared that it is full of interesting historical details. Its details are its justification; and at bottom we have a sneaking kindness for its disorder. It is one of those books that please in an hour when one has not energy for study, yet is not disposed to relax entirely. In such pages one finds the beginnings of study, and, maybe, the appetite for it. Here are a few random entries. 1793:

"A man, condemned to death for robbery in Hatton Garden, committed suicide in Newgate. The body, extended on a plank on the top of an open cart, clothed and fettered, the face covered with a white cloth, was carried to the brow of Holborn Hill, opposite the end of Hatton Garden, and deposited in a deep pit, with a stake driven through the chest."

This gives a new eeriness to Holborn-circus. 1814:

"On the morning of February 21, a person wearing a white cockade rode past the Royal Exchange in a four-horse chaise, the vehicle being decorated with sprigs of laurel. A similar chaise was seen in the West End. These demonstrations were believed to confirm flying rumours of Bonaparte's defeat and death, and crowds collected near Hyde Park and the Tower awaiting the discharge of the guns. The affair was a hoax arranged to force up the price of certain stock. Lord Cochrane and others were accused of being involved in the conspiracy, and condemned to fines and exposure in the pillory."

1829:

"Shillibeer started the first pair of omnibuses in the metropolis from the Bank to the 'Yorkshire Stingo,' New-road."

Of such suggestive trifles the book is full. Sometimes Mr. Welch misses a point. In recording the demolition of the "Bull and Mouth" tavern, in Aldersgate-street, to make room for the new buildings of the General Post Office, he has not a word about the early Quakers who laboured, and were persecuted, here. Yet the benches and galleries of their old conventicle have been seen by persons now living.

There are no maps of London in the book. There should have been at least two—one, say, of 1765, and another, say, of 1835. The illustrations are numerous and interesting, and the dark red cover, blazoned with the City's arms and motto, is stately without suggesting the Lord Mayor's carriage.

IN LANDS OF SUNSHINE.

With the Jungle Folk. By E. D. Cuming. (Osgood, McIlvane & Co.)

On the Nile with a Camera. By Anthony Wilkin. (Unwin.)

Crags and Craters. By W. D. Oliver. (Longmans & Co.)

Glimpses of Sunny Lands. By R. W. W. Cryan, M.A. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

The Riviéras. By Augustus J. C. Hare. (George Allen.)

EVERYONE who a few years since was fortunate enough to come across a small volume of Burmese sketches, entitled Under the Shadow of the Pagoda, will be glad to renew their acquaintance with its author. One could wish, perhaps, that Mr. Cuming on this occasion had preferred his subsidiary title, In a Burmese Village, for his talk is again chiefly of bloodthirsty dacoits and frightened villagers, and not at all of hathi and the rest whom Mr. Kipling has taught us to regard as the true jungle-folk. And yet in one respect the work of the two writers is very similar, for both possess the same trick of providing their characters with convincing speech, although expressed in the English tongue. Mr. Cuming not only shows an intimate knowledge of the thought and habit of the Burman, but he can introduce individuals of the race to his readers with a distinctness which compels interest, while throughout he is equally successful in reproducing the quaint Burmese sense of humour. On the present occasion, instead of mere studies, he presents us with a single connected story—one might almost call it a novel, full of incident both pathetic and thrilling. The scene is not entirely confined to the jungle, for at no great distance is an outlying station where there are Englishmen, dealers in paddy, or occupying positions under the Government; and here, too, Mr. Cuming is ready to take you behind the scenes and to show you things as they are, and not as they perhaps seem in official reports. In many ways Burmah is a most interesting country, differing in almost every essential from the more exploited provinces of Hindustan. And, so far as we are aware, Mr. Cuming is as yet its only prophet.

In his preface to On the Nile with a Camera Mr. Wilkin tells us that he is aware that everyone who visits Egypt for the first time writes a book on his return. He apologises, however, for his own observance of this custom by claiming (1) that his photographs are, as a rule, better than those of his predecessors, and (2) that Egypt is at the present moment of extraordinary interest to Englishmen, and that he has been fortunate enough to obtain pictures of "many places daily mentioned in the newspapers as the scene of military preparations, arrivals, and departures." Unfortunately, however, for this second claim Mr. Wilkin confined his exploration of Egypt to the beaten track pursued by the ordinary Cook's tourist as far as the Second Cataract. His photographs are undeniably excellent, and his publisher has given him every aid towards their successful reproduction, although the thick clayed paper used makes the volume unpleasantly heavy. As to the letterpress that accompanies the abundant illustrations one may willingly allow the claim of its author that it is "modest and sufficient." It is, indeed, little more than a diary, helped out by the guide-book.

In Crags and Craters Mr. Oliver takes us to the little-known shores of the Island of Réunion, whose chief attractions seem to be an inoffensive Creole populace, a fair climate (in the interior), and in addition the crags and craters which give the title to his work. When he tells us that Réunion for its size has almost, if not quite, the highest mountain in the world, he probably forgets Teneriffe, which is so much more accessible to most of his readers. He seems, however, to have produced a useful handbook to the little French colony.

"Non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum," says Mr. Cryan, M.A., in his preface to Glimpses of Sunny Lands, and throughout his otherwise unpretentious little book of travels he worries his readers with much hackneyed quotation and rather slender scholarship. In turn he shows us round such diverse places as Bistra, Athens, the Yosemite Valley, Seville, Capri, &c.

It is curious that so confirmed a cicerone as Mr. Augustus Hare should not have at an earlier date taken the great popularity of the Riviéras into consideration. But the present little volume, clad in the familiar binding of black and scarlet, is a first edition, whereas Florence has reached its fourth and Walks in Rome its fourteenth. In the present instance, Mr. Hare is much less chatty than usual, and in many respects seems to incline towards the style and "make-up" of Baedeker. Considered as merely a guide-book the result is all that could be desired; the information given seems, in all cases, accurate and to the point. But there is one obvious defect. There are sixty-seven woodcuts, all of excellent value, and there is also a capital index, but there is never a map, an omission not found, so far as we can remember, in any of Mr. Hare's similar volumes.

FICTION.

Phroso: a Romance. By Anthony Hope. (Methuen & Co.)

THERE is a picture in the National Gallery of the return of Ulysses to Penelope. It hangs in the Umbrian Room, is by Pinturicchio, and has become memorable to at least one onlooker for the sake of the figure of Ulysses, who breathes and walks, the very personification of Romance. Probably it is more difficult to realise the atmosphere of romance between the covers of a book than in a picture. In Phroso Mr. Anthony Hope has succeeded in so doing, and with such apparent ease that it is difficult to believe that this flight of fancy was not written from an armchair in the course of a few summer afternoons. Phroso is the pet name of the Lady Euphrosyne of the island of Neopalia, which is nine miles long and five broad, and distant a hundred miles from Rhodes. When, on the second page, Lord Wheatley tells the reader and the world that he has just purchased the island from the old Lord of Neopalia for seven thousand five hundred and fifty pounds, that the Turkish Government have sanctioned the sale, and that he purposes spending a quiet holiday there till the time shall come when he must settle down and marry Miss Beatrice Hipgrave—the experienced novel-reader looks knowing. He knows that Beatrice will never be Lady Wheatley.

The story of the adventures—love, battle, and death—of Lord Wheatley and his three companions upon the island of Neopalia is excellently done, with humour, with gaiety, with reticence, and in high spirits. The three hundred and odd inhabitants of Neopalia received the strangers badly. Their arch enemy is a capital scoundrel—Constantine Stefanopoulos—cousin and suitor to the Lady Euphrosyne, who in the fulness of time and after much wickedness dies a horrible but richly deserved death at p. 328. Phroso by this time is ready to fall into Lord Wheatley's arms, but Mr. Anthony Hope will not have it so. He brings to fruition another and an even more excellent villain, the Turkish Governor, Mouraki Pasha, an Armenian by birth, and a very subtle murderer. The death of Mouraki Pasha is one of the best things in the book. If adventures do crowd somewhat thickly about the path of the agreeable and valiant young hero, we can forgive the furious and fast-following episodes of his glorious life for the gallant and humorous manner of the narrative. Finally, finding, much to his relief, that in his absence Beatrice has jilted him, Lord Wheatley leaves the island in the whirl of a final breathless incident, returns to London with the Lady Euphrosyne, and marries her. From cover to cover Phroso not only engages the attention, but carries the reader on in little whirls of delight from adventure to adventure.

The Little Regiment, and other Episodes of the American Civil War. By Stephen Crane. (William Heinemann.)

MR. CRANE has attempted the bold and dangerous task of writing two books on exactly the same subject, from exactly the same standpoint, and making use of exactly the same background. This has proved a stumbling-block to many more experienced authors, and it is high praise to say that The Little Regiment, in every way a companion volume to The Red Badge of Courage, is not one whit behind it in power or picturesqueness. It is true that war is a far-reaching, inexhaustible subject, but Mr. Crane does not content himself with bird's-eye views of the battlefield. He takes his stand with the rank and file of the army, with the men who fight wherever their feet are planted until more orders come, knowing absolutely nothing of the general significance of their actions. The awful monotony of his pictures is almost depressing: there is no room for variety of any kind.

The present volume is made up of six episodes. The story entitled The Little Regiment stands out from the others as the most finished, the most complete piece of work Mr. Crane has given us. It is a short sketch, but brimful of the grim reality of war. Although individuals seem almost insignificant in such a picture, each man is perfectly realised. Dan and Billie live before our eyes, and we feel sure we should recognise "the man who sat on the horse-hair trunk" among a thousand. As a word painting The Little Regiment is truly wonderful. In every sentence we can hear, even more clearly than in The Red Badge of Courage, the panther-like screaming, the witches' crooning of the shells, the cracking of the skirmishers, the spattering and zipping of the bullets, while through all these pulsates the fierce elation of the men amid the horrors. Great dashes of crimson and blobs of blue break occasionally through the dim and mystic clouds of grey mist, and the whole demoniacal howling of the battle quivers in our brain for hours.

Mr. Crane relies for his effects on daring and original colour similes. He is a word artist of infinite resource, and for everything he invents a special hue. The sense of smell which plays such a prominent part in Zola's Débâcle is conspicuous by its absence. We certainly miss the odeur de la guerre.

Mr. Crane's peculiar genius is admirably adapted to the exigencies of the short story. He writes at such fever heat, and puts so much of the rush and turmoil of battle into his short, quivering sentences, that a long-continued story like The Red Badge of Courage comes as a strain to the mind of the average reader, who closes the book with a genuine sigh of relief. In these episodes the pace is faster, the intensity more striking than ever; but the pauses between the stories give time for breathing. Compared with The Little Regiment, the other episodes are more sketchy and less compact. An Indiana Campaign is a pleasant piece of comedy, which comes as a relief amid the all-pervading gloom; but Mr. Crane lacks the necessary lightness of touch. The Veteran, the story of an old man who meets his death in the flames while trying to rescue some colts, is a trifle theatrical and commonplace. A woman figures in Three Miraculous Soldiers and A Grey Sleeve, but she seems out of her element and only half realised. A Mystery of Heroism, a new version of an episode in the Cave of Adullam, and a splendid psychological revelation of the feelings of a desperado, is, in its way, as perfect a piece of work as The Little Regiment, though the tone is quieter and more subdued.

The Idol-Maker. By Adeline Sergeant. (Hutchinson & Co.)

PERRY WILSON, afterwards Sir Francis Dysart, is a curiosity among heroes. A timid, ridiculous lad, with a passion for missionary labours among the Hindoos, is not the sort of person you expect a novel by Miss Sergeant or of any other lady to pivot itself on. His recreation in India is to go about demolishing idols with a hammer. He is not disconcerted when the heathen rage furiously together against him, but he turns white at the idea of mounting a horse. Round this weird fanatic, who comes home to find that his uncle's tile factory is really an establishment for the manufacture of idols for export, Miss Sergeant contrives to weave a strong and pathetic story. Nowhere has she treated a difficult theme with greater skill and success. There is no denying that for at least half the book your feeling towards the unhappy Perry is one of considerable impatience. Most of the other men in the story want to kick him; and you do not blame them. Even at the end, after you have read of renunciations without parallel in a season's novels, you admit that he is just the sort of pernicious and impracticable person who causes Indian mutinies and Chinese massacres. In most hands such a novel would be a fiasco; but The Idol-Maker will rank with Miss Sergeant's best. She has done nothing that will be read with keener interest or with greater satisfaction.

The Dowager's Determination. By Florence Severne. (Digby, Long & Co.)

MISS FLORENCE SEVERNE has been bitten by the heredity microbe. The dowager in question is Lady Raymore, and her determination is to get her grandson married, with the object of perpetuating the family and of eliminating the strain of insanity which has for two generations been the skeleton in the Raymore cupboard. Lilian Jardine is the chosen victim, but her sacrifice does not avail. Eventually the madman tries to kill his wife at dinner, and, failing in that, stabs himself. It is a nauseous story, and Miss Severne has not quite the magic touch which can make the nauseous palatable. Her art—which is especially weak in the matter of punctuation—does not bring us through her maniacal episodes without a sense of revolt at the liberty the author is taking with us. Miss Severne forgets the conventions. An ordinarily amiable hero or heroine, though tiresome, may be introduced to the public without offence. But when it comes to a young gentleman who is a madman and several other things, one looks for some valid reason before admitting him to the circle of one's literary acquaintances. Miss Severne gives no such reason, nor has her story charm.

An Anxious Moment, and Other Stories. By Mrs. Hungerford. (Chatto & Windus.)

It is with a sense of bereavement that one takes up this book, remembering that the author has just passed away. The volume is merely a collection of short stories from various sources, and cannot be expected to have any influence on a reputation made long ago by more pretentious works. But it is appropriate that the contents should be so typical of the author's tastes. We have always known Mrs. Hungerford for a worshipper of the old gods of fiction. The "spasm" school had no disciple in her. Give her a pretty story of love to tell, and few of her craft could tell it better. A task much to her mind was to bring a couple of foolish young persons out of a baseless antipathy into a mountain of affection for one another, as ordained by the will of a deceased uncle; she does it twice in this book. Another of her favourites is the Cinderella motif, which also occurs twice and is once acknowledged by name. But if Mrs. Hungerford's machinery is conventional, there is an undeniable charm about her boys and girls. She is herself the excuse for that liberty of expression, for in an interesting little autobiographical paper at the end of the book she confesses to "a young man and woman for choice." "They are always," she adds, "young with me, for what under the heaven we are promised is altogether so perfect as youth?" And we are her debtors for many hours of youth renewed in the merry company of her books.

Blind Bats. By Margaret B. Cross. (Hurst & Blackett.)

It is not quite clear to whom the invidious title of this book refers. It may be to Miss Barbara Plowden, who, having a quarrel with Mr. Tom Westropp over the custody of her little niece, arranges to rid herself of him by a little scheme of matrimony. It may be Mr. Westropp himself, who upsets that plan by marrying Barbara herself. It may be Miss Nelly Mitford, of Girtton, who revels in mathematics and ends by reducing it to terms of domestic duties. Or it may be several other people. At any rate, it does not apply to us, who see clearly enough that the book is one of merit and charm—a wholesome and happy book, which fascinates none the less because the blindest of bats can see that when Miss Plowden announces to her friend her determination to "marry that man," the verb will turn out in the last chapter to be transitive. Miss Cross has some neat phrases. One woman is "always in the nursery and out of fashion." Another "took herself seriously, and that is an enormous advantage when dealing with one's frivolous and unenlightened elders." Another—the admirable Miss Plowden—remarks that "every woman ought to have a child: it is a piece of preposterous mismanagement that she doesn't." It is all the more painful to find Browning mutilated by the same tender-hearted lady:

"A little more, and oh, how much it is!
A little less, and oh, what miles away!"

Why will lady novelists misquote?

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1897.

No. 1294, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

IMPRESSIONS OF NEW BOOKS.

THE book of the week is Dr. Nansen's book—no other, and it is reviewed in another column.

The third volume of Mr. Henley's The Poetry of Robert Burns has just been issued and is occupied entirely with songs and notes thereon. The subjects of Mr. Hole's etched illustrations are—"Where Stinchard Flows," "John Anderson My Jo," "Burns and Highland Mary," "The Soldier's Return," "Duncan Gray," and "Lincluden." Besides these etchings there are facsimiles of Burns's MSS. of "Does Haughty Gaul Invasion Threat?" and "Scots, Wha Hae." The notes fill rather more than two hundred pages in a total of rather more than five hundred.

The most important publication dealing with history is undoubtedly Prof. Maitland's Domesday Book and Beyond. It consists of three essays in the Early History of England, and the author explains:

"The title under which I here collect my three essays is chosen for the purpose of indicating that I have followed that retrogressive method 'from the known to the unknown,' of which Mr. Seebohm is the apostle. Domesday Book appears to me not, indeed, as the known, but as the knowable. The Beyond is still very dark: but the way to it lies through the Norman record. A result is given to us: the problem is to find cause and process. That in some sort I have been endeavouring to answer Mr. Seebohm I cannot conceal from myself or from others. A hearty admiration of his English Village Community is one main source of this book. That the task of disputing his conclusions might have fallen to stronger hands than mine I well know. I had hoped that by this time Prof. Vinogradoff's Villainage in England would have had a sequel. When that sequel comes (and it may come soon) my provisional answer can be forgotten.

The book contains over 500 pages

It seemed as if the fiction of the week would have been made memorable by the breaking of Olive Schreiner's long silence, but a hasty glance at Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland suggests that the work is mainly political. The book is not very long, but almost the first words that catch a casual eye, peeping between the pages, are those of Beit and Barnato! Trooper Peter Halket is dedicated: "To a Great and Good Man, Sir George Grey, once Governor of the Cape Colony," with these lines:

"Our low life was the level's and the night's;
He's for the morning."

Another novel in which some interest will be felt is The Man of Straw, by Edwin Pugh, author of A Street in Suburbia. It is a bulky volume of 350 pages in a pleasant canvas cover. Mr. Pugh's endeavour has been to describe the city clerk, his joys and sorrows. The chapters are grouped in "stages" instead of books. "The Glorious Shadow" is the name of the first stage; the last bears the title of "The Outcome." The dedication of A Pinchbeck Goddess is "To My Brother"; the title-page discloses the author's name to be Alice M. Kipling (Mrs. J. M. Fleming). A Pearl of the Realm is a historical novel. "To me it has been a labour of love," says the author in her preface, and she has taken her labours very seriously. Passports, by I. Julien Armstrong, in Mr. Fisher Unwin's "Little Novels" series, is a little volume of under a hundred pages. One of these stories, "Her Passport into Heaven," attracted considerable notice on its publication in the English Illustrated Magazine a couple of Christmases ago.

Mr. Edmund Gosse's Seventeenth Century Studies have just been issued in a third edition by Mr. Heinemann. The first edition appeared fourteen years ago, and the book was begun twenty-five years ago, so that Mr. Gosse may have cause to write: "As I read now what I wrote so long ago, I feel that my task was more exuberant than it would be to-day, and my judgment sometimes more positive." However, Mr. Gosse has not pruned his exuberance or watered down his dogmatism. He has been content to add an index.

We have, this week, one more attempt to complete the Compleat Angler. And it must be said that Old Izaak has rarely appeared in a handsomer dress, or in statlier bulk, than in this large octavo edition which Mr. Richard Le Gallienne has edited, and Mr. Edmund H. New has illustrated. Mr. New's clean, conventional style of drawing suits well the sleepy riverside streets and church towers and rustic bridges which enter into the scenery of the book. The editor's Introduction occupies over fifty pages, and the book is dedicated in a sonnet, which we quote, to the Earl of Crewe, the direct descendant of that John Offley, of Madeley Manor, to whom Walton inscribed the first edition. Mr. Le Gallienne's lines are as follows:

"Lord of the Madeley peace, the quiet grass,
The lilled pond, and the muffled sleepy mill;
Lord of each legendary fish that swims
Deep down and swift beneath that emerald glass;

While, soft as shadows, round its grassy rims
The patient anglers move from east to west,
Patient at morn, at evening patient still—
Peace, if not fish, was theirs, and peace is best;

To you, John Offley's far-descended son,
What to your grandsire—past computing
"great"—

Our Walton gone is here re-dedicate;
Heirloom of ancient friendship friendly still
In this old book, though all the talk be done."

For a new theory concerning Goethe's Faust, by a writer who is evidently in earnest, see Goethe's Faust, by R. McLintock. The author's preface has the downrightness which one likes in these days of echoed and safety-loving criticism. "I am vain enough," he writes, "to fancy that, on this occasion, my thoughts on Faust may help a few eyes to see the imbecility and absolute immorality of some of the current interpretations of the work." That way controversy lies, and we hope there will be some.

A timely looking book is South Africa as It Is, by F. Reginald Statham. Sir Alfred Milner will be interested to hear that "it is an old and approved saying in South African Colonies that no High Commissioner—the functionary who, in the highest sense, represents the British Government—can acquire an independent knowledge of the country in which he is so important a factor in less than three years." The author traces the history and discusses the successive problems of South African politics from the annexation of the Transvaal in 1877 down to the Jameson Raid, and the problem: "What is to follow?"

Mrs. Müller's Letters From Constantinople have been expected for some time.

"These letters," says Mrs. Müller in her preface, "are enlarged from letters I wrote three years ago during the bright days I enjoyed at Constantinople. I went there with my husband, who required change and rest, to see our son, who was then, and still is, Secretary of Embassy there. Though our son's letters had led us to expect much, the extreme loveliness of the Bosphorus, and the interest of the historical monuments in and around Constantinople, took us completely by surprise."

By the kindness of Sir Clare Ford, and the special favour of the Sultan, the travellers saw much that is denied to most English eyes in the city on the Bosphorus.

Who does not remember that hot mid-day of the 22nd of June, 1893, when the news of the Victoria disaster was flashed to London? Many Englishmen had till then but a slight acquaintance with the name of Sir George Tryon, and to this day public curiosity respecting his career cannot be said to have been fully satisfied. But here is his biography, written by Rear-Admiral C. C. Penrose Fitzgerald, and bearing every sign of completeness. The publishers, Messrs. Blackwood, have put the book into dark blue cloth, on which Sir George Tryon's red and white flag flutters from a gilded flagstaff. Successful—up to the last day of his life!—such is the sad, proud verdict of Sir George Tryon's biographer, and it expresses the feeling of the nation he served. The book is sufficiently illustrated; and a portrait of Sir George Tryon is given as the frontispiece.

Mr. Mundella stands as sponsor to The Life-Story of John Buckley, which is edited by J. C. Buckmaster. Mr. Buckley is still living, having "entered the autumn of life in comfort, and with the esteem of many friends." He was an Anti-Corn Law agitator, and in later years has been an ardent educationalist. The provinces can show many men of this sturdy type whose names are unheard in London, and Mr. Mundella hopes that Mr. Buckley's story, as told by himself, "will be of service in attracting attention to the simple, struggling life of a young reformer who was not afraid to sow the good seed in the teeth of many a wintry blast."

Prof. Sidgwick has revised a second edition of his Elements of Politics. He has dealt with criticisms which the work has called forth, and made minor changes for the sake of clearness. The chief of these has been the removal of the author's criticism on John Austin's theory of sovereignty to an appendix, and also the enlargement of this feature.

Theological works increase in number as the year advances towards Lent. Dean Lichfield's Footprints of the Apostles as Traced by St. Luke in the Acts, being sixty portions for private study and instruction in church, is perhaps the most important. These two volumes are issued as a sequel to Footprints of the Son of Man as Traced by St. Mark, from the same pen. The Spirit of the Waters, by the author of Philochristus and Onesimus, was written three or four years ago to set forth the grounds for accepting a non-miraculous Christianity. The More Abundant Life is a small collection of Lenten readings selected from the unpublished MSS. of Mr. Phillips Brooks.

Among the dozen or so volumes of verse which have reached us we notice The Lover's Missal, by Eric Mackay, and are reminded that Miss Marie Corelli's new story, Ziska, appeared on the same day. But we have seen it only in the shop windows. Miss Marie Corelli's books do not reach editorial tables.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

- FOOTPRINTS OF THE APOSTLES. By Herbert Mortimer Luckock. 2 vols. Longmans, Green & Co. 12s.
THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE. By the Right Rev. Phillips Brooks. Macmillan.

HISTORY.

- DOMESDAY BOOK AND BEYOND. By Frederic William Maitland. Cambridge University Press. 16s.
THE PAST HISTORY OF IRELAND. By S. E. B. Bouverie-Pusey. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s.
THE STORY OF THE NATIONS: BRITISH INDIA. By R. W. Frazer. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
SOME CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE NEW ENGLAND COMPANY AND THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE UNITED COLONIES (1657-1712). Spottiswoode & Co.

BIOGRAPHY.

- EDWARD CRICHTON LEFROY. By Wilfred Austin Gill. John Lane. 5s.
A VILLAGE POLITICIAN. By John Buckley. T. Fisher Unwin.
LIFE OF VICE-ADMIRAL SIR GEORGE TRYON. By Rear-Admiral C. C. Penrose Fitzgerald. William Blackwood & Sons. 21s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- LATIN EXERCISES FOR LOWER SCHOOL FORMS. By W. M. Hardman and Rev. Arthur S. Walpole, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s.
THE UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: A HISTORY OF ROME 81 B.C.-96 A.D. By A. Allcroft, M.A.
ENGLISH SPELLING BOOK FOR INDIAN SCHOOLS. By Dinanath Sen. Girish Chandra Sen (Gandaria, Dacca).
SPANISH SELF-TAUGHT. By C. A. Thimm. E. Marlborough & Co. 1s.

POETRY.

- SHERDS AND PATCHES. By James Dowman. W. Jolly & Sons (Aberdeen).
THE CAPTAIN OF THE "DOLPHIN," AND OTHER POEMS OF THE SEA. By Frederick J. Johnston-Smith. Digby, Long & Co.
A BOOK OF SCOTTISH POETRY. Selected by M. B. Synge. Edward Arnold. 1s.
GOTHE'S "FAUST." By R. McLintock. David Nutt. 10s.
THE LOVER'S MISSAL. By Eric Mackay. Walter Scott. 2s.
SUN AND MIST. By E. St. G. Betts. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
THE MICKLE DEEDE, AND OTHER VERSES. By Gordon Bottomley. T. Wilson (Kendal).
IN THE PROMISED LAND, AND OTHER POEMS. By Michael Lynch. Charles O'Farrell (Boston).
THE LOVE PHILTER, AND OTHER POEMS. By Helen F. Schweitzer. John Macqueen. 5s.
THE FARRIE QUEENE. By Edmund Spenser. Book I. Edited by Kate M. Warren. Constable & Co. 1s. 6d.

ART AND BELLES LETTRES.

- IN CHILDHOOD'S COUNTRY. By Louise Chandler Moulton. James Bowden.
SEVENTEENTH CENTURY STUDIES. By Edmund Gosse. William Heinemann. 7s. 6d.
THE COMPLETE ANGLER. By Isaac Walton and Charles Cotton. Edited by Richard Le Gallienne. John Lane. 15s.

TRAVEL.

- LETTERS FROM THE SUDAN. By E. F. Knight. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.
THE EDGE OF THE ORIENT. By Robert Howard Russell. Kegan, Paul & Co. 8s. 6d.
LETTERS FROM CONSTANTINOPLE. By Mrs. Max Müller. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.

FICTION.

- COLOUR-SERGEANT, NO. 1 COMPANY. By Mrs. Leith Adams. Jarrold & Sons.
PASSPORTS. By I. J. Armstrong. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s.
TAREAGAL. By E. T. Hooley. Gay & Bird. 3s. 6d.
KAKEMONUS. By W. Carlton Dawe. John Lane.
A PINCHBECK GODDESS. By Mrs. J. M. Fleming. William Heinemann. 3s. 6d.
THE WOOING OF A FAIRY. By Gertrude Warden. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND. By Olive Schreiner. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
A PEARL OF THE REALM. By Anna L. Glyn. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
SEBASTIAN'S SECRET. By S. E. Waller. Chatto & Windus.
THE WAY OF THE WIND. By Charles K. Burrow. Kegan Paul. 3s. 6d.
THE MAN OF STRAW. By Edwin Pugh. William Heinemann.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- SOUDAN, '93. By H. C. Seppings Wright. Horace Cox. 1s.
ENGLAND'S ATTAINMENT OF COMMERCIAL SUPREMACY. By H. Tipper. Elliot Stock.
A PLAN FOR THE UNBORN. By Henry Smith. Watts & Co.
CATALOGUE OF THE GREEK COINS OF CARIA, COS, RHODES, &c. By Barclay V. Head, D.C.L. Printed by order of the Trustees of the British Museum.
LIFE ASSURANCE EXPLAINED. By William Schooling. Cassell & Co. 1s.

MEDICAL.

- THE MENOPAUSE AND ITS DISORDERS. By A. D. Leith Napier. The Scientific Press, Ltd.
WASTED RECORDS OF DISEASE. By Charles E. Paget. Edward Arnold. 2s. 6d.

POLITICS.

- SOUTH AFRICA AS IT IS. By Reginald Statham. T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. 6d.
THE ELEMENTS OF POLITICS. By Henry Sidgwick. Second edition, revised. Macmillan & Co. 14s.

PERIODICALS, PAMPHLETS, &c.

- ENGLISH STATUTE LAW REVISED. By Paul Strickland. William Clowes & Sons. 2s. 6d.

SOME MEMORIES OF PAUL VERLAINE.

BY ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

"Je ne sors d'ailleurs pas, retenu 'by the gout,'" was the conclusion of the poet's first letter inviting me to call upon him at 16, Rue St. Victor. One sunny July afternoon, after much searching, I discovered this narrow and squalid street in the fourth arrondissement. At the doorway of the house in which Verlaine lived was a group of gossiping women with dishevelled hair, and uncared-for children were scrambling in the gutter or playing hide-and-seek behind the petticoats of the elders, as in the slums of London. "Monsieur Verlaine," said one of the women with a marked tone of reverence as she repeated the poet's name in answer to my inquiry for his flat, "Au quatrième, la porte à gauche." And so I made my way up the narrow, creaking stairs to the two small rooms which Verlaine and his housekeeper occupied at this time.

He was sitting in an arm-chair near the open window; his right leg, swathed in bandages, resting on a stool. On a table before him were the materials for writing which he always kept within reach so as to be able at a moment's notice to record his thoughts. He gave me the impression of a person who was suffering much pain, but who was too proud to show it. His manner during the first two hours of our conversation was reserved and dignified. Later, his temper broke down under the pain he was suffering, and he freely denounced his enemies.

I remember during the course of our conversation expressing admiration for one of his poems, "À Eugénie," which had been published a short time before in the New Review—a charming piece of work in which the author dwelt lovingly on the virtues and beauty apparently of some young girl very dear to him. Out shot Verlaine's hand towards his pen to make a note of the date of the magazine on the edge of a newspaper, for he did not appear to have heard of its publication, and cheques were things which rarely came in his direction. "Not that I myself care for money," he said apologetically, "but these good people must be paid"—and he made a motion with his hand to indicate the proprietors of the house. Hardly had he spoken the words than a kindly looking buxom woman of forty entered the room and was about to hurriedly withdraw upon seeing a visitor when Verlaine begged her to remain. Then, with a wave of his hand and a kindly smile, he said, "Voilà Eugénie!"—the Eugénie of the poem of which we had been speaking, the poet's countrywoman, the Alsatian who to the end of his days remained his staunch friend when others deserted him, and who was the embodiment to him of all that was most beautiful.

It was a pleasing incident to preface our friendship. Then a few minutes later the baby girl of a neighbour toddled into the room to say the only words she had yet learnt: "Bonjour, Monsieur Verlaine," and the delight which he showed in taking her on his knee was equally pleasing. But after this period of calm there was to come the storm, a wild outburst of wrath caused by the attack which Herr Max Nordau made upon him in Degeneration. The book had just been published in a French edition and Verlaine was glad to have the opportunity of reading the copy which I had brought with me. Line by line we read through the chapter on the symbolists, Verlaine growing more and more indignant with every page until the climax was reached upon reading the passage referring to his personal appearance:

MICHAEL DRAYTON

From the Picture in the National Portrait Gallery

"On remarque au premier coup d'œil la forte asymétrie du crâne que Lombroso a signalée chez les dégénérés, et la physionomie mongoloïde caractérisée par les pommettes saillantes, les yeux bridés et la barbe rare, que le même savant regarde comme un stigmate de dégénérescence."

Verlaine no longer restrained himself, down came his fist upon the table, and out poured a torrent of abuse at the German criminologist who had had the audacity to turn literary critic. Passing his hand over his bald head, he appealed to me to say whether the description was accurate, but, before I had time to answer him, he half rose from his chair, and burst into another fit of anger; but he soon quietened down, and began to deliver a speech in his defence, as though he had been on trial for his life. His contention was that Nordau, who probably had never seen him, relied too much upon newspaper descriptions of his physiognomy and certain portraits which exaggerated the irregular form of his skull; finally, that he allowed his theory to run away with him. "Nordau will be trying to make out next," he said, "that Saint Vincent de Paul, whose skull was of extraordinary formation, was a criminal." "Mon-go-lo-ide . . . Mon-go-lo-ide," he repeated scornfully as he glanced over other sections of the volume before him, and with these words the subject dropped.

Subsequent visits up to the time of Verlaine's death showed me a side of his character which I think escaped the notice of his countrymen, namely, his admiration for England. He never seemed to tire of speaking of our literature, of which he had an excellent knowledge, or singing the praises of our supremacy in most branches of human learning. His sojourn in Lincolnshire, when French master at a country school, and his frequent visits to Oxford and London to lecture on French poetry, had left a deep impression:

"Never shall I forget those Lincolnshire lanes," he used to say, "those lanes and that English landscape, which I only truly saw for the first time when I was driven by a fat-faced schoolboy in a little pony carriage to the school where I was to teach my mother tongue."

When the poet left the Rue St. Victor he went to live at 39, Rue Descartes, where he passed the last days of his life in fairly prosperous circumstances. In addition to an allowance from a certain number of admirers, he earned small sums of money by writing critical articles (one of the last was an appreciation of a new volume of poems by his friend, Mr. Arthur Symonds) for a Paris newspaper, and by literary work for the English and American magazines.

Mr. Swinburne's Poems and Ballads, which was generally within easy reach of his hand, used to be favourite reading with him. At the time when there was so much speculation in England as to whom the laureateship would be given, I remember asking him whether he approved of such appointments, and who he thought most fitted among contemporary English poets to succeed Lord Tennyson. He replied that he believed it was well to have such official positions, just as it was a good thing to have an Académie Française, but he declined to express any opinion on the respective merits of the various candidates. "It really matters little," he said, "who you appoint, because to me, and I believe to many others, the author of Poems and Ballads is already your Poet Laureate."

So much that is erroneous has been written in regard to his poetical aims that it may be as well to state that he gave me to understand his object was to make his verse "calme, simple, et grande." In his opinion, poetry must return to its starting-point, and his tendency was to write simple verse, almost classic in form. The Parnassian movement, to which he gave his support, resulted, as will be remembered, from a meeting of Mallarmé, Mendès, Dierx, Heredia, Xavier de Ricard, Leconte de Lisle, Théodore de Banville—with the last two as leaders.

"We sought after perfect rhythm, rich and pure rhyme," said Verlaine upon one occasion, "in opposition to the imitators of Alfred de Musset and Lamartine." He also used to say that it was to Baudelaire that he owed the awakening of his poetic sentiment, to Banville his melody and value of phrase, and to Leconte de Lisle honesty of language and rhythm. F. L.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XV.—MICHAEL DRAYTON.

DRAYTON was England's ideal laureate, so continually set upon the glorification of this land and its feats of arms were his strong, brave thoughts. He says in his preface to the "Barons' Wars," that "the dignity of the thing was the motive of the doing," and we believe him. Drayton's was one of those large, wholesome English minds which are impressed with the dignity of the thing. His poetry has light and sweetness and amplitude—it is like an English common: you come away from an hour with Michael Drayton feeling cleaner, greater, more of a personality. No other poet, whether Elizabethan or later, has quite his effect, not even Shakespeare. Shakespeare's tremendous stature overwhelms and diminishes the reader: forces him on his knees. Drayton heartens him. In Drayton, since he is human as we are, the Elizabethan abundance and variousness may be studied better than in Shakespeare. Drayton, also, is the first gentleman among poets. Sidney was more of a hero, Waller more of a courtier, Tennyson more of a squire, Browning more of a man of the world; but Drayton remains the sheer gentleman.

Drayton's variousness was great even in that time of giants. He wrote "Polyolbion," and he wrote the beautiful sonnets to Idea; he wrote "Noah's Flood" and he wrote "Nymphidia"; he wrote "England's Heroical Epistles" and he wrote "The Muses' Elysium," a storehouse of graceful conceits and fancy. He could be stately as a royal procession or trip it as lightly as dancers round the maypole. His metres are often curiously modern. "The Virginian Voyage" is, in form, like nothing Elizabethan, and we have to come almost to our own day to parallel "The Ballad of Agincourt."

The famous sonnet which follows is well known, but no account of Drayton could pass without it:

"Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part.

Nay, I have done, you get no more of me,
And I am glad; yea, glad with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free.
Shake hands forever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain.

"Now at the last gasp of love's latest breath,
When his pulse failing, passion speechless lies,

When faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And innocence is closing up his eyes,
Now, if thou wouldst, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou mightst him yet recover."

Drayton died unmarried, or wedded to his art.

It is not absolutely certain that Shakespeare and Drayton ever met, although in a note-book belonging to the Rev. John Ward, once vicar of Stratford-on-Avon, there is a passage setting forth that "Shakespeare, Drayton, and Ben Jonson had a merry meeting, and, it seems, drank too hard, for Shakespeare died of a fever there contracted." This may or may not be true. As evidence to the contrary, we may take the fact (but no very trustworthy one, since Jonson's temperament was so quarrelsome) that Ben Jonson told Drummond of Hawthornden that "Drayton feared him; and he [Ben] esteemed not of him"; and that Drayton's mode of life seems to have been opposed to excess. Meres wrote that Michael Drayton "among schollers, souldiers, poets, and all sorts of people is held for a man of virtuous disposition, honest conversation, and well-governed carriage"—although, of course, a man might have all these advantages and yet not hesitate to drink too much with the author of "Hamlet." Drayton, who once was cured of a fever by Dr. John Hall, Shakespeare's son-in-law, survived Shakespeare fifteen years. In 1631, at the age of sixty-eight, he "exchang'd his laurel for a crowne of glorie." You may see his tomb in Westminster Abbey.

Our portrait, which was painted when Drayton was advanced in years, would make the poet to be a man of noble proportions. As a matter of fact, he was small, and, in his own words, of "swart and melancholy face." He wears the laurel as though he deserved it, as indeed he did.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Kelmscott Press, which issues a new catalogue dated the 16th of this month, has in preparation The Sundering Flood, the last romance written by William Morris. Many of the books printed at the "Kelmscott" are now out of print. You cannot buy new copies of Utopia, Shelley's Poems, The Wood Beyond the World, The Defence of Guenevere, and many others; but a set of all the books that have been printed on vellum at this Press, with the exception of Chaucer's works—forty-six volumes in all—may be obtained for £500.

MR. ZANGWILL has heard "the East a-calling," and is on his way to visit the scenes of his new story—Dreamers of the Ghetto, which will be published in the autumn. Mr. Zangwill's Children of the Ghetto still stands high in the esteem of booksellers. I am surprised to learn that it has been admitted into Russia in its complete form both in Russian and Hebrew.

SEÑOR ECHEGARAY, whose play "Mariana" is to be performed at the Court Theatre next week, was, I believe, introduced to this country by Miss Hannah Lynch. By some he is called the Spanish Ibsen, but that is a loose epithet, as loose almost as the absurd label which M. Maeterlinck has had to live down. In the works of Echegaray there is much more of the romantic feeling than Ibsen has ever displayed in his prose dramas, and a less searching and pitiless light is thrown on the springs of action. "Mariana" is a good specimen of the Spanish playwright's genius, and Miss Elizabeth Robins will have a most interesting part.

The Minute, the penny illustrated weekly, which for the past eighteen months has been making a brave struggle for popular favour, has changed hands. I understand that the new proprietor is an enterprising publisher.

AN edition of 20,000 copies of Miss Olive Schreiner's novel Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland has been issued. The somewhat gruesome photogravure frontispiece represents the hanging of three men. The book is a little shorter than The Story of an African Farm.

THE Saturday Review for last Saturday had some sound remarks concerning the readiness of public men to produce their reminiscences. Yet I do not see much likelihood of reform while it can be stated on good authority that Mr. Joseph Arch has refused an offer of £2,000 for his.

THE exhibition of the illustrations to Dr. Nansen's book, opened in Grafton-street, comprise a certain number of his own sketches, which show him to be an artist in the rough. Some of these are records of strange sights to be seen in the Arctic heavens—encircled moons and illusive images of moons, and the streamers of the "aurora." A critic has praised him for "conventionalising" the forms of these shooting lights;

but it is not he, it is nature, that did the conventionalising. One boreal streamer is exceedingly Japanese. Dr. Nansen understood his own peculiar business better than to prepare designs for art-needlework out of the polar skies. His attempts to give the colour and the light together of an Arctic summer night is no more successful than that of more advanced artists would be; but his effort is so intelligible that a good imagination in the spectator helps it out. Everything he has done is honest trying and well directed; and the show is of the greatest interest. The reduction in size for the book itself, by mitigating an inevitable slight coarseness, has given the illustrations an advantage.

MR. S. WADDINGTON asks me to correct a slight misprint in the notice of his poems in the last issue.

"Hark, methinks I hear
The war of armed battalions drawing near," should read—

"Hark, methinks I hear
The roar of armed battalions drawing near."

THE editor of the Philistine, which hails from East Aurora, N.Y., is clearly one of those persons who believe that no good thing should be wasted. On hearing the rumour of Mr. Stephen Crane's loss at sea, he forthwith set him down and penned a tribute. "He is dead now—Steve is dead. How he faced death the records do not say; but I know, for I knew the soul of the lad. Within the breast of that pale youth there dwelt a lion's heart. He held his own life and reputation lightly. He sided with the weak, the ignorant, the unfortunate, and his purse and strength and influence were ever given lavishly to those in need. He died trying to save others." And so on.

THIS is printed in the February number, enclosed in a broad black border. Next to it comes a little paragraph, headed simply: "Later. Thanks to Providence and a hen-coop, Steve Crane was not drowned after all—he swam ashore."

A NEW field has been opened for the collector of Stevensoniana. I may have damped his enthusiasm last week by stating that the Trudeau presentation copies are no longer in existence. I now revive his spirits by reminding him that the seven copies of the missionary paper O le Sulu Samoa containing "The Bottle Imp" as a serial in Samoan are very rare and very desirable. Only two sets are known: one is in Apia, and one in New York. Not even Mr. Stevenson's family have one.

THE numbers extend from May, 1891, to December of the same year. "The Bottle Imp" in its Samoan dress is called "O le Fagu Aitu," and from it Stevenson had his name of Tusitala. During the last year of his life he worked at a version of the Odyssey for the same readers, but was obliged to abandon the work owing to other more important undertakings.

A LETTER, addressed "Mark Twain, God knows where," was recently delivered to Mr. Clemens at his residence in London, after following him from America round the world. The senders were Mr. Brander Matthews and Mr. Francis Wilson. The astuteness and patience of the Post Office must sometimes strike alarm to the publishers of directories.

IN an American magazine, the Book-buyer, under the heading "The Querist," I find the following question, which I conjecture to be asked by some literary aspirant who hopes he is not yet too old for fame: "Please publish the ages, respectively, of Stephen Crane, Rudyard Kipling, Clinton Ross, Richard H. Davis, James M. Barrie, Rider Haggard, Robert Barr, F. Anstey, Alphonse Daudet, Joel Chandler Harris, and Quiller-Couch. When and at what age did R. L. Stevenson die? Also at what ages were the authors mentioned (including Stevenson) first recognised?"

THE gentleman who conducts "The Querist" can only partly oblige. The ages of Mr. Clinton Ross (whom I do not seem to know) and Mr. Quiller-Couch are beyond him, and he declines altogether to attempt the second portion of the question. But it is just that which this particular querist probably wished to know.

THE American Bookman has made a discovery for which it ought to have full credit. Miss Marie Corelli, it says, has a rival among the upper ten in London. A recent visitor to the drawing-rooms of royalty and the English aristocracy tells it that the book which is most frequently met with there is the Poems of Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE new Chap-Book evidently intends to be a fighter. In a recent issue, the editor, looking round for a foe, has fastened upon the author of Margaret Ogilvy. That book, he says, is not about Mr. Barrie's mother, it is about Mr. Barrie; and a number of remarks follow in which the danger of such kind of writing is insisted upon. I agree with the Chap-Book that nothing would be more distasteful and undesirable than a series of monographs on the mothers of most literary men; but I think that it is unfair to make Mr. Barrie the scapegoat. Mr. Barrie has succeeded; even the Chap-Book admits his book to be literature, and literature is the thing that we are all so eager for. It will be time to abuse him when the failures are with us.

RIGHT on the heels of the recent discussion on reviewing comes a little batch of "Twenty Counsels of Perfection for the Guidance of Old Reviewers," from Mr. Zangwill's factory of advices. I find them in the Chap-Book, but it is probable they appear in England too, although I have not yet seen them here. It is, however, human not to see everything that is printed.

HERE are a few of Mr. Zangwill's conclusions:

"Never blame a book for not being some other book."

"Do not go behind a book. Your business is with the book, the whole book, and nothing but the book."

"Review for art's sake and the book's sake, not for your own sake nor your author's sake, neither have regard to your friend nor your enemy, nor your friend's friend, nor your enemy's friend, nor your friend's enemy, nor your paper, nor its publisher, nor its ass, nor anything that is your paper's."

"Never hesitate to praise a friend or to blame a foe."

In the following—"If your author is a humorist don't review him unless you have a sense of humour"—one seems to detect the note of bitterness. No humorist, I suppose, can expect to be understood by more than one reader in twenty.

THE ONLOOKER.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MR. MURRAY'S new edition of Byron's works will fill twelve volumes, and the first of these will appear next month.

THERE seems to be some sort of re-action to the eighteenth century essay. The attempt to revive it by the promoters of Children of the Hour is significant; and now we learn that a library edition of the Spectator is to be issued shortly by Messrs. Nimmo. It will be reprinted from the first edition, and will be in eight volumes.

MESSRS. LAWRENCE & BULLEN will publish next month a novel, entitled Margot, by Mr. Sidney Pickering, author of The Romance of his Picture.

MESSRS. BELL announce for early publication a volume on Miniatures, by Dr. G. C. Williamson, author of the monograph on Richard Cosway.

THE next volume of the Gentleman's Magazine Library, which will be issued very shortly, will contain the counties of Nottingham, Oxford, and Rutland.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have in course of preparation, and nearly ready for publication, an enlarged edition of Mr. Marshall Mather's John Ruskin: His Life and Teaching. Mr. Mather has written an introduction for this issue, to which has also been attached a bibliography.

The Blindness of Madge Tyndall, by Mr. Silas K. Hocking, will shortly be issued in volume form by the same publishers.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK, of Edinburgh, have in the press a series of Essays written by eminent Congregational and Baptist ministers, on some theological questions much discussed in modern days. The proposed title is The Ancient Faith in Modern Light, and the subjects include such topics as "Theism," "The Bible," "Sin," "The Incarnation," and "The Atonement"; with practical questions such as "The Church in Modern Society," "The Pulpit in Relation to Literature," &c.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish on Tuesday next the second edition of Mr. Edgar Jepson's The Passion for Romance.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish on February 23, under the title Romantic India, a book by André Chevrillen, which narrates visits to India and Ceylon.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

THE private schoolmaster is naturally "in the icy fall of fear" about the coming legislation in the matter of Secondary Education. Like Charles II., he has been an unconscionable time in dying; but, unlike Charles II., he does not apologise for it. On the contrary, he raises a dismal outcry and hullabaloo over the business. Yet to no purpose: the beginning of his end is at hand, and he knows it, but he has not the grace to die with dignity and resignation. At the annual meeting of the Private Schools' Association the incoming president made the extraordinary assertion that "there was no real dissatisfaction with Secondary Education, but that the agitation was maintained chiefly by shibboleths and misstatements." The speaker went on to say that "with regard to the proposed Government measure the Welsh Act had had a disastrous effect upon private schools in the Principality, and private enterprise had been depleted." This is excellent news, although it was only what was to be expected; and the happy result of the organisation of Intermediate Education in Wales will, doubtless, be attained in England also when the promised Bill has passed.

NATIONAL education is as much an Imperial concern as National defence. The regulation of the schools of a State should be no less a department of public economy than that of its warships or its regiments. This truth has for a considerable time been slowly but surely impressing itself on the British mind, and things have long been working, with an ever increasing ratio of speed, in the direction of State intervention in higher education. Concurrently with this, the great improvement in the efficiency, and the great addition to the number of schools upon a public footing, coupled with the fiercer light that now beats upon the teacher and his doings, have been steadily driving the private seminary from the field. The comparison of a London or a county directory of twenty years ago with one for the current year would show how rapidly and how thoroughly the private venture school is becoming a thing of the past. It is succumbing to the law of the survival of the fittest. In the interests of the pupils, however, we shall be glad to have the process accelerated and completed, and to see the Augean abominations of "collegiate schools," "commercial establishments," "young gentlemen's academies," et iis similia, where the third form is taken in the front bedroom, or the first class "comes up" in the scullery, together with their self-appointed "principals," swept clean out of existence with as little further delay as possible. With them, too, would vanish the practice of transfers, by which schools pass from one scholastic tradesman to another, like shops, and English school-boys are bought and sold like so many sheep or so much sugar. It is passing strange that even the dullest or most careless parental brain has not long since woken up to the enormity and absurdity of this traffic.

WITH extreme generosity and condescension the Joint Committee for promoting legislation on Secondary Education permitted the Private Schools' Association to be represented at their deliberations. The former most important and authoritative body is composed of delegates from the Head Masters' Conference, the Head Masters' and Head Mistresses' Associations, the Assistant Masters' and Assistant Mistresses' Associations, the Teachers' Guild, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the College of Preceptors, the National Association for Promoting Technical and Secondary Education, the London County Council, the County Councils and Municipal Corporations' Associations, the Association of Organizing Secretaries for Technical and Secondary Education, and the Preparatory Schools' Association. The admission of the private venturer to the counsels of the Joint Committee has, perhaps, done good in one way, for it has demonstrated, if demonstration were needed, how entirely outside the pale of professional civilisation he lies. The College of Preceptors, indeed, since it is largely supported by private schoolmasters, on whose brazen doorplates the proud legend "M.C.P." conclusively proclaims to the credulous parent the profundity of their learning and the splendour of their academic status, could hardly get out of inviting them to send representatives. But the sole use the latter made of the privilege of being admitted to such respectable company was to complain loudly of the treachery of their alma mater in having called together such a Joint Committee at all. It was all owing, they said, to the government of the College having fallen into the hands of masters of endowed schools. They "did not understand the object of calling together the Joint Committee: private teachers had all along objected to the scheme of the Commissioners for the promotion of Secondary Education." Of course private teachers object; on the same lofty principle as that on which a grocer objects to awkward investigations into the proportion of margarine in his butter, or a milkman to impertinent inquiry as to the amount of assistance he derives from the pump. But legislation is advancing to the portals of our secondary schools with rapid and irresistible strides, and for the discredited private venturer to attempt to keep it out is—to use the classic phrase of a certain accomplished writer of our day—"like bolting the front door with a boiled carrot."

It is right to say that, of course, we do not include in these strictures what are known as preparatory schools—that is, the schools which confine themselves to preparing for the public schools. Their existence has, in a great measure, been rendered necessary by the raising of the entrance age to the latter. These preparatory schools do their work really well, for do it well they must, because the results are so immediate and so evident, and because they are at the mercy of the recommendations of the head masters of the schools for which they prepare. Still, we hope that in time they will become closely allied with the public schools, and form practically an integral part of them.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKS THAT ARE SELLING.

WE print below a series of booksellers' reports of the books that have been most in demand in the past week. Dr. Nansen's book is sweeping the board; yet it is pleasant to see our own Miss Kingsley persistently named with the hero of the hour. Of the success of Farthest North there need be no longer a shadow of doubt. It is not merely reviewed and talked about, it is selling. Messrs. J. & E. Bumpus (Holborn) inform us: "The demand for Nansen's book is very large, and has exceeded our expectations." Messrs. Truslove & Hanson (Oxford-street) pronounce it "a genuine success." Messrs. Cornish Brothers (Birmingham) say it has been "received with jubilation"; and they add—"Although our orders taken in advance fell far below the orders taken for Mr. H. M. Stanley's In Darkest Africa, yet the reviews of Farthest North in our local papers caused an instantaneous demand." "Great eagerness for Nansen's book!" write Messrs. Georges' Sons (Bristol); "Selling well," write Messrs. Hodges, Figgis & Co. (Dublin).

Poetry is so dull that we have cut out the reports sent to us.

Phroso, Ziska, On the Face of the Waters, and The Babe B.A. are the most bought books of Fiction. The Quest of the Golden Girl has hardly had time to qualify for mention, though its sale has begun in London as our lists show.

LONDON (HOLBORN).

FICTION.

- Phroso*. By Anthony Hope.
The Quest of the Golden Girl. By Richard Le Gallienne.
The Sorrows of Satan, and Ziska. By Marie Corelli.
The Babe B.A. By E. F. Benson.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Forty-one Years in India*. By Lord Roberts.
Letters and Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon. 3 vols.
Life of Lord Bowen. By Sir Henry S. Cunningham.
Margaret Ogilvy. By J. M. Barrie.

TRAVEL.

- Travels in West Africa*. By Miss Kingsley.
Farthest North. By Dr. Nansen.

ART AND BELLES LETTRES.

- English Society*. By George Du Maurier.
The World Beautiful. By Lilian Whiting.

LONDON (OXFORD-STREET).

FICTION.

- Ziska*. By Marie Corelli.
Phroso. By Anthony Hope.
On the Face of the Waters. By Mrs. Flora A. Steel.
The Quest of the Golden Girl. By Richard Le Gallienne.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Towards Khartoum*. By A. H. Atteridge.
Theatrical and Musical Recollections. By Emily Soldene.
Life of Queen Victoria. By R. R. Holmes.

TRAVEL.

- Farthest North*. By Dr. Nansen.
Travels in West Africa. By Miss Kingsley.

LIVERPOOL.

FICTION.

- On the Face of the Waters*. By Mrs. Flora A. Steel.
Beyond the Pale. By B. M. Croker.
Phroso. By Anthony Hope.
The Babe B.A. By E. F. Benson.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Forty-one Years in India*. By Lord Roberts.
Letters and Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon. 3 vols.
Canada: Story of Nations Series. By J. G. Bourinot.

TRAVEL.

- Farthest North*. By Dr. Nansen.
Travels in West Africa. By Miss Kingsley.
Pioneer Work in the Alps of New Zealand. Harper.

BIRMINGHAM.

FICTION.

- Francesca Halstead*. By Reginald St. Barbe.
With the Red Eagle. By Westall.
Phroso. By Anthony Hope.
The Babe B.A. By E. F. Benson.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Life of Lord Bowen*. By Sir Henry S. Cunningham.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.
Pioneers of Evolution. By Edwin Clodd.

TRAVEL.

- Farthest North*. By Dr. Nansen.
Travels in West Africa. By Miss Kingsley.

BELLES LETTRES.

- Occasional Papers*. 2 vols. By Dean Church.

BRISTOL.

FICTION.

- Ziska*. By Marie Corelli.
On the Face of the Waters. By Mrs. Flora A. Steel.
Phroso. By Anthony Hope.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Letters and Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon*. 3 vols.
Boswell's Life of Johnson. Edited by Augustine Birrell.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.

TRAVEL.

- Travels in West Africa*. By Miss Kingsley.
Farthest North. By Dr. Nansen.

BRIGHTON.

FICTION.

- Phroso*. By Anthony Hope.
On the Face of the Waters. By Mrs. Flora A. Steel.
The Sowers. By H. S. Merriman.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- Forty-one Years in India*. By Lord Roberts.

TRAVEL.

- Farthest North*. By Dr. Nansen.
A Corner of Old Cornwall.

BELLES LETTRES.

- Joubert's Pensées*.
The Temple Classics.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RATIONAL EDUCATION.

Sydenham: Feb. 10.

With reference to the letter under the above heading in your issue of February 6, I should feel gratified by the statement that the school from which your correspondents write professes to carry out the principles put forward in my little book, but for the unmistakable insinuation that they were copied (without acknowledgment) from its practice. Why they should find such resemblances as exist "curious," considering that we profess to work from the same originals, I do not see, nor do I understand how four of them can testify to what were or were not my opportunities, as they were not at the school with me.

A leading point in the book is the Herbartian method of instruction, but your correspondents are evidently unaware that their school was founded in 1889, not, as they state, by Dr. Reddie, but also by Messrs. Muirhead, William Cassels, and Edward Carpenter, to carry out a somewhat Socialist programme. The instruction was very varied, extending from literature to cookery; and as to its method, I gather from the prospectus that it would proceed "from the direct knowledge of the human body and the laws of its health onwards through botany and zoology to physics and chemistry." If this is the theory which "was long ago translated into fact" from that of reformers like Froebel and Herbert Spencer, who advocate progress from simple to complex, I can only say, "C'est diablement changé en route." It certainly is not my reading of them, vide p. 172 of my book, where I show the exact reverse.

As the three masters to whom I should like to have expressed obligation are no longer at the school, I may surely be allowed to know where my acknowledgments are due, and though your correspondents are good enough to think that my case would have been strengthened had I exemplified it by their practice, while thanking them for their naïve, though doubtless disinterested, consideration, I cannot share their opinion: I prefer to stand or fall by my own practice.

I have yet to see what, for brevity, I will call my principles made the basis of any consistent school teaching, though I am aware that they have met with great success in Germany, and, I believe, in America also, and have been ably advocated in England by Mr. J. J. Findlay, M.A., and others. Personally, I only claim to have worked out much of the detail on which their application depends, for want of which principles may get no further than a prospectus. Scientific method in tuition seems to be very little studied in England and less practised; and, speaking broadly on an important subject, the Times rightly said that "the path of experiment has yet to be tried." My wish is to see it tried consistently, on a visible scale, and in a public school, and to show that in mere attainments the boys so trained will be fitted to compete at an advantage with others, either in the examination-room or elsewhere, for the test of all improved machinery is that it turns out a better product.

Finally, my critics will allow me to suggest that as my little book does not say a tithe of what should be said on this subject, that a better way of proving their originality than hinting plagiarism would be to supplement its deficiencies. The credit of priority in the application of other people's reforms is so small a matter that these accusations seem merely aimed at my good faith.

THE WRITER OF "FOUNDATIONS OF SUCCESS."

MACLEOD OF ASSYNT.

Oxford and Cambridge Club: Feb. 13.

In your review of Mr. Andrew Lang's Pickle the Spy you quote the passage in which he classes Assynt along with Pickle, Murray of Broughton and Menteith, among the legendary Ganelons of Scotland.

Now, being a kinsman of Neil MacLeod of Assynt, I naturally felt a strong interest in the case, and some years ago I instituted a strict investigation into the whole story, and I found that there was not a vestige of truth in the charge. Even Napier, the hereditary idolater of Montrose, in his latest work, withdrew it with a snarl. Mr. Mowbray Morris, in his Montrose, says that there is no foundation for it. Prof. Gardiner says that there is "not a shadow of evidence for it." In 1892 I published two letters in the National Observer giving the true version of the matter, which were accepted by all fair-minded persons as perfectly satisfactory. A leading Edinburgh W.S. wrote to me that he was very glad to see the real truth, as he had always hated the whole clan of MacLeod on account of Assynt's reputed treachery.

The whole story is, of course, far too long to inflict upon your readers; but I trust to your sense of justice to permit me to state these simple facts.

The Earls of Sutherland had been the hereditary friends of the MacLeods of Assynt for centuries. At the age of sixteen Neil MacLeod had served on the staff of the Earl of Sutherland, with whom he was connected by marriage. Neil MacLeod became of age in September, 1649, and married the daughter of one of the Earl of Sutherland's deputies. Soon afterwards the Earl of Sutherland appointed Neil MacLeod his deputy-sheriff, or resident magistrate, in the district of Assynt.

In 1645 Montrose had been condemned to death by the Estates of Scotland for bringing in a horde of Irish Papists to slaughter his own countrymen. Some time after his defeat at Philiphaugh the Estates of Scotland, with rare magnanimity for those times, gave him a month to clear out of Scotland, and gave him warning that if he delayed beyond that time, or was ever caught in Scotland again, he would be executed according to his previous sentence.

In April, 1650, Montrose's crew of tatterdemalions was utterly routed by the combined forces of the Earl of Sutherland and Colonel Strachan, the Parliamentary general. Montrose fled away westwards into the district of Assynt. As soon as the Earl of Sutherland and Colonel Strachan were informed of this they sent Assynt's brother-in-law to him with peremptory orders to him as the resident magistrate to arrest Montrose as an outlaw under sentence of death. In pursuance of these orders from his superior officers MacLeod captured him and surrendered him to the officer sent to receive him in due course of law.

We have three accounts of the capture and surrender of Montrose by Neil MacLeod, and in not one of them is there the faintest charge of treachery.

The whole charge of treachery was got up after the Restoration by the Earl of Seaforth, one of the most shameless politicians of the age, who was Assynt's deadly enemy, determined to get possession of the lands of Assynt. Neil MacLeod was arrested and imprisoned, and "libelled" or indicted for betraying Montrose. But the Lord Advocate never ventured to bring the case to trial, for the best possible reason, because he had not a vestige of proof of the charge. The Scottish Parliament kept him in prison for three years, but they found they could do nothing with him, and he was ultimately discharged by the order of Charles II.

Such is a simple statement of the facts, and

I think, Sir, you will admit that Assynt should be henceforth erased from the list of the legendary Ganelons of Scotland.

HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD.

"HIGGINS—THE INVENTOR OF EVOLUTION."

Barnes: Feb. 13.

May I draw your readers' attention to a letter from Dr. Johnson to Mrs. Thrale, dated August 25, 1773, in which he says: "21st.—We travelled towards Aberdeen, and in the way dined at Lord Monboddo's, the Scotch judge, who has lately written a strange book about the origin of language, in which he traces monkeys up to men . . ." Mr. Andrew Lang claims Higgins's priority to Mr. Darwin, and gives the date of Higgins's essay in The Anti-Jacobin—1798. Monboddo preceded Higgins some twenty years with his "strange book." And I should be glad if somebody can enlighten me as to whether it were a published work.

L. S.

DRAMA.

I DO not question that an interesting play might be made out of Nelson and Lady Hamilton. She seems to have been a vulgar, but a clever, even a gifted woman, by no means psychologically nil. And Nelson's character, so far as we know it, makes it impossible to consign him vaguely to a type, certainly not the traditional type of the sailor of his period, even without the evidence his achievements have of intellect and temperament. There is no need to suppose that his relations with Lady Hamilton were those merely of a simple sailor, "sharp-set," in the phrase of the old comedy, and the facile victim of the first good-looking baggage who gratified his instincts and ministered to his vanity. Not at all: one can see an interesting play of psychology in the relations of Nelson and Lady Hamilton.

That seems to have been, in the first instance, the intention of "Risden Home"—I see in the papers I must use these tiresome inverted commas—whose "Nelson's Enchantress" was produced on the 11th of this month at the Avenue Theatre. But Lady Hamilton had to be toned down and somewhat sainted for "the public"; for it is no use to ask "the public" to believe that a woman may practise the oldest of all professions and have an interesting character as well, unless, indeed, she lived in Babylon or somewhere remote. So Lady Hamilton's amours include Charles Greville only; for, I think, we were meant to believe that her intercourse with Nelson was platonic. Even so, it was rather a severe appeal to "the public's" "modernity"—for my part, I was rather gratified to observe that so far as this went it responded more or less—to ask it to accept for a heroine a lady who started life as a young man's mistress (he was not married, as Nelson was) and went on to marry an old man for convenience. In any case, the result was a rather vague and colourless woman, the interest of whom might have been more or less psychological, but was certainly not dramatic.

In the next place, "Risden Home" tried to graft on to this interest the patriotic interest which Nelson obviously suggests, and the two elements are not sympathetic; the great sailor's victories have nothing to do, popularly or dramatically, with his conventionally dubious domestic life. I do not think that a good play could possibly have been made out of these opposing elements, but it is unnecessary to go to them for reasons why "Nelson's Enchantress" was a bad one. Its construction was incoherent, and its dialogue was wordy and feeble. The play begins in Romney's studio, and there Captain Horatio Nelson meets Miss Emma Hart for the first time. He does not converse with her, but "Who is that lady?" he asks, and "Miss Emma Hart!" he repeats slowly and dramatically, and thereon the curtain. He does not see her again till twelve years later, at Naples, where they platonise, and then, in the third act, she is found domesticated with him at Merton. Now this is not a play, but a series of episodes in the life of Lady Hamilton, and the dialogue is hardly better than the construction. Such attractions for me as the play had was in its staging and in the "make-ups." The dresses were good and the stage discipline careful. Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who is as little like Romney's Lady Hamilton as can be imagined, nevertheless suggested the pictures, and Mr. Forbes Robertson realised one's idea of Nelson very well. There was not much acting. Mr. Forbes Robertson was pleasantly bluff at times, but not efficient in the scenes of passion. I have never seen Mrs. Campbell to so little advantage: she was spirited in the first scene, but throughout the rest of the play, in my humble opinion, underacted simply. Mr. Sydney Brough looked well, and acted easily as a beau of the period: he had an air and he had a leg.

I ALWAYS go to a play by Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy with agreeable anticipations. He does not strive after brilliant dialogue, but he can write natural dialogue: he has a feeling for the humours of character, and he can complicate you things funnily. I was not disappointed in "My Friend the Prince," at the Garrick. It is an excellent, wild farce; and when it is played at a quicker rate, and when certain parts of it, which belong to sentimental comedy rather than to farce, are excised or modified—the thing will be delightfully diverting. For plot see the daily papers. I may mention, however, that the idea of Prince Maurice of Pannonia being domesticated incognito, for reasons of his own, in Mr. Jannaway's house in Park-lane, and two other people at the same time pretending to be the Prince, has the essentials of good farce. But it really must not be played as though it were comedy, which deals with the probable; and it was so played on Saturday night. The actors could act, but they all acted too slowly, with perhaps the exception of Mr. Fred Kaye, who played an ambitious millionaire. But the one thing needful, funny situations, is there, and the piece is one to see.

Miss Juliette Nesville played one of those French parts she plays so well with rapid, pointed speech, with archness and with a pleasant humour of worldliness. She also sang an agreeable little song—"Tu n'en as rien jamais su" was its refrain—with delightful expression. Mr. Percy Lyndal made the Prince too much like any ordinary young Englishman; he lacked (from the point of view of the stage) dignity and a suggestion of imperiousness; still, he played pleasantly. Mr. Paul Arthur played a rather broken-down young man, who personated the Prince, with a humorous effect, but with too great reserve for the order of play. Mr. Welch was extremely funny as a timid suitor of one of the millionaire's daughters. The part was one of broad farce, and it was played in the right manner. I seem to be falling into a vulgar habit of complimenting actresses on their personal appearance, but it was due to that of Miss Miriam Clements and to her dignity of bearing that she made effective the part of the Princess, a part which, in its sincerity, was out of tone with the play. By the way, it is not far-fetched to suppose that Pannonia, with its scapegrace Prince, was suggested by Ruritania; I hope these imaginary kingdoms will not always be German; Montenegro or Greece, or even Scandinavia, would be an agreeable change. And, also by the way, "My Friend the Prince" was suggested by the American farce "My Friend from India," which I have not seen, and therefore cannot collate.

I HAVE received an interesting circular about the "Ibsen-Echegaray Performances." "Mariana" will be given at the Court Theatre on the 22nd to the 26th inclusively, in the afternoon. It has been translated by Mr. James Graham, and the cast will be: Messrs. H. B. Irving, Herman Vezin, Welch, O'Neil, Martin Harvey, and George Bancroft, with Miss Robins and three other ladies. After Easter we are to see the much-reviewed "John Gabriel Borkman." But what is even more interesting is that the managers of the fund contemplate producing other plays—at intervals necessitated by their rate of production—which in their opinion are of merit and would not appeal to the general. This is an excellent idea, and I beg to wish every artistic success to its execution. "Admiral Guinea" has been chosen for the first production of the autumn season, and I am heartily glad to hear it, having wished ardently to see this play acted ever since I read it many years ago. The honorary treasurer, to whom subscriptions (which, of course, involve privileges in the way of seats) should be sent, is Mr. Gerald Duckworth, and his address 22, Hyde Park Gate, S.W.

G. S. S.

ART.

IF the world knew how little Italy is spoilt, the little might become much, and therefore Mr. Wallace Rimington's proofs of the untouched charm of country and village are but half welcome. The highway of travel is trampled out, stamped flat, re-made, strewn with cinders, or set with railings, as the case may be. The highway is much the same round the world, and the cities of the highway—everywhere but in England—tend to become prosperously, squarely, and brightly alike. None the less is that beaten path strait and its suburb no wider than the hotel-quarters and shopping quarters of any town. The first turning to left or right leads off the highway, and need not lead far. The Italy of our fathers is well within reach, excepting only that even in the byways there is now a present and perceptible officialism, a municipal swagger all the more evident for the increasing poverty which it dominates. But the rock-built town, the sea village, the buttressed road white with dust, the splendid profile of mountain coasts, the strong blind houses shuttered from the heat, the absolute simplicity of mountain background and the spiritual delicacy of foreground detail, the vital untroubled air—the real Italy—is not only accessible but near. The traveller has to do his part, which is principally that he shall take his journeys in spring, summer, or very early autumn; and this fact is itself a certain safeguard against change. Travellers are shy of the characteristic heat, and Italy annually relapses into its native ways, and during the long summer there is time to efface footsteps everywhere except in the hackneyed middle of the high-road.

Mr. Rimington's water-colours, exhibited at the Fine Art Society's, Bond Street, are works of singular delicacy and intelligence. At first the manner seems extraordinarily neat and trim, but you become quickly aware that it is extraordinarily elegant, and that the fineness is the very fineness of Italy—the outline of her "fair attitude" and the lucidity of her air. Mr. Rimington apparently works entirely in pure water-colour, but his drawings are none the less exceedingly pictorial; his is a very charming and legitimate art, having none of the voluntary limitations of the early water-colour school—the school of wash—nor any of the involuntary failures of the later—the school of stipple.

Much of the charm of these delightful drawings, then, belongs to the purity and the lawfulness of the art, which is, besides, a complete art and very intelligible; much to the artist's sense of the style of Italian line and of the delicacies of Italian colour; much, again, to the subject. He has not sought panoramas in that elegant, homely land; nor has he run, for an opposite, into the narrowest corner of a walled olive-yard. He does not shun the panorama when the mountain commands it; and it is difficult to say which subject is most united with his work—the long view to a far horizon, with here and there strong towns grappled to their rocks, or the roadside incident of a cactus and an almond-tree.

Siena, surrounded with her ravines, so abrupt and so full of serried trees that when you stand on the walls you look on their close tops as on a floor, makes the subject of several of the most beautiful drawings; so does San Gimignano—a place even more markedly medieval. "Outside San Gimignano's Walls" is a summer morning drawing, with a fine effect of light broken and shed straight downwards through clouds. The red of the bold billowy tiles of Italian rural roofs, their peculiar form of very shallow gables with projecting eaves, the village belfry suggestive of its festival tune, mingle the country with that broadcast-scattered town which sprinkles Italy from the Alps to Sicily. Mr. Rimington uses these with as much character and delight as the famous architecture of cities. Of this he makes a number of particular studies, which are the least lovely as pictures—except when a Lombard tower or some North Italian Gothic of Verona takes purely pictorial lights and aspects in more than one transparent drawing.

Let Mr. Rimington be assured that although his London public, knowing Italy chilly and hard with winter colour, will not understand all that he has done for her enkindled and softened summer, it is not lost upon all eyes. Nor does his diligence in finding Camogli, under the hill of Ruta among seaside pines, go unmarked; nor his evident pleasure in the blossoming time that is peculiarly characteristic of a country so highly agricultural in spite of mountain and thin soil—a country of fruit. This solid cream-and-rose Camogli itself is famous for cherries; green almonds are the favourite fruit of the coast, and peaches abound here as in all the other parts of this divine kitchen garden. He has several studies not precisely of fruit blossom, but of landscape in the blossoming time; and his brilliant daylight-impressionary manner has a great value in the rendering of patches of a late April or May blossom-country. "With gentle hand touch, for there is a spirit in the woods," says Wordsworth to a boy; it might be said to a painter, and to a painter of orchards as well as of woods. Impressionism, by the way, is usually associated with more or less fog, mist, dusk, rain, or other kinds of half-light; but Mr. Rimington dares to give the strong daylight aspect of flashes of delicate trees in the simple manner of impression rightly so called. There is, however, one tree with which this execution has no success—this is the olive. The colour is well enough, but the character of the tree has not been captured; the simple mass or simple space of foliage which Mr. Rimington attempts in "Olives near Amalfi" does not make any sensible artistic allusion to the kind of multitudes that olive leaves gather into. He gives, in fact, a suggestion of a sweeping attitude and curve of leafage which is not the olive tree's.

At the Dowdeswell Galleries Mr. J. Aumonier exhibits a series of water-colours of "The Old Chain Pier, Brighton, with its Nooks and Corners." The old chain pier has not a very reverend old age, except in places, on a kind of wooden lower storey, which Fred Walker drew in an illustration to Thackeray's Philip. Mr. Aumonier is exceedingly clever and able in his water-colour work, which gives wind-swept effects, prosaic lights, explicit cables, suspensions, and all the rest of the iron gear, strong without thickness, and of no structural interest. The drawings are full of positive daylight, and therefore not dull, but Mr. Aumonier has not intended to give this light the sweetness, the mystery, the spirit, that may be in a mere Brighton forenoon. It would seem that Mr. Aumonier had intended to supply people with a series of portraits of the pier for the pier's sake or the people's sake; and though he could not do this brightly, emphatically, and vividly without art, yet art hardly had the initiative. These are all vigorous water-colours, and should be popular.

Far more real interest, however, belongs to the "few pictures in oil," as the catalogue rather apologetically calls them, which fill up the room. "A Sussex Flat" is an admirable landscape, robust, with a sudden daintiness of execution—especially in foreground growth—and a prevailing simplicity. Excellent is the exact tone and steely blue colour of a space of rivulet, running in cloud-shadow, yet reflecting the brightness of the sky; indeed, the whole of this cloud shadow, as it covers shrub and grass, is thoroughly well studied. The picture is fresh. So is "Spring," with some chilly yellow celandines and a cloudy sky; so is "A Silvery Sky" with its flying lights. "On the River Arun" pleases us most of all for its higher style. "Amberley Chalk Pit," with a lighted cliff, and "Returning from Work," with some touches of profound sunshine and a fine level effect, and the trend of a fence going away towards the distance, are works that should place the painter—long known but never, perhaps, well enough known—in a high place.

A. M.

MUSIC.

LAST Saturday was the fourteenth anniversary of the death of Richard Wagner. A genius is always ahead of his day and generation, and cannot, therefore, be appreciated during his lifetime according to his merits. It was so in the case of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert. They all managed to gather around them a few intelligent and faithful admirers, who became gradually aware that they were holding intercourse with men of exceptional gifts, yet only in very rare cases was the admiration commensurate with the genius: the recognition of Wagner's lofty aims and early appreciation of his works by Franz Liszt ranks as one of the most remarkable instances. The world at large generally pays little heed at first to great men. With Wagner it was otherwise. He was not content to work quietly in secret for his art, in the hopes of securing posthumous fame. He was terribly in earnest; he hated the mediocre, the false in art, and could not help saying what he thought, not only about his predecessors, but also his contemporaries. Critics abused him and he turned on them. The world looked upon him as a vain-glorious boaster, and he felt pained. He was rough in manner, had a sharp tongue and a bitter pen, and many disappointments soured his temper. Thus during his lifetime he was talked and written about more, indeed, than any of his contemporaries. Like Cain, he was a fugitive and a wanderer in the earth, known by all musicians of standing, and hated by almost all. Hence, during his lifetime and for a decade after his death his name and his works gave rise to heated discussion, angry criticism, or ignorant abuse. Beethoven's later works have been—nay, still are—occasionally the subject of unfavourable comment, for some have thought that as that composer advanced in years his genius lost its freshness and spontaneity; there never, however, was any widespread feeling of personal animosity against him such as existed for so long against Wagner. But now the musical world, professional and amateur—with exception, perhaps, of a few veteran opponents who cannot with dignity now lay down their arms—has fallen into an ecstasy of admiration for Wagner. Many are genuine enthusiasts; but some praise through fear of not being up to date, and some because others do. The worshippers at the shrine of the hero at Bayreuth count among their ranks men of all sorts and conditions; that the chaff is mixed with the wheat cannot be helped, and, after all, does little harm. Wagner brought about a great revolution in art, and left works whose sterling merit becomes every day more apparent; thus present fervour will atone for past neglect. But why am I thus writing about the reformer? Simply because I went to the Queen's Hall on Saturday evening, found it crowded from floor to ceiling, and heard applause and cheers which would have done the heart of Wagner good had he been thus greeted when he appeared at the Albert Hall twenty years ago. The performances of excerpts under Mr. H. J. Wood were admirable. I fancy, however, that, at any rate at this In Memoriam concert, renderings less meritorious would still have been enthusiastically received. Mr. Robert Newman announces three more Wagner concerts.

It requires some courage to go to a ballad concert, for the programme, as a rule, consists of familiar items; moreover, it is always long, and that length is still further increased by the foolish habit of demanding, and the still more foolish one of accepting, encores. After the first has been taken, the artists who follow must be excused if they yield to the temptation, for they naturally do not wish to appear less successful. In the prospectus of the forthcoming series of concerts of the Philharmonic Society there is a notice "respectfully requesting" the audience not to insist upon encores. That is not the way to remedy the evil, not even if that request be printed in the programme-books. "Encores are strictly forbidden" is the only notice which will prove of any avail.

I WENT last Saturday afternoon to the ninth of Messrs. Boosey's London Ballad Concerts at the Queen's Hall, where there was an attractive programme and excellent performances. Miss Evangeline Florence sang in dainty, artistic style, "La Pastorella," by Veracini, and Mr. F. H. Cowen's light, graceful ballad, "The Swallows." Miss Ada Crossley was far more successful in the Irish spinning song, "The Round Brown Wheel," than in the somewhat tame setting of a tame poem by Mrs. Browning. Mme. Belle Cole's fine voice was heard to advantage in Weber's "O Fatima," from Abu Hassan. Messrs. Lloyd and Plunket Greene came in for their share of glory; the fine singing of the latter in the effective Moore Melodies, "O ye dead" and "Drink to her," as cleverly re-arranged by Dr. C. V. Stanford, deserves special mention. The select choir of Mr. Eaton Fanning rendered part-songs with taste and expression. M. Tivadar Nachez gave an excellent rendering of Tartini's fine Sonata, "Il Trillo del Diavolo," and exhibited his skill as a virtuoso in a "Scherzo Fantastique"; but I did not like his way of playing Handel's Largo: it lacked dignity.

THE second part of the concert was devoted to "English Music of the Olden Time," performed upon the original instruments for which it (the instrumental music) was written. These instruments consisted of viols, lute, virginals and harpsichord, and the performers were Mr. A., Miss Helene, and Mrs. Elodie Dolmetsch. The vocalists were Miss Bertha Moore, and Messrs. J. Robertson and Douglas Powell. Realism in art is now rampant, and Mr. Dolmetsch and his associates were dressed in Elizabethan costume. In some old Elizabethan hall with antique furniture, and with a select audience arrayed in like costume, the effect would no doubt have been striking. But in the large Queen's Hall, and on the cold, bare platform, with an audience in nineteenth century clothes of various kinds, the effect was rather ludicrous. Mr. Dolmetsch's comments on the various pieces of his programme also jarred against the attempt to revivify the past; for neither his English nor his pronunciation is altogether Elizabethan. The programme was ably interpreted, and the numbers who, in spite of the lateness of the hour, remained until the close showed how interested they were. Why do not Messrs. Boosey devote a whole programme to the ballads of the "Olden Time"?

J. S. S.

SCIENCE.

ONE is led sometimes to wonder how the mistake arose that we are regarded as a wealthy nation. We appear to be a very poor nation indeed, or else a despicably mean one. This consideration probably occurred to everybody who read Lord Salisbury's reply to the deputation which laid before him, on Tuesday last, the scheme of a National Physical Laboratory. Now this laboratory has been admittedly, for years past, a crying necessity of the times. The only substitute for it in the country has been the poor little branch institution at Kew, which, out of an annual endowment of £447 from the Gassiot bequest, has done its best to verify and standardise meteorological instruments, chronometers, compasses, and such like. Similar work is also done in one department of the Board of Trade. This is a very small portion of the usefulness which properly belongs to such an institution as the Bureau of Weights and Measures at Paris, or the Physikalisch-Technische Reichsanstalt at Berlin, on which the present proposals are modelled.

TAKING Prof. Rücker's statement of the case as fairly representing our present needs, a National Physical Laboratory would provide facilities for carrying out long and laborious researches into the properties and changes of matter. Next in order would follow the testing and standardising of instruments, and all kinds of calibration work. Thirdly would come systematic measurements on the physical properties of bodies, a work of the greatest importance both for industry and for science. The initial cost of providing a building for these purposes, preferably in the form of an extension of Kew Observatory, has been estimated at £30,000. The annual maintenance is put at £5,000.

THESE are not very alarming sums when compared with the great Berlin institution, which cost £200,000 to build and absorbs £15,000 annually in maintenance; yet Lord Salisbury dwelt with hardly concealed alarm on the prospect of broaching such an extravagance to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Nevertheless, here are Lord Salisbury's own feelings upon the matter, as he confided them to the deputation, and no one who knows Lord Salisbury's own devotion to scientific pursuits can doubt that he was sincere: "It is often the duty of a deputation to impress upon a Minister a policy as to the general expediency of which he is not entirely convinced, and the deputation may take a controversial form. No such development is possible in this case. We are all of us, as we all must be—anybody who has looked into the subject at all—heartily anxious for the attainment of the objects advocated so far as they are practicable." The limitation conveyed in the last six words occupied the remainder of his reply. "It is all a question of means." One expense leads to another, especially when the objects are indefinite as in this case, and the hint that the figures quoted above "only met the urgent necessities of the case" was likely to be a terrible shock, he thought, to a Chancellor of the Exchequer. Finally, if replies mean anything, it looks as though the Government meant to refuse to spend £5,000 per annum on urgent necessities now because at some future date other urgent necessities might arise. "Sympathy" is all that it is prepared to extend to a deputation headed by the most eminent men of science we possess, all actuated by one sole motive, the desire to keep England abreast of other nations in the pursuit of knowledge, and to further native industries in the same wise and helpful way that France and Germany have done theirs, by placing the best resources of science at their disposal.

H. C. M.

DULAU & CO., 37, Soho Square, W.

METHOD GASPEY-OTTO-SAUER.

The advantage which this Method has over all others is its combination of theory and practice—i.e., a clear scientific exposition of the grammar, combined with numerous practical exercises. By strictly adhering to this method, the great difficulty of enabling the pupil to speak and write foreign languages has been successfully solved for the first time.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ELEMENTARY SPANISH GRAMMAR, with Exercises and a VOCABULARY. By LUIGI PAVIA. 8°. cloth, 2s. 6d.

At present the grammars of "Gaspey-Otto-Sauer's" Method comprise: English, German, French, Dutch, modern Greek, Hungarian, Italian, Polish, Portuguese, Roman, Russian, Spanish, Turkish. Besides the grammars, exist smaller Guides, Reading, and Conversation Books. Complete Catalogues (also for Germans, French, Italians, Portuguese and Brazilians, Spaniards, &c.) gratis and post free.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

THE ACADEMY.

PRICE 3d.

Published every Friday morning, and obtainable through any Bookseller at home or abroad.

A PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENT OF UNIQUE INTEREST GIVEN WITH EACH ISSUE.

The following Portrait Supplements have already appeared:—

1896.			1897.
BEN JONSON	November	14	SAMUEL RICHARDSON ...	January	2
JOHN KEATS	"	21	THOMAS DE QUINCEY ...	"	9
SIR JOHN SUCKLING ...	"	28	LEIGH HUNT	"	16
TOM HOOD	December	5	LORD MACAULAY	"	23
THOMAS GRAY	"	12	ROBERT SOUTHHEY ...	"	30
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON	"	19	S. T. COLERIDGE	February	6
SIR WALTER SCOTT ...	"	26	CHARLES LAMB	"	13

To-day's Issue.
MICHAEL DRAYTON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO
GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and
post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

E P P S ' S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

WORKS BY DR. ALEX. MACLAREN

Most BRIGHT, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s., post free.

THE BEATITUDES, AND OTHER SERMONS.

"Dr. MacLaren's new volume will be received with special warmth, as containing an excellent exposition of the Beatitudes. Dr. MacLaren's work is always full of thought and knowledge and power, intensely evangelical, and unfailingly fresh."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s. each, post free.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.

"Dr. MacLaren is our ideal preacher."—Expository Times.
"Masterly, beautiful, inspiring."—Methodist Recorder.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"The work of a master of pulpit oratory."—Freeman.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."
Christian World Pulpit.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"For more than a quarter of a century he has held almost an unchallenged position as the prince of pulpit orators.....
The back pews of Dr. MacLaren's church are in the nooks and corners of the earth."—Methodist Times.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 23, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

PENS AND PENCILS.

A pocket pen—namely, a pen containing nib and automatic ink supply, is a convenience; but only if one can be quite sure that it will not, on occasion, fill the pocket with ink through the feed-hole. A fountain pen saves the trouble of dipping, enables the user to have his own pen always at hand without the necessity of having recourse to his desk, and saves persons who have to write away from home the disagreeableness of using strange nibs. The objections to a pocket fountain pen are the tendency already mentioned to spill the ink, and the necessity of shaking the ink down on to the nib before the pen can be used.

THE CAW FOUNTAIN PEN dispenses with both these objections. It cannot be put away without being hermetically closed; it can be carried in any position, and subjected to any amount of shaking, and not one drop of ink can, by any possibility, get out of it. The nib—which is a gold one of fine quality, and can be selected to suit any hand—is carried actually in the ink, and the pen is thus ready for use the moment it touches the paper. The price is 12s. 6d.

From the foregoing remarks it will be seen that the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN has all the advantages of a stylographic pen, with the additional one of having a nib instead of a style point, so that one writes one's own hand with it; but for people who still prefer a stylograph, the same Company makes the CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN. It is better than any other style of stylographic pen ever made, and is, in fact, a perfect ink pencil. The price is 5s.

And now about Pencils. About half the lead of an ordinary lead pencil is wasted in cutting the cedar, about two-thirds of the lead of an ordinary coloured pencil is wasted in the same way, and by breaking while in use. In either case, the point of a pencil, whether black or coloured, is troublesome to make, and, except in the hands of a few skilful persons, irregular and unsightly. THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is not made of wood at all; it is just like an ordinary pencil, but the lead is covered with paper, and by an ingenious device it can be resharpened by simply pulling off a little of the paper. The sharpening is absolutely automatic; you cannot take off too much or too little of the cover; it is always just right. The point is easily made perfectly symmetrical, and beautifully tapered. There is no possibility of the lead being broken in sharpening, because the lead has only to be lightly touched. The lead is round instead of being square, as in many lead pencils, so that there are no awkward corners to disfigure the writing.

Nobody who has to use a blue pencil, or any coloured pencil, would ever be content with an ordinary one after using a BLAISDELL pencil; and the BLAISDELL black lead pencil is also better than any ordinary black lead pencil ever made. Samples of each kind of pencils will be sent post free, on receipt of 1s., to any address in the United Kingdom by the BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C. British Depot for the CAW pens.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY.

DOMESDAY-BOOK and BEYOND. Three

Essays in the Early History of England. By F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D., Downing Professor of the Laws of England in the University of Cambridge, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 18s.

THE HISTORY of ENGLISH LAW BEFORE the TIME of EDWARD I. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D., Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 40s.

SPECTATOR.—"It is, perhaps, not too much to say that no more important contribution than this has been made to legal literature in this century. As a whole, we have nothing but gratitude to express for a work which goes far to redeem that neglect of its history which has too long been the scandal of English law."

ATHENÆUM.—"The patient and most valuable researches on which the Downing and Corpus professors are well known to have been long engaged have borne goodly fruit in the two volumes before us....Of the scope and execution of their work we shall have to speak in detail; but we may say at once that there can be no question as to the magisterial handling of their subject, the broad, luminous treatment of their materials, the frequent originality, yet unvarying soundness, of the conclusions at which they arrive."

SACRAMENTARIUM LEONIANUM. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Three Photographs, by Rev. CHARLES LETT FELTOW, B.D., Rector of Farnham All Saints' and Westley, and late Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE and MIRACLES of ST. WILLIAM of NORWICH. By THOMAS of MONMOUTH. Now first Edited from the Unique Manuscript, with an Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by AUGUSTUS JESSOPP, D.D., Honorary Canon of Norwich, and M. R. JAMES, Litt.D., Fellow and Senior Dean of King's College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, buckram, with Map and Five Colotype Plates, 18s.

THE BOOK of JUDGES in GREEK, according to the TEXT of CODEX ALEXANDRINUS. Edited by A. E. BROOKE, M.A., and N. McLEAN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. (Uniform with the Manual Edition of the Septuagint.)

CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography in the University of Cambridge.

ETHNOLOGY. By A. H. Keane, F.R.G.S., late

Vice-President Anthropological Institute, Corresponding Member Italian and Washington Anthropological Societies. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, Second Edition, Revised, 10s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.
BIOLOGICAL SERIES.

General Editor: A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College.

A MANUAL and DICTIONARY of the FLOWER-

ING PLANTS and FERNS. By J. C. WILLIS, M.A., Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Ceylon. Crown 8vo, 2 vols., 10s. 6d.

NEARLY READY.—THREE NEW WORKS ON EDUCATIONAL SCIENCE.

CHAPTERS on the AIMS and PRACTICE of TEACHING. Edited by FREDERIC SPENCER, M.A., Phil. Doc., Professor of the French Language and Literature in the University College of North Wales, formerly Chief Master on the Modern Side in the Leys School, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

VITTORINO DA FELTRE, and other HUMANIST

EDUCATORS: ESSAYS and VERSIONS. An Introduction to the History of Classical Education. By W. H. WOODWARD, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford; Lecturer on Education at University College, Victoria University; and Principal of University Training College, Liverpool. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THOMAS ARNOLD. His Life at Rugby and CONTRIBUTIONS to EDUCATION. Edited by J. J. FINDLAY, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford; Principal of the College of Preceptors' Training College.

BACON'S ESSAYS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by ALFRED S. WEST, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; Fellow of University College, London. Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[Pitt Press Series. Immediately]

POPE'S ESSAY on CRITICISM. Edited by

A. S. WEST, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. [Pitt Press Series.]

EDUCATIONAL TIMES.—"Mr. West's book is not only useful as a 'text with notes'; it is also scholarly and interesting. He has worked with the true literary instinct, and his treatment of the 'Essay on Criticism' is in this respect notably above the level of what we are accustomed to in school editions of isolated works."

THE CAMBRIDGE MILTON FOR SCHOOLS.

New Volume.

COMPLETING THE EDITION OF "PARADISE LOST."

GUARDIAN.—"This edition will, we feel sure, long continue to be the standard school text of Paradise Lost."

PARADISE LOST. Books IX. and X. With

Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Indexes. By A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 2s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

MR. MURRAY'S NEWEST BOOKS.

JUST OUT, demy 8vo, 18s.

The DAWN of MODERN GEOGRAPHY:

A History of Travel and Geographical Science from the Conversion of the Roman Empire to 900 A.D., with an Account of the Achievements and Writings of the Early Christian, Arab, and Chinese Students and Explorers.

By C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

With Reproduction of the principal Maps of the Time.

This volume attempts to give an account of all the more important geographical movements of the early Middle Age, and to illustrate the course of the pioneer enterprise which preceded the discoveries of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, at least as far as the Crusades. In subsequent volumes it is intended to continue the same design through the Crusading period and the later Middle Ages.

A NEW WORK BY THE PROVOST of TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

JUST OUT, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SOME THOUGHTS on the TEXTUAL CRITICISM of the NEW TESTAMENT.

By Professor GEORGE SALMON, D.D.,
Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

JUST OUT, with Map, crown 8vo, 5s.

THE DEFENCE OF THE EMPIRE:

OR,
The Protection of British Ships, Ports, and Commerce.

A Selection from the Letters and Speeches of Henry Howard Molyneux, FOURTH EARL OF CARNARVON.

Edited by Lieut.-Col. Sir GEO. SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G., F.R.S.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1851-72

Kept by the Rt. Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.,
Sometime Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Governor of Madras, 1891-96.

"This is a charming book, full of good things. It consists of the lighter reminiscences of a singularly accomplished man of the world, who in the course of a varied and active life has come in contact with a vast number of distinguished people in many countries." St. James's Gazette.

With Maps, 8vo, 14s.

THE NAVY AND THE NATION.

By JAMES R. THURSFIELD, M.A., and
Lieut.-Col. Sir GEORGE SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G., F.R.S.

"We have called this volume a text-book, it is therefore, perhaps, needful to add that there is not a dry or a dull page in it. Whether it is Mr. Thursfield dealing with the statistics of our seaborne commerce or Sir George Clarke explaining the relation of submarine mines to war, the subject is so dealt with that not only is it made intelligible to any average Englishman, but attention is riveted by the charm of literary style."—Times.

With Maps and Plans, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

HERODOTUS. The Text of Canon Rawlinson's

Translation, with the Notes Abridged for the Use of Students. By A. J. GRANT, M.A., of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History, Yorkshire College, Leeds, Author of "Greece in the Age of Pericles."

"The delightful pages of the old Greek, whose flavour has been so admirably presented by Canon Rawlinson, will thus be made accessible to a far wider circle than heretofore. There is no better introduction to Greek history and literature than Herodotus, and the English reader gets him here under the best possible conditions."—Literary World.

Crown 8vo, 9s.

EUROPE in the MIDDLE AGE. By Oliver J.

THATCHER, Ph.D., and FERDINAND SCHWILL, Ph.D.

Existing histories of the Middle Age, upon which so much light has been thrown by the researches of recent years, are either general in their outline, or devoted to certain phases of the subject at the expense of others. This work aims at completeness and comprehensiveness, at the same time studying conciseness in detail by a thorough system of classification.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 5s.

MERCY OTIS WARREN (Sister of James Otis).

By ALICE BROWN, Author of "Agnes Surridge" in "Three Heroines of New England Romance," and "Meadow Grass: Tales of New England Life." (Forming one of the Series of "Women of Colonial and Revolutionary Times.")

With Portraits, 3 vols., 8vo, 38s.

THE UNPUBLISHED WORKS of EDWARD

GIBBON. Including Six Autobiographies, Correspondence, &c., printed Verbatim from MSS. in the Possession of the Earl of Sheffield. With an Introduction by the EARL OF SHEFFIELD.

Vol. I.—THE SIX AUTOBIOGRAPHIES. Edited by JOHN MURRAY. 12s.

Vols. II. and III.—GIBBON'S PRIVATE LETTERS TO HIS FATHER, HIS STEP-MOTHER, LORD SHEFFIELD, AND OTHERS, FROM 1763 TO 1791. Edited, with Notes, &c., by ROWLAND PROTHEROE. 24s.

With Portrait, fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d.

LORD BOWEN: a Biographical Sketch. With

Selections from his Unpublished Poems. By Sir HENRY STEWART CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E.

"Every one who knew Lord Bowen well must be grateful to Sir Henry Cunningham for writing, and to Lady Bowen for empowering him to publish, this brilliant sketch of one of the most brilliant men of our century."—Spectator.

"Charles Bowen—elegant scholar, profound lawyer, just and painstaking Judge—stands out conspicuously among the fine flower of Englishmen of our own time."

Daily Telegraph.

"A fitting memorial of one of the most amiable and gifted of men."—Pall Mall Gazette.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1295.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES:—
No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1448 lots.)
.. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (762, 732 lots.)
.. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.,
Invite AUTHORS (Popular or otherwise) to submit their MSS.
(Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) for prompt consideration.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SKEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.,
have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 63121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
23, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

EDITORS in SEARCH of good FICTION should
write for J. F. SPRIGGS LIST of OVER ONE HUNDRED WORKS offered for SERIAL PUBLICATION. The Authors include
the most Popular Novelists of the Day.—J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER
SERIAL AGENT, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

FIRST EDITIONS OF MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Alnsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Crankshaw, Phils, Rowlandson, Leach, &c.
The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World.
Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slides with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

JUNIOR LEADER WRITER.—Experienced
Journalist (52), University man, at present Editor of a large and old-established Conservative Paper (weekly), desires to join the Staff of an important Provincial Morning Paper. Strong, sensible writer; good literary style; thoroughly reliable. Capable Sub-Editor and Reviewer. Moderate salary if prospects good.—W. W., ACADEMY
Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,

Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

THURSDAY NEXT (MARCH 4), at 3 o'clock—Professor PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., F.S.A., Professor of Classical Archaeology and Art in the University of Oxford—FIRST OF THREE LECTURES on "GREEK HISTORY and EXTANT MONUMENTS." Half-a-Guinea the Course.

SATURDAY (MARCH 6th), at 3 o'clock—The Right Hon. LORD
RAYLEIGH, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy &c.—FIRST OF SIX LECTURES on "ELECTRICITY and ELECTRICAL VIBRATIONS." One Guinea.
Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from MONDAY,
MARCH 1st, to THURSDAY, MARCH 4th, inclusive.
R. MAUNDE THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.
British Museum, 23rd February, 1897.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

APPLICATIONS for the Academy's TODD PROFESSORSHIP of the CELTIC LANGUAGES, which is now vacant, must be sent in to the Secretary of Council before the 15th March, 1897.
All particulars regarding the Professorship can be obtained from the TREASURER of the Academy, 19, Dawson Street, Dublin.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE
TO ARTISTS.—The DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY,
MARCH 26th, 27th, and 28th; and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, MARCH 30th.—Forms and Labels, can be obtained from the Academy during the Month of March on receipt of a stamped and directed envelope.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS IN SEPTEMBER, 1897.
FIVE OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Two (£150 and £200) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.
Particulars and copies of examination papers on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.).
CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special Instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee 16 guineas.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE.

FACULTY OF MEDICINE.
The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of ANATOMY. Eighty copies of application, together with testimonials, must be in the hands of the undersigned on or before March 8th, 1897.
Further particulars may be obtained on application to
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A.,
University College, Cardiff, Secretary and Registrar.
February 8th, 1897.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,

Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars
apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.

An EXAMINATION will take place at UPPINGHAM on the
30th and 31st March and 1st April, 1897, for SIX OPEN SCHOLAR-SHIPS, Two of £70 per annum, Two of £50 per annum, Two of £30 per annum, each tenable at the School. Candidates entertained free of charge if application be made by 15th March, 1897.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages
for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HENRI, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.

1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £20, two of
£50, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

SCHOLASTIC EASTER VACANCIES.

1. Thorough French and fair Maths. in good Prep. School. £150 Res.
2. Music (Piano and Violin) and some Form work in Public School.
£90 Res.
3. Junior work in large Church School. Clergyman (Priest), High Church. £70 Res.
4. Classics in large and well-known Prep. School. £120 Res., increasing to £150.
5. Music and Drawing in large Boarding School. Good salary to a good man.
Also Junior and other Masterhips in Endowed and Private Schools.
Apply to W. H. FRICKER, M.A.
TEACHERS' GUILD REGISTRY, 74, Gower Street, W.C.
(Scholastic Agency work at lowest charges to cover expenses. Interviews 3 to 5 daily, except Thursday.)

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

DEIGHTON, BELL & CO. Cambridge.
Burke's Extinct Poerage.—Catalogue of Blue and White Nankin Porcelain, 1878.—Moore's The Alps in 1864.—Mummy's My Climbs in the Alps (Japanese paper).

W. MULLER, 1, Star Yard, Carv Street, London.
W.C.—Kearns's Pictology, 1884.—Economic Review and Journal, any parts.—Jevons's Investigations in Currency.—Lewes's Study of Psychology.—MacCulloch's Literature of Polit. Econ.—Monthly Notes of Library Assoc., 4 vols.—Quarterly Journal of Economics, Vol. I., or any.—Political Science Quarterly, any parts.

MURRAY (FRANK), 25, Lonsdale Lane, Leic. ster.
Oughton's Queen Elizabeth. Both Eds.
Queen Victoria. 25 Edition.
Skelton's Mary Stuart. Both Eds.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES OF WHATLEY,
Livius, Hall, Murray, and any Old Specimens; highest prices paid.—MOORE, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1897. Full price (2d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

FIRST PRINCIPLES	...	16s.
PRINCIPLES OF BIOLOGY. 2 vols.	...	34s.
PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOLOGY. 2 vols.	...	36s.
PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I.	...	21s.
Ditto Vol. II.	...	18s.
Ditto Vol. III.	...	16s.
ECOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS	...	5s.
PRINCIPLES OF ETHICS. Vol. I.	...	15s.
Ditto Vol. II.	...	12s. 6d.
Ditto Part I., THE DATA OF ETHICS.	...	3s.
Ditto Part IV., JUSTICE	...	8s.
THE STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY	...	10s. 6d.
EDUCATION	...	6s.
Ditto Cheap Edition	...	2s. 6d.
ESSAYS. 3 vols.	...	30s. (or each vol. 10s.)
SOCIAL STATICS and MAN v. STATE	...	10s.
MAN versus THE STATE (Separately)	...	1s.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

A BRILLIANT NOVEL.
A DAUGHTER'S GRIEF.
By F. H. CLIFFE.
3s. 6d.

"There are numbers of strong situations and skilful and unexpected developments in 'A Daughter's Grief.' The reader follows with the closest attention the unfolding of the plot. The various parts are finished and fitted to one another with considerable art."—Scotsman.

London: BELL & Co., 9, Hart Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

BELLES LETTRES.—Lectures on the Latin,
French, and English Languages and Literatures for the Culture of Taste and Style in Romantic Criticism, Poetry and the Drama.
Preparation for Examinations in the above Subjects and Higher Mathematics.

ZULMA. From the French of Madame DE STAËL.
"An illustrious member of the republic of letters."—Lord BROUGHAM. "Elle anatomisait et colorait tout."—CHATELAIN. "Elle a l'âme de Rousseau... l'esprit... de Voltaire."—PROF. LARSEN. Post free 6s. 6d.
ARTHUR DUNCAN, 76, Effingham Road, Hove, N.

TYPE-WRITERS AND CYCLES.

The Standard makes at half the usual prices.
MACHINES LENT ON HIRE, also BOUGHT and EXCHANGED.
Sundries and Repairs to all Machines.
Terms, cash or instalments.
MS. COPIED from 10d. per 1,000 words.

N. TAYLOR, 74, Chancery Lane, London.

Established 1884.

Telephone 6990. Telegrams "Glossator, London."

MANUSCRIPT TYPE-WRITTEN with care and
precision by experienced operator and returned promptly,
10d. per 1,000 words. Translations made.—"OPERAATOR," 2, Randleham
Road, London, N.E.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospective post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR-ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agent wanted.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., LIMITED.

THE HISTORY of the LAST QUARTER-CENTURY IN THE UNITED STATES, 1870-1896. By E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS. With more than 350 Illustrations. 3 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"They will often be consulted with advantage by English readers, who desire for any purpose to recall details soon forgotten and often very imperfectly apprehended at the time."—Times.

IN the LAND of the BORA; or, Camp Life and Sport in Dalmatia and the Herzegovina. By "SNAFFLE," Author of "Gun, Rifle, and Hound." With 10 Full-page Illustrations by H. Dixon. Demy 8vo, 15s.

LETTERS of DE BROSSES. Translated by Lord RONALD GOWER. Fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d.

"The intense humanity of the first President of the Burgundian Parliament imparts a flavour to his letters that Time cannot remove."—Black and White.

THE MYSTERIES of MAGIC. A Digest of the Writings of Eliphas Lévi. With Biographical and Critical Essay by ARTHUR EDWARD WALTE. Second and Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE EDGE of the ORIENT. By R. H. RUSSELL. Large crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE WAY of the WIND. By C. KENNETT BURBOW, Author of "Asteck's Madonna." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LIFE'S QUEST. A Volume of Poems. By WILLIAM TURBERVILLE. Fcap. 8vo, 6s. "Very finely told, with passages here and there which glow like 'Keats.'"—Yorkshire Post. "Mr. Turberville's poetry closely suggests Shelley's early work. He has a genuine passion for nature, and his verses are fragrant of country."

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 877.—MARCH, 1897.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—GORDON'S STAFF-OFFICER AT KHARTUM. —SOME PLANTATION MEMORIES, by A. G. Bradley. —WOMAN IN POLITICS. —KAVIRISTAN AND THE KAVIRS, by Major W. Broadfoot. —DANIEL: A ROMANCE OF SURREY, by R. D. Blackmore. —SALADIN AND KING RICHARD: THE EASTERN QUESTION IN THE TWELFTH CENTURY, by Lt.-Col. C. R. Conder. —THE GOAT: HIS USEFUL QUALITIES, AND HOW HE CAME BY THEM, by Dr. Louis Robinson. —RECENT NAVAL BIOGRAPHY AND CRITICISM. —TRAVELLING JOE, by Zack. —DISRAELI VINDICATED, by Frederick Greenwood. —THE POLITICAL PROSPECT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

The MARCH ISSUE contains—

AN OPEN LETTER to the RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.
TURKISH FINANCE.
LORD SALISBURY AND THE EASTERN QUESTION.
MR. RHODES'S SPEECHES.
SUN YAT SEN ON CHINA'S PRESENT AND FUTURE.
JORIS KARL HUYSMANS.

And other Articles on

The Genius of D'Annunzio, by Ouida—Workers' Insurance Legislation in Germany—Our Gentlemanly Failures—Justice for the Taxpayer—Gibbon the Man.

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE

EDITED BY OSWALD CRAWFURD,

For MARCH

Contains the Commencement of MISS VIOLET HUNT'S NEW NOVEL, UNKIND!
AND SEVEN SHORT COMPLETE STORIES,
By CONSTANCE MILMAN, the Hon. DAPHNE RENDEL,
H. WARHAM, ROBERT STEWART, ALFRED HURRY,
CYRIL MULLER, and A. H. HAMER.
PRICE SIXPENCE.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., LONDON.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL,

ENTITLED

THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

Translated by Mrs. WAUGH (ELLIS WRIGHT).

With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)
Crown 8vo, art linen, 6s.

FOURTH EDITION now ready.

"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle.
Mr. Courtney says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigal variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."
"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By MAURUS JÓKAI (Uniform with the above).

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. . . . Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.

Authorised Editions, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. each.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN.

'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS.

"A thrilling Hungarian historical novel. Jókai's extraordinary dramatic and descriptive powers have full play."—Truth.

PRETTY MICHAEL.

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read."—Saturday Review.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1861.

By HERBERT S. SKRATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Farnival Street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free.

INDIGESTION: Its Causes and Cure. By JOHN H.

CLARKE, M.D.

London: JAMES EYRE & Co. (Ld.), 170, Piccadilly, and 45, Threadneedle Street.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCHROFT, Manager.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

The THIRD EDITION of Mr.
ANDREW LANG'S "PICKLE
THE SPY" will be ready next week. 8vo, price 18s.

JUST PUBLISHED, 3 vols., 8vo, 24s.

MEMOIRS of BARON LEJEUNE,

Aide-de-Camp to Marshals Berthier, Davout, and Oudinot.

Translated and Edited from the Original French by
Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'ANVERS).

With an Introduction by Major-General MAURICE, C.B.

NEXT WEEK, 8vo, 16s.

VITA MEDICA:

Chapters of Medical Life and Work.

By Sir BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON,

M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.

NEW BOOK BY PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the SCIENCE of MYTHOLOGY.

By the Right Hon. Professor MAX MÜLLER, K.M., Member of the French Institute.

2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

CABINET EDITION OF BISHOP CREIGHTON'S
"PAPACY."

A HISTORY of the PAPACY from the GREAT SCHISM to the SACK of ROME (1378-1527).

By M. CREIGHTON, D.D., Oxon. and Camb., Lord Bishop of London.

New and Cheaper Edition. In Six Monthly Volumes.
Vol. I., crown 8vo, 6s. [Now ready.]

With 12 Views of Constantinople and the Neighbourhood.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

LETTERS from CONSTANTINOPLE

By Mrs. MAX MÜLLER.

With 11 Illustrations of Churches, &c., in Constantinople.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHURCH of the SIXTH CENTURY:

Six Chapters in Ecclesiastical History.

By WILLIAM HOLDEN HUTTON, B.D.
Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Oxford.

FOR the WHITE ROSE of ARNO:

A Story of the Jacobite Rising of 1745

By OWEN RHOSCOMYL.

Author of "Battlement and Tower," &c.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We follow the fortunes of Mr. Owen Rhoscomyl's personages with breathless interest from the first pages to the last. . . . For the White Rose of Arno ought to take a high place in the long list of popular romances dealing with the Stuart cause."—Daily Telegraph.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 173. MARCH, 1897. 8vo, price 6d.

THE CHEVALIER D'AURIAC. Chaps. 6-8. By S. LEVET
YEATS, Author of "The Honour of Savelli."

ANNE MURRAY. By Lady VERNY.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY CRAFT-GILD. By L. M.

ROBERTS.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS: Ancient and Modern. By ERIC

PARKER.

BEN PLUMBY'S CORNET. By MARY L. PENNED.

MILK DANGERS and REMEDIES. By Mrs. PRYCE

FRANKLAND.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

A Cheap Edition of ALLEN UPWARD'S Romantic Story, THE PRINCE OF BALKISTAN, will be ready on Feb. 25th. Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.

A New and Cheaper Edition of T. W. SPEIGHT'S Popular Novel, THE MASTER OF TRENANCE, will be ready on Feb. 25th. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A New Edition of Mrs. HUNGERFORD'S well-known Novel, APRIL'S LADY, will be ready on Feb. 25th. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEYOND the PALE: an Irish Romance. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington." Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"A more alluring, romantic, and energetic story we have not read for a long time. All who read Mrs. Croker's delightful story will thoroughly enjoy it. The book deserves much praise. There is a freshness in some of the mountain pictures which the cavalier romances now pouring from the press so abundantly often lack."—Daily Mail.

WITH the RED EAGLE: a Romance of the Tyrol. By WILLIAM WESTALL. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"Mr. Westall has made a fine choice of subject, and has contrived to handle it very prettily. The book deserves much praise. There is a freshness in some of the mountain pictures which the cavalier romances now pouring from the press so abundantly often lack."—Daily Chronicle.

AN ANXIOUS MOMENT. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD, Author of "Molly Bawn." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The nine stories it contains are characteristic of her gay and genial personality in contemporary fiction. The wit, the spirit, the touches of pathos, the breezy freshness of treatment, the talent for reproducing the chatter and chaff of society, are to be found in these tales."—Daily News.

SEBASTIAN'S SECRET. By S. E. WALLER. With 9 Illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A MISSING WITNESS. By Frank BARRETT, Author of "Little Lady Linton." With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The history of the struggles of the three young dreamers is described with wonderful spirit and convincingness, and the 'Little mother' of the volume is a delightful study."—Morning Leader.

MADAME SANS-GENE. (Founded on Sardou's Play.) By EDMOND LEPOLLETIER. Translated by JOHN DE VILLIERS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE NARRATIVE of CAPTAIN COIGNET, Soldier of the Empire, 1776-1860. With 100 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"This story of the Grand Army, as told by one of its humblest members, is extremely impressive. The letterpress is freely interlarded with little wood blocks, which are clever and vigorous, and help greatly in the realization of the story."—New Saturday.

PHIL MAY'S SKETCH-BOOK. Fifty-four Humorous Drawings. Cheaper Edition. Crown folio, cloth, 2s. 6d.

POPULAR NOVELS.—Cr. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL. THE TALE of the TEN.

By BRET HARTE. THE CRUSADE of the "EX-CELSIOR."

By MARK TWAIN. THE STOLEN WHITE ELEPHANT.

By GEORGE R. SIMS. ROGUES and VAGABONDS.

By Sir WALTER BESANT. IN DEACON'S ORDEES.

By HAWLEY SMART. LONG ODDS.

THE MASTER of RATHKELLY

By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED. MRS. TREGASKISS.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. THE SORCERESS.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER. A LIFE INTEREST.

MONA'S CHOICE.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM, 1897. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, the Offices they hold or have held, their Town and Country Addresses, Clubs, &c. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 50s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

One Shilling Monthly.—CONTENTS for MARCH.
LITTLE DANIEL. By J. W. SERRIS, C.S.I.
ON BEHALF of BIRDS. By ROSE BIRNBOV.
WALTER PATER. By STANLEY ADDLESHAW.
A FIGHT for LIFE. By Rev. M. G. WATKINS, M.A.
DONNA PIETRA. By EDMUND G. GARDNER.
EXHILIONARIA. By Dr. YORKE-DAVIES.
SIR OLIVER'S SHOEVEL. By W. A. FOX.
SEPARATE CREATION. By W. T. FRANKS, F.R.C.S.
THE TRIBUTE from BREFNY. By NORA HOPPER.
IN SUBTERRANEAN CAVES. By WALTER WOOD.
THE HOOSIER POET. By SYLVANUS URBAN.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOTICE.—The important New Work by Dr. DONALDSON SMITH, F.R.G.S., the well-known Explorer, entitled THROUGH UNKNOWN AFRICAN COUNTRIES, will be ready next week at all Libraries and Booksellers'. Price 21s. net.

NOTICE.—SOLDIERING and SURVEYING in BRITISH EAST AFRICA, 1891-1894, by Major MACDONALD, R.E., fully illustrated with Maps and Plans, is just ready at all Libraries and Booksellers'. Price 16s.

ON FARM and VELDT in CAPE COLONY, BECHUANALAND, NATAL, and the TRANSVAAL. By FRANCES McNAB. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [March 2.]

FISH TAILS — and SOME TRUE ONES. By BRADNOCK HALL. With Etched Frontispiece by the Author, and 12 Full-Page Illustrations by T. Hope McLachlan. Crown 8vo, 6s. [March 5.]

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'.

WASTED RECORDS of DISEASE. By CHARLES E. PAGET, Lecturer on Public Health in the Owens College, Medical Officer of Health for the County Borough of Salford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE BEGGARS of PARIS (PARIS QUI MENDIE). Translated from the French of M. LOUIS PAULIAN by LADY HERSCHELL. Paper boards, 1s.

Times.—"Not only contains a great many amusing and instructive anecdotes, but formulates a definite scheme for the entire suppression of begging as a trade. Lady Herschell's excellent translation should be read by all who are interested in the vexed question of charity-giving, and even to those who read but for amusement it will prove vastly entertaining."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

STUDIES in EARLY VICTORIAN LITERATURE. By FREDERIC HARRISON, M.A., Author of "The Choice of Books," &c. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

By MR. J. CHURTON COLLINS.
A TREASURY of MINOR BRITISH POETRY. Selected and Arranged, with Notes, by J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A. Handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Standard.—"A choice and beautiful book."

NEW AND BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
THE PLANT-LORE and GARDEN CRAFT of SHAKESPEARE. By the Rev. Canon ELLACOMBE, Author of "In a Gloucestershire Garden." With 80 Illustrations. Handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

HABIT and INSTINCT: a Study in Heredity. By Prof. C. LLOYD MORGAN, Author of "Animal Life and Intelligence." Based on the Author's "Lowell Lectures" in 1895-96. Demy 8vo, 16s.

Times.—"A valuable book on a fascinating subject."

POPULAR EDITION.

ENGLAND in EGYPT. By Sir Alfred MILNER, K.C.B., Governor of Cape Colony, and High Commissioner to South Africa. Popular Edition. Large crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

SIR J. WILLIAM DAWSON'S NEW BOOK.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
RELICS of PRIMEVAL LIFE.

Lectures delivered at the Lowell Institute, Boston. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, LL.D., F.R.S.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, recently published.

SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

EDEN LOST and WON:

Studies of the Early History and Final Destiny of Man, as Taught in Nature and Revelation.

"Profoundly interesting and useful as a statement of the case for the old faith, by one who is eminently qualified to give it."—Dundee Advertiser.

THIRD EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE.

8vo, cloth, with Map, 10s. 6d.

ST. PAUL the TRAVELLER and the ROMAN CITIZEN. By W. M. RAMSAY, D.C.L., LL.D., Professor of Humanity, Aberdeen.

"The light thrown by Professor Ramsay on the career of the Apostle Paul is often startling in its freshness. There is, indeed, scarcely a single incident in the Apostle's life upon which he has not something new to say."—Glasgow Herald.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

FOURTH EDITION.

With Maps and Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE CHURCH in the ROMAN EMPIRE BEFORE A.D. 170.

"This volume is the most important contribution to the study of early Church history which has been published in this country since the great work of Bishop Lightfoot on the Apostolic Fathers. It is, too, unless our memory fails us, without a rival in any foreign country."—Guardian.

FOURTH EDITION. SEVENTH THOUSAND.

8vo, cloth, 16s.

WITH ADDITIONS, CORRECTIONS, AND NEW INDEX OF SCRIPTURE REFERENCES.

The HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY

of the HOLY LAND. By GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Free Church College, Glasgow. With 6 specially prepared Maps.

"For the convenience of those who already possess the previous Editions, the Additions, Corrections, and New Index of Scripture References may be had separately. Price 6d."

"A very noteworthy contribution to the study of sacred history based upon the three indispensable conditions of personal acquaintance with the land, a study of the explorations, discoveries, and decipherments, and the employment of the results of Biblical criticism."—Times.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ARMENIA and EUROPE. An

Indictment. By J. LEPSIUS, Ph.D., Berlin. Edited

by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A.

"Dr. Lepsius has written the most powerful and convincing indictment of the Sultan as the perpetrator of the crime, and of the Powers as his accomplices, that has yet been penned."—Manchester Guardian.

"The most systematic account of the massacres we have seen."—Literary World.

SECOND EDITION.—Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LADY ECCLESIA: an

Autobiography. By GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D.

"Dr. Matheson, by his skilful use of the autobiographical mode of narration, keeps a grip of the reader from the beginning to the end. It is altogether a unique work, as rich in thought as it is fertile in ingenuity."—Glasgow Herald.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LAND o' the LEAL. By DAVID LYALL.

"Of the many volumes of fiction dealing with Scottish life and character which have been published of late years, there are very few at all comparable in power and pathos to this little collection of simple tales."—Church Times.

8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 6s.

THE PERSONAL LIFE of QUEEN VICTORIA. By Mrs. TOOLEY.

"For a lady's library, there could be nothing of its kind more suitable and even men, whose interest lies chiefly with the public and wider aspects of the Queen's life, will find many parts of it attractive."—Standard.

THE WOMAN AT HOME

Now ready, for MARCH, price Sixpence,

CONTAINS

A NEW STORY by IAN MACLAREN,

Entitled

THE COURTING OF KATE CARNEGIE;

An Interesting Article on

THE LADIES of MANCHESTER,

Illustrated with many Portraits;

A Biographical Sketch of

EARL SPENCER, K.G.,

With Portraits and Illustrations.

SHOULD WE ESTABLISH a MATRIMONIAL BUREAU?

—WYNDHAM'S DAUGHTER, by ANNE S. SWAN, Chap.

XVI, XVII, and XVIII.—THE SILVER WEDDING DAY, by ADA CAMBRIDGE.—MISS ROTHERHOE and the DOCTOR, by MARY E. HULLAR.—BRIDES and BRIDE-

GROOMS, with Portraits.—DRESS and FASHION.—LIFE and WORK at HOME.—&c., &c., &c.

"Among magazines professedly published for ladies, the 'Woman at Home' is facile princeps."—Times.

London:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST

THIRTEENTH EDITION READY THIS DAY.

(In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.)

Forty-one Years in India:

FROM SUBALTERN TO COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

BY

FIELD-MARSHALLORD ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR, V.C.

Besides Maps and Plans, the Volumes are embellished with Portraits on Steel and Copper of Sir JAMES OUTRAM, General NICHOLSON, Sir HENRY LAWRENCE, Sir ABRAHAM ROBERTS, Sir COLIN CAMPBELL, Sir WILLIAM MANSFIELD, LORD NAPIER of MAGDALA, Sir DONALD STEWART, Sir SAMUEL BROWNE, the AMIR of AFGHANISTAN, Sir ARTHUR HARDINGE, and Field-Marshal LORD ROBERTS.

"A vivid and simple narrative of things actually seen by a fighting man who, during forty-one years of Indian service, saw more hard fighting than almost any other Englishman of our time. It also records the experience of a military administrator who has conducted historical campaigns and been the presiding genius in the reorganization of a great army. But to the general reader perhaps its chief charm will be glimpses which it gives, with a certain Cervantes-like naïveté, of the personality of the author. A hundred unconscious touches, in the camp, on the battlefield, and at the Council table, reveal to us the veritable hero of the British private, and the fearless leader of men whom every native soldier would follow to the death."

Times.

"It would be difficult to overstate the service which the author renders to the British nation by reminding it of the true temper and trustworthiness of one of its greatest weapons of security—the army..... The story of Lord Roberts's life should be studied by every young soldier..... The peculiar charm of the book is the modest and generous spirit which, like a golden thread, runs through it."

Athenæum.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH, 1897.

1. DEAR FAUSTINA. Chaps. VII.—IX.
2. THE BATTLE OF VAL.
3. TIME.
4. THE FATE OF THE LETTER.
5. WALPOLE AND "ST. HANNAH."
6. FOOL OR ANGEL?
7. ABBÉ SCARRON.
8. BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.
9. THE CAPITAL OF BURGUNDY.
10. THAT IMPOSSIBLE SHE.
11. THE CAREER of CLAUDIA. Chaps. XIV.—XVI.

STANDARD WORKS OF FICTION.THE NOVELS OF RHODA BROUGHTON.

Soylla or Charybdis?—A Beginner—Mrs. Blight—Cometh up as a Flower—Good-bye, Sweetheart!—Joan—Nancy—Not Wisely, but Too Well—Red as a Rose is She—Second Thoughts—Belinda—Alas!—"Doct'r Cupid."

Each in One Vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NOVELS OFROSA N. CAREY.

Nellie's Memories—Barbara Heathcote's Trial—Harriet's Choice—Mary St. John—Not Like Other Girls—Only the Governess—Queenie's Whim—Robert Ord's Atonement—Uncle Max—Wee Wife—Wood and Married—For Lilies—Lover or Friend—Basil Lyndhurst—Sir Godfrey's Grand-daughters—The Mistress of Bræ Farm.

Each in One Vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NOVELS OFMAARTEN MAARTENS.

The Sin of Joost Avelingh—An Old Maid's Love—"God's Fool"—The Greater Glory—My Lady Nobody.

Each in One Vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NOVELS OFJESSIE FOTHERGILL.

From Moor Isles—"The First Violin"—Aldyth—Probation (Reprinting)—Borderland—Kith and Kin.

Each in One Vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NOVELS OFMARY CHOLMONDELEY.

Sir Charles Danvers—Diana Tempest.

Each in One Vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S
NEW BOOKS.*Olive Schreiner's Trooper Halket.

"Grips the heart and haunts the imagination."
DAILY NEWS.

Olive Schreiner's Trooper Halket.

"Is powerfully written."—SCOTSMAN.

Olive Schreiner's Trooper Halket.

"Is superlatively beautiful, and must be read."
SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

Olive Schreiner's Trooper Halket.

"Is a bold piece of work, and an opportune."
DAILY CHRONICLE.

Olive Schreiner's Trooper Halket.

"Is well and impressively written."
PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Trooper Peter Halket, by Olive Schreiner

With Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, 6s.

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

BRITISH INDIA. By R. W. FRAZER, LL.B.CANADA. By J. G. Bourinot, C.M.G., LL.D.

With Maps, Illustrations, and Index, cloth, 5s. each.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MR. MAGNUS."

SOUTH AFRICA AS IT IS. By F. REGINALD STATHAM, Author of "Mr. Magnus," &c. Cloth, 10s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION by Rt. Hon. A. J. MUNDELLA.

A VILLAGE POLITICIAN: the Life-Story of John Buckley. Edited by J. C. BUCKMASTER. Cloth, 6s.

NEW NUMBER OF "LITTLE NOVELS."

PASSPORTS. By I. J. ARMSTRONG. Paper cover, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

Recently issued, in same Series.

A SLIGHT INDISCRETION. By Mrs. EDW. CARTWRIGHT.
A COMEDY OF THREE. By NEWTON SANDERS.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK—

LE SELVE. By Ouida.

Second Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"A very excellent story."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Is admirably written."—Morning Post.

ENGLAND. By Frances E. COOKE. (A Volume of "The Children's Study.")

Cloth, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.

"Terse, vivid, well informed."—Speaker.

THE SHADOW CHRIST: an Introduction to Christ Himself. By GERALD STANLEY LEE. Fcap. 8vo, paper boards, 2s. 6d.QUOTATIONS for OCCASIONS.

Compiled by KATHERINE B. WOOD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE'S LIST.AN ESSAY ON COMEDY.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

5s. net.

WHITMAN: a Study.

By JOHN BURROUGHS.

12mo, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

"His work will instruct and stimulate anyone who wishes to understand Whitman and read him with insight into his true relation to the literature of the world."—SCOTSMAN.
"No critic of Whitman could be found who is more deserving of a hearing."—The Lychnis.

The CHRONICLE of VILLANI. A BOOK FOR DANTE STUDENTS.

Translated by ROSE E. SELFE.

Edited by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book, picturesque and instructive reading as it is, is not less interesting and still more valuable, for readers of Italy's greatest poet."—SCOTSMAN.

"Sure to have a warm welcome."—Globe.
"A thoughtful introduction gives a general outline of the Florentine problems of the period."—Westminster Morning News.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS, 1546-1548.

By A. F. LEACH, M.A., F.S.A.,

Late Fellow of All Souls', Oxford, Assistant Charity Commissioner.

Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"A very remarkable contribution to the history of secondary education in England, not less novel in its conclusions than important in the documentary evidence adduced to sustain them."—The Times.

THE PREACHING of ISLAM.

By T. W. ARNOLD, B.A.

With 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"One of the most elaborate and careful accounts of the spread of Mahomedanism that we remember to have seen in any language. As Professor Arnold rightly says, his subject is a vast one. The writer has condensed into less than 400 pages a mass of material that might have alarmed a German professor, let alone an English one."—The Times.

THE "PLEASURE SERIES" OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Vol. VIII., Completing the Series.

AN ENGLISH GARNER.

Ingatherings from our History and Literature.

By EDWARD ARBER, F.S.A.,

Fellow of King's College, London, Emeritus Professor of English Language and Literature, Mason College, Birmingham.

In 8 vols., extra crown 8vo, in a new and attractive binding, £2 net, the set.

Any single volume, 666 pp., may be obtained separately, 6s. net.

"We gladly welcome a new edition of Mr. Edward Arber's 'English Garner'.... Alone and unaided he has been the pioneer of cheap and accurate reprints.... His collection called 'An English Garner' is a miscellaneous gathering of short pieces in prose and verse of the sixteenth century, including a complete copy of Sidney's 'Arcadia' and 'Mellie'. All this can be had, well edited, well printed, and well bound, for the price of five shillings."—The Times.

PROBLEMS of MODERN DEMOCRACY.

By EDWIN LAURENCE GODKIN.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"These admirable essays.... His handling of the various points and questions is marked by real grip, whilst the ease and clearness of his style make even the more technical of his essays eminently easy reading."—Glasgow Herald.

"He talks freely, and always sensibly and to the point, and very often with more than ordinary wisdom."—The Times.

"The book ranks with Mr. Lecky's recent volumes."—National Review.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

With Frontispieces by ALBX. ASKHAM, a Reproduction of Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS' Portraits.

6 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per vol.; also half-morocco, 3s. net per vol.

Sold in Sets only.

"The volumes, which are neat, and so well bound that they open easily anywhere, are exceedingly pleasant to handle and read."

"Read him at once if you have hitherto refrained from that exhilarating and most varied entertainment; or, have you read him?—then read him again."—The Speaker.

"Constable's edition will long remain the best both for the general reader and the scholar."—Review of Reviews.

MADGE O' THE POOL

By WILLIAM SHARP.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"It would be hard to grant to anything more brilliant or more satisfactory amongst the writers of Mr. Sharp's generation."—Glasgow Herald.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
The Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon	249
St. William of Norwich	251
Sir M. E. Grant Duff's Diary	251
Canning's History in Fact and Fiction... ..	252
A Political Novel	253
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	253
POETRY:
A Treasury of Minor British Poetry—Verses— Margaret and Margarites	255
FICTION:
The Spoils of Poynton—The Green Book—The Yoke of Steel—In the Kingdom of Kerry	256
FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF NEW BOOKS	257
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XVI., Walter Savage Landor	258
THE NEW UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR AS MAN OF LETTERS	259
PARIS LETTER	260
NOTES AND NEWS	261
ANNOUNCEMENTS... ..	262
THE BOOK MARKET	262
DRAMA	263
MUSIC	263
SCIENCE	264
CORRESPONDENCE	265
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	265

REVIEWS.

EDWARD GIBBON.

The Autobiographies of Edward Gibbon.
Edited by John Murray.

Private Letters of Edward Gibbon. With an Introduction by the Earl of Sheffield.
Edited by Rowland E. Prothero. In 2
vols. (John Murray.)

IT is now a little more than 103 years since one of the greatest, if not the absolutely greatest, of Englishmen drew his last breath at 76, St. James's-street, having been born at Putney in 1737. The fame of Sir Isaac Newton is more widely diffused than that of Gibbon, and his name is more universally known; but we are inclined to rank the mental gifts of the great mathematician and astronomer, vast as, of course, they were, below those of the greatest historian who ever lived except, perhaps, Thucydides. It is, indeed, most wonderful that in the many years which have passed since Gibbon wrote the last words of the last page of his immortal history on the night of June 27, 1797, that history has neither been added to nor corrected, save as regards quite secondary details. But the charming volumes with which Lord Sheffield and Messrs. Murray and Prothero have now provided us owe their fascination to the rich and many-sided character of the personality they make thoroughly known for the first time—a personality, the oddities and small defects of which increase our interest, if they do not even increase our personal regard, for a man of whom every Englishman may indeed feel proud.

Almost all our readers, we feel sure, must have heard, if they have not read, that the well-known autobiography of Gibbon and his letters, edited and published in 1799 by his intimate friend the first Earl of Sheffield, was a compilation from six more or less fragmentary autobiographies which Gibbon had left behind him, and from a multitude of letters, parts of some of which had been in certain instances presented to the public as forming one single letter. Lord Sheffield was assisted in his task (executed with excellent judgment and much ingenuity and skill) by Lady Maria Holroyd, his eldest daughter, who subsequently became the first Lady Stanley of Alderley.

That first Lord Sheffield requested that his trustees and heirs should neither publish any more of Gibbon's writings nor allow them out of their possession, and these injunctions were so strictly obeyed by the second and third Earls, that no one was allowed to see them save Dean Milman, when editing the edition of the Decline and Fall published in 1842.

The centenary of Gibbon's death, however, again raised the question (which had been debated before) whether such an embargo should be perpetual. It was decided in the negative, and the cases containing the precious MSS. were again unlocked. No sooner had the discovery of the process by which Gibbon's autobiography had been concocted been made public, than a general desire was expressed to have the originals published in the form in which the historian had left them, and it was decided to gratify that desire. Lord Sheffield informs us that every piece contained in the work now published is printed exactly as Gibbon wrote it, "without suppression or emendation." Of his autobiographies, the parts now published for the first time are enclosed in rectangular brackets. Of the 647 letters edited by Mr. Prothero, the greater number now appear for the first time, while the portions previously published, by the first Lord Sheffield, are distinguished by asterisks.

Of Gibbon's six autobiographies, the earliest was written in 1788-89, and it extends down to 1761. Another, written a little later, comes down to 1772, while the latest and most perfect, written in 1792-93, was only brought down to 1753.

A weakly, sickly boy, he tells us:

"In the space of two years (1749-50), interrupted by danger and debility, I painfully climbed into the third form; and my riper age was left to acquire the beauties of the Latin and the rudiments of the Greek tongue. Instead of audaciously mingling in the sports, the quarrels, and the connexions of our little world, I was still cherished at home under the maternal wing of my aunt (Mrs. Porter), and my removal from Westminster long preceded the approach of manhood."

He was then placed with the Rev. Mr. Philip Francis at Esher, where he tells us in a passage now published for the first time:

"The experience of a few weeks was sufficient to discover that Mr. Francis's spirit was too lively for his profession; and while he indulged himself in the pleasures of London, his pupils were left idle at Esher in the custody of a Dutch usher of low manners and contemptible learning."

Thereupon his father took him to Oxford, where he matriculated as a gentleman commoner of Magdalen when not yet fifteen. Before he went there he was an omnivorous reader, though his appetite gradually subsided in "the Historic line" and "the Dynasties of Assyria and Egypt were," he says, "my top and cricket-ball."

His forcible description of the intellectual and moral torpor of Oxford in the originally published autobiography is familiar to most readers, but the following account of his earliest feelings there has not previously appeared.

"I entered," he says (p. 122), "on my new life at Magdalen College with surprise and satisfaction. These sentiments were naturally produced by my sudden promotion, before the age of fifteen, to the rank of a man; the general civility with which I was treated; the silk gown and velvet cap of a gentleman commoner; a decent allowance in my own disposal of a loose and dangerous credit; an elegant apartment of three rooms in the new buildings; the beauty of the walks and public edifices; and the key of the college library, which I might use or abuse without much interruption from the fellows of the Society."

His temporary conversion to Roman Catholicism, and return to Protestantism after having been sent to Switzerland by his father, need here be no more than referred to. It was at Lausanne that study laid the foundation of his future fame, as he himself declares (p. 137), adding:

"But in the life of every man of letters there is an era, from a level from whence he soars with his own wings to his proper height, and the most important part of his education is that which he bestows on himself."

At Lausanne he fell in love with Mlle. Curchod, but yielded to his father's command with sentiments he expressed in the oft-cited words, "I sighed as a lover, I obeyed as a son." We now for the first time (p. 155) read Gibbon's account of his return home as follows:

"My father's impatience for my return to England was not wholly of the disinterested kind. I have already hinted that he had been impoverished by his two sisters, and that his gay character and mode of life were less adapted to the acquisition than the expenditure of wealth; the honour of being chosen a member of the Old Club at White's had been dearly paid, and a more pernicious species of gaming, the contest for Southampton, exhausted his sickly finances. His retirement into Hampshire on my mother's death was coloured by a pious motive; some years of solitude allowed him to breathe, but it was only by his son's majority that he could be restored to the command of an entailed estate. The time of my recall had been so nicely computed that I arrived in London three days before I was of age; the priests and the altar had been prepared, and the victim was unconscious of the impending stroke. According to the forms and fictions of our law, I levied a fine and suffered a recovery; the entail was cut off; a sum of ten thousand pounds was raised on mortgage for my father's use, and he repaid the obligation by settling on me an annuity of three hundred pounds a year."

Twelve years after his father died, when his stepmother departed for Bath, while Gibbon removed himself and his books into his new house in Bentinck-street, Cavendish-square, where he resided for eleven years.

"The clear, untainted remains of my patrimony," he adds, "have been always sufficient to support the rank of a gentleman and to satisfy the desires of a philosopher. I had now obtained the solid comforts of life—a convenient, well-furnished house, a domestic table, half-a-dozen chosen servants, my own carriage, and all those decent luxuries whose value is the more sensibly felt the longer they are enjoyed."

But, as our readers know, from this house he had ultimately, from straitened means, to retire, returning for a time to Lausanne, but always being a welcome guest at his firm and faithful friend's residence at Sheffield Park. Holding for a time a seat in Parliament, though calling himself a Whig, he generally voted with the Tories, and gave a continuous, though silent, support to the war with our revolted colonies of North America.

Settled in Bentinck-street, he began, in 1773, the first volume of his great work, which it took him twenty-four years to complete. But we have no space for the superfluous task of describing so well known a life as that of Gibbon. For the rest we will confine ourselves to giving a few extracts from letters (now for the first time published) which may interest our readers, and serve to convey, more graphically than any remarks of ours, some characteristic traits of his very singular self-complacent, self-indulgent, and wonderfully industrious personality. As in the few we can give it is difficult to refer to many subjects, we select some which refer to his social experiences in France.

On February 12, 1763, he wrote to his stepmother his impressions of Parisian society at that period:

"Paris in most respects has fully answered my expectations. I have a number of very good acquaintances, which increase every day, for nothing is so easy as the making them here. Instead of complaining of the want of them I begin already to think of making a choice. Next Sunday, for instance, I have only three invitations to dinner. Either in the houses you are already acquainted, you meet with people who ask you to come and see them, or some of your friends offer themselves to introduce you. When I speak of these connexions I mean chiefly for dinner and the evening. Suppers as yet I am pretty much a stranger to, and I fancy shall continue so; for Paris is divided into two species, who have but little communication with each other. The one, who is chiefly connected with men of letters, dine very much at home, are glad to see their friends, and pass the evenings till about nine in agreeable and rational conversation. The others are the most fashionable, sup in numerous parties, and always play or rather game both before and after supper. You may easily guess which sort suits me best. Indeed, madam, we may say what we please of the frivolity of the French, but I do assure you that in a fortnight passed at Paris I have heard more conversation worth remembering, and seen more men of letters among the people of fashion, than I have done in two or three winters in London."

During his Italian tour he stopped at Venice in April, 1765, and perhaps so extraordinary an account of the Queen of the Adriatic was never penned as that which he thus wrote to his stepmother:

"Of all the towns in Italy, I am least satisfied with Venice. Objects which are only singular without being pleasing produce a momentary surprise, which soon gives way to satiety and disgust. Old and in general ill-built houses, ruined pictures, and stinking ditches dignified with the pompous denomination of canals, a fine bridge spoilt by two rows of houses upon it, and a large square decorated with the worst architecture I ever yet saw, and wonderful only in a place where there is more land than water. Such are the colours I should employ in my portrait of Venice."

At p. 146 of the first volume will be found some interesting notes by the editor, Mr. Prothero, in reference to the opening of the Pantheon, that place of mild delights in the middle of this century, but now appropriated by a well-known business firm.

By the year 1777 Gibbon's success in Parisian society was unmistakable, and he then and there met his old flame of Lausanne, now become Mme. Necker. Writing to Mr. J. B. Holroyd, he says of the Neckers:

"The reception I have met with from them very far surpassed my most sanguine expectations. I do not, indeed, lodge in their house (as it might excite the jealousy of the husband and procure me a lettre de cachet), but I live very much with them. . . . Mr. Walpole gave me an introduction to Mme. du Deffand, an agreeable young lady of eighty-two years of age, who has constant suppers and the best company in Paris. . . . I have met the D. de Choiseul at his particular request, dined by accident with Franklin, conversed with the Emperor [Joseph II.], been presented at Court, and gradually, or rather rapidly, I find my acquaintance spreading over the most valuable parts of Paris. . . . You may add to the pleasures of Society those of the spectacles and promenades, and you will find that I lead a very agreeable life; let me just condescend to observe that it is not extravagant. After decking myself out with silks and silver, the ordinary establishment of coach, lodgeing, servants, eating and pocket expenses does not exceed sixty pounds per month. Yet I have two footmen in handsome liveries behind my coach, and my apartment is hung with damask. . . . Let me just, in two words, give you an idea of my day. I am now going (nine o'clock) to the King's Library, where I shall stay till twelve. As soon as I am dressed I set out to dine with the Duke de Nivernois, shall go from thence to the French comedy into the Princess de Beauvon's loge grillée, and am not quite determined whether I shall sup at Mme. du Deffand's, Mme. Necker's, or the Sardinian embassadress's. Once more, Adieu. Do not be fond of showing my letters; the playful effusions of friendship would be construed by strangers as gross vanity."

Indeed, the self-consciousness and vanity of the historian is as conspicuous as it is amusing, and we confess we love him none the less for such naïve touches of poor Human Nature.

It was true, also, that he had cause for satisfaction. Mme. du Deffand was so pleased with him that she saw him almost every day, and wished he would stay in Paris for good. She declared also that he had socially le plus grand succès.

As might be expected, the rumblings of the coming revolution and its outburst were abhorrent to him. Writing to Lord Sheffield from Lausanne in December, 1789, he exclaims:

"The French nation had a glorious opportunity, but they have abused, and may lose their advantages. If they had been content with a liberal translation of our system, if they had respected the prerogatives of the crown, and the privileges of the nobles, they might have raised a solid fabric, on the only true foundation—natural aristocracy and a great country, &c."

In a letter to Gibbon from the Hon.

Maria Holroyd in November, 1792, there is a graphic description of the murder of the Archbishop of Arles and other clergy at the Carmes:

"On September 2, they went into the garden as usual to walk at five o'clock in the evening. They expressed their surprise at several large pits which had been digging for two or three days past. . . . Soon after they heard shouts, and some musket shots were fired into the garden. A number of National Guards, some Commissaires de Sections, and several Marseillois rushed in. The unhappy victims who were dispersed about the garden assembled under the walls of the church, not daring to enter, lest it should be polluted with blood. One who was behind the rest was shot dead. 'Point de coups de fusil,' said some of the chiefs of the assassins, thinking this death too merciful. A number of them called for the Archbishop of Arles and insisted that he should be given up to them; the priests all crowded round him and determined to defend him. The archbishop said 'Let me pass.' . . . He asked the eldest of the priests to give him absolution; he knelt to receive it, and when he rose advanced with his arms crossed on his breast towards the people. . . . At last one of the assassins struck off his cap with a pike; their fury returned when they saw respect once violated, and another struck him on the head with a sabre and laid open his scalp. The archbishop only said 'O mon Dieu!' and put his right hand to his eyes. A second blow cut off his hand; he repeated his exclamation and raised the other. A third stroke left him sitting, and a fourth extended him lifeless."

Space, to our great regret, only allows us to quote one more letter, written to Lord Sheffield from St. James's-street, on January 7, 1794. It was one of those previously published, but as it was the last he ever wrote, we think our readers will be glad to be able to peruse it here.

"This date says everything. I was almost killed between Sheffield-place and East Grinstead, by hard, frozen, long, and cross ruts that would disgrace the approach of an Indian Wigwam. The rest was something less painful; and I reached this place half dead, but not seriously feverish or ill. I found a dinner invitation from Lord Lucan; but what are dinners to me? I wish they did not know of my departure. I catch the flying post. What an effort! Adieu till Monday or Friday."

In less than ten days he died. Only twenty hours before his death he happened to fall into conversation on the probable duration of life, declaring that he thought himself good for another ten, if not twenty years. He dined on a wing of chicken, and drank three glasses of his favourite Madeira, after which he gradually became distressed with pain and some sickness. But when at seven in the morning his servant asked if he should send for the doctor he declined. About nine he wished to rise, but his valet persuaded him to wait the visit of his medical man, who found he was dying. After his servant had seen the doctor out, Gibbon's last recorded words were French, saying to his valet, "Pourquoi est-ce que vous me quittez?" To the last he preserved his senses and showed no sign of alarm or apprehension, and may not have suspected his end was near. The volumes of letters are a very mine of interesting and valuable information, and should find a place in the library of everyone who values either literature or history.

ST. WILLIAM OF NORWICH.

The Life and Miracles of St. William of Norwich. By Thomas of Monmouth. Now First Edited from the Unique MS., with an Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Augustus Jessopp, D.D., &c., and Montague Rhodes James, Litt.D., &c. (Cambridge: University Press.)

FOR many reasons this is a work of exceeding interest. A long vanished and important piece of mediæval hagiography, rich in matter of historic value, is here for the first time published, with a wealth of learned commentary and illustration, by two admirably accomplished scholars. The Life of St. William of Norwich, by the Norwich monk Thomas of Monmouth, was discovered in a collection of MSS. purchased nine years ago by the University Library of Cambridge. Now, the world was already well furnished with examples of saintly chronicles from the Middle Ages; and unless any newly discovered example show some touch of positive freshness and genius, or contain some portion of valuable information, the discovery, though doubtless welcome, is not of prime importance. But the legend of St. William has a profoundly sad importance: it gave form and substance, if it did not actually create, to anti-Semitism and Judenhetze; to Christian loathing and oppression of the Jew, as a fanatic of dark and bloody mind, who mingles the blood of Christian innocents with his sacrifices. It tells how, toward the middle of the twelfth century, William, a young boy, was ritually murdered by Norwich Jews: it narrates, with considerable power, the miraculous finding of his body, the proceedings against his murderers, the various evidence, the spreading fame of the story, the growth of a cult, the wonders that attended and extended it, the complete establishment in ecclesiastical and general belief of the whole dreadful legend. It is a very pictorial and dramatic tale, abounding in incidental sidelights upon mediæval life and thought; but the thing of primary importance is the fact that it is the first alleged case of Jewish ritual murder since patristic times, and that similar cases are alleged to have occurred from that century up to within the last ten years. True or false, the "martyrdom" of that boy at Norwich, seven hundred years ago, was the fertile source of innumerable like stories: truly in this instance sanguis martyris proved pestis Judæorum. Personally, we have no faith in these stories; but if any one should ask how it is possible for educated men of the present age to believe them we may refer him to an article in the Civiltà Cattolica for February, 1893, entitled La Morale Giudaica e il Mistero del Sanguis, which undoubtedly demonstrates that such stories, whatever we think of them, are not always malicious lies, nor even the rumours of ignorance and superstition, but sometimes resting upon evidence not intrinsically beneath contempt.

The "Priores's Tale" in Chaucer is the most memorable literary record of this belief: and instances are plentiful elsewhere. If one might be amused by anything connected with so dolorous a matter, it would be by certain phrases by Richard of Devizes in his chronicle. He tells us how, when London, some forty years after the Norwich murder, "began sacrificing the Jews to their father the devil," and other cities, "emulating the faith of the Londoners, dispatched their bloodsuckers to hell, with equal devotion, by a bloody death," yet "Winchester alone spared its vermin." Despite which stretch of charity, the Winchester Jews, a few years later, "anxious, after their own strange fashion, for the honour of their city, obtained for themselves a wide reputation for having made a martyr of a boy at Winchester; and though, maybe, the deed was never done, there was much evidence of it." The London massacre began on King Richard's coronation day, and, says William of Newburgh, "evidently presaged the promotion of Christianity in his days"; and his accounts of the contagion of cruelty throughout the land are ghastly beyond words. But these outrages, not unknown even now, are easily explicable; the difficult point is the origin of the definite and little varied belief in the supposed Jewish sacrifice of Christian children at a solemn function, and as a prescribed detail of their rites. Is there any explanation beyond that of credulity and malice going hand in hand? Is the accusation as baseless a myth as the mediæval belief on the Continent that all Englishmen had tails? There is one passage in Thomas of Monmouth which suggests a partial clue. One Theobald, a Cambridge Jew converted to Christianity, and a monk at Norwich, told Thomas

"that the Jews had a written tradition that in order to regain their freedom and their fatherland they must sacrifice a Christian every year. In order to select their victim, the leading Jews of Spain assembled annually at Narbonne, where they were exceedingly influential, and cast lots for all the countries of the world where any Jews lived."

In 1144, said Theobald, the lot had fallen on Norwich. Now, the Spanish Jews long enjoyed the fame of being magicians, sorcerers, adepts in occult arts, and the reality of being learned in the wisdom of the Arabians—their medical, physical astronomical lore—no less than in their own Rabbinical traditions. "Toledo," says Michelet in his superbly appalling book, La Sorcière,

"seems to have been the Holy City of the sorcerers, countless in Spain. Their relations with the Moors, so civilised, and with the Jews, who were very learned, and, as agents of the royal exchequer, then masters of Spain, had given the sorcerers an higher culture, and they formed at Toledo a sort of university."

Gerbert, afterwards Pope Sylvester, studied there, and was generally suspected of black magic. In the fourteenth century Toledo was believed to be the headquarters of a secret conspiracy for the extermination of Christendom; and at Chillon many Jews were tortured into confessing that they had received a poisonous powder with that object. In the early days of the Spanish Inquisition Jews were burned at Avila for using the heart of a Christian child, stolen from Toledo, together with a consecrated wafer, in a magical spell directed against the Inquisitors. The use of human blood, the sacrifice of a pure victim, have always been asserted to enter into the due and effective performance of the black, or devil's magic; and mediæval Christendom, believing the Jews to be an accursed race, the spawn of Satan, would naturally credit them with going all lengths in that direction. It seems possible at the least that the charge of ritual murder sprang from the reputation of the Jews, especially in Spain, their chief centre of influence, for magic arts, into which that practice enters, rather than from the Christian hatred of Judaism pure and simple; it was perhaps as Jews plus sorcerers that they fell under this suspicion. In that case, just as the horrors alleged against the Templars were no reproach to Christendom at large, so the alleged iniquities of Jews given to sorcery and witchcraft would not discredit the House of Israel itself; and, since the practice of sorcery was a fact, it may well be that some cases of "ritual murder" upon the part of Jews mingling magic with their Judaism did positively happen, and led to the widespread false belief that Judaism itself was responsible for them.

But that William of Norwich was thus murdered appears highly incredible upon a study of the evidence. Thomas of Monmouth does not inspire respect, and the bulk of his arguments are puerile. The only thing clear is that William met with a violent death; all else is dubious, and we wander among the shadows of conjecture. Yet it is well to bear in mind that nothing is impossible to fanaticism, however horrible and repugnant; from Orthodox Russia to Catholic Ireland we hear in our own days of tragedies not less monstrous in their savagery and absurdity, than anything alleged in mediæval times. They come of a bastard or illicit mixture of religious faith and aboriginal, primæval, immemorial superstitions, old as the race itself. It is rash to assert that in England of the twelfth century any wild and fearful act of bloody superstition was per se impossible upon the part of either Jew or Christian, and it were no less rash to charge it upon either Judaism or Christianity. In the instance before us we can but conclude that we have insufficient evidence upon which to form a safe judgment. Apart from its special point of saddening interest, this recovered work is full of lively and enjoyable matter. Thomas has plenty of unconscious humour, and tells his tale with a pleasingly pedantic pomp of style, incurably given to edification, and greedy of marvels. For the whole volume, its careful text, excellent translation, and admirable introductory essays, we are duly grateful to Dr. James and Dr. Jessopp.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF'S DIARY.

Notes from a Diary: 1851-1872. By the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, G.C.S.I. In 2 vols. (Murray.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF is one of those virtuous men who keep a diary; and one of those charitable men who bestow the results upon a curious public. He has, in fact, been a diarist for the considerable space of fifty years, and we gather that the two volumes now before us are only the prelude to what he intends ultimately to give. They cover a period during which the writer, first as one of the "coming men" of Liberalism, and then as a subordinate member in Mr. Gladstone's Government of 1868, was very much in the thick of things; in the full stream of affairs, and on the fringes of literature also. He has rubbed up against most of the notable people of his day, not in England only, but also upon the Continent; for he always made it part of his ambition as a statesman to rank among the well-informed upon foreign affairs. He was one of the original contributors to the Saturday Review, though he is careful to tell us that the politics of that journal were never his; and he appears to have been familiar with most of the scholars and diplomatists of Europe, and to have belonged to all the best London clubs and societies, including the famous and ill-fated Metaphysical Society. Of this he tells us how, after an early meeting, Sir John Simeon rushed up to one of the members as he came away and asked, with an appearance of great empressement—"Well, is there a God?" "Oh, yes," was the reply, "we had a very good majority." With such opportunities it is natural that Sir M. E. Grant Duff should have much that is interesting to record. Unfortunately, up to the end of 1872, his diary, except when he was travelling, was confined to brief and often formal jottings; and, therefore, the fragments here given, composed as they are without much regard for style, are disappointingly scrappy and impersonal. In the process of working them over for publication, however, it might have been decent at least to eliminate the frequent "and which," a construction which, though probably natural to the sleepy diarist, is hardly worthy the dignity of print. Of course, it is only fragments that Sir M. E. Grant Duff gives us. He has, wisely enough, omitted all that relates to public affairs, wishing to make this book a record less of the strenuous than of the serene hours of his life, of its hobbies, its holidays, and its friendships. He also permits himself, what would, he agrees, have been indefensible if he had been writing his memoirs, "to ignore every disagreeable person and thing" he has come across. This is a resolve which the moralist can only approve. The mere casual and disinterested reader, however, will probably grumble that he rather prefers a dash of cayenne pepper in his repast. But this time good-nature wins the day. The severest thing said about an individual is probably Mr. Aubrey de Vere's witty criticism, that listening to F. D. Maurice's sermons was like eating pea-soup with a fork; and the severest thing about a class the late Lord Bowen's epigram on the clerical element in the Oxford Convocation. Someone had suggested that after coming up in such numbers a few days before to vote against the improvement of the curriculum, the country clergy would hardly be at the expense of coming up again so soon to vote against the proposed increase in Jowett's salary of £40 as Regius Professor of Greek. "Trust them for that," said Bowen, "they'll think that education is a bad thing, but that justice is a worse, and they'll come in scores." Which, of course, they did. Sir M. E. Grant Duff's circle of acquaintance was a wide one, both in England and abroad, and he formed the excellent habit of noting down such good stories as were going. With one realm, indeed, that of Bohemia, he has but little to do. His taste in poetry, judging by the passages he quotes, is imperfect, and although he was once present upon what must have been a memorable occasion when Bright and William Morris were invited to meet each other at dinner, for the most part his acquaintance with poets and men of letters generally was pretty well confined to such as, like Matthew Arnold, were to be found in the salons of the great. On one occasion he found Swinburne unexpectedly in Jowett's rooms, and his expression of surprise at the choice of such an Alcibiades by the academic Socrates is comic. One wonders whether this was the famous interview during which Swinburne ventured to correct the Master's Greek. Of philosophers, historians, and the tribe of dons we hear more. Hayward, the forgotten raconteur and man about town, told him of Nassau Senior that once when the poet Moore was singing at Bowood he was annoyed by the scratching of the pen with which Senior was writing, and stopped. "Pray, go on," said Senior, "you don't interrupt me." And it is a good mot at the expense of Mr. Gladstone that the real object of his voluminous writings about Homer was to induce his wife to call upon Helen! In 1860 Sir M. E. Grant Duff quotes a humorous version of the battle-royal between Huxley and Bishop Samuel Wilberforce over evolution at the British Association meeting at Oxford of that year.

"According to Monckton Milnes, Huxley asserted 'that the blood of guinea-pigs crystallises in rhombohedrons.' Thereupon the bishop sprang to his feet and declared that 'such notions led directly to Atheism!'" This was the son of that Wilberforce whose dying words were gravely asserted by Senior to have been: "I think I would like some gravy out of that pie." An even more famous historical scene is described apropos of Sir James Hudson, who was the messenger sent to Rome after Sir Robert Peel when Lord Melbourne resigned, and who had much difficulty in finding him:

"It was to this chase that Disraeli alluded in the phrase which sent the House of Commons into such an uncontrollable fit of laughter:

"When the hurried Hudson rushed through the chambers of the Vatican with the keys of St. Peter in one hand and —"

"Here the House lost all command of itself, and the orator sat down, saying: 'The time will come when you shall hear me.'

"It was Lord Campbell who, being then in the House of Commons, said to Mr. Disraeli: 'Mr. Disraeli, when the impatience of the House prevented you finishing that most admirable speech, you had just mentioned that Mr. Hudson had the keys of St. Peter in one hand; would you indulge my curiosity by telling me what he had in the other?'" the graphic story of Hudson's mission; but, unfortunately, he, too, forgets to tell us what were the contents of the other hand. We confess to sharing Lord Campbell's curiosity on the subject.

Whereupon Sir M. E. Grant Duff narrates

Many pages of the diary are devoted to an account of several journeys upon the Continent, journeys in which the thirsty search after general information characteristic of Sir M. E. Grant Duff's type of mind is agreeably variegated by botanical and geological expeditions. And from these travels the young statesman brings back a polyglot budget of good things. At Florence he hears the story of the Bishop of Perugia, who has a nephew, and whose nephew, staying out too late at night, explains that he had been at the marriage supper of one of his friends.

"The bishop, flying into a passion, said that marriage suppers were very bad things. The young man, thinking it would be a telling argument, suggested that his right reverend uncle must have forgotten that Christ himself went to a marriage supper at Cana in Galilee; whereupon the old man blurted out: 'Primo chi sa se è vero, e poi non è la piu bella cosa che ha fatto Nostro Signor!'"

At Dresden the travellers fell in with Retsch, the artist, who, when showing some drawings to one of the party, pointed to a figure and said: "Das ist Christus—Sie haben wohl von Christus gehört!" It was Kinglake who, speaking of the narrative of Sédan by Napoleon III., which appeared in the newspapers, said: "It read like nothing but an account of the 1st of September by an escaped partridge"; and against this may be set the jest of the French diplomat who, when dining at the Austrian Embassy in Rome, had his attention drawn to some flaw in a representation of the Imperial eagle: "Ma foi, c'est assez bien pour un oiseau de passage."

Sir M. E. Grant Duff is not a book to go into a wild enthusiasm over; but it is the agreeable record of a shrewd, well-informed, slightly pedantic man. We have heard it suggested that the writer is the Private Diarist of the Cornhill. On the evidence of these volumes we think it incredible; but if it is so, then he must have learnt many felicities and not a few humanities since 1872.

CANNING'S HISTORY IN FACT AND FICTION.

History in Fact and Fiction: a Literary Sketch. By the Hon. Albert S. G. Canning. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Those who have read Mr. Canning's previous works will know pretty well what to expect in the present volume. They will find historical subjects treated in a manner agreeable and popular enough, if somewhat light and superficial.

As in several of his former publications, Mr. Canning dwells specially on topics connected with religious history. He writes from the standpoint of one imbued with the tolerant ideas of the nineteenth century, who from his superior position can calmly look down upon the furious bigotry and fanaticism of past ages. His sentiments are no doubt most admirable and unexceptionable, though sometimes we may be disposed to think there is a little too much iteration of modern commonplaces. Such remarks as the following are no doubt true enough, but they can hardly be said to tell us anything we did not know before:

"When considered in a calm, impartial spirit, there seems, indeed, little if any cause for the calamitous hatred for centuries maintained, even justified, by Jews, Christians, and Mohammedans against each other solely owing to religious differences. Their animosity can only be explained by the obvious fact that all had formed an idea of the Creator's character and policy towards mankind utterly opposed to His description as transmitted by their own prophets themselves."

In this portion of his work Mr. Canning has made a very exaggerated statement, which shows that he cannot have very carefully studied the history of the French Revolution:

"At the close of the last century the French Revolution, denouncing all religions, including Christianity, proclaimed a determined, thorough atheism, which went far beyond the expressed or even implied doubts of Voltaire and other sceptical writers, whom it professed to admire and follow."

On this point there is much popular misconception, in which our author evidently shares. It may be hard to say precisely what is meant by such rather vague expressions as "the French Revolution denouncing Christianity and proclaiming atheism," &c., which are certainly not very good English. It is certain, however, that nearly all the prominent leaders of the Revolution at any of its stages were deists of some shade of opinion or other, and would utterly have disclaimed the name of atheists. The only organised body to which the epithet might with justice be applied is the faction of the Hébertists which for a time dominated the Paris municipality. It is, however, utterly incorrect to call the central power, at any period of the Revolution, "an atheistical government." In speaking of the progress of religious toleration in modern times, our author remarks that "within the last few years Jews have been Lord Mayors of London and members of Parliament, to which last distinction even Parsees from India have recently attained, taking their oaths of allegiance on the Zendavesta, the Bible of the ancient Persian kings of a remote, almost prehistoric period."

Mr. Canning's love of the picturesque has carried him away here. It was said, indeed, that a Parsee member of Parliament did bring with him a copy of the Zendavesta, on which he offered to be sworn, but certainly no such oath could legally be taken.

The latter portion of this book reviews some English writers of historical fiction. Mr. Canning has devoted a considerable amount of space to the historical novels of Scott, on which he bestows an amount of praise which certainly cannot be said to be exaggerated on the whole. However, he decidedly overestimates the merits of some of these romances as faithful reproductions of the past. He seems still to imagine that Ivanhoe presents a generally accurate picture of Richard I.'s reign, and to be oblivious of the overwhelming mass of evidence direct and indirect which proves the supposed sharp opposition between "Saxons" and "Normans" to be purely imaginary at the close of the twelfth century.

Unfortunately, too, we cannot by any means accept the portrait of Saladin in The Talisman with the confidence our author accords to it. The real Saladin was an Oriental despot, capable, no doubt, of acts of generosity at times, but on other occasions as ready to indulge in wholesale massacres of prisoners as any others of his kind. But certainly Saladin does not deserve to be compared with such a monster of perfidy and cruelty as Mohammed the Conqueror, of whom our author strangely says that "some acts of clemency towards the Greeks, together with his compassionate exclamation when entering the captured Constantinople, rather recall Scott's picture of Saladin." It is difficult to see any particular feelings of compassion in Mohammed's theatrical quotation of a few lines of Persian poetry, and the unfortunate inhabitants of Constantinople were not much benefited by this little ebullition of sentiment on the sultan's part.

As for his "acts of clemency," they are certainly not conspicuous on the surface of the tragic story, and cannot be said to amount to more than this, that he did not torture and murder everyone whom he might so have treated.

A POLITICAL NOVEL.

Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland. By Olive Schreiner. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS book, in its directness, its actuality, its intention of personal invective, is strikingly different from anything else Olive Schreiner has done. Call it romance or call it sermon, pamphlet or political manifesto, as you will, it is at least an extraordinarily powerful bit of writing and extraordinarily true, that is with the truth of personal conviction. It is a weapon forged in the white heat of generous indignation, an impassioned protest against the exploitation of South Africa by capital, the selling of blood for gold. That is to say, it is an indictment of the whole method of the British South Africa Company in Mashonaland, and in particular of the ruling spirit of that Company, Mr. Cecil Rhodes. This is not the place to consider the truth of the indictment, nor even the doubtful appropriateness of its publication just at the present moment: we are concerned only with the effective form in which it is put. The design is a simple one. Peter Halket, a trooper in the Chartered Company's service, has lost his way on the veldt. As he sits by his fire on a koppie there comes to him out of the night a Stranger clad in a loose linen garment, whom he does not at first recognise for Christ. The Stranger puts things to Halket as they really are; and the coarse, unthinking Englishman is converted. He surrenders his dream of shares, and loses his life in the attempt to save a wounded nigger from official murder. The situation is a very difficult one, and the author handles it with an apparent audacity which conceals a real reverence. The opening chapters are by far the finest. Peter Halket's confidences about his relations to native women and the ideals and working of the Company are contrasted with the pitiful silence or rare words of the still unrevealed Christ, and give opportunity for some passages of splendid irony.

"One of the Soudanese Rhodes brought with him from the north, I suppose?" said Peter, still eying him curiously.

"No; Cecil Rhodes has had nothing to do with my coming here," said the stranger."

Then Peter learns that he is speaking to a Jew.

"Ah," said Peter, "that's why I wasn't able to make out at first what nation you could be of; your dress, you know—." Then he stopped, and said, "Trading here, I suppose? Which country do you come from; are you a Spanish Jew?"

"I'm a Jew of Palestine."

"Ah!" said Peter, "I haven't seen many from that part yet. I came out with a lot on board ship; and I've seen Barnato and Beit; but they're not very much like you. I suppose it's coming from Palestine makes the difference."

The effect would have been more dramatic if the conversion of Peter Halket had been brought about more by the personality of Christ and less by His argument. As it is, one has to face a longueur in the middle of the book, where the author returns to the nebulousness and imperfect sense of form which marked her earlier work. But the conclusion, when Peter Halket testifies and meets his death, and once more "There is no God in Mashonaland," is again vigorously and pointedly told. There are defects of art enough and to spare in the book; but when all is said, it breathes a spirit of humanity, of sincerity, of unfaltering righteousness, which is rare enough in contemporary literature. Facit indignatio versum.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Life of Vice-Admiral Sir George Tryon, K.C.B. By Rear-Admiral C. C. Penrose Fitzgerald. (Blackwood.)

THE bulk of Sir George Tryon's journals and memoranda went down with him in the ill-starred Victoria, and Admiral Fitzgerald has been poorly furnished with the ordinary material of the biographer. But the man's life was lived before men, his doings are recorded in the archives of a public department, and the circumstances of his death will not fade from the memory of this generation. Indeed, but for the catastrophe which closed it Sir George Tryon's life would never have been written. For, excellent officer and fine seaman as he was, opportunities for winning distinction were wanting to him. He served aboard the royal yacht, his first command was the first British ironclad, he directed a fleet in the naval manœuvres, he convoyed the Prince of Wales to India—it is not very exciting.

But we know what is in store—the fate that awaits this officer with his record of long service, his medals, his complimentary letters, and the rest; and the very trivialities and occasional irrelevancies with which Admiral Fitzgerald has been compelled to eke out his scanty material make the dramatic irony more pungent. The 22nd of June, 1893, is always ahead, and the order which sent 400 men to their death. Most readers will turn at once to Admiral Fitzgerald's last chapters; and, though he has nothing new to tell, nor any certain explanation to offer, they will find a very clear and intelligible account of the manœuvre attempted and the catastrophe which ensued. You have the unvarnished tale of Commander Hawkins-Smith, navigating officer of the Victoria, and a letter from Capt. Blackenbury, who commanded the Edinburgh, the second ship in the second division; you have the conclusions of the court-martial; and, finally, you have the clear, straightforward judgment of Admiral Fitzgerald himself. Needless to say, the Life is written in a tone of deep respect and sincere affection. Besides its interest as an unconscious work of art, the book is valuable as a history of the naval progress of the last forty years—years which have seen more far-reaching changes in shipbuilding and navigation than any previous period since the launch of the first coracle.

* * *

Climbs in the Dolomites. By Leone Sinigaglia. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is a translation of Signor Sinigaglia's lively account of his climbs in the mountains round Cortina. They are currently known as the Dolomites of Val d'Ampezzo; but a geological purist might challenge their right to be so closely associated with M. Dolomieu. Signor Sinigaglia's conviction that climbing is a good in itself, quite apart from its object, is positively refreshing; and in his descriptions he hits a happy mean between callous indifference and a too sensitive appreciation of danger. A few well-known climbs, such as the Kleine Zinne and the Hoher Gaisl, are described; and several new and difficult ascents, like those of the Croda da Lago by the North Ridge and by the west face. A similar ascent of the Monte Cristallo shows that by taking thought it is possible to find a very difficult way up a very easy mountain. Signor Sinigaglia was the climber who in 1890 was caught in the terrible storm in the hut on the Italian face of the Matterhorn, during the descent from which Bersagliier Carrel died from exhaustion. The story is a pathetic one, as Carrel, after saving the lives of his party by his consummate skill and knowledge, died, as it were, in the moment of victory. A little iron cross now marks the spot on the Alp where he died after having done his duty, in the true spirit of Sir Richard Greville, of "the little Revenge." The story is familiar to mountaineers, but bears retelling, and is retold by Mr. Garwood in the preface. The book is excellently translated by Miss Alice Vialls, though there are one or two trifling slips, as when in a note we are told that the Kletterschuhe or Scarpe da Gatto, so largely used throughout this region, are manufactured at Monaco, a statement which, though quite true in an Italian mouth, would certainly surprise the excellent Bavarian who makes them. The illustrations from photographs are very good indeed, particularly the views of the Drei Zinnen from the south, and of the Croda da Lago from the west.

* * *

The Life and Works of Robert Burns. Edited by Robert Chambers. Revised by William Wallace. Vol. IV. (Chambers.)

DR. CHAMBERS' early prefaces to his "Burns" seem to show that his arrangement of letters, memoir, and text, adopted by Currie, before him, originated from a suggestion of Cunningham's. It is an arrangement which must have added greatly to the labours of Mr. Wallace in the excellent "revision" of Chambers here brought to a close: for he has been enabled to utilise, and thus compelled to assign to its correct places, a mass of material which in Chambers' day had to be left untouched. The poetical text followed by Chambers was that of the 1794 edition—the latest issued in the poet's lifetime. Burns was, of all poets, the most addicted to changing his mind (recall the vicissitudes of "Scots wha' hae"!); and his various corrigenda are recorded by Mr. Wallace, for the most part (and wisely), in an appendix. Some fifty poems and about sixty letters not included in Chambers' are used by Mr. Wallace: and as the chronology of Chambers is freely corrected, they are a little troublesome to identify. Mr. Wallace has not shrunk from either the labour or responsibility of thorough revision. Some documents "cut" by Chambers are given more fully, from no other apparent reason than a piety which would not suffer any line of Burns to see corruption. In many places, however, vague notes of Chambers as to persons and places are amplified, with evidences of untiring industry. Mr. Wallace is often able (without blame) to give names where, even as late as 1850, Chambers had to print a —. Many alterations are critical. On p. 23 (note) Chambers calls Lowe's "The moon had climbed the highest hill" a "beautiful and well-known ballad." Mr. Wallace strikes out "beautiful"; but we agree with Chambers. Where the latter says that the impulsive, irritable, wayward temper of Burns is shown in a passage of Syme's narration, Mr. Wallace substitutes the remark that Syme exaggerated, and cuts out a letter to Miss Craik, quoted by Chambers as illustrative of them. Mr. Wallace's industry and discretion are, the former always, the latter very nearly always, unimpeachable.

* * *

Shakespeare an Archer. By William Lawes Ruston. (Liverpool: Lea & Nightingale.)

THERE is nothing to alarm in this slim volume. The author does not batter us with arguments to show that Shakespeare spent his time shooting in Finsbury Fields while someone else wrote his plays in Blackfriars. He is merely struck with the abundance of archery terms, phrases, and metaphors in Shakespeare's plays, and he is persuaded that Shakespeare shared in what was then a popular pastime, and that he was deeply versed in Roger Ascham's Toxophilus. What the Compleat Angler is to angling and literature Toxophilus is to literature and archery. Mr. Rushton takes Toxophilus and the Plays and bases his conclusions on a study of parallel passages. A typical instance, none the worse for having attracted Dr. Johnson, is one from the "Merchant of Venice." Says Salarino to Antonio: "Believe me, sir, had I such a venture . . . I should be still plucking the grass to know where sits the wind." In Toxophilus Shakespeare had perhaps read:

"And thys waye I used in shootynge at those markes. When I was in the mydde way betwixt the markes whyche was an open place, there I take a feather or a lyttle lighte grasse, and so well as I coulede, learned how the wynde stode."

Again, in an argument which, though short, is too long to give here, Mr. Rushton makes use of the passage about "old Double" in the second part of Henry IV. Shallow, it will be remembered, says of this Double:

"Jesu! Jesu! dead! a' drew a good bow. . . . Dead! a' would have clapped i' the clout at twelve score; and carried you a forehead shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see."

The author contends, on technical lines, that Shakespeare's boast on behalf of Double—namely, that he shot a heavy arrow 290 yards point blank, "right afore him," was not likely to have been made by any but a practical archer. These are but two of a hundred or so points and parallels by which Mr. Rushton leads us to his first, and final, proposition. This he states reasonably:

"I think that archery was Shakespeare's favourite exercise . . . and that when he lived in London he often shot at the Butts, the Clout, and at Rovers, with Ben Jonson, Drayton, Hemmings, Condell, Phillips, and other friends and fellow-actors, in Finsbury Fields and on various shooting grounds which are near at hand."

It is a pleasant picture; and this book is at least calculated to win our modern archers to Shakespeare, and Shakespeareans to archery.

* * *

The History of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Newcastle-upon-Tyne (1793-1896). By Dr. Robert Spence Watson. (Walter Scott.)

THE Newcastle-on-Tyne "Lit. and Phil." was burnt down on the very night on which its members celebrated its hundredth year with a joyous combination of lecture and dance. That was just three years ago. Now the "Lit. and Phil." is itself again, and the history of its 103 years of existence, written by Dr. Robert Spence Watson, fills this portly octavo of nearly four hundred pages. What Dr. Watson has really given us (his task meant nothing less) is a retrospect of the whole literary, scientific, and social progress of the "canny toon" during the last century. To state this is to relieve ourselves of the duty to summarise the work. Newcastle readers must find its chapters and portraits intimately interesting, and there is much that appeals to a wider circle in a volume in which we meet the Stephensons, and discover Bewick like a modern Durer, wood-cutting his way to fame under the shadow of the castle which William Rufus set on the Tyne banks. The book is sauced with anecdote. In the chapter in which he relates the beginnings and growth of the Society's library Dr. Watson tells with some gusto how the battle waged round the question of admitting Don Juan to the bookshelves. Comte's Philosophy was forbidden for many years, and though the library is now well supplied with fiction, yet its first novels, which happened to be the "Waverley," were admitted only when a majority who would not buy them were over-ruled by a majority who would not refuse them as a gift. Dr. Watson's chapter on lectures that have been delivered at the "Lit. and Phil." contains a good story of a long-winded, short-sighted lecturer and a dwindling audience. To stop him by open protest no one dared, but a pawky son of the Tyne gradually turned the gas lower and lower, and so won the release of himself and his fellow sufferers.

* * *

The Historical Geography of the Holy Land.
By George Adam Smith, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

We are not surprised that a third edition of this work has been called for. It deals with its subject fairly exhaustively and quite popularly; and it combines close observation with a restrained eloquence which carries the reader along. In committing this edition to the press Dr. Smith makes an alteration in one of his appendices. Yielding to the arguments of Prof. Ramsay and Mr. W. E. Crum, he has modified the strong contrast which he had previously drawn between Pagan and Christian epitaphs found on the east of Jordan. Dr. Smith had read the inscription οὐδὲς ἀθάνατος as meaning "nobody immortal," and had limited its occurrence to Pagan tombstones. Prof. Ramsay doubts both these conclusions, and thinks that the phrase occurs mostly on Christian tombs, and that it probably means "no one is free from death." A parallel Coptic phrase, "There is not any deathless," has been found in four instances, cited by Mr. W. E. Crum in the ACADEMY of January 19, 1895, and "both Prof. Ramsay and Mr. Crum think it probable that the phrase was borrowed from Pagans by Christians." In admitting that the distinction which he had drawn was too strong, Dr. Smith adds:

"All the same, as I have indicated, the Roman epitaphs seem entirely without hope; the Greek are at the best ambiguous; the Christian probably put a new meaning into the phrases they borrowed from the Pagans; and they do contain certain positive elements of which the Pagan are devoid."

We need not refer at any length to the general scope of Dr. Smith's work. It embodies every important result of the explorations conducted by the Western nations in the last twenty years.

POETRY.

A Treasury of Minor British Poetry. Selected by J. Churton Collins. (Edward Arnold.)

MR. CHURTON COLLINS'S aim in this anthology—and a very laudable aim it is—has been to eschew the beaten track of compilers of anthologies, and fill a volume with the fine, yet little known, poems which remain after the cream of English song has been skimmed. In this handsome volume he has undoubtedly succeeded in presenting to readers many exquisite poems for which they would search in vain in other collections. Campion's Silent Music cannot quite be so described, for it has appeared in Mr. Palgrave's Golden Treasury; but Mr. Collins has done well to extend, by giving it a place in his own collection, the knowledge of that lovely poem—one of the extremely few successful examples of a poem in unrhymed lyric metre. It is to be regretted, though, that he has done the metre injustice by omitting in the second line the word thy before the final word.

"Sing thou smoothly with thy beautie's," it should read. The sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, as might be expected, have been Mr. Collins's happiest hunting-ground. He has drawn much on the song-writers, whose works have lately for the first time been carefully edited and reprinted. Here, for example, dipping into this part of the anthology at random, is a lyric by the little known poet Nicholas Breton, which is a delightfully dainty example of that pastoral vein in which the Elizabethans are matchless:

"PHILLIDA AND CORYDON.

"In the merry month of May,
In a morn by break of day,
Forth I walked by the wood-side,
Whenas May was in his pride:
There I spied all alone,
Phillida and Corydon.
Much ado, there was, God wot,
He would love and she would not.
She said never man was true,
He said, None was false to you,
He said, he had loved her long,
She said, Love should have no wrong,
Corydon would kiss her then.
She said, Maids must kiss no men,
Till they did for good and all:
Then she made the shepherd call
All the heavens to witness truth,
Never loved a truer youth.
Thus with many a pretty oath,
Yea and nay, and faith and troth,
Such as silly shepherds use
When they will not love abuse,
Love which had been long deluded,
Was with kisses sweet concluded.
And Phillida with garlands gay,
Was made the lady of the May."

Mr. Collins, by the way, puts a full-stop after "love abuse"; which clearly leaves both sentence and sense unconcluded. We are glad to see that he gives specimens from that fine poet, Drummond of Hawthornden. F. Davison, another of the song-writers, is also represented, together with such new names (new, that is, in anthologies) as Constable, Joshua Sylvester, George Gascoigne, and J. Hagthorpe. This last is, we confess, a name new even to us. In the section devoted to the seventeenth century it is most gratifying to find Cowley's "Hymn to Light." So far as we know, it has been given in no anthology before; and has therefore been out of reach of all who could not afford Grosart's expensive reprint of Cowley. It is incomparably the finest of Cowley's odes. Plentiful sprinkling of cold conceits there is, as where is there not in Cowley? The metre also is an unhappy choice; and even where the matter is good the diction has a knack of falling below the level of lyric felicity. But the poem contains imagery worthy of a great poet, such as—

"Thou, Scythian-like, dost round thy lands above
The sun's gilt tent for ever move; " and some lines in which image and expression are alike exquisite. We are sorry, however, to see that Mr. Collins, in a laudable endeavour to compact the poem by the omission of weak stanzas, has been ill-advised enough to omit one of the boldest and most beautiful images it contains:

"The violet, Spring's little infant, stands
Girt with thy purple swaddling-bands."

But the loveliest lines in the hymn he has happily retained: we will not rob it of its jewel by quoting them. In the section devoted to the eighteenth, and even in that devoted to the nineteenth century, Mr. Collins has, we think, been less successful. If this dreary waste of platitudes is all the minor poets of the eighteenth century could yield, it would have been better had that century gone unrepresented, save for a few such things as the extracts from Smart's "Song to David."

LISA WILSON dedicates her Verses (Bliss, Sands & Co.) "to the sweet and gracious memory of Christina G. Rossetti, who honoured me with the name of friend." The verses, which are mostly religious, are in the manner of Miss Rossetti; and even where they are frankly love-songs they have a whiff of that aroma of heaven which made the perfume of all that Miss Rossetti wrote, even as a worldling. Of "My Lady's Beauty," for example, Lisa Wilson sings:

"All beauty pales before her, for her soul
Is beautiful, and looks forth from her eyes
In beauteous guise.
I needs must love her; yea, she hath my whole Heart's worship; and she knows it not, nor will—
Until, until She guesses it in heaven. Then she will smile,
And love me too. Cannot I wait a little while?"

The same note runs through Margaret and Margarites, by Clara S. Dickins (Sampson Low, Marston & Co.). It is a note with which criticism has not much to do—it is itself an echo of what others have sung more to the purpose; but an echo is not necessarily an offence; and where a poet cannot originate we are at least thankful to him for reproducing after models to which belongs a beauty that is still all its own.

FICTION.

The Spoils of Poynton. By Henry James. (Heinemann.)

THE works of Mr. Henry James are a series of exquisite disappointments. To say that they are exquisite is to say what all know. Each phrase is sought out, and each shade of character finely observed—have not many reviewers said it? He is admirable in his cleverness, his conscientiousness, and his right self-respect. He seeks the phrase, but he is never the fool of the phrase; no bright and alluring collocation of words, like some dancing light, has ever misled him. He does not go out with his gun potting at the general public—has never brought down his brace of tall curates with the two volumes fired in rapid succession—and they make bigger bags in the Crockett cabbage-plot. Mr. Henry James writes for the few, and belongs to the very few. It is, indeed, almost a pity that so many dunces have been banged, bullied, and frightened into saying that they like the work of Mr. Henry James, but that he is really too subtle. It is a pity, because, in the first place, no dunce ever liked the work of Mr. Henry James; and, in the second place, because the trouble with Mr. Henry James is, that he is not subtle enough. For instance, he seems to have feared at times that his style wanted warmth, geniality, spontaneity; and, thus fearing, he gives us an occasional "didn't" for "did not." This is not subtle, and it misses its effect. His heroes and heroines, again, take that course of action which best satisfies good taste and feeling. But, though rejected, the other course is considered. They deliberate. They choose. They are painfully anxious to have the good approval of everybody. Their most spirited action is discounted by nervousness and long self-communion. We find ourselves liking them less than we ought to like them; they are all right, but they have to take so much trouble to be all right. Mr. Henry James is subtle enough to work out the difficult sum correctly; but not subtle enough to rub out the working on his slate, and leave only the effective answer. His characters are not marionettes; they do live, and move, and have their being, but they know all the time that Mr. Henry James is looking; they are not sufficiently disengaged and projected.

If he were half as good nobody would mind, and six lines of stereotyped approval (for he would still be good) would be his portion. But he has a point of view, an insight, a right judgment, a hatred of the common, a style; he makes and uses his phrase like a master, and he takes care. Were his gifts and his conscientiousness less, he would disappoint less; as it is, one cannot forgive him the least thing—such forgiveness would be an insult. It is, perhaps, possible that his creative faculty and his critical faculty work simultaneously, each to the prejudice of the other; and that it would be better if he first made and then corrected. However that may be, his work is always exquisite, and yet always something of a disappointment.

"The Spoils of Poynton" are furniture—objects of art. They have been collected through long years, with love and knowledge, by Mrs. Gareth and her husband. Poynton is a beautiful treasure-house, a little heaven. Mrs. Gareth is now a widow; when her son Owen marries she will have to give up Poynton and all that therein is to him and his bride, and to retire to Ricks—a lesser place, formerly the residence of an aunt, and furnished as all aunts always furnish. Now Mrs. Gareth is the real collector; these spoils are almost her reason for living; she loves them, understands them, respects them. To one who could equal her affection and appreciation, to one worthy of these beautiful things, she could surrender them. Her haunting horror is, that she will have to surrender to Mona Brigstock of the Brigstocks of Waterbath, of whom Owen appears to be becoming fond. If Poynton is a little heaven, Waterbath (so far as the house is concerned) is simply Hades without the picturesqueness—cheap, tasteless, full of gimcracks. Mona is beautiful, wooden, expressionless, grasping, knows that the spoils are very valuable, and is incapable of considering them, or anything else, otherwise than commercially. Owen is a handsome, heavy, honest fool, of "ponderous probity," but also of an almost incredible weakness. And Fleda is the other girl, worthy (as Mrs. Gareth knew) of the spoils, and worthy of far more. There is the germ of the book—most of the people and some of the motives.

When Mr. Henry James makes out a little list of his achievements (and it would be difficult to imagine anything more unlikely) he must not omit Mrs. Gareth. He has seldom, if ever, given us anything better. The character is clear, objective, original. She is a woman of refined taste, and is sometimes almost slangy; she is capable of great sacrifices, and is guilty of conduct that—well, "the Brigstocks say it's simply stealing," says Owen plaintively; and we are inclined to agree with the Brigstocks. Yet only at the end do we remember that there are things in her which, baldly stated and at first sight, might appear paradoxical. Throughout she has been quite true and convincing. It is the misfortune of Mr. Henry James that he draws those people best whom he does not quite like. There is much that is good in the delineation of Owen and Fleda, but they do not convince as Mrs. Gareth convinces. The story contains at least two strong dramatic situations: the humour is delightful; the style is Mr. Henry James. If it disappoints, it is for want of a little more warmth and humanity, because the reader cries out for someone who shall be admirable without being nervous and hesitating, and never finds that person.

If the present writer may add a personal note on another point, it is a pity that Mr. Heinemann should deface, by an absurd stamp on the title-page, such a book as this when he sends it out for review.

The Green Book; or, Freedom Under the Snow. By Maurus Jókai. (Jarrold & Sons.)

If Jókai gives us no coherent plot, he makes us breathe an atmosphere; and a very lurid atmosphere it is. The scene is St. Petersburg; the time, the early years of the present century. The "Green Book," from which the present volume has its name, was a secret roll in which were inscribed the names of those who had bound themselves together in one of the rather futile and muddle-headed secret societies with which Russian society was honey-combed. Working and plotting and counterplotting and making love, you have innumerable types. Principal among them are the court singer Zeneida, custodian of the "Green Book"; Prince Ghedimin, parasite and traitor; his wife, ex-royal-mistress and mother of the idyllic Sophie; Pushkin, the patriotic poet, whose interview with the court Censor is a genuine little piece of comedy; and the Czar, a monster of amiable irresponsibility. The scenes amid which these persons move are painted with extraordinary skill. The author is never at a loss for an appropriate "drop." He even exceeds. For the mere swagger of it, he takes you through the capital at the heels of a hunted stag, and with dazzling swiftness shows you the things and people as they were. The description of the city flooded by the Neva, and the tragic incidents of those awful days, is magnificent; but one can hardly believe, even of Muscovite conspirators, that they were accustomed to scull, by preference, with a boat-hook. It may be that the translator is responsible for this graphic touch.

The Yoke of Steel. By C. J. Wills and Godfrey Burchett. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Yoke of Steel is a conventional novel of an extinct type. There are the familiar dramatis personæ, the unscrupulous lover, the incredibly innocent young wife, the incredibly tactless elderly husband. The first is the occasion of the familiar misunderstanding between the second and third, which is followed by the familiar reconciliation. The sentiment is thoroughly artificial, and the incidental descriptions of champagne-breakfasts, gambling-hells, and the like, leave a bad taste in the mouth. And the story, such as it is, is told at far too great length. The book can serve no other purpose than to be yawned over in the smoking-room.

In the Kingdom of Kerry. By B. M. Croker. (Chatto & Windus.)

It is refreshing to encounter in the torrent of rubbish that streams day by day from the press to come upon such work as Mrs. Croker's palpitating with life. In the Kingdom of Kerry is the story of two peasant lovers, separated by the necessity that compels a man to assent to a mariage de convenance; of true love's triumph; of a smiling god who turns an old toy into treasure. Cleverly and simply the tale is told, and admirably the persons are sketched in Denis, Old Joe, "Kitty the News," and, above all, Mary. Her simple dignity, her tenderness, her charm, we shall not easily forget. We are grateful to Mrs. Croker for this story and the others which complete the volume.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1897.

No. 1295, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF NEW BOOKS.

BY PROF. MAX MÜLLER has just done what Mr. Herbert Spencer did a little while ago—he has completed the fabric which many years back he regarded as his life's work, and he has begun to say his farewells. We refer to the publication by Messrs. Longmans, this week, of Prof. Müller's Contributions to the Science of Mythology. The work appears in two bulky volumes, containing between them over 800 pages; and it is dedicated to the King of Sweden and Norway, as "the wise ruler, the enlightened friend of literature, the generous patron of Oriental learning." In a long and interesting preface Prof. Müller defines the position which he assigns to this work among his other works, and defends the position which he sees himself to be occupying among mythological and Oriental students.

This book completes "an exposition, however imperfect," which Prof. Müller long ago proposed to himself, "of the four sciences of language, mythology, religion, and thought. And as regards the growing isolation imputed to him as a student of comparative mythology, Prof. Müller quotes the names of scholars in the principal countries of Europe which can be set against the names which "have so many times been quoted to show that comparative mythology is dead." There is much in this preface that Mr. Andrew Lang and others will wish to answer; but Prof. Müller, who has described himself earlier as "an old soldier of seventy-three years of age," lays down the pen with the warning: "It is not likely that I shall be able to enter again on any controversy with regard to the facts and opinions put forward in this work."

BY FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE. So many poets have found poetry in landscape that it is the critic's office to study landscape in poetry. Mr. Francis T. Palgrave has just completed such a study, and his survey of the subject from Homer to Tennyson is before us. The scope of the book is explained in a prefatory chapter:

"It is hardly needful to say," writes Mr. Palgrave, "that Nature as here spoken of falls short of the large sense in which Marcus Aurelius used the word, 'O Nature, from thee are all things, in thee are all things, to thee all things return'; nor do we speak of that personification in J. S. Mill's phrase as 'a collective name for everything that is,' or as including 'not only all that happens, but all that is capable of happening.' Compared with Nature in her infinite vastness, her infinite minuteness, our sphere is indeed limited. It is the surface of this little world—or, indeed, only a small part of that surface—with sky and its earth-born features, and beyond, the heavenly bodies, as the fine old phrase names them, with which we are concerned; yet the aspects of Nature to man as he sees and loves and strives to render them in poetry, from the beginning, we shall find, have constantly either expressed or implied the sense of Divine causation or presence; and with this, that mysterious sense, that we also are in some way one with what we see; that silent voices are speaking to us from land and sky; even that whatever we find of real existence, of the hyperphenomenal (if I may use the word) in ourselves, is immanent throughout the Cosmos."

We need not say that Mr. Palgrave's book is a storehouse of quotations.

ANOTHER book of criticism BY W. P. KER. which gives tone to the week's output is Prof. W. P. Ker's Epic and Romance. The sub-title, Essays on Medieval Literature, indicates the limited intentions of the author, who writes:

"There seemed to be certain results available for criticism, apart from the more strict and scientific procedure which is required to solve the more difficult problems of Beowulf, or of the old Northern or the old French poetry. It is hoped that something may be gained by a less minute and exacting consideration of the whole field, and by an attempt to bring the more distant and dissociated parts of the subject into relation with one another, in one view."

The first of Mr. Ker's five chapters is introductory, and the succeeding ones deal with the Teutonic Epic, the Icelandic Sagas, the Old French Epic, and Romance and the Old French Romantic Schools.

SOME OTHER BOOKS.

MR. C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY'S work, The Dawn of Modern Geography, is important. Broadly, Mr. Beazley aims at presenting "an account of geographical movements in Christendom, and especially in Latin or Western Christendom, during the early Middle Ages (from about A.D. 300 to about A.D. 900); to which has been added a summary account of non-Christian movements, especially in the Arab and Chinese dominions and races, during the same period."

A publication of interest to antiquarians and the legal profession is Select Cases in Chancery A.D. 1364 to 1471, edited for the Selden Society by Mr. William Paley Baildon. Previous selections made by the old Record Commission appeared early in the present reign, and the present collection is intended to carry on a work which has been found to have yielded valuable results. The petitions forming the subject matter of the book are given in the old French in which they were first drafted, and also in modern English.

A particularly attractive book, both in its subject-matter and its get-up, is Mr. Allan Fea's The Flight of the King. It is an attempt to illustrate by pen and pictures "the adventurous and romantic story of the escape of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester, following step by step the hazardous journey from that city to the Sussex coast, and describing with pen and pencil the present condition or fate of the various houses which afforded the royal fugitive a safe asylum in the year 1651." Five tracts not included in Hughes's "Boscobel Tracts" form the second part of the book, which is illustrated throughout with sketches, photographs by the author, and many portraits in photogravure.

In Relics of Primeval Life Sir J. William Dawson supplements his earlier work, The Dawn of Life. Perhaps it is more correct to say that in his present work he treats anew the whole subject of the introduction and development of life on our planet, as he conceives it. The book is a reproduction of lectures delivered in the Lowell Institute, Boston, last year. It is copiously illustrated, and is a six-shilling octavo.

FICTION.

THE week has produced some fifteen or so new novels. The best-known name is that of Mr. W. E. Norris, who is responsible for Clarissa Furiosa. King Noon is welcome. This story of Devon settlers in Old Virginia and Massachusetts Bay, by Mr. F. J. Stimson, has had an extraordinary success in America. A foreword is appended to Mr. Max Pemberton's Christine of the Hills, which is in part a true tale, in part the outcome of a recent voyage to the islands of the "spouseless sea." Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, in A Justified Sinner, spares the reader the usual preamble of description. His story begins thus: "'Man,' she cried out, striking the table violently, and raising her voice to shrillness, 'why did you marry me?'" Mr. S. E. Waller, the painter, has occupied his leisure in writing Sebastini's Secret. It contains nine illustrations by the author, and is not unconcerned with studio life. Two first books have been issued. Mr. J. F. Brewer, who is not unknown in the musical world, has written a story called The Speculators; and Mr. C. K. Burrow, the author of some graceful verse and a volume of short stories called Asteck's Madonna, makes a bid for a wider public in The Way of the Wind. Mr. Samuel Gordon's A Handful of Exotics is a collection of short stories of scenes and incidents of Russo-Jewish life. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.'s "Seven Sea Series" begins well. The first two volumes are a collection of sketches by Mr. Shan F. Bullock, under the title King o' Rushes and The Circle of Earth, by George Knight, which looks fresh and readable, says the author:

"I dedicate this piece of fantasy to my wife, humbly confessing that though the web be mine I robbed her distaff of the thread wherewith to weave it. And I do humbly desire her pardon for the prentice use to which I have put so rare a material."

* * * * *

THE most important of NEW EDITIONS. these is a new edition, to be completed in six volumes, of the Bishop of London's History of the Papacy from the Great Schism to the Sack of Rome. Published by Messrs. Longmans & Co., the type of this the first volume is clear, the size convenient, and the binding sober. This new edition lacks a new preface; but the preface prepared by Dr. Creighton fifteen years ago, from Embleton Vicarage, Chathill, Northumberland, is reprinted. The passage of time has remedied a plaint then made by the author, that "my work has been written under the difficulties which necessarily attend one who lives far from great libraries." A third edition of Mr. Charles Oman's History of England from the Earliest Times to A.D. 1603 has been issued by Mr. Edward Arnold. It is in two volumes, in green cloth binding, and of useful size. We are not particularly in favour of the custom of illustrating standard works, but those who like to have their imaginations stimulated by pictures in the text will welcome Messrs. Service & Paton's edition of The Last of the Barons, with its sixteen pictures by Mr. Fred Pegram. They are conscientious and intelligent, if a trifle academic. The "Temple Classics" continue to arrive and to please. Le Morte D'Arthur, with a frontispiece copied in photogravure from a picture by Aubrey Beardsley, and Bacon's Essays, are the latest volumes.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

- CONTEMPORARY THEOLOGY AND THEISM. By R. M. Wenley, M.A. T. & T. Clark.
- SOME THOUGHTS OF THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By George Salmon, D.D. John Murray. 3s. 6d.
- CHRISTIAN INSTINCTS AND MODERN DOUBT. By Rev. Alexander H. Craufurd, M.A. James Clarke & Co. 6s.

BIOGRAPHY.

- MARTIN LUTHER. By Gustav Freytag. The Open Court Publishing Co.
- THE STORY OF VICTORIA, R.I. By W. J. Wintle. Sunday School Union.

HISTORY.

- ERAS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH:
- The Age of the Great Western Schism. By Clinton Locke, D.D. T. & T. Clark. 6s.
- The Age of Hildebrand. By Marvin R. Vincent, D.D. T. & T. Clark. 6s.
- The Age of the Crusades. By James M. Ludlow, D.D. T. & T. Clark. 6s.
- THE STORY OF AN AFRICAN CRISIS. By F. E. Garrett. By Edmund Garrett & E. J. Edwards. Archibald Constable & Co. 3s. 6d.
- A HISTORY OF ENGLAND. By Charles Oman. Third edition. Parts I. and II. Edward Arnold. 3s. each.
- THE DAWN OF MODERN GEOGRAPHY. By C. Raymond Beazley, M.A. John Murray. 18s.
- A HISTORY OF THE PAPACY. By M. Creighton, D.D. New edition in 6 vols. Longmans & Co. Vol. I. 6s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- NEW LATIN COMPOSITION. By Moses Grant Daniel. Leach, Shewell, and Sanborn (Boston).

GREEK AND ROMAN MYTHOLOGY. By K. P. Harrington and H. C. Tolman. Leach, Shewell, and Sanborn (Boston).

CORNELIUS NEPOS. Edited by J. E. Melhuish. Blackie & Son.

POETRY.

- ELFIN'S LUCK, AND OTHER POEMS. By A. E. Hilla. A. D. Innes & Co. 4s. 6d.
- THE BOOK OF THE HILLS. By O. C. Auringer. Henry Stowell & Son (Troy, U.S.A.).

ART AND BELLES LETTRES.

- THE TEMPLE CLASSICS: LE MORT D'ARTHUR. By Sir Thomas Malory. Part I. Edited by I. Gollancz. ESSAYS. By Francis Bacon. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s. 6d. each.
- EPIC AND ROMANCE. By W. P. Ker. Macmillan & Co. 10s.
- LANDSCAPE IN POETRY FROM HOMER TO TENNYSON. By Francis T. Palgrave. Macmillan & Co.

TRAVEL.

- LETTERS FROM ARMENIA. By J. Rendel Harris and Helen B. Harris. Nisbet & Co. 6s.

FICTION.

- A PILGRIMAGE TO BREITENBURG. By Richard Wagner. The Open Court Publishing Co. (Chicago).
- OUT OF THE DARKNESS. By Percy Fendall and Fox Russell. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
- CLARISSA FURIOSA. By W. E. Norris. Methuen & Co. 6s.
- A HANDFUL OF EXOTICS. By Samuel Gordon. Methuen & Co. 3s. 6d.
- DIMAR FLEET. By John Hill and G. F. Bacon. Downey & Co. 6s.
- A JUSTIFIED SINNER. By J. Fitzgerald Molloy. Downey & Co. 6s.
- THE LAST OF THE BARONS. By Lord Lytton. Service & Paton.
- THE WATER-FINDER. By Lucas Cleeve. Hutchinson & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE SOUND OF A VOICE. By Linda Gardiner. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
- CHRISTINE OF THE HILLS. By Max Pemberton. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.
- THE SPECULATORS. By John Francis Brewer. Methuen & Co. 6s.
- THE ORACLE OF THE EARTH. By George Knight. Ward, Lock & Co.
- KING NOANETT. By F. J. Stimson. John Lane. 5s.
- GLAMOUR. By Meta Oked. John Lane. 4s. 6d.
- A MATTER OF TEMPERAMENT. By Caroline Fothergill. A. & C. Black. 6s.
- THE JACKLINS. By Opie Read. A. & C. Black. 3s. 6d.
- A MAN WITH BLACK EYELASHES. By H. A. Kennedy. 3s. 6d.
- RING O' RUSHES. By Shan F. Bullock. Ward, Lock & Co.

SCIENCE.

- A STUDY OF THE SKY. By Herbert A. Howe. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

POLITICS.

- THE PRINCE. By Niccolò Machiavelli. Translated from the Italian by Ninian Hill Thomson, M.A. Clarendon Press.

ANTIQUITIES.

- THE TRANSACTIONS OF THE EAST RIDING ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY. Vol. IV. William Andrews & Co. (Hull).
- SILDEN SOCIETY: SELECT CASES IN CHANCERY, A.D. 1364-1741. Edited by W. P. Baildon. Bernard Quaritch.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- GIRLS WHO ANSWER "PERSONALS." By Dr. Arthur Macdonald. Second edition. Washington.
- A CONCISE HISTORY OF RELIGION. By F. J. Gould. Vol. III. Rationalist Press Committee. Watts & Co. 5s.
- WHITAKER'S DIRECTORY OF TITLED PERSONS. Whitaker. 2s. 6d.
- WILLING'S BRITISH AND IRISH PRESS GUIDE, 1897. Willing.

FOREIGN.

- LES GUERRES DE LA RÉVOLUTION: HONDSCHOOTE. Par Arthur Chuquet. Léon Chailley (Paris).

MYTHOLOGY.

- CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE SCIENCE OF MYTHOLOGY. By the Right Hon. Prof. F. Max Müller. Longmans & Co. 32s.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XVI.—WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

LANDOR was born of good family at Ipsley Court, Warwickshire, in 1775, and was educated at Rugby and Oxford. He did not neglect his university training, for he obtained private notoriety on account of his Latin verses before his name was much known to the public, and this classical taste evidences itself strongly in the Greek character of his poetry. It was not for nothing that he bore the name of Savage. It was said of someone that if he could split himself in halves, the one half would go to buffets with the other. It might have been said of Landor. Look even at his portrait, and you see obstinacy armed in the face. He disagreed—not unreasonably—with his father, who wished to dictate his profession (did dictation, one wonders, run in the family?). Landor père would have Landor fils in the Army: Landor fils, being a virtuous republican, would not away with the Army. Thereupon Landor ainé said: "Law and four hundred a year, or your own way and a third of the sum." Landor jeune took his own will with that dowry, as he would doubtless have taken her with no portion at all; for his own will was the sole spouse to whom Walter Savage Landor was wedded without quarrelling. He succeeded to the family estate, sold it off, bought two others in Monmouthshire, expended some £70,000 in improvements, quarrelled with his tenants, pulled down his house, and went to Italy. He had previously joined the Spaniards in their first insurrection, raising a troop, and giving 20,000 reals towards expenses. In 1815 came the Italian journey; and several years later he returned from his Florentine villa to Bath. In 1858 he was tried for publishing grossly indecent and slanderous verses against a lady of that place, and condemned in a thousand pounds' damages. He had but a remnant of his fortune when this happened; and he had published a declaration that he would bestow it on the widow of whosoever should successfully assassinate the Emperor of the French. Having now no fortune left for such playful and amiable objects, he returned to Italy; and his friends combined to rescue him from the consequences of his indomitable perversity. His brothers gave him an annuity of £200. Browning kindly looked after its proper expenditure, and the literary Ishmael settled down at Florence. He died in 1864; having quarrelled, as consistently as human infirmity would allow, with everybody on earth—including, it is hardly necessary to say, his wife. In the intervals allowed him by this main purpose of life he published enough, in prose and verse, to fill two closely printed volumes.

His poetry consists of two long poems, "Gebir" and "Count Julian"; a collection of Hellenics, poems avowedly in the old Greek taste; and a quantity of miscellaneous verse. "Gebir" and "Count Julian" were enthusiastically admired by such men as De Quincey; but Landor's warmest admirers would hardly stake his reputation on them now. There are a few passages still worth quoting, but no more. Such is the couplet on the moonbeam:

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR

From the Picture by William Fisker in the National Portrait Gallery

"And the long moonbeam on the hard wet sand Lay like a jasper column half upreared."

That is fine, but it stands alone. Fine, too, is the passage on Julian nursing his solitary grief:

"Wakeful he sits, and lonely and unmoved,
Beyond the arrows, shouts, and views of men,
As oftentimes an eagle, when the sun
Throws o'er the varying earth his early ray,
Stands solitary, stands immovable,
Upon some higher cliff, and rolls his eye,
Clear, constant; unobservant, unabased,
In the cold light."

The miscellaneous poems are really one in character with the Hellenics. They aim at Greek brevity, form, lucidity, measure. It is usually considered that Landor was a master in this kind. Of some, such as the beautiful "Rose Aylmer," it may be admitted frankly that this is true. But, as a whole, it seems to us that the restraint has nothing to restrain; Pegasus would prove himself a most discreet ambler, even if the reins were laid upon his neck. Landor's prose is another matter. It is not, as a rule, imaginative, nor distinguished by any other extra-prose qualities; it gives one no thrill, no "shock of sweet surprise": it is most absolute prose, but also most admirable prose; lucid, structural, with an unclamorous rightness of phrase. Sometimes he goes out of his way for an epithet, with self-justifying result, as when he speaks about "the omnigenous imagery of Shakespeare." The adjective is exactly and felicitously apt, a sentence-saving adjective. But this is rare. He has, in fact, described his own style—probably not unawares.

"Elegance in prose composition is mainly this: a just admission of topics and of words; neither too many nor too few of either; enough of sweetness in the sound to induce us to enter and sit still; enough of illustration and reflection to change the posture of our minds when they would tire; and enough of sound matter in the complex to repay us for our attention."

This does not describe a profound writer, nor is Landor profound. The "sound matter in the complex" is a variable quality with him. He loves paradox and paradoxical satire—for if we have called his writing "absolute prose," we by no means meant to call it prosaic. But the paradox is as likely as not to be more startling than deep; and perhaps one of the circumstances which keep the reader alert in attention is, that you never know whether the next paradox will be convincing or maddeningly perverse. He upholds, for example, the unexpected proposition that Locke is the most elegant of English writers; and to the question why Plato is so much more applauded, answers most Landorily that it is because he is so much less read.

"The difficulties we never try are no difficulties to us. . . . Until a short time ago, I could have conversed much more fluently about Plato than I can at present—I had read all the titles to his dialogues, and several scraps of commentary; these I have now forgotten, and am indebted to long attacks of the gout for what I have acquired instead."

It is exquisitely put, and contains just enough truth to make him unable to refrain from the falsehood. He presently caps it by declaring that without the gout he would have had less patience, which from the mouth of Landor is magnificent and unsurpassable. His dialogue on Milton is a good example of his qualities as a critic. It is full of taste and good sense, marred by rash confidence, particularly on points of metre, where Landor seems to have had a narrow ear. He can see nothing—we should rather say hear nothing—in Milton's "aggregates of proper names," and selects for condemnation—

"Knights of Logres and of Lyones, Lancelot, and Pelleas, and Pellenore."

To which one can best say that the last line ravished the ear of Tennyson to the extent of evoking from him a minutely careful imitation—

"Ulfius, and Brastias, and Bedivere."

By what careful study Landor gained his command of English is to be seen in the dialogue between Horne Tooke and Johnson. It deserves to be read for its acute criticism of language—mixed, of course, with Landorian crotchets and obstinacies.

"Since we are become a learned nation," he says, "not only the words we have cast aside, but also those we have substituted in the place of them, are mostly injudicious; and such others as we have taken the trouble to construct are unskilful botches."

Landor slips in expression: he does not mean that the words we have cast aside are injudicious, but that it was injudicious to cast them aside. The substance, however, is the view of all those—chiefly poets—who have striven in modern days, against a chorus of facile censure, to revive some of those cast-off pieces of the English tongue. Yet in the midst of his criticism of others he himself uses the horrible comparative "frequenter"—by way, we suppose, of being still a mutineer, and Landor. Landor he always is: the Imaginary Conversations, which are his classical work in prose, if (as De Quincey insists) they have many points of skilful dialogue, are not dramatic; Chatham, for instance, is not Chatham, but Landor without the smallest of masks. Mr. Coventry Patmore drew a distinction between two kinds of dogmatism: the dogmatism of the seer, and the dogmatism of the man who opines. "By their fruits ye shall know them"—which means that to discern between the two the hearer must himself have the gift of recognising, though not of divining, truth. Landor belonged emphatically to the second class. He is stiff in opinion, not because his vision of truth is so dazzling, but because he has the bull-dog's instinct of hanging-on to whatever comes between his teeth. "Mamma says so," remarked the once famous child in Punch; "and if Mamma says so, it is so, even if it isn't"! That was the opinion of Walter Savage Landor about Walter Savage Landor's opinions—even when he recommended the Greeks to fight the Turks with bows and arrows instead of firearms. Let us be thankful that a certain genius makes them not too seldom right, and that a classical style allied with a strong personality makes them always interesting. In no intellectual quality, perhaps, can he be called great; but he has written some of the best prose in the English language.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

THE NEW UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR AS MAN OF LETTERS.

ALTHOUGH the official announcement is to come, there seems to be no doubt that Col. John Hay is to be the successor of Mr. Bayard. In one respect, at least, it must prove a happy appointment. For Col. John Hay is a man of letters as well as a politician, and his presence in London will keep alive the traditions which have gathered around an office already held by Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Mr. Motley, Mr. Lowell, Mr. Phelps, and Mr. Bayard.

Col. Hay's Pike County Ballads alone convict him of being a poet and a humorist. They contain that curdling Wild West ballad of whisky and death, "The Mystery of Gilgal." All happened in Tom Taggart's bar. Thither came Col. Blood of Pike and Jedge Phinn, and each, "as he meandered in, remarked, 'A whisky-skin.'" A little disagreement about precedence for the first glass mixed by Tom was the trouble; and with bowie-knives "they caroled in a way that all admired." Shots followed, and Seth Bludso got a stray one; and then "Coats went off, and all went in,

Shots and bad language swelled the din;
The short sharp bark of Derringers
Like bull-pups, cheered the furse.

"They piled the stiffs outside the door;
They made, I reckon, a cord or more.
Girls went that winter, as a rule,
Alone to spellin'-school."

Another of the ballads, "Little Breeches," is a chunk of humour, pathos, and that rough yet reverent handling of sacred things which is natural to strong men who have only time for work and weariness. Thus the Pike County farmer:

"I don't go much on religion,
I never ain't had no show;
But I've got a middlin' tight grip, sir,
On the handful o' things I know.
I don't pan out on the prophets,
And free-will, and that sort of thing,
But I b'lieve in God and the angels
Ever sence one night last spring."

On that night the five-year-old "Little Breeches," who was "pert and chipper and sassy," had been run away with in the turnip wagon by the team, just as a snow squall burst over the prairie. The father found horses and wagon snowed up, but his Little Breeches had disappeared. The seekers' torches went out, and then "me and Isrul Parr" went off to a sheepfold for wood. The lambs were huddled in a warm shed, and there nestling among them was Little Breeches. All he wanted was "a chaw of terbacker."

"How did he git that? Angels.
He could never have walked in that storm.
They jest scooped down and toted him
To whar it was safe and warm."

And I think that saving a little child,
And bringing him to his own,
Is a derved sight better business
Than loafing around the Throne."

Nearer to immortality is another piece: who does not know "Jim Bludso"? Jim, engineer of the Prairie Belle, was no saint.

"This was all the religion he had—
To treat his engine well;
Never be passed on the river;
To mind the pilot's bell;
And if ever the Prairie Belle took fire,
A thousand times he swore,
He'd hold her nozzle agin the bank
Till the last soul got ashore."

The Prairie Belle took fire, and Jim carried out his programme:

"And, sure's you're born, they all got off
Afore the smoke-stacks fell;
And Bludso's ghost went up alone
In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.

"He'd seen his duty, a dead-sure thing—
And went for it thar and then;
And Christ ain't a-going to be too hard
On a man that died for men."

But Col. Hay has found themes in Europe as well as in his own land. His Wanderlieder is a small collection of verses, mostly songs of battle and freedom, which grew in his mind as he wandered from one romantic spot to another in the old countries. Spain, in particular, is at Col. Hay's finger-ends, and there are few more delightful books of travel of the gossip sort than his Castilian Days, written in Madrid in 1870. Nor has the Colonel's cosmopolitanism failed to get into his books. The human nature that is common to both hemispheres is touched with a light hand in the following "Distiches," as the author names them, from his Old Days:

"Wisely a woman prefers to a lover a man who neglects her,
This one may love her some day, some day
the lover will not."

That is true to those who have found it true. The following has been much quoted:

"What is first love worth, except to prepare for a second?
What does the second love bring? Only regret for the first."

This dictum, too, may be questioned, but it should be accepted as a warning until it can be rejected as a prophecy.

"There are three species of creatures who when they seem coming are going,
When they seem going they come: Diplomates, women, and crabs."

Our new "diplomate" seems coming, and we hope he will really come.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

In his new book, Ld-Haut, M. Rod has forsaken his old manner, and dipped into rustic realism. The change is not for the better—distinctly the reverse, I think. True, Ld-Haut is a broader, more elaborate, more composed work than any M. Rod has yet given us. It is a novel of Alpine life, minutely observed and faithfully reproduced. But village gossip, village ambitions, rural joys and sorrows require, if they are to touch or thrill us, a different handling from that of M. Rod's. To begin with, he lacks the most important element of all—humour. It is this gift of humour that constitutes all the charm as well as the reality of George Eliot's and of Mr. Hardy's rural scenes and characters. Again, he lacks a certain generous simplicity which lies upon George Sand's lovely tales of village life. To hold the reader captive among these Swiss altitudes, to chain his sympathy and give individuality to all the characters of this quiet novel, it requires an art less self-absorbed, less intensely concentrated on minute details, a treatment fuller, more human, more vital. Three modern writers, of different nationality, have given the world three mountain novels, and it is the woman who carries off all the honours. The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, written by an American woman, is a powerful, an original, and affecting novel. In Peñas Arriba, Pereda, the Spanish novelist, has given us, like M. Rod in Ld-Haut (an echo of the Spanish title), a series of mountain pictures, indications of mountain ambitions, griefs, and disappointments—in a word, a faithful reproduction of mountain life, with a thin vein of romance running through it, an unimportant love tale lightly sketched upon a crowded canvas. Pereda's Peñas Arriba (unlike in every way the impressive Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains) is the dullest and the most pretentious of his books. M. Rod's Ld-Haut is certainly the least striking and least interesting of his work.

It would be impossible to feel any real concern for the fate of Stern the hero, and the girl he loves in his dull way is not a more attractive figure. M. Rod's triumphs, real and important, have been won in quite an opposite path, and to this I hope he will return, undeterred by the fascination of somewhat sordid village troubles. What, after all, is our gain in knowing that up among the glorious Alps gossip and slander and ill-will take even a meaner form than down in the squalid and over-crowded towns? The nearer we get to the stars the cleaner we like to believe life and humanity. But up in M. Rod's Alps the absence of humour, kindness, and sweetness of nature is as marked as character seems to be effaced and vague. There is no brightness, no glow, no tenderness about the book, and no one personage of this undramatic record stands out distinctly. Nothing is vivid, pathetic, inevitable, or thrilling. And it has not charm to cover this multiplicity of wants. But it is a grave book, written with austere self-consciousness, with a high interpretation of the writer's mission, and with generous conviction.

Turning from this mountain study to M. Rod's more personal treatment of fiction, such as those two remarkable stories: Le Silence and Les Roches Blanches, one sees at once that his second manner is a fatal error. His vocation clearly lies, not in the realistic portraiture of any phase of life however simple, but in sounding the depths of the heart in involved and unusual circumstances. His analyses of the varied crises of sentiment to which the intricacies, the perfidies and injustices of society and civilised law subject delicate and sensitive natures; his keen perception of all the intense suffering a loyal character endures when forced by love into deception; his acute understanding of that combination, less rare than we imagine, of frailty and strength, of nobility and dishonour, generosity and falsehood: these furnish the material of his best and strongest work. Few modern writers have so merciless a scent for provincial hardness and the peculiarly bitter flavour of its tendency to slander and ill-will. Even in Ld-Haut, where he introduces the bourgeois element, it is accompanied with this hateful characteristic of unhumorous provincial gossip. But in no book has he so ruthlessly exposed and lashed the vice as in Les Roches Blanches, a really fine and impressive novel, strongly felt, strongly written, with a restraint, a nerve, a depth of sympathy and understanding, a suppressed indignation that give dignity as well as an elevated moral beauty to this mournful and sober tale. Here the few characters have all that the crowded canvas of Ld-Haut lacks: distinctness, individuality, and vitality. Similarly the veiled tragedy of Le Silence affects us. Such skilful scrutiny of hidden sentiment, such a revelation of poignant emotion, unsuspected, unrecognised even in a sympathetic circle, suggests a rare gift of divination, a penetration of sentimental symptoms, and an interpretative intelligence of a very notable order. Nothing in Ld-Haut, not the most elaborate descriptions of mountain scenery, nor the most laboured report of mountain gossip, nor the delicate and effective sketch of Volland, the Alpine climber, the most sympathetic, if merely suggested, figure in the book, is worth that midnight walk of the broken-hearted hero of Le Silence, when he carries his grief into the wretched obscurity of a hideous little wine-shop, and there alone dare weep for the death of the woman he has so mysteriously loved, lest any suspicion should rest on her by the faintest sign of sorrow on him in the searching light of social existence. It is in analyses such as these, in these profound effects of noble and isolated suffering, in these rakings of the mysterious abysses of sentiment, in all these modern subtleties of heart and conscience, in tracing the unobvious stages in the magnificent and continual battles between passion and duty, between the heart and the soul, that M. Rod excels. But his touch is not broad or luminous or humorous enough for a rural novel such as Ld-Haut is meant to be, with a result that has something of the unvaried heaviness of rural character.

H. L.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

La Jeune Amérique. André Bollessort.
Pièces et Morceaux. Edouard Pailleron.
L'Indulgente. Adolphe Chenevière.
Rêves d'Exil. Louise Ducot.

NOTES AND NEWS.

I AM able to state on good authority that the announcement, made by a contemporary, that the Publishers' Association has proposed to the Booksellers' Association certain measures by which the regular 3d. discount on new books may be reduced to the old discount of 2d. means nothing to the general public; for there is no prospect of such a change being adopted. The proposal was no more than a proposal, and its acceptance by the booksellers must be unanimous to take effect. But it is not unanimous; indeed, I believe that a very large West-end bookseller, himself a member of the committee of the Booksellers' Association, has expressed his determination to adhere to the 3d. discount. He adopted that discount under pressure, and he will not now be coerced into abandoning it. Nor is this a solitary case.

WHAT, then, is actually happening? Nothing more than this. The country and suburban booksellers, on whom the discount system presses most heavily (for the reason that in addition to allowing discount they must pay carriage on their books from London), are the malcontents. They can be nothing else; for the underpaid man, be he master or servant, will not sit still. And the poor profits of these booksellers cannot be gainsaid. The London bookseller, on the other hand, with his central position, his large clientèle, and his huge weekly turnover, is satisfied with the present system. The only fresh feature about the new proposal is that it emanates from the publishers and not from the booksellers. But, then, it is to the interest of publishers that country booksellers should not lose heart.

THE meeting of the Society of Women Journalists attracted a crowded audience. Mr. Augustine Birrell always draws, and the announcement that he would lecture on "Book Reviewing" enticed authors, journalists, and editors, of both sexes, to the hall of the Society of Arts. Mr. Birrell was amusing and colloquial, and he said nothing new about reviewing; but I thank him for recalling that tremendous sentence of Kepler's, who, being rallied on his abstraction, replied: "I am re-thinking the thoughts of God." A discussion followed, or rather a series of statements, chiefly by ladies. The speeches were not illuminative. Many of the orators—some angrily, some shyly—appeared to think that books, because they have been published, are, by that act, worth reviewing. It is time the clichés that a depreciatory review is necessarily unjust, and that the way to obtain a kindly review (this was actually suggested by one speaker) is to give chicken and drink to the critic, were battered out of existence. Food is so cheap nowadays that the neediest reviewer does not rise to the bait of a free luncheon in uncongenial company.

FROM the Outlook Tower, which stands in Edinburgh, those determined publishers of the Celtic movement, Messrs. Patrick Geddes and Colleagues, have issued a circular with cryptic decorations. It is all about Miss Fiona Macleod and her tales—Spiritual, Barbaric, and Tragic. These are to be issued soon in three volumes—not less than seven and not more than twelve tales to a volume. Some are newly added, as "The Awakening of Angus Ogue" and the "Melancholy of Ulad," others have already appeared in "The Sin-Eater" and "The Washer of the Ford." All are now collected in these volumes, to be called respectively Spiritual Tales, Barbaric Tales, and Tragic Romances.

THE fifth volume of Mr. Justin McCarthy's History of Our Own Times is in the press, and will probably appear in the month which sees the celebration of Her Majesty's longest reign.

MR. JAMES PAYN, I learn from an interesting interview with the novelist in the March number of the Windsor Magazine, has the strongest possible opinion on the subject of signed reviews. "It's a mistake," he said emphatically. "The fashion seems to be going out, and I'm glad of it. The critic ought to be impersonal. You don't speak of a man, even when you praise him, exactly as you speak to him—it's impossible. And if you write a criticism of your friend's work and sign it with your name, you're speaking directly to him. It must influence your point of view. It's inevitable; it can't be helped."

MR. ARTHUR MORRISON has received the compliment—rarely paid to an English writer—of a whole critical article to himself in the Revue des Deux Mondes. The French critic, M. T. de Wyzewa, regards Mr. Morrison as the founder of a new school of realism, and writes with keen understanding and appreciation of his work, seeing, as scarcely any English critic has seen, that Dicky Perrott is really a good little fellow, doing evil from the best of motives, and acting consistently up to the only standard of morals that he knows. But though M. de Wyzewa has read every line of Mr. Morrison with care, and appends some admirable translations from the Tales of Mean Streets, yet with the carelessness of the Frenchman in regard to English names he writes of M. "Alfred" Morrison.

I HEAR that a new literary club, to be called the "Argonauts," and open to both sexes, has just been started, and has every prospect of success. The main purpose of the club is in the Sunday evening dinners, which will take place once a month. The first dinner will be held on Sunday, March 7. Bond-street is the locale of the club.

THE biography of the late Mr. Jowett, Master of Balliol, by the Rev. Lewis Campbell and Dr. Evelyn Abbott, will be published shortly by Mr. Murray.

THE editor of the Studio asks me to correct a statement which appeared in the Daily News to the effect that Mr. John Lane is the proprietor of that delightful magazine. Mr. Lane is the publisher of the American edition, under the title of The International Studio, the sole proprietor and editor of both editions being Mr. Charles Holme.

MR. JULIAN HAWTHORNE has been sent to India by the American Cosmopolitan to describe the scenes caused by the famine and the plague.

MR. ARTHUR DILLON has retired from the post of honorary secretary of the Elizabethan Stage Society. So prosperous has the society become, that it can now boast a salaried secretary as well as a director.

THE statement that Lady Wallace has bequeathed to the nation the collection of pictures and other works of art formed by the late Marquis of Hertford, and now in Hertford House, Manchester-square, is exceedingly good news. The collection is valued at several millions sterling. One of the conditions attached to the will is that the Government shall provide a site in some central part of London and build thereon a museum to contain the collections, which shall always be kept together, unmixed with other works of art, and shall be called "The Wallace Collection."

THE pictures include many notable examples of Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Velasquez, Murillo, Guido Reni, and Canaletto among the old masters. Greuze, Gainsborough, and Reynolds each have rooms devoted to them in Hertford House. The modern French schools are represented by twenty-five pictures by Meissonnier, thirteen by Delaroche, thirty or more by Decamps, and several by Ary Scheffer. Among English artists, Bonington, whose works are scarce in our public galleries, is also seen to great advantage. The non-pictorial portions of the collection include old furniture from Versailles and other French royal residences, gold and silver work, porcelain, majolica, bronzes, and statuary—a great and goodly hoard.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON had it all his own way with the Armenians. With the Cretans, however, he has been beaten by Mr. John Davidson, whose "New Song of Orpheus" was published in the Chronicle on Monday. It is not the kind of poetry in which I am much interested, but I must admit that the following historical stanza has haunting qualities:

"For Berecynthian Cybele,
Mother of Gods, here taught the use
Of towns and tilth and husbandry;
Here Almathea suckled Zeus."

Mr. John Davidson, like Goldsmith and Macaulay, Whittier and Mr. Kipling (a strange quartette!) understands proper names. By the way, will not one of these sumptuary laureates give us a threnody on that great man Blondin? His only entry into poetry that I can remember is Mr. Norman Gale's—

"What though Blondin walked Over Niagara's Falls?
I bowled three curates once
With three consecutive balls!"

EVERY novelist has a private method of acquiring names for characters. In the preface put to the new and admirable six-penny edition of John Halifax, Gentleman, which Messrs. Hurst & Blackett have just issued, I find that Miss Muloch, while seeking a background for the story which then was maturing in her brain, visited Tewkesbury, and there found not only the local colour she was wanting, but also the name of her hero. On one of the tombstones in the Abbey churchyard the words "John Halifax" were engraven. This preface, which is signed "C. M. D.," is very well worth reading.

To recite his own work in public is more a custom with the French and American than the English author. We are more self-conscious in this island. When, however, there is an opportunity of hearing an author declaim or read his writings, we are quite ready to listen. Hence I expect that Mr. Paul Laurence Dunbar, the negro ballad-monger, who is now visiting this country with the object of exciting interest in his forthcoming book and himself, will find his public appearances profitable. I hope so most cordially. Hitherto the amateur of negro sentiment has had to resort to the halls where Mr. Eugene Stratton is engaged.

THE ONLOOKER.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Antiquary for March will contain articles on "The Recent Opening of a Tumulus in the East Riding of Yorkshire," by Rev. G. Moule Cole; and on the "Customs of Abruzzi Peasants," by G. M. Godden.

AN illustrated work on the Wrekin Country, entitled Wrekin Sketches, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock immediately. It will contain information concerning the ancient ecclesiastical and secular buildings of the district, and the legends which surround them.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. have just added to their "Popular Novel Series" A Man's Privilege, by Dora Russell, and The Masquerade Mystery, by Fergus Hume.

In addition to The Sundering Flood, which we mentioned last week, the Kelmscott Press has also in preparation The Water of the Wondrous Isles, which was, we believe, Mr. Morris's penultimate romance.

THE date of publication of the Life of the late Laureate has been fixed for October 6. The work will be in two volumes.

THE first volume of Messrs. Downey's limited edition of Lever's novels is due next month. On March 8 The Confessions of Harry Lorrequer will begin a set which will not be completed until March of 1899—thirty-six volumes in all.

In April we may look for Mr. Aymer Vallance's work, The Art of William Morris. Mr. Quaritch is the publisher, and as he intends to issue only 210 copies, and as these will be very precious, collectors should hasten to bespeak the book.

THE BOOK MARKET.

IN OLD PUBLISHING DAYS.

THE second volume of Mr. George Haven Putnam's Books and Their Makers During the Middle Ages deals with its subject between the years 1500 and 1709, and it is a treasury of information and anecdote which should be neglected by no one who is interested in the production and regulation of literature. Continuing the story of the earliest days of printing, begun in his first volume, Mr. Putnam gives us chapters on the early printer-publishers of France, Caxton's and Wynken de Worde's presses in England, the Kobergers of Nuremberg, Erasmus and his methods of circulating his books, Luther, the Plantina, and the Elzevirs. These chapters complete the second part of Mr. Putnam's work. The third part deals with the Beginnings of Property in Literature. The subject is treated under the headings of Italy, Germany, France, and England. The English system of regulating literary property owed little to Continental example. Moreover, it did not much resemble the Continental systems even by accident.

"The distinctive feature," says Mr. Putnam, "in the development of literary property in England may be said to be the all-important part claimed and exercised by the Crown in its creation and protection. I do not find in any other State of Europe a parallel to the relation of the Crown to the beginnings of copyright. Even in France, where the supervision of the press passed eventually into the direct control of the King, the royal edicts and privileges give the impression rather of defining and of limiting than of creating property in the 'copy.' I do not overlook the contentions that came to be argued out at a later date concerning the existence of copyright as a property of Common Law, an existence apart from and independent of a royal edict or of a legislative statute. I am merely pointing out the actual form given to these preliminary undertakings of the English printer-publishers, under which form they secured directly from royal authority the right to hold and to defend their 'copy.'"

The first publishing privilege in England bears the date 1518. It was given to Richard Pynson, second successor to Caxton, and the King's printer. Pynson was the first English printer to use the term cum privilegio. Pynson's privileges were for two years. In 1530 a privilege of seven years was granted to an author in consideration of the value of his work. In 1530 the first quarrel about copyright in England took place between one Trevers and Wynkyn de Worde. Trevers reprinted a book of which Worde held the privilege; and though Worde seems to have done nothing more than protest the incident must have advanced the growing notion of property in literature. In 1556 the Stationers' Company received its charter by royal decree. The Company, says Mr. Putnam, was at the outset "an organisation of the printing and publishing trade of London," which assumed to represent the publishing interests of the country. Royal privileges finally came to an end, being superseded by the registers of the Company.

The effect of these early registers was very powerful, and is thus explained by Mr. Putnam:

"The King's privileges had been for specific, and usually for quite brief terms. The entries of 'copies' on the Stationers' registers made no specification of terms, and such property rights as were indicated, or intended by these entries, were therefore for an indefinite term, and could be claimed in perpetuity."

Add to this the fact that the Stationers' Company had summary rights of search, seizure, and imprisonment, and we have a notion of the strength of its position. One wonders what the effect would have been of an unbroken system of perpetual copyrights. It is clear that the possession of the copyrights of a single author—say Ben Jonson, or Pope, or Cowper—would have become by this time a mine of wealth. But literature is greater than either author or publisher, and its developments were little suspected in the sixteenth century. Right up to 1710—the threshold of our Augustan age of literature—this perpetual right of property in their works was enjoyed by authors. No other country, says Mr. Putnam, had gone so far. In 1710 a curious thing happened. The publishers, whose rights had never been seriously jeopardised, and who had the whole majesty and antiquity of the Common Law at their backs, sought to strengthen their position by obtaining an Act which should give them a more definite and effective protection. They got their Act. It gave statutory protection to the author (or publisher) of a book for fourteen years. But what the publishers had not foreseen was that they had thereby killed their perpetual copyright at Common Law. They had intended to bolster it; but instead they lost it. Even till 1769 the Common Law perpetual copyright and the statutory fourteen years' copyright were supposed to co-exist. But the case of Donaldson v. Beckett in 1774 had the effect of quashing the former. Thenceforth the protection of copyright was by successive statutes, and it has varied in accordance with the terms of those statutes.

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF SPORT.

A CHAT WITH ITS PUBLISHERS.

MESSRS. LAURENCE & BULLEN are to be congratulated on the excellence of the first number of their new Encyclopædia of Sport. The whole issue is to be one of twenty monthly parts, to be bound up in two volumes when complete, and if the high standard of the first number be maintained to the end subscribers will possess a quite unique book of reference on sporting subjects. They will have, in fact, the essential matter of the somewhat overgrown "Badminton Library" in a conveniently accessible form, enriched, moreover, by some forty photogravure plates, in addition to many hundreds of original cuts in the text.

The satisfaction of having got hold of a new and good idea is small in comparison with the pleasure that comes from seeing that idea in the process of being worked out to a satisfactory conclusion, and Mr.

Laurence, when interviewed the other day by one of our representatives, was evidently delighted at the reception that has been accorded to his first number.

"Not that the idea is our own," he remarked; "we owe that to Mr. Aflalo, the well-known naturalist and authority on deep-sea fishing. But I may claim to have had no small share in the working out of the idea, and I can assure you I am as well pleased with the fine team that we have collected of expert writers on their several subjects as I am with our 'first appearance.' And you must not imagine that this number is in any way exceptional, or that its successors will fall below it in merit. They will, of course, vary somewhat, inasmuch as some subjects lend themselves more to illustration than do others, nor are certain sporting subjects of equal interest to sportsmen in general. The athlete, for example, may be inclined to boggle over the pages which must be given up to the big game measurements in our March number. Parts iii. and iv., however, will contain more subjects of general popularity than does even Part i.

"I should like to assure you, too, how very smoothly all the initial work has been got through. Our difficulties in getting hold of absolutely the right man in every instance have been far smaller than we anticipated, and Lord Suffolk has by no manner of means been only a figure-head. Mr. Aflalo himself, too, has been a marvel of diligence. The result is that we can boast with confidence that 'well begun is half done.'

"It has been said that the encyclopædia will be to some extent a mere résumé of the 'Badminton Library,' but this is by no means the truth. For one thing, we confine ourselves to outdoor sports, and do not touch at all such subjects as billiards or dancing. On the other hand, we have our experts ready with the latest wrinkles in veterinary surgery, as applied to sport, in ambulance and first aid work, and even in such field sports as birds'-nesting and butterfly-collecting."

DRAMA.

WHEN I went to see Echegaray's "Mariana" at the Court Theatre, I had made up my mind that so far as lay in my temperament and imagination I would be a Spaniard, in sympathy with the expression of emotion and familiar with the mode of life I was to see. How far I succeeded—how far, that is to say, my appreciation of Echegaray was in spite of my antecedents or in consequence of my endeavour, I cannot say; but I think that they who would do justice to him must make the same attempt with some success. And for that reason—I will risk the logical inference of my conceit—I am inclined to think that "Mariana" cannot be a success in the ordinary sense in England, since the temperament of my countrymen is omnipresent and their imagination somewhat to seek. The play, as it seemed to me, was not of that broadly human kind which will make its way through opposing antecedents. Its merit is strictly of the stage, is a result of admirable stagecraft, is not one of poetic fancy or an intimate feeling for life. The cultivated people who have approached or will approach it with awe and will talk of it superiorly would regard it, I am very certain, if it had been written in English, and the work of a contemporary Englishman, as mere melodrama. It is that, in effect: it has some play of character in it, but in scheme it is just a drama of coincidence. As such I thought it admirable, and can easily understand any amount of enthusiasm in regard to it on the part of audiences to whom its effects offered, superficially, no strangeness. But I entirely decline to regard it as a great poem or anything of that sort—unless, if I understood Spanish, I should do so from the mere sense of words—and when I read Mr. William Archer writing of it as a pendant to "Romeo and Juliet" I took leave to be astonished.

The first act, at least in its English form, was tedious and a little nugatory. With the second came real feeling in Marianna's story of her childhood's remembrance of her mother's shame. In the third was a piece of excellent stagecraft, an ingenious and natural presentment of a coincidence. The fourth act was good tragedy—poetic tragedy in the Spanish, I can well imagine. The motive of the play is of morbidly retrospective character, which, by a coincidence, sent its morbidity afloat against its love, and so brought love's pleasure-house to ruins. A romantic play—I will trust my imagination of its sound in a Southern tongue and say a beautiful romance—this ingenious melodrama; but I would rather not talk of "Romeo and Juliet."

MISS ELIZABETH ROBINS'S acting was brilliant and true. Having seen her only—so far as I can remember—in Ibsen's byways of femininity, her acting in this part of Marianna was almost a revelation to me. Only once did I disbelieve in her, and that was when her husband said her hand was cold, and she snatched it away and wrapped it for warmth in her skirt; and that slightly grotesque gesture, I make bold to believe—taking my courage in both hands—was a result of Ibsen's abnormality. Her delivery of the story about her mother's elopement and death was as good and as impressive as I could conceive it. The part of her lover—which the interest of the play insisted should be sympathetic—was played in a hollow and mechanical fashion by Mr. H. B. Irving, with unreal accent and wholly stagy gestures. I cannot imagine why he was cast for the part. He is by no means a stupid actor, but at present his abilities are altogether unequal to such a character, and I found his playing a constant obstacle to imagination. Mr. Hermann Vezin played the old friend of innumerable plays and novels with careful force and effect. Mr. Martin Harvey, whom I praised the other day in "Sweet Nancy," expressed a quite natural frivolity as a fashionable young man; and Mr. Welch easily mastered his part of a tedious archæologist. The English of Mr. James Graham's translation, the just allowances being made, falls naturally on one's ear. I understand that after Easter "John Gabriel Borkman" will be produced; in the autumn, "Admiral Guinea."

G. S. S.

MUSIC.

TO write a successful opera is the ambition of most composers; yet how few succeed! Sometimes the librettist is at fault, sometimes the composer, and sometimes both are. In the present instance I fear that "His Majesty" King Ferdinand will not enjoy a long and prosperous reign, and for that fear I must give my reasons. The book by Messrs. Burnand and Lehmann contains amusing lines and some amusing situations, yet the plot is neither strong, compact, nor original; there is no gradation of interest. Then the satirical intention of the authors is everywhere too much en évidence: the i's are dotted and the l's crossed; the name Ferdinand, King of Vingolia, is but a thin disguise. The acts and sayings of this whimsical monarch are, if the truth be told, not over entertaining. The part was exceedingly well played by Mr. George Grossmith, but the rolé which created most laughter was that of Boodles, Ex-Master of the Revels, admirably impersonated by Mr. Walter Passmore; while that of Felice owed much of its interest to the clever acting and singing of Mme. Ilka Palmay. Boodles and Felice are really the most attractive people at the dull Court of Vingolia, and yet, methinks, the king, if the head title of the work count for anything, ought to command chief attention. Thus the very interest which the maiden and the master of the revels create, seems to destroy the proper balance. King Mopolio, who only appears towards the close of the play, is known to all the world, so at least he sings, as "one who never smiled"; and he certainly caused none of the audience to smile, although Mr. C. Kenningham made the most of his small part. Such a doleful king ought to have been kept far behind the scenes.

I have said the plot lacks originality. There is no need to describe it here. Details have been given in the daily papers; and, besides, whatever fun there is is due to the acting rather than to the story itself. The close of each of the two acts is singularly weak, yet a striking close often makes amends for weaknesses during the course of an act. The following lines, sung by the Women in the Finale of the first act, are certainly not brilliant:

"We are with you, we are with you, though we don't act quite like you,
Forming squares or charging cannon, yet we have our work to do;
Though we shoulder not a rifle, though with us no sabre clanks,
Death and wounds and fire and ruin shall not drive us from the ranks."

Then there is a lot of small talk and silly dialogue, which, seeing that the plot is not exciting, makes the piece drag. If the two acts shortened were reduced into one I believe the opera would stand a far better chance than it does at present. Brevity is the soul of modern opera.

And now for the music by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. It would be interesting to know whether the composer had any share in the construction of the book. I am inclined to think he had little, if any. The various songs, duets, choruses, are introduced in such an old-fashioned, formal manner, and yet the composer once showed himself modern in feeling and style; now he reminds us more of the past than of the present. The work, by the way, is described as a "comic opera," although the character of the book and of much of the music is rather that of "opera bouffe." In some of the numbers, as, for instance, in the "Who goes home" quartet, or in Prince Max's song, "Fair Chloris, let me be thy slave?" Sir Alexander writes graceful strains; the former, however, is out of keeping with the comœdia rustici. Taking the music as a whole, there are many indications of ability, of effective orchestration; though nowhere does the composer seem to have worked with any real inspiration or enthusiasm. Whatever may be one's opinion of Sir A. Mackenzie as a composer—some underrate, others perhaps overrate him—he has not given us of his best in this work; and I am not at all surprised. Even in his early operas he showed himself capable of higher things; opera bouffe, for I must give that name to "His Majesty," is not in his line. If the work does not draw the public he need not feel discouraged, for it is not to his discredit; he has only to try and get a more congenial book. The early operas just mentioned contained much excellent music, but then the dulness of the librettos proved a fatal obstacle to their success.

The most satisfactory numbers in "His Majesty" are the "Cross-Examination" duet and dance, and the quartet, mentioned above, in the first act; also Boodles' funny song (words by Adrian Ross), an amusing parody of certain nigger songs in vogue, in the second act. In referring to the endings of each act of the book I described them as weak, and just here the composer, as is natural, is also at his weakest. The recent success of Dr. Stanford's "Shamus O'Brien" no doubt tempted Sir Alexander once again to try his hand at opera, and it will no doubt tempt other composers in similar manner; however, unless he and they manage to secure a really good book their chance of winning fame is but small.

It is the duty of a critic to say exactly what he thinks, be it pleasant or otherwise. I am only too glad when I can point to any work by an English composer that shows signs of progress and of prosperity. I trust that my appreciation in years past of many of Sir Alexander's earnest efforts will be remembered by him if he chance to read these lines.

I have mentioned some of the actors. I may also speak in favourable terms of Miss Florence Perry (Princess Lucilla Chloris), of Mr. Scott Russell (Count Cosmo), and of Mr. Jones Hewson (Baron Vincentius). The piece, as regards ensemble, was well presented. The stage management was excellent. I only saw the opera on the third night, when the orchestra was under the able direction of Mr. François Cellier. The encoring of certain numbers, however gratifying to the performers, was certainly a mistake: a joke twice told becomes tedious. On the first night Sir Alexander himself conducted "His Majesty." J. S. S.

SCIENCE.

WE are the richer, in these days—though science is apt to consider itself the poorer—for the presence of one or two scientific men who believe in spiritualism. Foremost among them are Prof. William Crookes, the eminent physicist, and Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace, co-discoverer with Darwin of the principle of natural selection. Besides these are a few less ardent seekers into the extra-natural, of whom one may name the late Prof. Romanes and Dr. Oliver Lodge. Moreover, if report be true, Prof. and Mrs. Henry Sidgwick, who used to be among the sceptics, have recently begun to go over into the other scale. I say we are the richer for such men and women, not from any sense of personal agreement with them, but because it is healthy to have everything discussed, and because it marks the growth of a certain tolerance that such extreme heresy should be held in high places. Probably Prof. Crookes and Mr. Wallace would complain very bitterly that their opinions have lost them scientific caste. Dr. Lodge has also worn the martyr's crown in private; but in reply to all three, I should point out that no one has mocked them for wishing to investigate spiritualistic phenomena, but only for exhibiting unscientific credulity in their acceptance of doubtful facts. I have never heard the Sidgwicks scoffed at in the same way, for their attitude throughout has been one of immaculate caution and reserve. They have never committed themselves to such errors of judgment as Mr. Wallace's Miracles and Modern Spiritualism, a book that ranks with the productions of the Rev. F. G. Lee, or Dr. Lodge's hasty championship of Eusapia Palladino—a freak which will take some living down.

WHAT brings the subject up at the present moment is a letter which caught my eye in the Times, from Prof. Thomas Case, dealing with a paper on "scientific superstitions" which was addressed to the Psychical Society some little time back by Prof. Crookes. The gist of the paper, if I recollect it rightly, was a plea for open-mindedness in approaching the problems of the universe, and for more candour in admitting that our perception of the natural is limited. Against this claim, probably, few people would be so irrational as to protest. But when he came to suggesting definite possibilities to cover assumed phenomena, Prof. Crookes abandoned his safe position. There are certain laws of nature, like gravitation, which man has discovered, not made; and the action of these is so clear and calculable that they may in most cases be used as criteria for the truth or fallacy of any theory involving them. The so-called wave-actions of light and sound are governed by such laws, and it was in suggesting that "telepathy" could be accounted for on the supposition of transmitted brain-waves that Prof. Crookes gave himself away into the hands of the enemy.

It would be fair, perhaps, to quote the report of Prof. Crookes's own words before giving his assailant's criticism.

Is it inconceivable, he said, that intense thought, concentrated by one person upon another with whom he is in close sympathy, should induce a telepathic chain along which brain-waves should go straight to their goal without loss of energy due to distance? Such a speculation was new and strange to science; it was at present strictly provisional; but he was bold enough to make it, and the time might come when it could be submitted to experimental tests.

I remember this identical theory being put forward some years ago by a well-known American electrician—Prof. Elihu Thomson, unless I am mistaken—and exciting comment at the time. Mr. Knowles, of the Nineteenth Century, has since come forward and claimed it as a thirty-year-old invention of his own. Prof. Case's reply to it is definite. The phrase "brain-waves," in the sense in which it appeals to us, is misleading. Waves, strictly speaking, are not transmitted at all. All that a brain-wave could mean, if based upon the analogy of light-waves and sound-waves, is an agitation of air or other particles in the neighbourhood of the disturbance (the brain), which agitation is communicated to adjacent particles, and so on until it reaches the recipient brain which is assumed to be sensitive to this form of stimulus. And then the question remains: What becomes of these "brain-waves"?

EXPRESSED in this way the theory begins to present difficulties which do not suggest themselves when put in the language of Prof. Crookes. The brain as we know it responds to stimuli of an order wholly incomparable with either air or other vibrations. The argument from Hertzian resonators, which might be made, consequently fails. The nerves which produce the stimuli may to some extent be susceptible of such vibrations, but it requires the intermediate action of the organs of sense to produce thought. Finally, to show the extent of Prof. Crookes's assumptions in formulating his theory, I will quote the concluding sentence of Prof. Case's letter:

"In the suggested telepathic influence from person to person almost everything is supposed. The fact that the thought of one person produces the thought of another without the agency of the recognised organs of sense is not yet proved; to explain this supposed fact, thought in the influencing person is supposed to produce, without the ordinary moving organs, a supposed enormous velocity with which supposed particles make one another move, and, finally, these are supposed to produce, without the ordinary action of the sensory organs, thought in the influenced person. Here is hypothesis of the fact, hypothesis of the agent, and hypothesis of the laws by which thought is the cause of vibrations at one end, and the effect of vibrations in that agent at the other end, of the hypothetical telepathic chain. According to the rules of logic we ought not to hypothesise facts at all; we may hypothesise the agent alone, or the laws alone; but we must not hypothesise an unknown agent obeying unknown laws of action."

Prof. Crookes's theory is capable of further argument, I believe, even with all this terrible array of hypotheses; but before it is followed up there seems to be a point for physiologists to settle: Does the brain produce material vibrations in the surrounding medium?

H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MACLEOD OF ASSYNT.

St. Andrews: Feb. 20.

Mr. Henry Dunning MacLeod probably knows that a man may be "a legendary Ganelon," though he was a historical Sheriff Depute. At least, I wrote on the hypothesis that the legendary is distinguished from the historical.

ANDREW LANG.

"THE HEBREW MONARCHY—A COMMENTARY."

Great Porton: Feb. 18.

I cannot but thank you for your cordial appreciation of my book as likely to be serviceable to those for whom it was intended—to wit, divinity students, from competitors in the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations, scholars in public schools, high schools, and Sunday-schools, up to candidates in the Preliminary University or Episcopal Examinations. But, of your charity and fairness, suffer me to protest against the statement that I consider "Usher's chronology—until B.C. 726, at any rate—the only one possible." What may be called the "customary chronology" may fitly accompany the "Received Version"—divinity students would expect to find it there; but I have made no statement whatever as to its reliability. On the contrary, I have given warning that Hebrew numerals cannot be trusted; and have reminded readers that some scholars consider the "received" duration of reigns to have been "in a serious degree discredited by the records of Assyrian history which have lately come to light." I hardly think that Prof. Sayce, or any other great scholar, would venture to say that he had as yet arrived at "conclusions." Surely the day of certainty in the matter of chronology is but dawning as yet; surely the wise will wait.

I think a dissertation on authorship would have been out of place in this work. If I am mistaken as to this I am sorry for the omission. It would have been quite beside my purpose to attempt to prove, or to admit, that "one part of Scripture" is not "as good as another." I have written as one who believed, and for the use of those who believed, that παρα γραφή included in what are known as the Canonical Books is Θεόπνευστος, and, in a reasonable degree, even with the new lights of modern discovery and scholarship, is capable of being "harmonised."

ANDREW WOOD.

Moss Side, Manchester: Feb. 19.

Lord Monboddos book on the Origin and Progress of Language was published at Edinburgh in 1773. It is said that Monboddos was greatly disappointed when Sir Joseph Banks returned from Botany Bay without having encountered the tailed men. When he died, in 1799, the hoped-for "missing link" was still undiscovered.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

"RATIONAL EDUCATION."

London: Feb. 22.

In 1893 I had a personal knowledge of Abbotsholme. It had always been the aim of that school to promote a harmonious "all-round" education, and at that particular time the endeavour was being made to carry out in detail the Herbartian system of sequence and concentration as practised at Jena. In discussing the system, less technical terms such as the method of "ladders" and of the "interlocking of subjects" were used. The headmaster had, I believe, visited Jena in order to study the application of the system on the spot.

O. M. DALTON.

Abbotsholme: Feb. 22.

We should like to call attention to a few points in the letter under the above heading in your issue of February 20.

1. The writer seems to us to avoid the point at issue in choosing to describe the instruction and method of this school in 1889 (gathered apparently from hearsay and an old prospectus, as he was, we believe, an engineer in India at the time), rather than its more developed practice as he found it in 1894, when, to adopt his own expression, the principles had got "further than a prospectus."

2. We gather from his fourth paragraph that the really valuable and original part of his book is the detailed application of his principles. While quick to notice our "unmistakable insinuation," he has failed to see that what struck us as "curious" was not the resemblance of his proposed to our actual work—natural enough under the circumstances—but the conclusion which his omission of all reference to this school forced upon us—namely, that during three terms here he had remained quite impervious to his surroundings, and had independently arrived at such a remarkably similar combination of detail. This similarity is, we think, sufficiently established by the parallel time-tables which we send you.

3. We have studied his third paragraph closely, but can extract from it nothing beyond a non sequitur and some apparently ironical patronage.

4. Finally, he suggests that we should supplement the deficiencies of his book. This is our daily occupation, the results of which are "visible" here; but Mr. De Brath, who has had one year's experience as a teacher, should know that the schoolmaster's life does not give him much leisure for putting his observations into the form of a published book. Should an Abbotsholme Year-Book appear, we should almost like to call it "The Superstructure of Success."

THE SIX ASSISTANT MASTERS.

COMPARISON OF ROUTINES.

(Summer.)

"Foundations of Success."	Abbotsholme Prospectus 1895.
Rise; biscuit and glass of milk ... 5.45	Rise ... 6.10
Parade and run ... 6.15	Early meal, drill ... 6.30
Chapel ... 6.30	First school ... 6.45
First school ... 6.45	Chapel ... 7.30
Breakfast ... 7.30	Breakfast ... 7.40
Vacant half-hour ... 8.15	Dormitory parade ... 8
Second school ... 8.45	Second school ... 8.30
Break ... 9.30
Third school ... 9.45
Break; luncheon of biscuits and milk ... 10.30	Break; lunch ... 10.15
Fourth school ... 10.45	Third school ... 10.30
Break ... 11.30
Fifth School ... 11.45
Free time ... 12.30	Bathing ... 12.15
Wash and prepare for dinner ... 1
Dinner ... 1.15	Dinner ... 1
Quiet quarter of an hour in music room. 2.15	Piano recital ... 1.40
Games, drill, workshop, gardening, or music ... 2.30	Drawing, workshop, garden and lab., odd jobs, games ... 2-6
Dress ... 5.45
Tea ... 6	Tea ... 6
Free time ... 6.30	Evening school ... 6.30
Preparation for seniors 6.45
Reunion for singing, &c. ... 7.30	Singing, theatre, &c. 7.15
Chapel ... 8.45	Chapel ... 8.40
Bed ... 9	Bed ... 8.50

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"HUMOROUS and often comical" as her method is, writes an expert in the course of a three-page notice in the Athenæum, Miss Kingsley "must undoubtedly be taken seriously, for she displayed keen powers of observation." About the Congo Français, of which so little is known in England, "it is astonishing that she should have gleaned so much." "Her writing is," says the National Observer, "highly characteristic, unconventional, energetic, and effective. . . . If anyone should inquire for what motive these journeys were undertaken, the present reviewer is obliged to admit that ninety per cent. of it seems to have been pure devilment. . . . She went through them all with a light heart and unfailing courage, and her book is fit to make stay-at-homes almost as in love as she with the bright eyes of danger." "She did some things," says the Pall Mall, "that a hardy man would think twice about attempting, and then he would make his will first." The chapters on fetish and witchcraft "form the best anthology of the animistic tendencies of the Coast tribes that has ever been constructed." The size of the volume "will be no terror to the reader." "What period of the world," demands the Chronicle, with enthusiasm, "but just ours, here and now, could have produced such a woman, learned . . . adventurous . . . athletic . . . and bright and cheerful and mischievously humorous whatever happens? . . . Probably her most effective contribution to science is her four long chapters on 'Fetish.'" The Daily News discerns, in addition to the author's family gift for the literary art, "a certain subtle oneness with nature" which we miss in other books bearing the Kingsley name. The Standard pardons, in one who has encountered such hardships, labours, and perils a tendency to be "slangy."

"The Scholar of Bygate." By Algernon Gissing. (Butcher's.)

"THE other Gissing," to quote the headline of the Pall Mall notice, "writes with distinction and with a Mere-dithian horror of conventional phrasing. . . . The story presents us with a natural sequence of events." A certain resemblance of design to Mr. Hardy's last book is noted, though the treatment differs widely. "The dull length of the closing chapters" is the main ground of complaint. "The rare skill in characterisation" is the chief merit. The Chronicle discerns in the heroine "a faint resemblance to some of Mr. Baring Gould's heroines," and says of the character-drawing in general that "some of the figures are blurred and unrealised." The Daily News, like the Pall Mall, finds the characterisation the most notable feature, and fears that a tendency to drag and the abundant use of dialogue "may stand in the way of the recognition the book deserves." Praise is given to the beauty of the descriptive passages. The Manchester Guardian prefers that a book should not be written in more languages than one."

"The Red Scurf," By P. Anderson Graham. (Longmans.)

THIS "novel of manners" is, says the Pall Mall Gazette, "a leisurely story; it has a groundwork of a picture of rural life which, for faithfulness and the absence of forced effect, compares with old British landscape painting. . . . The charm of the book is distributed from end to end in numberless vignettes of life and character. . . . It is plain Mr. Graham knows his subject well, and that he thinks no pains too great for the treatment of it." "It is not," writes the National Observer, "a very exciting story that Mr. Graham has to tell; but he presents it in such a way that we are often reminded of Mr. Blackmore at his best." "There is not too much local colour, and the dialect is never unintelligible; yet you get the right colour, and even feel sure that you hear the true accent of the sons and daughters of Northumberland." So the British Review says: "The author's method might be taken as a model of what can be done in this way without using the spelling of pidgin-English." "The gloom and depression," says the same reviewer, "would be intolerable, were it not that the writer is an artist and has been successful in an artist's work." The Standard sees "a score of pictures that only an artist could have drawn with the pen, and many a one would gladly paint with the brush"; amid which moves "a heroine as charming as town or country lover could desire."

"The Story of Aline." By Mrs. Edward Ridley. (Chapman.)

"A GOOD woman, yet a little lower than the angels; and the tragedy of her life, so commonplace and yet so real, is drawn with a touch of genius." So writes "An Irresponsible Reader" in the columns of the Pall Mall. But "it is unfortunate in its birth-time, says the National Observer: 'the world has been so surfeited' with the subject. 'Yet it has at least lighted in us a desire to see more of the author's work.' 'The interest of the novel is great and poignant,' writes the British Review, 'thanks to the delicate skill with which passion is made real and character is drawn. . . . If there be a failure, it is . . . the man for whom Aline suffers so much. . . . The novel . . . is remarkable for delicacy, self-command, and sureness of touch. . . . 'The central figures,' says the Athenæum, 'stand out from their setting with remarkable vividness. Mrs. Ridley has chosen a painful subject, and, on the whole, has handled it with commendable restraint. One entire chapter would have been better omitted.' 'With all her faults, which are the result of an all-mastery passion in a perfectly well-conducted but ill-balanced woman, Aline remains a pathetic but lovable figure.' "The book is practically a monograph," says the Morning Post, "in which the mental experiences of a woman, who usually 'looks facts in the face,' are very fully analysed, and with considerable skill. . . . Possibly the book would have been a better work of art had it been relieved by an occasional gleam of humour."

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

FORD MADOX BROWN.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

FREDERIC J. SHIELDS.

A series of Autotype Reproductions of the Chief Works of these
Masters is NOW ON VIEW at THE GRAFTON GALLERIES.
They include the chief Cartoons made by Ford Madox Brown for stained glass, his "Cordelia's Portion," "English Boy," "Shake-spears, Homer, etc., etc." Rossetti's "Beata Beatrix," "Lamp of Memory," "Monna Rosa," "Proserpine," "The Annunciation,"
"The Blessed Damsel," "Studies of the Oxford Frescoes, etc., etc."
Particulars on application.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING.

Painted by D. G. ROSSETTI in 1855. Reproduced in Autogravure from the Original in the possession of C. Fairfax, Esq. Size of Work 4½ inches by 4½ inches. Proofs on Vellum, 21s.; on Japanese, 10s. 6d.; Prints, 5s.

THE WEST FRONT OF

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.

From a negative specially taken before the erection of the scaffolding, by R. G. SCRIVEN, F.S.I. Printed in sepia or warm black, 15 inches by 15 inches, price 10s. 6d.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

A large series of the Chief Works of this Master, including the great Allegorical designs, and many others. Full particulars on application.

FRENCH PAINTERS OF THE

NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Permanent Carbon Reproductions of Works by Jean François
Millet, Theodore Rousseau, Jean Baptiste Corot, Daubigny, Jules
Breton, Dagnan Bouveret, W. Bonheur, M. Delaunay, Carle-Duran, Cabanel, Debat Ponsan, E. Adan, etc., etc., in various sizes.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL OF

LANDSCAPE PAINTING.

Including the Chief Works of John Constable, R.A., J. M. W.
Turner, R.A., Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., R. P. Bonington, Old
Crome, W. J. Müller, David Cox, Elfrin, Samuel Prout, etc., etc.
Abridged Catalogues on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street,
London, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO
GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,
and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and
post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. ALSO NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 46, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS,
BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COL-
LECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE
AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—
ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—
NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CON-
TINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS
ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW
BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF
BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND
AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—
BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED,
AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the literary matter, and of the advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES
the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS,
the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS
NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line
Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print
Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.
BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE
English Catalogue for 1896
differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the
FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by
over 80 pages,
whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TO ALL WHO WRITE, EDIT, DRAW, or SCRIBBLE.

A Perfect Pen.

For all Literary People.

For all People who use a Pen.

Nothing is so convenient as

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen

(Desk or Pocket size).

It can be carried in the pocket in any position.

The ink can never spill in the pocket: it is a physical impossibility for it to do so.

It has a gold nib, iridium tipped, of the finest quality—fine, medium, or broad point, as ordered.

It writes instantaneously, without shaking or dipping.

Made in several sizes. Price 12/6.

A Perfect Ink Pencil.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

To those who prefer a Stylo Pen, we recommend Caw's adjustable Stylographic Pen, which adapts itself to any handwriting, and can be instantly changed in adjustment, if not quite comfortable.

Price, from 5/-.

BRITISH DEPOT: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

A Perfect Lead Pencil.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

"A remarkably smart contrivance."

Black and White.

"Surely a boon to all busy people."

Westminster Budget.

"A design in lead pencils that deserves popularity."—Morning Leader.

"I hope he may make a fortune by it."—Truth.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil looks like an ordinary pencil, and is used like an ordinary pencil. It is the same size as an ordinary pencil. It costs no more than an ordinary pencil of the same quality.

But it lasts at the very least twice as long, because there is none of the waste that occurs through breakage of the lead in sharpening a cedar pencil. This is more especially noticeable in the case of blue and red pencils. In using an ordinary coloured pencil, probably half the crayon-lead is wasted in cutting, and another quarter by the lead breaking in use. The Blaisdell coloured pencils waste none of the crayon in cutting, for there is no cutting to be done, and the crayon does not readily break in use. Hence the saving in lead alone is very great, and the saving of time, trouble, and annoyance is greater still. There are no chips, no dirty smears from crayon dust, and a perfect point is produced instantaneously whenever needed. The same is true of the black-lead Blaisdell Pencil.

The paper covering holds firm until it is desired to remove it. Then all that is necessary is to break the outer cover with a knife or pin, and pull off a spiral of paper. The new point is then ready for use.

Blaisdell Pencils, whether black or coloured, are made in but one quality—the best; but the black-lead pencil is made in all grades of hardness for writing or drawing.

If not obtainable at your Stationer's, send for Specimens—Red, Blue, and Black, post free (in the United Kingdom), 1s.

BLAISDELL PENCIL CO., LTD.,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON E.C.

The only Perfect Table Gum is LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE.

BECAUSE it STICKS.

BECAUSE it sticks things so that they "stay stuck."

BECAUSE it dries quicker than any gum, being practically a thin, ever-fluid glue.

BECAUSE the less you use the better and tighter it sticks.

MOREOVER, it costs no more than gum or paste, and goes ever so much further.

Of all Stationers at 3d. and 6d.

RUSSIA CEMENT COMPANY,

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE DONGOLA EXPEDITION. LETTERS FROM THE SUDAN.

By the Special Correspondent of the "Times" (E. F. KNIGHT).

Reprinted from the "Times" of April to October, 1896.

With Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"His despatches, elaborated with unusual care, form a very readable and consecutive history of the campaign."

Volume II. now ready for delivery to Subscribers.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

By Professor W. M. SLOANE, Ph.D., L.H.D.

Illustrated with 80 Reproductions of the Masterpieces of Painting, in their Original Colours, and 220 Full-Page Engravings in Tint and Black and White.

In 20 Parts at 4s. net each; or in 4 vols. at 24s. net each. (Supplied only in sets.)

Also ready, Vol. I. and Parts I.-VI.

 Subscriptions (sent through a bookseller) will be received at any time and the volumes or parts delivered at such intervals as may be convenient to the subscriber.

BY FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LANDSCAPE in POETRY, from HOMER to TENNYSON.

With numerous Representative Quotations. By FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.

8vo, 10s. net.

EPIC and ROMANCE. Essays on Medieval Literature. By

W. P. KER, Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Professor of English Literature in University College London.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED THROUGHOUT.

Medium 8vo, 14s. net.

THE ELEMENTS of POLITICS. By Henry Sidgwick, Author of

"The Method of Ethics," &c.

MACMILLAN'S ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

NEW VOLUME.

THE MISFORTUNES of ELPHIN and RHODODAPHNE. By

THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK. With an Introduction by Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, antique paper, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, gilt sides, back, and edges, 5s.
[This completes the series of "Peacock" Novels.]

Royal 16mo, 5s.

THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE. Lenten Readings selected chiefly from Unpublished Manuscripts of the Right Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D., late Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts. By W. M. L. JAY.

BY THE LATE DEAN CHURCH.

OCCASIONAL PAPERS selected from "The Guardian," "The Times, and The Saturday Review, 1846-1890. By the late R. W. CHURCH, M.A., D.C.L., sometime Rector of Whitley, Dean of St. Paul's, Honorary Fellow of Oriel College. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s. [EVERSLEY SERIES.]

TIMES.—"All the articles alike are marked by the same qualities—wide knowledge, perfect urbanity, and a singular charm of style."

BY EDWIN A. ABBOTT.

8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE SPIRIT on the WATERS. The Evolution of the Divine from the Human. By EDWIN A. ABBOTT, Author of "Philochristus," &c.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Dr. Abbott is emphatically a man to be listened to."

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

A STUDY of the SKY. By Herbert A. Howe, Professor of Astronomy, University of Denver.

THIRD THOUSAND.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS.

TRAVELS

IN

WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.

With 16 Full-Page and numerous Text Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

PUNCH.—"She has a keen eye for character, an abiding sense of the picturesque, a humour that bubbles over in all places and predicaments, and a graphic pen."

FIELD.—"One of the most entertaining and instructive works that have come under our notice."

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 449.—MARCH.—Price 1s.

CONTENTS.

THROUGH the SWAMPS of BENIN.

A STRANGER AT THE DOLPHIN

THACKERAY'S PHILOSOPHY.

THE STORY OF CRESSIDA.

REQUIESCAT.

THAT AWKWARD BOY.

THE SICILIAN PEASANT.

PANTOMIME IN PARIS.

EL DORADO.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

For MARCH

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles:

NELSON AT TRAFALGAR. By Captain ALFRED T. MAHAN.

OUR FELLOW-CITIZEN of THE WHITE HOUSE. The Official Career of a President. By C. C. BUEL.

CAMPAIGNING WITH GRANT V. From the North Anna to Cold Harbour. By HORACE PORTER.

Illustrated. Price 1s.

THE

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE

For MARCH

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles:

TEDDY BAIRD'S LUCK. By K. D. SWETSER.

JOHNNY IN GOBOLINK LAND. By RUTH McEVERTY STUART and A. B. FAIRB.

JED'S WINDMILL. By G. W. CURRAN.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1296.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.

Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.

LATEST CATALOGUES:—
No. 51 SEMITIC—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1443 lots.)
No. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (762, 723 lots.)
No. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

TO BOOKBUYERS AND LIBRARIANS OF FREE
LIBRARIES.—The MARCH CATALOGUE of valuable New and Second-Hand Works, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.—CATALOGUE (No. 57) of Miscellaneous Second-hand Books in General Literature, including a number of early examples of local printing; also, CATALOGUE
(No. 58) of Critical Editions of Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Works relating to Classical Antiquity, with a Supplement of Philosophical Works.—Either, or both, post free on application to B. H.
BLACKWELL, 50 and 51, Broad Street, Oxford.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLI-CATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
18, Boulevard Street, London, E.C.,
Invite AUTHORS (Popular or otherwise) to submit their MSS.
(Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) for prompt consideration.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.,
have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

JUNIOR LEADER WRITER.—Experienced
Journalist (32). University man, at present Editor of a large and old-established Conservative Paper (weekly), desires to join the Staff of an important Provincial Morning Paper. Strong, sensible writer; good literary style; thoroughly reliable. Capable Sub-Editor and Reviewer. Moderate salary if prospects good.—A. B., ACADEMY
Office, 4, Chancery Lane, London.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

The Right Hon. LORD RAYLEIGH, M.A. D.C.L. LL.D. F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy R.T. will give SATURDAY, MARCH 6th, at 3 o'clock, begin, a COURSE OF SIX LECTURES on
"ELECTRICITY AND ELECTRICAL VIBRATIONS."
Subscription to this Course, One Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

A GENTLEMAN (M.A. Oxon) who has just completed the preparation for the press of an extensive work of his own, and who has therefore time on his hands, desires to OPEER his SERVICES on the EDITORIAL STAFF of a PUBLISHING FIRM, or in connection with a weekly journal or other periodical publication, to each successive issue of which he would undertake to contribute a literary article. The advertiser possesses very considerable experience both as author and reviewer, having contributed to the Quarterly Review, the Nineteenth Century, &c., &c.—Address, A. B., care of the ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane.

WANTED, in a high-class Publishing House, a PARTNER, with capital of £10,000.—Address, A. B., care of Willing's Advertisement Office, 162, Piccadilly, London, W.

TO ARCHÆOLOGISTS AND LIBRARIANS.—
Valuable Books for Sale. "HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS—STAFFORDSHIRE." Edited by the William Salt Archaeological Society. Sixteen volumes complete to present date. The Widow of a Subscriber from the first wishes to meet with a purchaser.—Apply to Mrs. TILGNEY, Great Haywood, Stafford.

AUTHORS OF NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES
adapted for Serial Publication are invited to communicate with Mr. J. F. SPENCER'S Newspaper SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

STAMPS.—JAPAN-CHINA WAR, very scarce;
used postally; Angkor, Horta, Funchal, Ponta Delgada, Barbados, Peru, Cuba 1897, Newfoundland, Bermuda, Malta, Cyprus, Tunis, Djibouti; sixty genuine varieties. 1s. 1d.—SMITH, Upper Park Road, Kingston.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars
apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.

An EXAMINATION will take place at UPPINGHAM on the 30th and 31st March and 1st April, 1897, for SIX OPEN SCHOLAR-SHIPS. Two of £70 per annum. Two of £50 per annum. Two of £30 per annum, each tenable at the School. Candidates entertained free of charge if application be made by 13th March, 1897.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

An OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP of the annual value of £75 (tenable for one, two, or three years) is OFFERED by the
DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUSTEES for COMPETITION.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

READING SCHOOL, BERKS.

EXAMINATION for TWELVE OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS,
APRIL 14th and 15th.
For information apply to the SCHOOL SECRETARY.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages
for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HARRIS, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS,
1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £80, two of
£60, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the Head
Master, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MANUSCRIPT TYPE-WRITTEN with care and
precision by experienced operator and returned, promptly,
10d. per 1,000 words. Translations made.—"OPERATOR," 2, Renshaw
Road, London, N.E.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospectuses post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR-
ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agent wanted.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

W. M. BROWN, 26, Princes Street, Edinburgh.
Edinburgh University Magazine, Jan.-April, 1871—Wood's Plates for the Arabian Nights—Vanity Fair Album, 1880-85—Turner's Liber Studiorum, 3 vols., 1871—Turner's Annual Tour, Vol. 2, 1835, L.P.

E. DURRANT & CO., Chelmsford.
Jackson's Stories and Catechisms on the Collects. 3 vols.

H. DAYMOND, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.
Kipling's Soldiers Three. 1st India ed.
Plain Tales from the Hills. 1st India ed.
Any 1st India ed.
Bookplates, good old ones.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES OF LIVIUS, Hall,
Murray, Martin; also any Old Specimens. Best and highest prices paid.—MOORE, 4, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1897. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

(Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

LLOYD, PITTENWEEM, N.B.
H Decameron (1679), 1 vol. only, with Horace Walpole's Bookplate.

R. HALL, 119, Upper Fant, Maidstone.
R. Philosophical Magazine, Vols. 1 to 18, 30s.—Journal Inst. of Bankers, Vols. 1 to 7, 45s.—Quantity of Surveyors' Inst. Transactions, 21s. 10d.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY.

FORD MADOX BROWN.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.
FREDERIC J. SHIELDS.

A series of Autotype Reproductions of the Chief Works of these
Masters is NOW ON VIEW at THE GRAFTON GALLERIES.
They include the chief Cartoons made by Ford Madox Brown for stained glass, his "Coriella's Portion," "English Boy," "Shake-spears, Homer, etc., etc., Rossetti's "Basta Beatrice," "Lamp of Memory," "Monna Rosa," "Proserpine," "The Annunciation,"
"The Blessed Damozel," Studies of the Oxford Frescoes, etc., etc.—
Particulars on application.

A NEW PORTRAIT OF ROBERT BROWNING.
Painted by D. G. ROSSETTI in 1855. Reproduced in Autogravure from the Original in the possession of C. Fairfax, Esq. Size of Work 4½ inches by 4½ inches. Proofs on Vellum, 51s.; on Japanese,
10s. 6d.; Prints, 5s.

THE WEST FRONT OF
PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.

From a negative specially taken before the erection of the scaffolding, by R. G. SCRIVEN, F.S.I. Printed in sepia or warm black, 18 inches by 15 inches, price 10s. 6d.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

A large series of the Chief Works of this Master, including the great Allegorical designs, and many others. Full particulars on application.

FRENCH PAINTERS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Permanent Carbon Reproductions of Works by Jean Francois
Millet, Theodore Rousseau, Jean Baptiste Corot, Daubigny, Jules
Breton, Dagnan Bouveret, W. Bouguereau, Meissonier, Carlu-Duran, Cabanel, Debat Pommerehne, E. Adan, etc., etc., in various sizes.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL OF
LANDSCAPE PAINTING.

Including the Chief Works of John Constable, R.A., J. M. W.
Turner, R.A., Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., R. P. Bonington, Old
Crome, W. J. Muller, David Cox, Girtin, Samuel Prout, etc., etc.
Abridged Catalogues on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street,
London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

SMITH, ELDER & CO'S LIST.

THROUGH LONDON SPECTACLES. By Constance Milman.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. "Pleasantly written essays on literary topics and Arcadian scenes."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THIRD EDITION OF "SIR GEORGE TRESSADY."

Now ready, third edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

SIR GEORGE TRESSADY. By Mrs. Humphry Ward, Author of "Robert Elamere," "The History of David Grieve," "Marcella," &c.

FOUR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE YOUNG CLANROY: a Romance of the '45. By the Rev. COSMO GORDON LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s.

OUT OF the DARKNESS. By Percy Fendall and Fox Russell. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GILBERT MURRAY. By A. E. Houghton. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story is gracefully written, and never fails to prove interesting."—Scotsman.UNDER the CIRCUMSTANCES. By Archie Armstrong. Crown 8vo, 6s. "Capital light reading—all the characters are naturally and brightly depicted."—St. James's Gazette.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE.

For MARCH.—Price ONE SHILLING.—CONTENTS.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. Chapters VII.—IX. By HENRY

STON MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," &c.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR (March).

THE DEATH OF QUEEN ELIZABETH: An Anniversary

Study. By SIDNEY LEE.

PICTURESQUENESS IN HISTORY. By the BISHOP OF

LONDON.

THE IRISH SCHOOL OF ORATORY. By J. F. TAYLOR, Q.C.

TEN DAYS AT COURT: The Emperor Nicholas's Visit.

A Diary kept by the late Hon. Sir CHARLES MURRAY,

P.O., June, 1844.

TWO AFRICAN DAYS' ENTERTAINMENTS. By Miss

MARY KINGSLEY.

ON the SPUR OF OCCASION. By E. and H. HENON.

NOTES ON LORD LEIGHTON. By GIOVANNI COSTA.

FAMOUS TRIALS: the Queen against Dr. Pritchard. By

J. B. ATLAY.

A CADDIE'S TRAGEDY. By HORACE G. HUTCHIN-

SON.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN, that on WEDNESDAY, 28th of APRIL NEXT, the Senate will proceed to ELECT EXAMINERS in the following departments for the year commencing July 1st, 1897:—

Examinerships.	Salaries (Each.)	Present Examiners.	Examinerships.	Salaries (Each.)	Present Examiners.
ARTS AND SCIENCE.
Two in Latin	£180	{ Prof. J. P. Postgate, M.A., Litt.D., Prof. A. S. Wilkins, Litt.D., LL.D., M.A.	LAW.
Two in Greek	120	{ G. E. Marindin, Esq., M.A. Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell, Litt.D., D.C.L.	Two in Jurisprudence, Roman Law, Principles of Legislation, and International Law	£100	{ W. A. Hunter, Esq., M.A., LL.D. J. E. Moyle, Esq., D.C.L.
Two in The English Language, Literature, and History	180	{ Israel Gollancz, Esq., M.A. Vacant.	Two in Equity and Real and Personal Property	50	{ John Simmonds, Esq., LL.D., M.A. Vacant.
Two in The French Language and Literature	120	{ James Bolelle, Esq., B.A. Prof. Victor Spier, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D.	Two in Common Law and Law and Principles of Evidence	50	{ His Hon. Judge Bompas, M.A., &c. Vacant.
Two in The German Language and Literature	80	{ A. W. Schüddekopf, Esq., Ph.D., M.A. Vacant.	Two in Constitutional History of England	25	{ Prof. F. C. Montague, M.A. Vacant.
Two in The Hebrew Text of the Old Testament, the Greek Text of the New Testament, the Evidence of the Christian Religion, and Scriptural History	50	{ Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., Ph.D., M.A. Vacant.	MEDICINE.
Two in Mental and Moral Science	120	{ Prof. S. Alexander, M.A. Prof. William Knight, LL.D.	Two in Medicine	210	{ W. H. Allshin, Esq., M.D. Vacant.
Two in Political Economy	80	{ Prof. H. S. Foxwell, M.A. Vacant.	Two in Surgery	200	{ William Anderson, Esq., F.R.C.S. Henry Morris, Esq., M.A., M.B., F.R.C.S. Prof. D. J. Cunningham, M.D., C.M.
Two in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy	200	{ E. W. Hobson, Esq., Sc.D., M.A., F.R.S. Vacant.	Two in Anatomy	150	{ F.R.S. Prof. G. D. Thane.
Two in Experimental Philosophy	210	{ Vacant. Vacant.	Two in Physiology	140	{ Prof. E. A. Schaffer, F.R.S. Prof. William Stirling, M.D., D.Sc., C.M.
Two in Chemistry	240	{ Prof. W. R. Dunstan, M.A., F.R.S. Vacant.	Two in Obstetric Medicine	105	{ G. E. Herman, Esq., M.R. Peter Horrocks, Esq., M.D.
Two in Botany and Vegetable Physiology	125	{ Prof. J. Reynolds Green, M.A., Sc.D. Prof. J. W. H. Trail, A.M., M.D., C.M.	Two in Medical Medicine and Pharmaceutical Chemistry	100	{ Sidney Phillips, Esq., M.D. W. Hale White, Esq., M.D.
Two in Comparative Anatomy and Zoology	120	{ F. E. Beddard, Esq., M.A., F.R.S. Vacant.	Two in Forensic Medicine	80	{ Thomas Stevenson, Esq., M.D. Vacant.
Two in Geology and Physical Geography	75	{ Prof. T. G. Bonney, Sc.D., M.A., F.R.S. Vacant.	Two in State Medicine	30	{ Edward Seaton, Esq., M.D. Vacant.
			Two in Mental Physiology	25	{ Prof. S. Alexander, M.A. T. Clay Shaw, Esq., M.D., B.A.
			MUSIC.
			Two in Music	50	{ C. H. Lloyd, Esq., Mus. Doc. (Sir Walter Parratt, Mus. Doc.)

The Examiners above named are re-eligible, and intend to offer themselves for re-election.

Candidates must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before TUESDAY, MARCH 30th. (It is particularly desired by the Senate that no application of any kind be made to its individual Members.)

By order of the Senate,

F. VICTOR DICKINS, M.B., B.Sc., Registrar.

University of London, Burlington Gardens, W.,
March 3rd, 1897.

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

COCOA

J. W. ARROWSMITH, BRISTOL.

Gilt top, crown 8vo, 35s pp., Six Shillings.

ZISK A: THE PROBLEM of a WICKED SOUL

MARIE CORELLI.

50,000 Copies on Day of Publication.

SECRETS of the COURTS of EUROPE. By ALLEN UPWARD. Crown 8vo, 32 pp., 6s.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Price SIXPENCE.

The first printing of 50,000 copies is now exhausted.
A Second printing of 50,000 copies is now in the press and will be ready in a few days.

In medium 8vo, paper cover.

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

By Mrs. CRAIK.

NEW WORK BY WALTER WOOD.

Now ready at all Bookellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., large crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, gilt top, price 6s.

FAMOUS BRITISH WARSHIPS

and their COMMANDERS. By WALTER WOOD, Author of "Barrack and Battlefield," &c.

"Pleasantly written and readable as it is, it cannot but prove welcome to a large number of readers who have no access to the heavier naval literature from which it is drawn."—Scotsman.

In 1 vol., large crown 8vo, gilt top, price 6s.

BARRACK and BATTLEFIELD.

TALES of the SERVICE at HOME and ABROAD. By WALTER WOOD, Author of "A Captain in the Fusiliers," &c.

"Mr. Wood never fails to make his tragic point with force, and he presents the spirit of sturdy Tommy Atkins with fidelity to his original. A volume like this is always welcomed by both old and young."—Dundee Advertiser.
"There is nothing melodramatic about these narratives, which are obviously true to the life they profess to depict."—Globe.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY.

NOW READY, SIXTY-SIXTH EDITION.

1 vol., royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, 1s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

LODGE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE FOR 1897.

CORRECTED BY THE NOBILITY.

"That compendious and admirably printed guide to the peerage and baronetage of the British Empire has reached its sixty-sixth edition with the volume for 1897. The usefulness of this concise and carefully edited book is enhanced by the excellent and stout paper on which it is printed."—Pall Mall Gazette, December 28, 1896.

NEW and POPULAR NOVELS.

ALL in ALL. By Corinna A. Bruce.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SOUND of a VOICE. By Linda

GARDINER, Author of "His Heritage," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, 6s.

"An exceedingly able story."—Scotsman.

THE WOOLING of a FAIRY. By

GERTRUDE WARDEN, Author of "The Sentimental Sex," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A clever, well-written story, which has this merit, that the key of the well-constructed plot is hidden until the last chapter."—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN AUSTRALIAN DUCHESS. By

AMYOT SAGON, Author of "A Fair Palmist," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Sagon's brightly written romance."—Daily Telegraph

GENTLEMAN GEORGE: a Story

without a Heroine. By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN,

Author of "Britomart," "Her Debut," &c. 1 vol.,

crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mrs. Herbert Martin has produced an excellent story of country life, which loses nothing in interest from the fact that it has no heroine."—Scotsman.

BLIND BATS. By Margaret B. Cross,

Author of "Stolen Honey," "Newly Fashioned," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Miss Cross has a delightful style, fresh, crisp, and witty, without straining after epigrams, and her portraiture is throughout lifelike without being photographic."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The YOKE of STEEL. By C. J. Wills,

Author of "The Pit Town Coronet," &c., and GODFREY BURCHETT, Author of "Dominic Pen-terne," &c.

"The dialogue throughout is spontaneous and natural without lapsing into trivial platitudes or idle chatter. On the whole a capital novel."—Daily Telegraph.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,

13, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE post free on application.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

Edited by GLEESON WHITE and E. F. STRANGE.

Fully illustrated and well printed.

Crown 8vo, in specially designed cloth covers, 1s. 6d. each.

This Series of Monographs in small compass, which has been for some time in preparation, is planned to supply visitors to the great English Cathedrals with accurate guide-books, and also to present a complete record at a lower price, and more fully illustrated than any yet published.

SALISBURY. | CANTERBURY.
ROCHESTER. | OXFORD. | CHESTER.

[Just published.

[Ready immediately.

"Visitors to the cathedral cities of England must often have felt the need of some work dealing with the history and antiquities of the city itself and the architecture and associations of the cathedral, more portable than the elaborate monographs which have been devoted to some of them, more scholarly and satisfying than the average local guide-book, and more copious than the section devoted to them in the general guide-book of the county or district. Such a legitimate need the 'Cathedral Series,' now being issued by Messrs. George Bell & Sons under the editorship of Mr. Gleeson White and Mr. E. F. Strange, seems well calculated to supply. The volumes, two of which, relating to Canterbury and Salisbury, have already been issued, are handy in size, moderate in price, well illustrated, and written in a scholarly spirit. The history of cathedral and city is intelligently set forth, and accompanied by a descriptive survey of the building in all its detail. The illustrations are copious and well selected, and the series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

NEW and REVISED EDITION, post 8vo, 2 vols., 15s.

SLANG, JARGON, and CANT. A Dictionary of Unconventional

Phraseology, comprising English, American, Colonial, Tinkers', Yiddish, Pidgin, and Anglo-Indian Slang. With Philological Notes and Illustrative Quotations. Compiled and Edited by Professor ALBERT BARRERE, R.M.A., Woolwich, and CHARLES G. LELAND, M.A., Hon. F.R.S.L., Author of "The English Gypsies and their Language," &c., "Hans Breitmann," &c.

READY NEXT WEEK, 1897 EDITION LIMITED.

Pott 4to, printed on antique laid paper at the Chiswick Press. Price to Subscribers, 15s. net.

BOOK SALES of the YEAR 1896. Containing a Detailed Description of all the most important Books Sold at Auction, with the Names of the Purchasers, and the Prices realised. With complete Indexes of Names and Subjects, and General Introduction and Notes. By TEMPLE SCOTT.

NOTE.—The special features which last year earned for this work a welcome reception from bibliographers, book collectors, and booksellers will be continued in the present volume. In addition to the usual notes, there will be many collations of rarer items, and a subject as well as author index. A new feature entirely is the arrangement of each sale in alphabetical order. It has not been possible to give the purchasers' names in every case, but the instances of omission are not many. The editor claims that the record he presents is not a mere reprint of the catalogues of the auctioneers, but constitutes a practical guide for the book-collector, as well as an important record for the bibliographer.

The Publishers reserve to themselves the right of raising the price after publication. A few copies of the volume for 1896 are still on hand, and may be had for 15s. net each.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GOLF in THEORY and PRACTICE. Some Hints to Beginners.

By H. S. C. EVERARD. A Practical Manual. With 23 Illustrations from Life.

"One of the best books on golf that we have seen."—Manchester Guardian.

"Mr. Everard's book is full of good advice to beginners, but those who are proficient, and even 'scratch' men, may read it with advantage to themselves, and possibly to their play."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

ACHIEVEMENTS of CAVALRY. By General Sir Evelyn Wood,

V.O. G.O.B. G.O.M.G., Quartermaster-General. With 4 Maps.

SECOND EDITION of Vols. I. and II. now ready, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

THE DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A. With LORD BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.—New Volume.

Edited by Prof. J. W. HALES, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE AGE of WORDSWORTH. By Prof. C. H. Herford, Litt.D.,

Professor of English Literature in the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.—New Volume.

HORACE. A New Literal Prose Translation. By A. Hamilton

BRYCE, LL.D., Translator and Editor of "Vergil," &c. 3s. 6d.

[Immediately.

Also issued in Four Parts, sewed, 1s. each.—Part I. ODES, Books I. and II.—Part II. ODES, Book III. and IV., CARMEN, SEULABE, and EPODES.—Part III. SATIRES.—Part IV. EPISTLES and AER POSTICA.

ALDINE POETS.—New Volumes.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF JAMES THOMSON. Revised

Edition, with a New Memoir and Critical Appendix, by the Rev. D. O. TOVEY, M.A., Author of "Gray and his Friends," &c. 2 vols., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net each.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

THIRD THOUSAND NOW READY.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS
IN WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.

With 16 Full-page and numerous Text Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

NATURE.—"The book stands alone as a vivid picture of West African life by a writer whose point of view is as nearly impartial as we can ever hope to see."

FIELD.—"One of the most entertaining and instructive works that have come under our notice."

Volume II. now ready for delivery to Subscribers.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

By Professor W. M. SLOANE, Ph.D., L.H.D.

ILLUSTRATED.

In Twenty Parts at 4s. net each; or in Four Volumes at 24s. net each. (Supplied only in Sets.)

Also ready, Vol. I. and Parts I.—VI.

* Subscriptions (sent through a Bookseller) will be received at any time and the volumes or parts delivered at such intervals as may be convenient to the Subscriber.

THE DONGOLA EXPEDITION.

Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LETTERS FROM THE SUDAN.

By the Special Correspondent of "The Times"

(E. F. KNIGHT).

Reprinted from "The Times" of April to October, 1896.

With Illustrations and Plans.

ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.—"The letters form an admirable narrative of events, and have the vivid character which naturally results from the experienced hand of Mr. Knight."

BY FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LANDSCAPE in POETRY, from

HOMER to TENNYSON. With numerous Representative Quotations. By FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Suggestive, sympathetic, refreshing to the spirit."

Now ready, Vols. I. and II. of the

PROSE WORKS of WILLIAM

WORDSWORTH. Edited by Professor KNIGHT. With Portraits and Vignettes etched by H. MANESSE. Globe 8vo, 6s. each. [EVEREST SERIES.]

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Promises to be a final edition of one of the greatest and certainly of one of the most voluminous of modern poets."

MACMILLAN'S ILLUSTRATED STANDARD

NOVELS.—New Volume.

The MISFORTUNES of ELPHIN and RHODOPHENE. By THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK. With an Introduction by Prof. GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, antique paper, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, gilt sides, back, and edges, 5s.

TIMES.—"The whole tale is eminently readable, and the story carries the reader quickly along, Mr. F. H. Townsend's illustrations adding to the charm of a new edition that deserves to be thoroughly popular."

8vo, 10s. net.

EPIC and ROMANCE. Essays

on Medieval Literature. By W. P. KER, Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Professor of English Literature in University College, London.

TIMES.—"The book is the work of a scholar and a man of very wide reading."

BY EDWIN A. ABBOTT.

8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE SPIRIT on the WATERS.

The Evolution of the Divine from the Human. By EDWIN A. ABBOTT, Author of "Philochristus," &c. CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Dr. Abbott is emphatically a man to be listened to."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The volume is full of most instructive matter, put with the force and clearness of a past master in the art of teaching."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST

FOURTEENTH EDITION READY THIS DAY.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Forty-one Years in India:

FROM SUBALTERN TO COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

BY

FIELD-MARSHALLORD ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR, V.C.

Besides Maps and Plans, the Volumes contain Portraits on Steel and Copper of Sir JAMES OUTRAM, General NICHOLSON, Sir HENRY LAWRENCE, Sir ABRAHAM ROBERTS, Sir COLIN CAMPBELL, Sir WILLIAM MANSFIELD, LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA, Sir DONALD STEWART, Sir SAMUEL BROWNE, the AMIR of AFGHANISTAN, Sir ARTHUR HARDINGE, and Field-Marshal LORD ROBERTS.

"A vivid and simple narrative of things actually seen by a fighting man who, during forty-one years of Indian service, saw more hard fighting than almost any other Englishman of our time. It also records the experience of a military administrator who has conducted historical campaigns and been the presiding genius in the reorganisation of a great army. But to the general reader perhaps its chief charm will be glimpses which it gives, with a certain Cervantes-like naïveté, of the personality of the author. A hundred unconscious touches, in the camp, on the battlefield, and at the Council table, reveal to us the veritable hero of the British private, and the fearless leader of men whom every native soldier would follow to the death."

Times.

"It would be difficult to overstate the service which the author renders to the British nation by reminding it of the true temper and trustworthiness of one of its greatest weapons of security—the army.....The story of Lord Roberts's life should be studied by every young soldier.....The peculiar charm of the book is the modest and generous spirit which, like a golden thread, runs through it."

Athenæum.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH, 1897.

1. DEAR FAUSTINA. Chaps. VII.—IX.
2. THE BATTLE OF VAL.
3. TIME.
4. THE FATE OF THE LETTER.
5. WALPOLE AND "ST. HANNAH."
6. FOOL OR ANGEL?
7. ABBÉ SCARBON.
8. BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.
9. THE CAPITAL OF BURGUNDY.
10. THAT IMPOSSIBLE SHE.
11. THE CAREER OF CLAUDIA. Chaps. XIV.—XVI.

NEW NOVELS

At all Libraries and Booksellers'.

THE CAREER OF CLAUDIA.

By F. M. PEARD,

Author of "The Rose Garden," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BACKSLIDER. By CONSTANCE SMITH, Author of "The Repentance of Paul Wentworth." In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

THE MISTRESS of BRAE FARM. By ROSA N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TOWER of GHILZAN. By Surgeon-Major H. M. GREENHOW, Author of "Brenda's Experiment," "The Bow of Fate," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

ANTHONY BLAKE'S EXPERIMENT. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

GODDESSES THREE. By D. HUGH PRYOR. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

THE YOKE of FREEDOM. By CHARLES JAMES, Author of "On Turnham Green," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

READY IN A FEW DAYS, price 3s. 6d.

ESSAYS IN LIBERALISM.

CONTENTS.

THE LIBERAL TRADITION.

By HILAIRE BELLOC, late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford.

LIBERALISM AND WEALTH.

By FRANÇOIS W. HIRST, late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford.

LIBERALS AND LABOUR.

By J. ALLSEBROOK SIMON, late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford.

LIBERALISM IN OUTWARD RELATIONS.

By J. S. PHILLIMORE, Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

A LIBERAL VIEW OF EDUCATION.

By J. LAWRENCE HAMMOND, late Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford.

THE HISTORIC BASIS OF LIBERALISM.

By P. J. MACDONELL, late Scholar of Brasenose College, Oxford.

This book is the result of the Liberal revival recently so marked in the younger generation of Oxford men. The authors were originally brought together at the Union by a common belief in the adequacy of old principles to meet present-day difficulties. The essays put forward, from various points of view—historic, economic, moral, educational, imperial—a plea for the deductive method in politics, and urge a steady application of well-tried ideas to problems which mere hand-to-mouth opportunism cannot hope to solve. Mr. Gladstone has written to the authors of the volume a remarkable declaration criticising collectivist proposals which will be found in the preface.

NOTICE.—The Sixth and concluding Volume of SOCIAL ENGLAND, embracing the Period from the Battle of Waterloo to the General Election of 1885, will be published during the Spring. Price 18s.

CHEAP EDITION ready in a few days, price 10s. 6d.

THE STORY OF THE HEAVENS.

By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S.,

Lowndean Professor of Astronomy in the University of Cambridge.

Illustrated by Chromo Plates and Wood Engravings.

CHEAP EDITION NOW READY.

In 3 double vols., 6s. each.

CASSELL'S NATURAL HISTORY.

Edited by P. MARTIN DUNCAN, F.R.S.

With about 2,000 Illustrations.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LONDON, PARIS, AND MELBOURNE.WM. BLACKWOOD & SON'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

LIFE OF VICE-ADMIRAL
SIR GEORGE TRYON, K.C.B.

By Rear-Admiral C. C. PENROSE FITZGERALD.

With 2 Portraits and numerous Illustrations, several from Sir George Tryon's own Sketches.

Demy 8vo, 21s.

Times.—"He has drawn the portrait of a remarkable seaman, with a seaman's frankness and directness of delineation."

Spectator.—"The story of Tryon's life and services is admirably told."

Daily Telegraph.—"A fascinating and absorbing narrative, skilfully recounted."

Daily Chronicle.—"Should be read not by sailors only, but by every man who, with Tryon, regards the Navy as the right arm of England."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A well-written and valuable contribution to modern naval history."

BEATRICE HARRADEN'S NEW BOOK.

At all Booksellers'.

HILDA STRAFFORD AND THE REMITTANCE MAN.

Two Californian Stories.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN,

Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," "In Varying Moods,"

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PERIODS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE

THE FLOURISHING of ROMANCE and the RISE of ALLEGORY (TWELFTH and THIRTEENTH CENTURIES). By GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A., Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in Edinburgh University, and Editor of the Series. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Immediately.]

DOROTHEA GERARD'S NEW NOVEL.

Ready March 9.

A SPOTLESS REPUTATION.

By DOROTHEA GERARD (MADAME LONGARD DE LONGARD), Author of "Lady Baby," "The Wrong Man," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PROF. STORY'S NEW WORK.

THE APOSTOLIC MINISTRY in the SCOTTISH CHURCH. THE BAIRD LECTURE for 1897. By ROBERT HERBERT STORY, D.D. (Edin.), F.S.A. Scot., Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow; Principal Clerk of the General Assembly; and Chaplain to the Queen. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION OF BURTON'S "SCOTLAND."

THE HISTORY of SCOTLAND. from AGRICOLA'S INVASION to the EXTINCTION of the LAST JACOBITE INSURRECTION. By JOHN HILL BURTON, D.C.L., Historiographer Royal for Scotland. Vol. I., now ready. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHEAP RE-ISSUE IN SHILLING VOLS.

ANCIENT CLASSICS for ENGLISH READERS. Edited by Rev. W. LUCAS COLLINS. Vols. I. and II., now ready, limp cloth.

HOMER: the Iliad. HOMER: the Odyssey. By the EDITOR.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
The Poetry of Robert Burns	273
Dean Church's Writings	274
Print Collecting	276
A Successful Novelist: Old Style	276
The Moghul Architecture of Fatehpur Sikri	276
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	277
FICTION:
King Noanett—Tatterley—The Man of Straw—Gentleman George—The Last Recruit of Clare's—Madh o' the Pool, the Gipsy Christ, and Other Tales—Under the Circumstances—With the Red Eagle	279
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	281
New Books Received... ..	282
NOTES AND NEWS	283
GEORGE EBBS	284
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XVII., Samuel Pepys	284
THE BOOK MARKET	286
EDUCATIONAL NOTES	287
CORRESPONDENCE	287
MUSIC	288
SCIENCE	289
ART	289

REVIEWS.

MR. HENLEY'S "BURNS."

The Poetry of Robert Burns. Vol. III.
Edited by W. E. Henley and T. F. Henderson. (Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack.)

ALL things considered, Mr. Henley must be commended for courage. Burns rides the ways of literature hedged by a numerous and terrible guard of devoted Scots, and if any hat is not doffed as he passes the irreverent offender is a marked man. Who dares lay hands on a poet guarded by a nation? Now, Mr. Henley has not attempted a boulevercement of Burns; but he has offered an estimate of the nature of the poet's greatness as a song writer which is full likely to be ill-stomached by Scotsmen. The present reviewer once held even more treasonable views. He thought that Burns had departed from the old songs only to spoil them, and that his fine stanzas were lifted straight from the older Muse. A closer view overthrew the former notion; and now Mr. Henley's notes have modified the latter. He has shown that many supposed "originals" were later refacimientos from Burns; and, in particular, that Buchan and the Ettrick Shepherd are responsible between them for numberless fabrications. Investigation in this department is a melancholy task. Scottish song before Burns has been a boundless field for unscrupulous poetasters who wished to foist their concoctions on the public. The paths were made strait for them. Balladist after balladist had accumulated adaptation upon adaptation's head; and, lastly, Burns had apocalyptically summed up the prophets before him, and out-adapted them all. And as St. John gave rise to a brisk industry in forged apocalypses, which were fathered on everybody in the prophetic line from Enoch to the Angel Gabriel, so of the making of "originals" to Burns there was presently no end. Most often they were taken down from the lips of an old woman. Buchan, and Stenhouse, and Allan Cunningham, and Hogg—we can trust none of them; the trail of the old woman is over them all. The industry which Mr. Henley has displayed in unmasking forgeries, and investigating so far as possible the genuine sources of Burns's songs, can be dimly surmised to be extraordinary, though only those who have covered similar ground can estimate it aright. An edition by Mr. Henley is as likely to be definitive as anything we can imagine; and it is safe to say that from this centenary edition of Burns we may at last form a decided judgment of the poet's place among original masters.

This third volume is devoted exclusively to the songs. And in the songs it is that we are most face to face with the derived Burns. The manner of these derivations we shall a little consider before dealing with Mr. Henley's judgment of him. These poems we may roughly class as follows:

1. Those in which the song is written round a stanza or so from an older source; while sometimes occasional lines from the older source (or sources) are imbedded in his own portion.

2. Those which are more or less vamped (in Mr. Henley's phrase) from one or several older poems. Occasionally the entire song is thus vamped.

The first class is by far the larger. As an example, we may take the beautiful "It was a' for our rightfu' King," because Mr. Henley's researches in regard to it are peculiarly interesting and valuable. Published in Johnson's Musical Museum, it was not known to be by Burns. Sir Walter Scott assumed it to be an old Jacobite production—an opinion since generally adopted. Hogg even gave the author, a Captain Ogilvie, who fought at the Battle of the Boyne. But it is now proved to have been written by Burns; and Mr. Henley shows that it was founded on the ballad of "Mally Stewart," one copy of which (in the collection of Mr. Ebsworth) is of the date 1746, and which in its turn is derived from a black-letter ballad earlier than the Battle of the Boyne. Thus Mr. Henley disposes utterly of the supposed Jacobite authorship; and the song is henceforth an undisputed Burns. Now "Mally Stewart," as given by Mr. Henley, opens and closes thus:

"The cold Winter is past and gone, and now comes in the Spring,
And I am one of the King's Life-guards, and must go fight for my King,
My dear,
I must go fight for my King.

"The trooper turn'd himself about all on the Irish shore,
He has given the bridle-reins a shake, saying 'Adieu for evermore,
My dear,
Adieu for evermore.'"

We need not quote the well-known Burns. It is obvious that from the first stanza of the above he got the bare idea of his own first stanza; while the last stanza he has taken almost unaltered for his own third stanza. And that third stanza is the gem of his poem, though the first two lead nobly and adequately up to it. This fairly exemplifies the first class of his poems. His own words are a setting for the jewel he borrows, showing it off without vying with it; yet never too conspicuously below it—even when they are less fine than in this specimen; and always in perfect keeping.

Of the second class an admirable example is a poem into which Mr. Henley has gone minutely, with results so interesting that they would alone justify the value of his Notes. As this is a matter of closer comparison, we quote Burns's song entire:

"O, my luve is like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June:
O, my luve is like the melody
That's sweetly play'd in tune.

"As fair art thou, my bonnie lass,
Sae deep in luve am I;
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
Till a' the seas gang dry.

"Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
And the rocks melt wi' the sun:
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
While the sands o' life shall run.

"And fare thee weel, my only luve,
And fare thee weel awhile!
And I will come again, my luve,
Tho' it were ten thousand mile!"

This beautiful and famous song is almost entirely a cento from no fewer than four different sources, as Mr. Henley with great labour and clearness shows. The first stanza is from a black-letter, The Wanton Wife of Castle Gate.

"Her cheeks are like the Roses
That blossom fresh in June,
O, she's like a new-strung instrument
That's newly put in tune."

The greater part of the second stanza is Burns (for anything yet known); but its last line and the whole of the third stanza are compounded from two different stanzas in a couple of songs, both in a collection which it is highly probable was in Burns's hands. (They are inscribed with his name in a boyish writing, says Mr. Henley, but the signature has not been authenticated.) One is:

"The Day shall turn to Night, dear Love,
And the Rocks melt with the Sun,
Before that I prove false to thee,
Before my Life be gone, dear Love,
Before my Life be gone."

The other runs:

"The seas they shall run dry,
And rocks melt into sands;
Then I'll love you still, my dear,
When all those things are done."

The fourth stanza has a resemblance to one in the former of these two songs; but it appears to be derived more particularly from a chap-book poem in the British Museum, "The True Lover's Farewell":

"Fare you well, my own true love,
And fare you well for a while,
And I will be sure to return back again,
If I go ten thousand mile."

Here, then, thanks to Mr. Henley, we are able to show a perfect and undoubted example of our second class; a song which—except three lines—is entirely a mosaic, as composite as the case of a caddis-worm. The piecing is done with admirable, even wonderful skill. It is like the dish of a Roman epicure, composed of the picked and choice bits from many sources. The rudenesses of the originals are removed with the fewest, slightest, and deffest touches. The whole is put together so that not a juncture shows. It is a poet's work, not a doubt of it. Is it a poet's poem? If it be, we shall have to lower the standard of admission to the crack corps of song. Spartan law holds good in literature, where to steal is honourable, provided it be done with skill and dexterity: wherefore Mercury was the patron both of thieves and poets. But such an Autolycus as Burns was never "littered under Mercury" before. The poem we have analysed is among the beautiful things of literature. But twenty such could only entitle Burns to the regency of some Parnassian Petticoat Lane, and would rank him very much below the great translators. Therefore this second class of his songs must be put out of court in considering his place as a master.

There is yet a third class: the songs which are pure Burns. It is small, but obviously important. It includes such things as "John Anderson," "Bonnie Wee Thing," "Ae Fond Kiss," "The Silver Tassie," "My Wife's a Winsome Wee Thing," "Ye Banks and Braes"—to name a few at random. To the question whether Burns could write fine songs without another man's motif to hang them on, I think these furnish an undoubted affirmative answer. In this survey I have tried to show the conclusions to which Mr. Henley's searching investigation of Burns's indebtedness points; and his summary of the matter seems to me sound, well-weighed, and free from all partial emphasis.

"Here," he says, "is Burns's chief claim to perennial acceptance. He passed the folk-song of his nation through the mint of his mind, and he reproduced it stamped with his image, and lettered with his superscription: so that for the world at large it exists, and will go on existing, not as he found, but as he left it. . . . No such artist in folk-song as he has ever worked in literature. But a hundred forgotten singers went to the making of his achievement and himself. He did not wholly originate those master-qualities—of fresh and taking simplicity, of vigour and directness and happy and humorous ease, which have come to be regarded as distinctive of his verse; for all these things, together with much of the thought, the romance, and the sentiment for which we read and love him, were included in the estate which he inherited from his nameless forebears; and he so assimilated them that what is actually those forebears' legacy to him has come to be regarded as his gift to them. . . . He is thus national as no poet has ever been, and as no poet ever will, or ever can be, again."

These are hearty words, and, I think, just. Burns, like Homer, is not merely a poet, but a literature. He has succeeded in fulfilling the old savage ideal—he has eaten up all his predecessors, and become possessed of their united powers. It is useless to haggle overmuch about what he borrowed: one can only envy the gigantic luck of his chance. Such vamps as the one I have analysed from Mr. Henley's notes can only be credited to him as brilliant luck brilliantly used. But the pieces I enumerated of the third class prove that he could write charming songs without such luck; though I think, on the whole, they prove that he wrote still better when he borrowed. There is more inevitable felicity when he can work on an old groundwork. "John Anderson," indeed, has a homely pathos which stands by itself. And the early "Mary Morison," together with the opening of "The Silver Tassie," show possibilities of a finer and more romantic sentiment, which might have placed him higher (to my mind) as a purely original poet had he lived in another atmosphere than that of tavern revels and village wenchings. But the poems to the better-known "Highland Mary," though one of them has a line of concentrated passion, singularly recalling Mr. Coventry Patmore, are touched with something of eighteenth century artificiality—as usual, when he meant to be very fine. Taking him, borrowings and all, the merit of his songs lies in the partly dramatic kind; they display, vividly and pictorially, the life of a whole peasantry, as it has not been displayed in English literature. But it has been the tradition to claim for them a value as absolute poetry, equal to that of the finest lyric work; and here I must add something to what has been said by Mr. Henley. Looked at from this standpoint, I cannot but feel that the bulk of this volume is far from complete mastery. It needs Burns's excuse that he wrote hurriedly and for a purpose. Songs begun arrestingly, trail off ineffectually; eighteenth century elegances sometimes follow on the speech of simple passion. "Bonnie Wee Thing," charming and tender, ends with such an insipid eighteenth century stanza. He, too often, does not know where to stop. "It was a' for our rightfu' King" should have ended with the third stanza; the rest, far from poor, is nevertheless an anti-climax. It is not easy to select songs which are throughout up to the lyric high-water mark. As absolute poetry, I cannot think the bulk of these poems fit to rank with the exquisite Elizabethan lyrics, nor yet with some of the lovely snatches of the old Scottish Border muse. That muse had a magic in its simplicity not matched in these songs. Burns strangely considered "Helen of Kirkconnel" "silly to contemptibility"; yet it is more exquisite than anything unborrowed which he has written. He had emotion equal to any demands of song; but he had little imagination. He had passion and fondness; but only in one or two lyrics does he show the power of tenderness—which is not a quality very indigenous among a coarsened peasantry. Imagination and tenderness demand either the refinement of education or the refinement of pure and sweet life. These things might be in peasant song. They are in the songs of the Dimbovitza, which are higher as absolute poetry than anything within Burns's compass. Not because those songs are the outcome of greater genius, but because they are the outcome of a healthier and sweeter rustic state; a state in which the women were chaste and tender, the men brave and sober. Burns could well have sung it had he known it. But he found about him no higher joys than whisky and coarse amours; and the wonder is what he made of it all, not what he failed to make of it. I believe that Burns had genius, in another age and community, to have been a very great poet indeed. As it is, he was the greatest poet he saw his way to be. But how many of his lyrics would one put in an anthology of the very finest flower of song?

At any rate, our thanks are due to Mr. Henley for a masterly edition, which will enable each man to answer the question for himself. One question, however, he forces upon us, so much more pertinent than these merely personal objections of mine, that I have reserved it for the last. Most great poets have adapted pretty freely, and with genius. Burns has adapted with genius to an unparalleled extent. But what about a great poet in whom the adaptations are usually the best parts of his poems? It requires a little consideration—perhaps a little reconsideration. And the pith of Mr. Henley's work is, I think, that it compels the question, which may impel the reconsideration—of, may it be, that adjective "great"? Even this may come of what Mr. Henley has done, by making the extent and character of Burns's adaptations, for the first time, a thing certain and indisputable.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

DEAN CHURCH'S WRITINGS.

Occasional Papers. By the late R. W. Church. (Macmillan & Co.)

WHEN Dean Church was elected to an Oriel fellowship, a shrewd don observed, "There is such a moral beauty about Church that they could not help taking him." Certainly, Dean Church is to Anglicans very much what Cardinal Newman is to Catholics; the "moral beauty," the gracious spirit, the delicate austerity of the Oxford Movement at its noblest are at their finest in these two. Both masters of a pure, strong style, both saintly satirists, both fighting anchorites who knew the world, and were not of but in it, unspoiled and unsoiled, like the three children in the fire: both had a genius for spiritual things, plain to see in their very face and air, an impress of holy awe and habitual "recollection." These were white souls, Christian Virgils, wistful, subtle, touching, with a note of majestic melancholy in their speech about human life. Their writings, passionately sincere, lift everything on to the highest plane, where there is no room for the littlenesses and poverties of controversy, though plenty for righteous anger and a most angelically scathing scorn. There is a classic touch of high-bred courtesy, adorning their humility; they are true courtiers of the Courts of Heaven and "Knights of the Holy Ghost."

Newman's inferior in many things, and certainly in general range and effectiveness of genius, Church was his superior in literary knowledge; he might have been, and Newman never could, a man of letters, critic and historian, by secular profession. It is easy to think of him as an Anglican Mr. Leslie Stephen, or Mr. Goldwin Smith, or

Mr. Lecky, or Mr. Bryce. He writes studies and biographies of Bacon, Spenser, Dante, St. Anselm; he investigates the "Beginnings of the Middle Ages"; he concerns himself with the origins and growths of religion, of civilisation; he has a personal passion for the arts and sciences. But his master passion was spiritual, an absorption in the life of the spirit, in religious faith, and for the achievements of humanity only as viewed in the light of that; "little else is worth study," says Browning, one of Church's favourites, than "the development of a soul," and Church was ever showing how through Christianity alone the soul finds the satisfaction of its desires.

These two volumes contain his contributions to the Guardian, the Times, and the Saturday Review; it is almost strange to note how the least theological or ecclesiastical of them contrives to bring its theme into a religious relation. They are admirable journalism, full of keen wit and vigorous handling, with no "smell of the sacristy" about them; yet they remind us of the saying of a famous Catholic priest in America, that were St. Paul alive to-day he would be a journalist. These reviews are not sermons, but they are steeped in high ethical feeling, in disciplinary purpose. Sometimes there is a touch of the mystic in his gentle impatience with such religious writings as the fictions of Renan and Mrs. Humphry Ward; he sighs a half humorous, half mournful, "You don't know!" He partly rejoices over Renan's Souvenirs, because they show so clearly that his doubts and griefs and difficulties were purely intellectual, questions of history and philology; that Christianity was never a real thing to him, a life lived intensely from within. And such writers ignore the standing miracle of the presence of Christianity throughout the ages, never impotent, never obsolete, never changing: "in the world, as the family is in the world, as the state is in the world, as morality is in the world, a fact of the same order and greatness." They do not face the problem fairly: the prolonged and vast existence of Christianity as a moral power, profoundly intertwined with the world's progress, and interspersed into the life of civilisation, as satisfying to the highest intellect now as to the lowest two thousand years ago, essentially unshaken by the most momentous events and discoveries, often illuminated and supported by them, is an historic fact indefinitely more vital than tentative theorising about the date of the Book of Daniel or the precise structure of Isaiah. The moral beauty and strength of Christianity must be faced; so, too, the extreme difficulty of supposing them to be the fruits of a "delicious legend," assisted by pious or scarce conscious fraud, by teaching self-deception. As Church, writing upon the Vie de Jésus, pleasantly puts it: "History has seen strange hypotheses; but of all extravagant notions, that one that the world has been conquered by what was originally an idyllic gipsying party is the most grotesque." Christendom given as an effect, with its heroic conquests, its army of martyrs, its long roll of moral victories, its triumphant and persistent vitality, where shall we find a cause commensurate? Not in the perilously fragile fancies of Renan, to whom Christianity was nothing more than a picturesque feature in the history of the world.

From such inadequacies of criticism and exegesis Church turns with eager respect to "Ecce Homo," so weighty and rich in its analysis and knowledge of character, so methodically impartial. Wherever he finds a certain gravitas, a "high seriousness," some sense of the unbounded importance to mankind implied in religious questions, he is a cordial critic of schools and men opposed to him: Maurice, Robertson, Stanley, Bunsen. He sees the greatness of Loyola or Lamennais, and can be just to Pattison or Bishop Fraser; and he loves to dwell upon the winning candour, the fierce zeal for truth, of his former companion and master, Newman. He had that high-minded catholicity which can appreciate to the utmost aliens and adversaries, and has no love of scoring points against them; he is a statesman among critics, not a politician. His scholar's instinct also comes to the help of his Christian courtesy and charity; he is averse from all pedantry or haste, content to stand midway in a golden mediocrity between the more confident extremes. Like the other chief men of the Oxford Movement, he shrank from display, emphasis, excess; his writing is beautifully calm, lucid, temperate, reserving its passionate capacities for due occasions. Never was an ecclesiastic, holding very decided convictions, less of a partisan, less tainted by the spirit of "the religious press" or "the clerical party," which delight to say in their haste, and sometimes in their leisure, that all but themselves are liars. The seven papers upon questions of ecclesiastical politics are patterns of moderation and judicial equability. To view the questions, men, books, events of the day sub specie æternitatis, in the light of eternities and verities, more stable than Carlyle's, how rare it is!

One of the Dean's predecessors at St. Paul's, the marvellous Donne, prayed that his "intermitting aguish piety" might "change to evenness"; Church was ever "even," keeping the "noiseless tenour of his way" with steady purpose, with vacillation as little as with violence. In him we see the "beauty of holiness," its æsthetic superiority to indifference or revolt. But it is a beauty born of distinct faith faithfully carried into practice, not the vague "charm," which is the main thing for Renan. He is thoroughly modern and of his age; yet we can think of him in company with Walton's hieratic heroes, with Saunderson and Hooker: he enriches the poetry of Anglicanism; that grave and gracious temperament, which marks its best men in Jacobean and Caroline times, was notably his. Of these volumes we cannot say what their author had but too much occasion to say of Pattison's posthumous Essays: "This is a very interesting but a very melancholy collection of papers." For Church had what Pattison lacked, vigour of intellect not soured into spitefulness and scorn; scholarship, which recognised the limitations of scholarship; strong convictions, which did not excommunicate their antagonists.

PRINT COLLECTING.

Fine Prints. By Frederick Wedmore. (The Collector Series.) (George Redway.)

THE fine art of collecting prints is not one to be learnt from books; Mr. Wedmore would, we fancy, be the first to confess it. Yet books about collecting, if written in the proper spirit, may be of use as well as pleasant. And Mr. Wedmore certainly writes in the proper spirit. He sets his face against the mere accumulation of treasures, the easy ambition of the merely rich; he authorises no fad, no carefully fostered fashion of the hour; he has many wise hints about deliberation of choice and about the kinds of impression which are desirable. On such matters Mr. Wedmore is an admirable guide. The price of prints is a different question. Is there such a thing as a price? We doubt it. It is so largely an affair of accident, even when the particular kind of print happens to be little affected by fashion. And, again, fashions may be created in any kind of print. A little while ago it was Bartolozzi who was pushed into vogue. Mr. Wedmore justly says that this chief of a "nerveless school" has been "absurdly puffed"; and he is equally just and severe upon the colour-prints which are now the rage. Woodcuts printed in one or two colours—"chiaroscuros," as they are called—are, indeed, some of them fine things, especially those done in Germany and the earliest of those done in Italy. But it is not these which fetch high prices, but the mostly tasteless and nearly always unsuccessful attempts at colour-printing from copper, generally made when the plate was too worn to print decently in honest black and white, and in the best examples—even those of Janinet and Debucourt—not to be compared with the real masterpieces of engraving. One never knows what the next rage may be; and consequently no record of prices current can be secure against becoming obsolete in a few months. And even of prints whose price is supposed to be more or less fixed, how difficult it is to say what one may have to give for them! Mr. Wedmore gives us the prices which certain Rembrandts and Dürers have fetched at certain famous sales: that is all one can do, no doubt. But one has to remember that the prestige of great collections must be paid for. On the other hand, it often happens that fine prints sell for something far below their value at sales which take place at bad seasons of the year, or are, for other reasons, ill-attended.

The moral of all this to the collector is that he must learn his subject thoroughly. When he has learnt to know fine impressions at sight, let him use his knowledge boldly, and take advantage of all opportunities, attending sales whenever he can. The printshops do not yield finds now as they did once; but if only the collector knows his subject well enough, he need not despair of being rewarded now and then. At least he may congratulate himself on the fact that there is no place in the world so rich as London in the little shops where treasure-finding is possible.

Mr. Wedmore's book will be to him rather a companion than a guide, at least in the severely practical sense. But whoever is in doubt as to what kind of print he should collect will certainly profit by Mr. Wedmore's trained and fastidious taste. If any criticism is to be offered on Mr. Wedmore's counsel in choosing, it must be that his choice is rather too limited. The etchings of Piranesi, for instance, might surely have a mention. Perhaps they do not appeal to Mr. Wedmore as Méryon's do, but they are not things to be passed over. The most serious omission, however, in the book is the entire neglect of woodcuts. Mr. Wedmore apologises for the omission, and seems to suggest that they are scarcely worthy of being collected. But what of Dürer's "Life of the Virgin"? or of Holbein's "Dance of Death"? or of Campagnola's cuts after Titian? or Jegher's after Rubens?—to say nothing of Altdorfer and Ugo da Carpi, and their rivals in Germany and Italy. True, the wood-block yields a far greater number of impressions than the copper-plate; but fine impressions of woodcuts are just as rare as fine impressions of etchings, and the difference between the fine impressions and the poor impressions is just as great—a fact not generally realised.

Mr. Wedmore makes up for his neglect of woodcuts by a chapter on lithographs, in which, as in his chapter on modern etchers, he has some good things to say by way of criticism. It is a pity that it should have been thought necessary to illustrate the book. The collector, surely, should have only the finest things in their finest state before him as his standard: these cheap and bad reproductions will only familiarise his eye with miserable parodies.

A SUCCESSFUL NOVELIST: OLD STYLE.

Tobias Smollett. By Oliphant Smeaton. "Famous Scots Series." (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

"A SCHOLARLY man, sir, although a Scot." So Dr. Johnson used to touch off Smollett. There is hardly the beginnings of a portrait in the description, for Smollett was neither a typical Scot nor a ripe scholar. Yet how many people who have laughed over Winnifred Jenkins's letters or the humours of Commodore Hawser Trunnion and Godfrey Gauntlet know what manner of man he was who gave us these creations? It was time, on the whole, that the existing biographies of Smollett should be supplemented by this handy, inexpensive volume.

Tobias Smollett's father died not much honoured, and it was to his grandfather and uncles that the boy owed his education. In 1740, being then nineteen, he came up from Edinburgh to London, qualified to be a surgeon, but only eager to write. He had about him a few guineas, and the usual tragedy.

The rejection of The Regicide by the theatres embittered Smollett for nine years, when, having won fame with Roderick Random, he published it by subscription with a vitriolic preface. It fully vindicated the managers. His guineas were off his mind much sooner, and we find him engaging himself as a surgeon's mate on the Cumberland, one of the vessels taken out by Sir Challenger Ogle to the assistance of Admiral Vernon in the expedition against Carthage. Carlyle picks him out in the crowd as "one Tobias Smollett, looking over the waters there and the fading coasts, not without thoughts." His thoughts, whatever they were, could not have told him that he was going to the Indies to obtain materials for Roderick Random, or to find a wife in Nanny Lascelles, a young Kingston heiress. To be correct, she was an heiress when he wooed her; but, her wealth going astray, he won only a good woman, who loved him dearly. Leaving his bride or fiancée (there is some vagueness about the date of the marriage) in Jamaica, Smollett returned to drive his pen in London. He did so to some purpose, writing satires that were read, and that provoked a friend to ask him: "Dost not fear the Government, Smollett?" "Fear the Government!" he answered. "No man need fear a Government provided he does not show he fears it." Smollett's courage in one situation would turn to obstinacy in others. Rich asked him to write the libretto of an opera for Covent Garden. He wrote it, and Handel wrote the music. Rich wanted a few alterations; Smollett absolutely refused to make them, and the piece was withdrawn from rehearsal, to Smollett's loss. Handel said, with a shrug: "That Scotchman is ein tam fool; I would haf made his vurk immortal." However, Smollett was about to do immortal work on his own account.

In January, 1748, appeared Smollett's first novel, Roderick Random. Mr. Smeaton reminds us that Clarissa Harlowe had been out a year; Tom Jones was announced. Smollett thought he saw room for himself; and Mr. Smeaton explains how:

"He was of too original a caste of genius to sink into the mere imitator of either Richardson or Fielding. He noted carefully that the former had monopolised the novel of sentiment, as the latter had taken as his own the novel of character. But he also saw that the novel of incident was still unappropriated in English fiction. This department he determined to make his own. Taking the Gil Blas of Le Sage as his model, he endeavoured as far as possible to make his tale interesting by the number and variety of the events introduced, feeling assured that the portraiture of character would not be of an inferior type, if only he could draw on his past experiences for material."

Smollett shrank and expanded within his limits, but he never essayed to go beyond them. He knew what he could do, and what he could not; and in the domain of his literary work his self-guidance might have been consciously framed on Jacob Böhme's fine saying: "Whoso lives quietly in his own will, like a child in the womb, and lets himself be led and guided by that inner principle from which he is sprung, is the noblest and richest on earth." Alas, outside his work Smollett did not live quietly, did not control himself. The tragedy of his biography lies in a great part between the huge successes of his books and the undammed flow of his misfortunes. After Roderick Random came Peregrine Pickle, into which he worked some of the incidents of a visit which he paid, with Mrs. Smollett, to Paris. Then came an irrelevant return to surgery at Bath, dictated by Mrs. Smollett, who hankered to see her husband in a "respectable" calling. It only ended in a house at Chelsea, and a new squaring of Smollett's elbows to his desk. In 1753 The Adventures of Ferdinand, Count Fathom, not a desirable book, appeared, and sold largely. But Smollett remained poor, and just about this time he caned one of his critics. The costs in the action for damages which followed made him poorer still. The hounds of debt were on his track. Already he could write to a friend: "My life is sheer slavery; my pen is at work from nine o' the clock the one morning until one or two the next." Why follow the cortège of his hopes? What though his Don Quixote (1755) advanced his fame (the publishers had advanced the money); what though Edinburgh fêted him as it fêted Burns forty years later; what though his History of England (1758) allied his name to scholarship; what though Humphry Clinker wedded it for ever to romance!—debts and quarrels and failing health would not be expelled from his life. Raging against his enemies, dodging his duns, plying his pen to ever meaner issues, yet never repining or letting Nancy repine, Smollett went down the hill. In the cemetery at Leghorn, in sight of the sea, he found his first—last—rest.

Mr. Smeaton has produced a very readable and vivid biography, but he might have indexed it. His fault of style is a tendency to use stilted language, as when he writes of Smollett's father: "He was one of those interesting individuals whose idleness enables his Mephistophelic Majesty to make a strong bid for the fee-simple of their soul."

SOME INDIAN HOUSES.

The Moghul Architecture of Fathpur Sikri. Part II. By Edmund W. Smith. With 103 plates. Archaeological Survey: N.-W. Provinces and Oudh. (Oudh: Government Press.)

THE admirable work begun by Mr. E. W. Smith last year shows every sign of fulfilling the promise of its first volume. It is satisfactory to find that the architecture of our Indian empire is gradually being recorded in as accurate and full a manner as are the Monuments Historiques of France. Nothing approaching to a scientific or complete description of the buildings near Agra has hitherto existed. For the work in Agra itself we must still wait with what patience we may. In the meanwhile, we have this careful record of the smaller Fathpur Sikri where Akbar was the first to live and the last to build. The greatest glory of the town is, of course, the mosque, which will be dealt with in a future volume; the book before us gives an elaborately-detailed description of two buildings only: the home which Bir Bal, Akbar's favourite Minister, made for his daughter in 1571; and the dwelling-place of the Sultana Jodh Bai. Rarely have any royal ladies been more exquisitely shrined; and though several descriptions have been published of their houses, none has done so much justice to the laborious and patient skill of their decorators as these careful drawings which Mr. Smith and his staff have now given us.

Of those who lived here there is but little certain known. Bir Bal, a "dealer in encomiums" from Kalpi, had won his position of favourite at Akbar's court by his wit and his clear head. The one amused his master; the other was of real service upon several missions involving delicate diplomacy; and Akbar sincerely mourned his loss. The owner of the larger palace, a more shadowy personage, was one of Akbar's wives, probably the mother of that Jehangir who succeeded him to the throne in 1605, when terrestrial politics had ceased to interest either the daughter of Bir Bal or the consort of the emperor. The palace of Jodh Bai, though larger and more perfect in its preservation of the various forms of Eastern life, seems also more remote from ordinary human sympathy, for it has far less of that intimate appeal to personality or individual taste which is the chief charm of the residence which Akbar's Poet Laureate built.

To the north of that narrowing triangle above Gwalior, where the Chambal flows to meet the river Jumna, the road that winds from the existing town of Fathpur Sikri towards Agra leaves Akbar's buildings northward upon its left-hand side. Close by the royal stables, though screened from them originally by a high stone wall, is Bir Bal's house, overlooking the steep northern roadway to the Elephants' Gate, with western windows opening upon the lake that in the days of Akbar filled what are now merely low-lying open fields. Like all the buildings round it, the house is of red sandstone standing upon a spacious concrete platform, borne above pillars and flat arches, much after the fashion of the masonry of Holland. It consisted simply of four rooms upon the ground floor with entrance porches, and two square chambers above set cornerwise and covered by domes, in which the elevation gives no idea of the internal structure. This upper floor, reached by two narrow and steep staircases, is built of very thick and massive walls, thinned out at intervals by those deep carved recesses which are so characteristic of the Moghul architect. In Plate II. is shown one of the graceful balconies from which the ladies of the zenana might watch the royal barges plying on the lake beneath.

But if the plan of the house itself is simple enough, the ingenuity of its builders found full sway in the decoration of the walls. Like the "gigantic jewel-case" of Victor Hugo, this tiny palace is fretted over in every space and corner with a patient infinity of detail that is astounding. Much of it has suffered during recent years, and the house has been used as a visitors' bungalow; but Mr. E. W. Smith's careful drawings, while they preserve for us what must inevitably decay, will also direct attention to treasures of workmanship which need not suffer any further damage, it may be hoped, from careless ignorance.

We can refer but too briefly to Jodh Bai's Mahal, the second house so carefully described and illustrated by Mr. Smith. It is the oldest building in the city. There is a distinct Hindû feeling pervading the whole design; sculptures of Hindû deities have been found within it during recent years; and the bell and chain—one of the oldest of Hindû ornaments—is freely carved upon the piers. The early period of the work is also marked by the presence of colour decoration upon the parapet and the blue encaustic tiling of the roofs. The most beautiful examples of this interior decoration are the medallions in the domes, exquisite designs in which five concentric rows of rich filigree ornament (in stucco that was originally coloured) radiate outwards from the centre, after the fashion of the Moorish decorators.

We have only space left to point out what we consider the most beautiful example of carving in Fathpur Sikri, the perforated screen of red sandstone shown in Plate CIII. Its flowing tracery proves that it was a later addition to the completed building, and its position on the viaduct, standing out against the clear blue of the Eastern sky, is but one more proof of the excellent judgment and good taste of its owner. Such work was probably never executed from drawings, as is now the custom. The pattern was roughly traced out upon the stone itself by a pointer, and from this rude outline the mason matured his design, giving a free scope to his own fancy. This system has produced as excellent results—in very different mediums—as did the freedom accorded to the workmen long before upon the façades and capitals of the Gothic cathedrals.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Europe in the Middle Age. By Oliver J. Thatcher, Ph.D., and Ferdinand Schwill, Ph.D. (Murray.)

THIS somewhat alarming tome of 681 pages is stated in the preface to be meant as "a text-book for the use of the freshmen and Sophomore classes in the American college." It comes midway between the high school handbook and the treatise for specialists. Its form is primarily determined and its conditions laid down by the regulations for a course of general European history at the University of Chicago. The period covered is roughly from the coming of the barbarians and the break-up of the Roman Empire to the Reformation; and the object of the authors has been less to concentrate attention upon any one people than to provide a general survey of the origin and development of material and moral forces which profoundly affected the whole of Europe. They write the history not of nations, but of a civilisation, the Phoenix civilisation, which sprang up out of the ashes of the old Roman one. "The Migrations of the Nations," "Feudalism," "The Growth of the Papacy," "Mohammed, Mohammedanism and the Crusades"—such are the titles of some of their chapters. That they have altogether succeeded in their ambition we will not say. The book is laborious, earnest, judicious; but it seems to us to lack the freshness of touch, the power of stimulus which, after all, is the first requisite in a book that makes mainly for education. It is, indeed, no easy task to dispose of twelve centuries and so vast a mass of matter upon the indicated lines—one that requires distinct and remarkable literary gifts, the vivacity of a J. R. Green, for instance, rather than the erudition of a Freeman. Still, in default of a work of genius, the essay of Drs. Thatcher and Schwill will probably be even educationally serviceable; and for the reader who is content to bring his own stimulus with him it is a compact and convenient summary.

Arden of Feversham. Edited by the Rev. Ronald Bayne. ("Temple Dramatists": Dent.)

Arden of Feversham, with its "bourgeois Clytemnestra," Alice Arden, is the best extant example of that favourite type of Elizabethan tragedy which drew its material from contemporary causes célèbres. It has been edited several times since its rediscovery by Edward Jacob in 1770, but never in so convenient a form as this. Edward Jacob had the audacity to boldly claim the play as Shakespeare's, and many recent critics have been inclined at least to hedge in the matter. Mr. Bullen, for instance, who edited it in 1887, suggests that it may have been "retouched here and there" by the master's hand. Mr. Bayne appears rather shy of defining his own precise opinion on the matter. But he points out that great as are the excellences of the play, they are not precisely those which we might expect from Shakespeare in 1592, when it was first published. Shakespeare was then a young man: the power of Arden of Feversham is essentially mature. This line of criticism might be pushed further with excellent results. The fact is, that there is absolutely no evidence for attributing the play to Shakespeare, except that it is anonymous and rather above the ruck of anonymous plays. No external indications connect it with the companies for which Shakespeare wrote: and the most cursory examination of its rhythmical and stylistic peculiarities will show that it could not be fitted into any known period of his work. Be this as it may, the volume is a welcome addition to the "Temple Dramatists," and we trust that the publishers will see their way to following it up with many more of the so-called "apocryphal plays of Shakespeare."

A Primer of English Literature. By Stopford A. Brooke. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE's second revision of this Primer is just published. It will be remembered that on its appearance, twenty years ago, Matthew Arnold reviewed the work at some length, suggesting several alterations which he considered would bring it still nearer perfection. Mr. Brooke, in the second edition, was found to have accepted almost every hint: one of the rare instances of the criticised profiting from the critic. Here, in the third edition, various other emendations are made, although almost on the last page we find one slip—Coventry Patmore being spoken of as still living. The limit of the little book, which is one of the most remarkable pieces of compression in our language, is still the year 1832; but Mr. Brooke appends a review of later English poetry. In it we are glad to find this tribute to William Barnes, of Dorsetshire: "The time will come when the dialect in which he wrote will cease to prevent the lovers of poetry from appreciating at its full worth a poetry which, written in the noble tongue of the poor and of his own heart, is as close to the lives and souls of simple folk as it is to the woods and streams, the skies and farms, of rustic England."

The Soldier's Song-Book. Edited by F. A. Cellier and George Miller. (W. Clowes & Sons.)

A LITTLE threepenny collection of soldier songs—words and music—with the above title, lies before us. The cover is the true military red, and from the Commander-in-Chief comes a concise testimonial. "Troops," writes Lord Wolseley, "that sing as they march will not only reach their destination more quickly and in better fighting condition than those that march in silence, but inspired by the music and words of national songs, will feel that self-confidence which is the mother of victory." Cromwell knew this too. Indeed, there can have been little concerning the private soldier that Cromwell did not know. But Cromwell's men sang hymns: they did not sing "The Girl I've Left Behind Me." For the selection of these songs Mr. F. A. Cellier and Mr. George Miller have been responsible, picking out four-and-twenty from the lists sent to them by various adjutants of regiments. The original idea belongs, it seems, to Col. Sir Howard Vincent. The songs seem well chosen. We miss one or two: "John Brown's Body," for example, and "The Wearing of the Green," which we have always looked on as marching favourites, but doubtless the adjutants know best. Also there is nothing by Mr. Kipling, but that, probably, is the fault of his composers. Music before words—that is the rule in such matters.

Reliques of Old London. Drawn in Lithography by T. R. Way. With an Introduction and Descriptions by Henry B. Wheatley. (George Bell & Sons.)

MR. WAY has drawn upon stone a number of old London buildings which have lately vanished, or whose existence is being prolonged by good luck and the prayers of antiquarians. It is cause for joy to some of us that, being young, we have yet seen Temple Bar and Sir Paul Pindar's house in Bishopsgate. But these are past mourning. We shall soon see the dissipation of that seventeenth century gloom which Holywell-street alone can offer us, and the White Horse in Fetter-lane is going or gone. Mr. Way has recorded both. He has also given us back Nell Gwynne's house in Drury-lane, to which only six years ago one might have made a pilgrimage. The Strand, Wych-street, Cripplegate, the Borough, and Holborn furnish other objects for Mr. Way to draw and for Mr. Wheatley to describe. A handsomer volume than theirs rarely comes into a reviewer's hands: the cover design, composed of a background of dull red brickwork, bearing a tablet in buff and gold for the title, is particularly happy. But we do not know why the bricks are represented as of Flemish bond instead of Old English, seeing that every brick building pictured by Mr. Way was reared before the Flemish was introduced into this country.

The Literary Year-Book, 1897. Edited by F. G. Aflalo. (George Allen.)

A LITERARY year-book is a good idea, and one can afford to be indulgent to a first attempt to carry it out. But the book before us is too sentimental. It should be scientific. Mr. Ernest Rhys's "Literary Cause" is a breathless composition, in which more or less meaningless praise is meted out to more or less unknown writers, while works of real importance are omitted or very inadequately dealt with. Fourteen pages are allotted to a calendar which, we think, could have been well spared or compressed. The biographical sketches of active writers, each accompanied by a portrait, are a good feature, but the articles on "The Future of Books," "Long Books and Short," and similar subjects, are not specially pertinent to the year 1896, and are too slight to be valuable. No doubt the editors will recognise the importance of making their next issue a complete, orderly, and cool-headed summary of the literary activities of the present year. That is what is wanted. They will also doubtless thoroughly revise their Directory of British Authors, which in its present form is made ridiculous, alike by its omissions and inclusions.

Pius the Seventh. By Mary H. Allies. (Burns & Oates.)

THE diplomatic contest which Miss Allies has set out to record began with the present century and lasted fourteen years. Already Bonaparte's foot was upon the last rung of the ladder. In France he had restored order out of chaos. One thing only was lacking to perfect the social edifice—the moral force of an established religion. That there should be a clergy to sing Te Deum for his victories, a pontiff to assist at his coronation, and a submissive hierarchy to teach the rising generation its duty towards "our Emperor Napoleon," was demanded, he thought, not less as the complement of his own glory than as the necessary condition of dynastic and national stability. And it came as a surprise to his magnificent egoism that, whereas kings and peoples were prostrate at his nod, a mere principle should stand upright. Throughout the whole of his long contest with the occupant of the Chair of Peter he was fully convinced that nothing but a wrong-headed obstinacy stood between him and the accomplishment of his end. It is a squalid story that follows—of the infirm old man hurried from town to town, buried in Savona, cut off from his friends and counsellors, subjected to alternate bullying and cajolery till, lest his reason should desert him before his life, he longed for death. It was in such a paroxysm of perplexity that he set his name to the fatal Concordat of Fontainebleau, from which, with tears of shame and contrition, he afterwards withdrew his consent. With painful accuracy Miss Allies traces the details of this persecution, and with a controlled indignation that lays hold upon the reader's sympathy. It is a story that a Catholic can well afford to write, for, unpleasant as are the details of pusillanimous truckling on the part of the less worthy ecclesiastics, the event served still more closely to cement that unity which is the special boast of the Roman Church. Never in the history of the Church has that organic unity been so rendered manifest as when, by a stroke of his pen, Pius VII. deposed a whole national episcopate. And this unprecedented exercise of Apostolic jurisdiction was instigated by one who compared himself to Henry VIII., and grudged to Augustus the "Summus Pontifex" of his superscription.

The People's Bible History. Edited by Rev. Geo. C. Lorimer, LL.D. With an Introduction by Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. (Christian Commonwealth Co.)

THE popular edition of the above work, just issued, can hardly fail to receive a very wide welcome. This is probably the best and most comprehensive aid to Bible study which scholarship has yet given to the intelligent but not learned reader. The genesis of the work is interesting. As a first step in the undertaking an endeavour was made to gauge the actual need of such an historical accompaniment to the Bible. A very large number of inquiry circulars was sent out to the American public, with the result that 219,000 replies were received stating that such a work would be a boon. The work was then undertaken. It was published at a price which, while within the means of a large number of students and libraries, was prohibitive to a larger and not less eager public. But the present issue of a popular edition at prices ranging from £1 to £1 10s. fulfils the real objects of the undertaking; it brings an organised body of the best modern Biblical scholarship within the means and comprehension of the average man. The volume which accomplishes this is a handsome quarto of more than nine hundred pages, printed in double columns on good hot-pressed paper, and well illustrated with maps and reproductions of pictures by Raphael Bida, David Roberts, and such photographs taken by modern travellers as could best add grace to the book. The coloured maps are clear and good. The text was entrusted to eighteen writers, including Mr. Gladstone, whose general introduction has been recognised as an eloquent and touching plea for the authenticity and moral authority of the Bible. Prof. A. H. Sayce follows Mr. Gladstone with a special introduction to Old Testament literature and history, in which the aims, the limits, and the great mater Biblical research are named and briefly discussed. With a paper on the Manuscripts of the Old Testament the preparatory section of the work is completed, and the recital of the Bible story period by period, and by scholars selected for their respective attainments, is begun.

* * *

Eras of the Christian Church. Edited by John Fulton. (T. & T. Clark.)

This series of books, American in origin, is designed to explain the existing divisions of Christendom, and promote their effacement, by "a calm and impartial study of the history of the Church in its long and varied experience under the guidance of the Holy Spirit." There will be in all ten monographs, each concerned with a single epoch in the life of the Church. Three volumes are already published, and they are: The Age of Hildebrand, by Prof. M. R. Vincent, D.D., of New York; The Age of the Great Western Schism, by Clinton Locke, D.D., of Chicago; and The Age of the Crusaders, by J. M. Ludlow, D.D. There is a thoroughness in the get-up, arrangement, and indexing of these volumes that inspires confidence. The period treated in the first-named volume is that which begins with the papacy of Hildebrand. The claims of Hildebrand, as expressed in the Dictates, would, says Mr. Vincent, "make a nineteenth-century head reel. To attempt such a scheme might have appalled Charlemagne or Napoleon." The eventful story of this colossal enterprise, from the election of Leo IX. in 1049 to the death of Innocent III. in 1216, is the subject of this volume. The Age of the Great Western Schism takes the student through the fourteenth century, concerning which Mr. Locke writes: "Consequences which we feel now in religious and in political life had their causes then, and blows struck then for religious and social liberty cut so deeply that in this very hour we note their effects." The third volume, The Age of the Crusaders, covering the eleventh and twelfth centuries, may be read as a romance. But the author justly remarks on the puerility of ascribing these vast and prolonged movements to the influence of one man, and the utter impropriety of attributing "these unfortunate and ill-timed ventures to the Almighty."

* * *

Soudan '96. By H. C. Seppings Wright. (Horace Cox.)

"Go to Egypt at once." Mr. H. C. Seppings Wright obeyed this mandate from the Illustrated London News office, and, to use his own words, "it was not long before I was hurrying across to the land of the Pharaohs to play my small part in the operations against the Dervishes." This book—a shilling paper-bound volume—is the story of his adventures as a war artist in the Dongola campaign. By way of frontispiece we have a portrait of the author (against a photographic artist's drop-scene) clad in full field costume and pith helmet, with pipe between his lips and pencil on sketch-book. Mr. Wright might have instructed the photographer to insert a bursting shell or two in the background!

FICTION.

King Noanett. By F. J. Stimson. (John Lane.)

SUCCESS does not often crown the effort of a man to weave a romance over the skeleton of another's masterpiece. Failures at that task within recent years could be recalled; but, as the masterpieces were the subjects of parody, not of emulation, the cases need not be mentioned. Now, however, arrayed in the mantle of a great Englishman, an American writer walks into our presence without being either impertinent or ridiculous. King Noanett, by Mr. F. J. Stimson, is not inferior to the bewitching Lorna Doone. That is all the more remarkable because in its main outlines, and in its way with words, it is almost identical with Mr. Blackmore's work. Like John Ridd, Bampfylde Moore Carew is a young man of humble station roaming over the Devonshire moorlands; like Lorna Doone, "Miss" St. Aubyn is a maid of high degree, who casually meets the hero in the romantic solitudes. As in Mr. Blackmore's tale, love arises betwixt these twain, despite a bitter feud between the classes to which their families belong. The maid's family is for the King; the young man's is for the Commonwealth. Their stolen interviews, in the earlier chapters, are no less sweetly told than is the timid dalliance of John Ridd and the immortally charming daughter of the Doones. The lovers are separated, of course; and then Mr. Stimson makes a slight digression. John Ridd ranged himself against the Doones, and fought with fury; Moore Carew promptly sheds his anti-monarchical Puritanism, and draws his sword in support of the Royalists. He has not only our sympathy, but our admiration also, on account of that apostasy. It is not in any creditable human nature to remain a Roundhead with a Miss St. Aubyn to inspire us otherwise. The proper harmony of Carew's sentiments with the cause for which the lady's father was fighting did not affect the fortunes of the Civil War. Returning from a meeting with her, Carew

"heard a plaintive cadence of melody over the evening moor; it was a man's voice, but no roistering cavalier melody, only just that sad and simple little tune to which the cause of the Stuarts died—

"Her whom ye love
For him ye shall leave,
He is thy King, if Queen she shall ever be;
Now ye may prove
How love ye do love
Dying so loyally, living so tenderly . . ."

That song, although we are not told so at the time, was warbled by one Miles, a young Irishman whose acquaintance Carew makes when both of them, for treason against the Commonwealth, are voyaging, in a convict ship, to Virginia. With them on that unwilling errand is a maid, little Jennifer, who becomes much attached to the Irish Royalist because of his thrashing some men on board who had ill-used her. Arrived in the community of Pilgrim Fathers to which they had been consigned, the two exiles find it necessary to pass off little Jennifer as Miles's wife; and she has to share all their subsequent adventures in the same guise. This complexity of affairs is managed with delicate skill. The adventures themselves are thrilling in the extreme. Particularly so is the culminating crisis, in which, quite after the manner of John Ridd in Lorna Doone, Miles and Moore storm an Indian fort. Who should they meet there but Miss St. Aubyn? and by what were they attracted but by the strains of the Jacobite song which Miles himself had poured forth on the Devonshire moorlands? Her father, at a disadvantage with the King's enemies at home, had gone to harass their sires and their uncles abroad, and had become King Noanett, a chief of the Red Indians. It turns out, alas! that, although not with equal sanction, the two Royalist exiles had been buoyed up through all their years of trial by love of the same woman. We do Mr. Stimson an injustice in telling his tale thus, as, indeed, we should do in telling it at all; but we have not told it wholly, and the last is the greatest scene. There are many romances in which one would fain, here and there, reconstruct a sentence or obliterate a chapter; but there is not a word in King Noanett which we should wish to change. In its reticent ease, its tenderness, its cleanly strength, the story is admirable.

Tatterley. By Tom Gallon. (Hutchinson & Co.)

To the reader who likes old-fashioned sentiment, and simple people, and elemental human nature, and a happy ending, we could not recommend a better story than Tatterley. In Tatterley he will find them all, and good writing to boot. The central figure of the novel is a rugged, implacable skinflint, of the Ralph Nickleby and Scrooge order, and the scheme of the book is to show his regeneration and humanisation after the manner of The Christmas Carol. We are, indeed, reminded of Dickens at every turn, although Mr. Gallon, while no imitator and strong enough to stand very squarely on his own feet, has merely taken a sound convention as the basis of his work. How Mr. Caleb Fry proceeded from cynicism and miserliness to something sweeter and gentler we must leave the reader to discover; remarking simply that Mr. Gallon's sympathy and art have so well served him as to convert in our mind an improbability into a shining fact. We believe in Tatterley through thick and thin; we believe every word of his story; and we are glad that the ranks of the novelists have been strengthened by so clear-sighted and kindly and efficient a recruit as its author.

The Man of Straw. By Edwin Pugh (Heinemann.)

SINCE L'Assommoir no more lively drama of moral deterioration has been constructed than this story of Mr. Pugh's. And the terror of it is enhanced by the admixture of elements which find no place in M. Zola's work. Here you have, in complete contrast with the self-centred lunatic whose moral decline is the main theme, the idealistic girl who marries him. As the one goes forward along the path of squalid dissipation to madness and crime, the character of the other matures, waxes strong, and prevails; her girlish illusions give place to a grave recognition of things as they are, her lively intelligence grows ripe, and her will more confident. Eva married John Coldershaw, captured partly by his beauty and partly disposed to believe that as his form answered to her ideal of masculine grace, so also his soul must have integrity. Something over a year of marriage disenchanted her, in spite of much tender endurance, and the discovery of his vulgar intrigue with one of her domestics precipitated a crisis. They parted; she divided her little fortune with him and established herself as a milliner, in which career she greatly prospered. Her husband, the man of straw, went from depths to lower depths, blackmailed her, developed a homicidal mania, and escaped the gallows and died in his bed by the considered treachery of the nurse—his wife. We need not scruple to give so much of the plot, for the value of Mr. Pugh's work is in its detail. The characterisation, not only of the two principal personages, but of John's honest parents, of his simple toady Dick Anderton, and of the unfortunate crack-brained gentleman who was Eva's father, is extremely fine; and the accessory detail is excellently vivid.

Gentleman George. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. (Hurst & Blackett.)

MRS. MARTIN's story, which is "without a heroine," has for hero one George Carey, known to the village folk as "Gen'lman Jarge." He is a middle-aged ne'er-do-weel, who has been expelled from home as a youth for a forgery committed in his cups, and has since supported existence upon a weekly postal order. He has never done anything for a living, and has, therefore, retained enough good breeding to impress even the local curate. "Gen'lman Jarge's" rehabilitation is on this wise: The wife of his brother, now the owner of the paternal estate, takes flight from her husband, and is found by George dying in a hop-garden. George brings up the child who has accompanied her, and ultimately carries it to the father's house. Here the child is received with open arms, and George with arms partially open. There are some tears and reminiscences of boyhood's days. The prodigal is installed in a cottage on the corner of the estate, and the curtain falls. The book will probably have its readers, for it is wholesome in tone, and requires no mental exercise. It is conceived throughout with all the fantastic improbability which belongs to the old circulating library convention. The minor characters are of traditional antiquity. There is the child of four who remarks of the grotesque village natural,

"I don't like his face, but I likes him."
 "A good distinction, Sukey. What is it you don't like? What is it you call him?"
 "Why, I dunno—his inside, ent it."

We had thought that this youthful and intelligent rustic had died out of fiction.

The Last Recruit of Clare's. By S. R. Keightley. (Hutchinson & Co.)

MR. KEIGHTLEY is one of the most entertaining of those who, after Dumas and Stevenson, essay the tale of romantic deeds and hairbreadth 'escapes. The five stories in this volume are excerpted from the memoirs of one Anthony Dillon, Chevalier of St. Louis, Jacobite and swordsman of the Irish Brigade in the French service. A light-hearted soldier of fortune is Dillon, and admirably drawn by Mr. Keightley: in prosperity a rollicking blade, in adversity courageous and resourceful. A touch of chivalry in the man endears him, miles gloriosus though he be, to the imagination. His adventures, now with the Master of Langdale after Preston, now in the more dangerous service of Mme. de Pompadour, will stir the blood of those who, in a quiescent age, love to tickle their fancy with the clash of steel. Mr. Keightley has the gift of telling a good story both simply and lucidly. He does not, as do some of our latter-day romancers, bewilder himself and his reader in a complicated maze of intrigue. Nor does he irritate us with that pseudo-archaic jargon, peppered with obsolete oaths, which is popularly understood to be cavalier English. The faint mannerism of his style is just sufficient to give the necessary air of aloofness from ordinary speech. Mr. Keightley has written an easy, unaffected, unpretending book.

Madge o' the Pool, The Gypsy Christ, and other Tales. By William Sharp. (A. Constable & Co.)

THESE four stories, known already to some of Mr. Sharp's readers in the Chicago edition of 1895, certainly deserved rescue from comparative inaccessibility. We rather wish that "The Graven Image," which appeared in the American edition, had been allowed to replace "The Coward." "Madge"—really the finest story of the four—is rather aptly described as "a Thames etching." The Pool is a low riverside quarter, whose inhabitants so overwork their sole adjective that once when one of them had occasion to describe a coal-bunker it "might almost be taken for a slaughterhouse escaping in disguise." But Madge, whose vocabulary was as that of the other Poolites, is nevertheless an admirable heroine. She prayed "that she might have strength to refrain from all ugly horrors of speech, except, of course, such acknowledged ornaments of conversation as"—well, as the adjective just alluded to, and the verb which theologians employ to denote condemnation. Her heroism, her quaint nostalgia of the Pool, and the grotesque, mistaken tragedy of her self-destruction, form the story—a singularly unpliant material handled with courage and craftsmanship: etching is not a medium for amateurs. The reader who values "treatment," as such, may find satisfaction in this story. "The Gypsy Christ" may better please another reader. It is a story almost as bloody as the bargee's coal-box. Perhaps it is not wholly satisfactory, "but you are surprised to find it done at all." "The Lady in Hosea" is a study in caustic. It would be interesting to take a census of "general" readers, and ascertain how many of them had perceived that the supreme tragedy of this story lies in its closing sentence.

Under the Circumstances. By Archie Armstrong. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

MR. ARCHIE ARMSTRONG can tell a story very pleasantly and he has an instinct for a plot. Under the Circumstances might have been spun out without unduly boring the reader. There is not even a detective in it, and what might not Wilkie Collins have made of Mrs. Pung in Mr. Armstrong's story? The unravelling of the mystery of the late Mr. Haggerston's housekeeper and widow would never have been left to chance and a casual young doctor. However, we have to thank Mr. Armstrong for a good short story, which might have been, but has not been, developed into an elaborate detective drama. The elements are there, and Mr. Armstrong may be encouraged to try a higher flight next time. His characters are quite in the Wilkie Collins style. Mrs. Pung; Raymond Wilson, the would-be bigamist; Blanche Chedworth, who will have a romance at all costs; Sir Henry Waterville, the hero with a past; and May Daryll, an old-fashioned heroine, who is none the less sweet and interesting; not forgetting Morden Carthew, whose very name spells the useful solicitor—all these are legitimate descendants of the fiction of thirty years since. But there is nothing out-of-date about Mr. Armstrong's method or incidents. His plot moves easily and rapidly, and his dialogues are natural and brightly written. In short, this is a very readable story with no pretence about it.

With the Red Eagle. By William Westall. (Chatto & Windus.)

IT is a mistake to pack a book with incident as you pack a trunk with clothes. This "historical romance" is so full of adventures that it leaves an impression of some one having sat on the lid to squeeze them in. That is a pity, for, taken one by one, the episodes are thrilling and well told. If you can imagine Falstaff as escaping a dozen times, instead of twice, from the house of Mistress Ford, and each time in a totally new and unexpected way, you will get some idea of Mr. Westall's method. He takes an Englishman of ninety years ago, casts him into the midst of the Tyrol rebellion, smothered him in deeds of valour, and encumbers him with hairbreadth escapes. The hero fights with tens against thousands, and routs them. He is the object of desperate pursuits, and the author of amazing stratagems. He is eternally taken prisoner; but you soon cease to be alarmed on his account, his resource and his luck are so wonderful. It will be guessed that Mr. Westall's perspective is at fault. His style is excellent; his matter is often admirable; but his imagination is a sad spendthrift. The political economy of literature forbids that "plots" should be squandered abroad as a fairy-tale monarch scatters his largesse in the streets.

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1897.

No. 1296, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

THE events of the day are apt to be reflected in the books of the day. Intention and coincidence both work to this result. The large output of books relating to the Navy was very noticeable at the time when naval matters occupied the public mind, and, indeed, this branch of publishing has been vigorous ever since. Just now it is curious to note how South Africa and Constantinople dominate a section of the book world.

MR. C. P. LUCAS'S Historical Geography on the AFRICA AND CONSTANTINOPLE British Colonies reaches its fourth volume, which deals with the history and geography of South and East Africa, at the moment when we want the truth about this part of the world. Mr. Lucas is a permanent official of the Colonial Office. He therefore enjoys access to materials of the first importance; and he can deal with those materials with the skill which comes of daily practice. This fourth volume is really two volumes, being divided into two parts, of which the first deals with the history and the second with the geography of our South African possessions and protectorates. Each volume contains maps in which, wherever it is necessary, the possessions of Great Britain, Portugal, Germany, and the Boer Republics are distinguished from each other by special colours.

MR. WILLIAM HOLDEN HUTTON'S The Church of the Sixth Century consists of six lectures delivered at Trinity College, Cambridge, and notes of a visit last year to Constantinople. The book is illustrated with views and plans of cities and buildings in Constantinople connected with the history of the Christian Church in that century. Mr. Hutton feels the charm of the surroundings in which the fortunes of the Church were then centred. He writes in his preface:

"There is an extraordinary fascination about Constantinople, just as there is about the history of Justinian and Theodora; and it is a fascination which seems to appeal peculiarly to moderns. There is a significance about Victorien Sardou's melodramatic treatment of the central figures of the sixth century; still more in the grim tragedy of Equal Love, which we owe to the romantic fancy of 'Michael Field.' But the scenes are even more enthralling than the persons, as we know when we watch them in the prose of Pierre Loti, or the verse of Théophile Gautier or 'Violet Fane.' . . . If it seems strange to quote these lines in the preface to a book on Church History it will seem strange only, I think, to those who have not felt the wonder of the New Rome as she was, or as she is. In the very atmosphere is romance, and in every spot is history."

DANTE AND WORDSWORTH.

FROM the great house of Hoepli, of Milan, come the first twelve parts of a new and sumptuous edition of the Divina Commedia of Dante. The work is beautifully printed in large type, and illustrated with a great many collotype plates and photographic views. Many of the illustrations are taken from old pictures and portraits. The views chiefly represent scenes and towns in Italy mentioned in course of the poem. It is, indeed, an édition de luxe. The editor is Signor Corrado Ricci, well known as the author of L'Ultimo Rifugio di Dante.

Two new volumes of the "Eversley" Series become the repository of Wordsworth's prose writings. The first volume contains the "Letter to the Bishop of Landaff," the Advertisement, Preface, and Appendix to the Lyrical Ballads, "The Convention of Cintra," &c.; the second, the "Guide to the Lake District," "Upon Epitaphs," the Preface to the Excursion, &c. The circumstances under which these works were written and first published are matters for future notice. But the following passage in Mr. William Knight's preface to the volumes may be quoted for its intrinsic interest:

"Some quite extraordinary accident has befallen the MSS. of Wordsworth's prose. I have made numerous efforts, in manifold quarters, to see the originals; but I have been baffled in all directions. Everyone knows how MSS. mysteriously disappear, and are afterwards irrecoverable; but it is strange that none of the Wordsworth family—the representatives of the poet by lineal succession—and none of those with whom he corresponded, now possess these originals. The MSS. of Dorothy's and Mrs. Wordsworth's Journals exist, and a MS. copy of the Fenwick Notes. Nevertheless, the originals of these prose works, which existed in 1876, cannot now be found, either by the Wordsworth family or by any other investigator."

ARTIST AND SOLDIER.

THE Memoirs of Baron Lejeune is the title of the latest addition to the ever-growing Napoleonic library. Lejeune was a young artist when the Revolution broke out, and he joined the "Compagnie des Arts" in defence of his country. He was with Napoleon at Valmy, Wagram, Leipzig, Marengo, and Austerlitz. His duties were mainly those of an aide-de-camp, in which capacity he served Marshals Berthier, Davoust, and Oudinot. Adventures continually fell to him, and on many a battle-field he used his brush and pencil as well as his sword. A collection of his drawings was recently shown in Paris.

THE TWO HOUSES.

The Book of Parliament is all about Parliament and Parliamentary ways, and it is dedicated, by permission, to the Old Parliamentary Hand. The author, Mr. Michael Macdonagh, knows the Houses thoroughly, and in these pages he has traced

"the progress of a Parliament from the General Election, when it is constituted by the vote of the people, until the day the Sovereign, on the advice of the Cabinet, pronounces the sentence of its dissolution."

The titles of the chapters—"Wooing the Electors," "At the Polling Booths," "M.P.," &c., &c.—confirm this prospect of a thorough treatment of Parliamentary life.

CHURCH BELLS.

ONE half the world does not know what the other half is interested in. Hence the astonishment one feels when a book like The Church Bells of Buckinghamshire swims into one's ken. Not that swimming can come easily to a book which weighs 5 lbs. 2 ozs., and which measures 10½ in. by 7 in. by 2½ in. All this about the church bells of a small English county! Without anticipating our reviewer's account of this work we may say that the editor, Mr. Alfred Heneage Cocks, flies, in his introduction, to the question of why bells crack. Clergymen and sextons, it seems, forget that a bell is a machine and requires attention, and that what was hung by one generation requires oiling by another. Mr. Cocks thus describes the neglected state in which the investigator will find some belfries:

"In many cases—I had almost written most cases—he will fancy himself no longer in the church, but in a farmyard, or possibly on one of the guano islands off the coast of Peru. It is no exaggeration to say that the bell-chamber frequently contains cartloads of sticks, straws, and other rubbish brought in by birds for their nests. The avi-fauna comprise jackdaws, starlings, house-sparrows, and sometimes a pair of barn owls, and occasionally domestic pigeons; the invertebrates, which are easily overlooked at the moment, will demonstrate their presence during the night ensuing by keeping the explorer awake: these are lice and fleas, parasitic on the starlings; while very likely everything—bells, stocks, frame, &c.—will be as white from the deposit of guano as if they had been whitewashed."

CHAFFERS'S Marks and Monograms on Pottery has been the standard work on its subject since 1863. The seventh edition, greatly augmented since the previous ones, appeared in 1886, and was reprinted in 1891. The eighth, edited by Mr. Frederick Litchfield, is now before us. Mr. Litchfield's name is well known in connexion with his works on porcelain and furniture. He undertook his present task eighteen months ago, and he claims to have added material of value to each section. Since the previous edition Lady Charlotte Schreiber's collection of porcelain and enamels has passed into the South Kensington Museum, the Edkins collection of Bristol china has been dispersed, and many monographs by specialists have been published. These and other developments are, of course, used by Mr. Litchfield. Simultaneously with this work comes Chaffers's Handbook to Hall Marks on Gold and Silver Plate, edited and extended by Mr. Christopher A. Markham, who says that this edition may be considered almost as a new work. The marks have been revised and many re-drawn.

* * * *

FICTION.

MISS BEATRICE HARRADEN, whose Ships that Pass in the Night had a considerable vogue a few years ago, is responsible for a volume containing two stories, Hilda Strafford and The Remittance Man, both stories of Californian life. Mr. A. J. Dawson's In the Bight of Benin is graced with the following dedication: "To a beautiful woman, some happy pickaninnies, several 'white' negroes, and a few interesting blackguards, now resident in West Africa, the author sends greetings, and — some reminiscences." The Young Clanroy is a romance of the '45 by the Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang. The narrator is supposed to be a Highland gentleman who was out in the '45. The dedication is to "the boys to whom it was told by their friend the Dean." The Flight of the Eagle, by Standish O'Grady,

"is not a romance but an actual historic episode, told with hardly a freer use of the historical imagination than is employed by the more popular and picturesque of our professed historians."

The Touchstones of Life is a new novel by Ella MacMahon, whose career as a story writer began anonymously with A New Note. This, and her second volume, A Pitiful Passion, showed a cleverness and originality which augured well for her future progress. Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., who publish The Touchstones of Life, also issue a new story by Mrs. Orpen, called Perfection City, in which the author portrays the humours of communism as they developed themselves in a small settlement on the Kansas prairie. Mr. Ernest Rhys has picked ten good old tales and put them into a book which Messrs. Kegan Paul have dressed handsomely. The first in The Garden of Romance (as he calls it) is "The Story of the Lame Young Man" from the Arabian Nights, and the last is "The Old Bachelor's Nightcap" from Hans Andersen; and between them come "The Story of Balin and Balan," "The Story of Le Fevre," Scott's "The Tapestry Chamber," Poe's "Fall of the House of Usher," &c. The book is in large square octavo size, and is pleasantly light in the hand. The output of the week contains no novel of particular distinction.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

PRESENT-DAY PRIMERS: WHERE WERE OUR GOSPELS WRITTEN? The Religious Tract Society. 1s.
CHRISTIAN CLASSICS SERIES: THE WRITINGS OF ST. PATRICK. By Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D.D. Religious Tract Society. 2s.
CHRISTIANITY AND IDEALISM. By John Watson. James Maclehose & Sons. Macmillan & Co.

BIOGRAPHY.

ANN JANE CARLILE. By Fredk. Sherlock. Fredk. Sherlock Christian Men of Science. By Various Authors. With Introduction by J. H. Gladstone. The Religious Tract Society. 1s. 6d.
AN ACCOUNT OF THE LIFE AND WORKS OF DR. ROBERT WATT. By James Finlayson, M.D. Smith, Elder & Co. 3s. 6d.

FICTION.

THE TROUBLES OF AN UNLUCKY BOY. By John Strange Winter. F. V. White & Co. 1s.
THE HISTORY OF TOM JONES. By Henry Fielding. Bliss, Sands & Co. 2s.
THE EVOLUTION OF DAPHNE. By Mrs. Alec. McMillan. F. V. White & Co.
THE YOUNG CLANROY. By the Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
THE MISFORTUNES OF ELPHIN AND RHODODAPHNE. By Thomas Love Peacock. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.
THE POSTHUMOUS PAPERS OF THE PICKWICK CLUB. By Charles Dickens. Edited by Andrew Lang. Vol. II. Chapman & Hall.
WITHOUT BLOODSHED. By Harold E. Gorst. The Roxburgh Press. 6d.
THE GARDEN OF ROMANCE. Edited by Ernest Rhys. Kegan Paul. 6s.
IN THE BIGHT OF BENIN. By A. J. Dawson. Lawrence & Bullen.
THE FLIGHT OF THE EAGLE. By Standish O'Grady. Lawrence & Bullen.
MARGOT. By Sidney Pickering. Lawrence & Bullen.
HILDA STRAFFORD AND THE REMITTANCE MAN. By Beatrice Harraden. William Blackwood & Sons. 3s. 6d.
PERFECTION CITY. By Mrs. Orpen. Hutchinson & Co.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BOOK OF PARLIAMENT. By Michael Macdonagh. Isbister & Co. 6s.

POLITICS.

BRITON OR BORN? By George Griffith. F. V. White & Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

SELECTIONS FOR FRENCH COMPOSITION. By C. H. Grandgent. Isbister & Co. 1s. 6d.
PRAKTIISCHE ANFANGSÜBUNGEN. By Hermine Stüven. Isbister & Co. 2s. 6d.
MÄRCHEN UND ERZÄHLUNGEN. By H. A. Guerber. Isbister & Co. 2s.
STUDIES IN HISTORICAL METHOD. By Mary Sheldon Barnes. Isbister & Co. 2s. 6d.

ANTIQUARIAN.

THE CHURCH BELLS OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE. By Alfred Heneye Cocks, M.A. Jarrold & Sons.
CHAFFERS' HANDBOOK TO HALL MARKS ON GOLD AND SILVER PLATE. Edited by Christopher A. Markham. Gibbings & Co., Ltd.
MARKS AND MONOGRAMS ON EUROPEAN POTTERY AND PORCELAIN. By William Chaffers. Gibbings & Co., Ltd.

PSYCHOLOGY.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE ANALYSIS OF THE SENSATIONS. By Dr. Ernst Mach. Translated by C. M. Williams. The Open Court Publishing Co.

GEOGRAPHY.

A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH COLONIES. By C. P. Lucas, B.A. Vol. IV.: South and East Africa. Part I.: Historical; and Part II.: Geographical. Clarendon Press. 6s. 6d.

TRAVEL.

ON THE TRAIL OF DON QUIXOTE. By August F. Jaccaci. Illustrated by Daniel Vierge. Lawrence & Bullen.

HISTORY.

HISTORY OF THE ARMENIANS IN INDIA. By Mesroub J. Seth. Luzac & Co. 7s. 6d.
THE CHURCH OF THE SIXTH CENTURY. By William Holden Hutton. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
THE STORY OF THE HOUSE OF LANCASTER. By Henry Hartwright. Elliot Stock. 6s. 9d.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE National Observer has been acquired by the proprietors of the British Review, and will henceforth be incorporated in that journal.

THE National Observer was started some eight or nine years ago as the Scots' Observer. It was published in its bantling days at Edinburgh: it appealed mainly to Scotsmen, and was controlled by Mr. James N. Dunn, the present editor of Black and White. After a year or so of respectable but uneventful existence, the editorship was accepted by Mr. W. E. Henley, who quickly impressed his individuality upon its pages. Soon it was determined to appeal to a wider public. The offices were removed to London, the title was changed, and the National Observer began to flame among the politico-literary weeklies.

THE note was militant; the criticism virile; authors were slashed and bludgeoned and occasionally praised; but the point of view remained from first to last consistent. The distinction of the paper apart from criticism was Mr. Henley's genius for discovering new talent, and his gift for extracting a man's best. In its pages appeared many of Mr. Kipling's "Barrack-Room Ballads," his "Blind Bug," and his "Tomlinson," R. L. Stevenson's "Father Damien," and some of Mr. Barrie's most characteristic things. Among the writers whose work was published in the pages of the National Observer, and who acknowledge the stimulus of Mr. Henley's encouragement, were Mrs. Meynell, Mr. H. B. Marriott Watson, Mr. Charles Whibley, Mr. Arthur Morrison, Mr. G. S. Street, Mr. H. G. Wells, Mr. G. W. Steevens, Mr. Gilbert Parker, Mr. Kenneth Grahame, and Mr. Murray Gilchrist.

ABOUT three years ago the paper passed to another proprietor. Mr. Henley resigned, and was succeeded by Mr. J. E. Vincent. Under Mr. Vincent it was outspoken, and although not a "fighting paper," was always readable. Among Mr. Vincent's discoveries was Mr. Owen Seaman, whose satirical verse is among the best of its kind. The British Review, with which the National Observer is to be incorporated, was started in the autumn of last year under the editorship of Mr. W. H. Mallock.

ANOTHER new weekly will see the light this month. It is to be edited by Mrs. Roy Devereux, author of The Ascent of Woman. Mayfair will be the title of this new venture. It is to be the size of the World, and it will deal with matters social, literary, artistic, and fashionable.

SOME idea may prevail that the library at Lambeth Palace is inaccessible during the outside repairs now in hand; this is not the case, and the MSS. and books have been consulted as usual, daily, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. (Saturday excepted), by scholars and students. The Kentish local collection of prints and pamphlets continues to be of much service to those interested in their parochial history, a branch of antiquarian lore well worthy of greater attention and research.

THE following dates have been settled upon by Miss Dorothy Leighton and Mr. Charles Charrington for their season of Ibsen at the Independent Theatre: "The Lady from the Sea" will be given from May 10 to 14; "The Wild Duck" from May 17 to 21; "A Doll's House" from May 24 to May 28.

THE Booksellers' Dinner will be held at the King's Hall, Holborn Restaurant, on Saturday, May 8, when Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, M.P., has promised to occupy the chair.

On another page there is a review of the third volume of Messrs. Henley & Henderson's Burns. This week also comes the news that before long the recently discovered correspondence between Burns and Mrs. Dunlop may be published, together with a number of MSS. of poems, "some new, and some with various readings." There seems no finality in the art of editing poets: something fresh is for ever coming to light.

It is a little surprising to read that Miss Beatrice Harraden's Hilda Strafford, which was published only last Saturday, has already reached a seventh edition. The explanation is that the first edition was three or four times subscribed, and the demand since has been so large that Messrs. Blackwood are now forced to go to press again. It would be interesting, by the way, to know of how many copies each edition consisted. The same publishers will shortly publish a long novel by Miss Harraden, called I, too, have come Through Wintry Terrors, a title that should take the popular taste as effectually as Ships that Pass in the Night.

A PICTURE by the late Sir John Millais has been presented to the National Gallery by his half-sister, Mrs. Hodgkinson. It is "The Yeoman of the Guard"—not the best example of his genius—which was exhibited at the Academy twenty years ago. Before long I hope that a representative work by this painter will find its way into the national collection.

AMONG the literary recollections of Prof. Max Müller in the current Cosmopolis are some relating to Tennyson which the papers have very eagerly copied. And I will not deny that they make good copy. But at the same time I find myself blushing for Prof. Max Müller. He asked the late Laureate to dinner and to breakfast, and in writing now about the meals he states that his guest behaved exceedingly badly: the late Laureate found fault with the food, and showed little consideration for the feelings of his host and hostess. Yet considering how his host was some day to hold up this illustrious guest, his foibles and his shortcomings, to the merciless eyes of the world, one cannot feel about Tennyson's conduct quite as Prof. Max Müller would seem to wish. The host charges his guest with bad manners; but we end by forgetting the conduct of the guest in that of the host.

IN a volume of Registres Gascons (1474-1514), recently published by the municipality of Bayonne, Mr. S. R. Gardiner has discovered mention of a truce, hitherto unknown, between France and England, proclaimed at Bayonne, October 20, 1482. The same volume contains documents relating to a considerable trade in woad (for dye) between Bristol and Bayonne during these years. Of this commerce no previous record was known.

THE prospectus of the forthcoming edition of Don Quixote, by Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly and the late John Ormsby, has just been issued. This Spanish text follows as nearly as possible that of the first edition of 1505. It will form a handsome quarto, printed by Messrs. Constable of Edinburgh, with Mr. David Nutt as London publisher. The prospectus is written in Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's liveliest strain, and is a fair challenge to all opponents to do their worst. He describes Hartzenbusch's treatment of the Quixote as that of "a true German pedant." This is applying the principle of nationality with a vengeance. How the shade of Cecilia Bohl de Faber (Fernan Cabellero) must tremble, too, at this: the author of Los Amantes de Teruel, over which the fairest eyes of Spain have shed delicious tears, "a true German pedant"! As well call the author of "Romeo and Juliet" a Welsh border boor! But, for all this, it will be difficult to find Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly tripping in bibliographical details, and his text will give matter of discussion to the keenest critics.

MR. R. H. SHERARD, the journalist whose distinction it is to have written the most-contradicted interview with Ibsen that has yet appeared, seems to be on the brink of a new kind of fame. A correspondent in Christianity has written to him saying: "Your article has been much commented upon here, and the Norwegians are furious, proposing to immortalise you as a noun and verb, i.e. to say, 'Oh, that's a Sherard,' when they mean an inaccuracy; or, 'We were Sherarded by that man,' i.e., 'maligned by that man,' for they quite accept Ibsen's statements concerning his talk with you." Mr. Sherard's comment is: "It would ill become an ardent philologist to object to anything by which a starveling and unpicturesque language may be enriched and beautified."

I SAID a "new kind of fame," meaning, of course, new only for the journalist. Other men become nouns and verbs very easily. We pack our Gladstone, we consult our Bradshaw, we Boycott our neighbour, and there was a time, when party feeling was running higher than it does just now, when an inaccuracy was called a "Salisbury." But those days are over.

THE note of the new Pick-Me-Up is, I am told, to be smartness without vulgarity. The words "Smart, but not vulgar" will appear over the title week by week as an earnest of this change of heart. The first revised number will be dated March 13, and, it is hardly necessary to state, will contain drawings by Mr. Phil May, Mr. Raven Hill, and Mr. Dudley Hardy. A picture by Mr. C. D. Gibson, the American draughtsman, and one by an artist of promise, who is less well known, Mr. William T. Horton, will also appear. The admirable "Jingle," whose sprightly criticisms of the drama were the best things in the letterpress of the old Pick-Me-Up, is to continue his weekly task. The rather too emotional gentleman who called himself, not without reason, "The Amorist," will, I presume, have to seek another outlet for his feelings.

Pick-Me-Up henceforward is to emerge from the offices of the Illustrated London News and The Sketch. A paper seems to have a much better chance in the struggle for life if it can fight its way under the protecting shoulders of an elder brother. Mr. Shorter now has the cares of four considerable periodicals, while two others—The Sporting and Dramatic and The Lady's Pictorial—are also connected with the Illustrated London News office.

A LIBRARIAN's list of readers' blunders in asking for books yields the following specimens: "Abraham's Nights" (Arabian Nights); "Dickens' Tootpick Papers"; "The Stinking Minister" and "The Stuck-up Minister"; "A book describing place where they keep leopards on Sandwich Islands" (? where they keep leopards on sandwiches); and "Black Beauty, a little book by Zola." This last is saddening. It is bitter to think of the innocent classic of our childhood thus maligned.

AT this time of year one expects poetical quotations in the journals, although possibly one would not grieve over their absence. But for misquotation there is no excuse. In the Westminster Gazette I find it written of Dr. Joachim that he is like the daffodils, "that come before the swallow dares, and deck the winds of March with beauty." Alas! If Shakespeare's good genius was ever vigilant at his side it was when it prompted the poet to write of the yellow flowers that they "take the winds of March with beauty."

THE following extract is from a book catalogue:

"Stirling, James H. Text-Book to Kant. The Critique of Poor Reason. 8vo. N. Y., 1882."

I OBSERVE that on the Rand the reviewer is a person of authority. A bookseller of Johannesburg has been telling an interviewer that new books are ordered for Africa purely on the strength of London reviews. The books which just now are being most read are all the works of Mr. Kipling and Miss Corelli, and the later works of Mr. Crawford, Mr. Crockett, and Mr. Barrie. Also Mr. Besant's City of Refuge, Ian Maclaren's Mind of the Master, Mr. Wilson Barrett's Sign of the Cross, and Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer, Detective. The standard novels, in cheap form, sell well too. A large trade in Bibles and prayer-books is also carried on by the firm which gives this information.

THE one event of interest to chronicle this week, "G. S. S." writes, is that Richard is himself again at the Lyceum, and everybody's congratulations are due on Sir Henry Irving's recovery. He is too thoughtful an actor—there are those who say thought is here a vice—absolutely to stereotype a part, but his playing on Saturday was, in the main, a repetition of that on the first performance. That is to say, Richard was a consciously artistic and almost a comic devil; the grim humour was emphasised as before—as before, the hopelessness of a contemporary audience making much of the tragedy was implicitly recognised. "Amen, and may I die a good old man"—that was the sort of speech which was most emphasised in its satirical significance, and once more one regretted that a brilliant comedian has been practically lost to classic comedy. But I expressed my poor opinion of Sir Henry's Richard at sufficient length some while ago; and of changes I noticed only that he played the scene with a better pretence of sincerity—certainly an artistic alteration—and that the Anne (Miss Julia Arthur) was appreciably better than before.

THE ONLOOKER.

By an error it was stated last week that the forthcoming work to be entitled The Art of William Morris, by Mr. Aymer Vallance, would be published by Mr. Quaritch. The publishers are Messrs. G. Bell & Sons.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD has in the press two volumes by Prof. Karl Pearson. The volumes contain several scientific essays dealing with chance in various aspects, from the chances of death to games of chance, the problems of modern political progress, and those in connexion with the position of women.

SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, BART., M.P., will publish shortly with Mr. Edward Arnold a book of sketches of nature under the title of Memories of the Months.

THE Delegates of the Clarendon Press have arranged for the publication, at short intervals, of a series of five books on Musical History, to be issued under the general editorship of Mr. W. H. Hadow, Fellow of Worcester College. The first volume, dealing with The Ecclesiastical Period, has been undertaken by Prof. H. E. Wooldridge; Dr. Hubert H. Parry deals with The Seventeenth Century; and Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland with The Age of Bach and Handel. The editor has in preparation the fourth volume, treating of The Viennese School and its Times; and Mr. E. Dannreuther will close the series with an account of The Romantic Movement.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces, as the new volume of the "Book-Lovers' Library," The Novels of Charles Dickens, a Bibliography and Sketch by F. G. Kitton. The work will give in a condensed form the information which is available concerning the circumstances under which Dickens's various stories were written, and will furnish a complete bibliography such as has not hitherto been obtainable. A useful feature of the book will be a record of the present value of the earlier editions of Dickens's works.

GEORG EBERS.

TO the tribute which the world of letters and of science in Germany has with generous enthusiasm paid to the fame of its greatest living novelist, Georg Ebers, on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday, we hasten to add our English congratulations. Since Gustav Freytag passed away no foreign writer of fiction has appealed more successfully to the taste of English readers than the author of A Princess of Egypt.

It was in Berlin, in a house on the Tiergartenstrasse, on March 1, 1837, that Georg Ebers was born. When he came into the world the grass was already green over the grave of his father, a banker and manufacturer of repute. To compensate for this loss all the affection of his mother was lavished on the posthumous child. Georg Ebers owed a deep debt of gratitude to this talented, intellectual woman, well known in the literary society of Berlin; and few higher tributes to the beauty of motherhood have been penned than the passages in the History of My Life, in which Georg Ebers acknowledges what he owes to the memory of his mother. The atmosphere in which the boyhood of the future savant and novelist passed was congenial. In the same house in which his mother lodged lived the brothers Grimm, the great grammarians and treasurers of the wealth of Teutonic folklore. To their influence, we may take it, the scholarly bent of young Georg's mind is due, and his association with them, probably, can be traced many years later in the three charming "Märchen," which came as a surprise to those who had known Ebers only as the writer of historical romances. After the usual course at the Gymnasium, Ebers read law at the University of Göttingen. During his student career there fell on him a dangerous illness, which brought him to the verge of the grave and from which he did not wholly recover for many a long year. This illness was the turning-point in his career. Feeling unfitted for the rough-and-tumble of active life he decided to devote himself to academic studies in the sciences which had always attracted him, Egyptology. Jakob Grimm introduced him to that eminent, if somewhat crabbed savant, Lepsius. The first-fruits of his study was A Princess of Egypt. Lepsius, hearing of his disciple's achievement, expressed contemptuous surprise that a scholar should waste his time on such "allotria"; but to the general reader the book opened out a new world. For the first time the dry bones of scholastic research had been endowed with the breath of life. So lifelike were the characters that some critics pretend to recognise the personalities who had inspired them. Rhodopis was held to be his mother; Pharaoh Amasis was only Frederick William IV. in Egyptian guise. Be this as it may, the scholarship Ebers displayed in his treatise on Egypt and the Books of Moses won the recognition of the learned, and in 1864 he was appointed to a professorship in his university. Shortly afterwards he married the woman, a daughter of the burgomaster of Riga, who was to prove a worthy helpmate of his busy life. After a short journey to Egypt, from which he was recalled to fill the chair of professor of Egyptology at the University of Leipzig, he revisited the land of the Pharaohs in 1872. During his excavations at Thebes he discovered the papyrus dating from the second century B.C., which is still known by the name of its discoverer.

On his return to Leipzig he resumed his round of lectures and duties, which helped to train many Egyptologists of the present day. In 1876, some twelve years after the appearance of his first romance, came Uarda, perhaps the finest of all his novels. Homo Sum, The Sisters, and The Emperor followed in quick succession. In 1881, in his Frau Bürgermeisterin, Ebers surprised his readers by transferring his mis-en-scène from Egypt to a theatre nearer home, a success he followed up two years later with Ein Wort. More recently he struck out a new line in his Gret, a Kulturbild, a wonderfully graphic description of popular life and thought in the mediæval Nürnberg. In all, sixteen historical novels have flowed from his prolific pen, in addition to numerous learned treatises, fairy tales, biographies, and two great works of reference on Egypt and Palestine. Indeed, every year for the last quarter of a century has seen the publication of some work from his pen. His industry, apart from his achievement, is amazing; for until he retired, in 1889, he was engaged in exacting scholastic duties at Leipzig. At the age of fifty-nine he wrote his most recent novel, Barbara Blomberg, containing the freshest and most fascinating of his heroines, a wonderful picture of Ratisbon during the Middle Ages. If rumour be true, this will be his last novel; for it is said that, now he has entered on the evening of his days, he has decided to lay his pen aside.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XVII.—SAMUEL PEPYS.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Admiralty clerk, takes his stand among our English classics purely by accident. He kept a diary in cipher for his own amusement, and behold! when translated into longhand it turned out to be literature, and is now numbered with the books that will not die; whereas such writings as were made by Pepys in the ordinary manner have as little interest as yesterday's paper. And the reason is that the diary is Pepys, and Pepys can never lose his savour. We are as interested to-day in what he was doing two hundred and fifty years ago as he was at the time.

Look, for example, at the account of two red-letter days in April of 1661: "So to Captain Allen's (where we was last night, and heard him play on the harpsichord, and I find him to be a perfect good musician), and there, having no mind to leave Mrs. Rebecca, I did what with talk and singing (her father and I), Mrs. Turner and I staid there till two o'clock in the morning, and was most exceeding merry, and I had the opportunity of kissing Mrs. Rebecca very often. At two o'clock, with very great mirth, we went to our lodging and to bed, and lay till seven, and then called up by Sir W. Batten; so I rose, and we did some business, and then come Captain Allen, and he and I withdrew, and sang a song or two, and among others took great pleasure in 'Goe and bee hanged, that's twice good-bye.' The young ladies come too, and so I did again please myself with Mrs. Rebecca; and about nine o'clock, after we had breakfasted, we sett forth for London, and indeed I was a little troubled to part with Mrs. Rebecca, for which God forgive me. [Pepys had a wife waiting for him at home.] Thus we went away through Rochester. We baited at Dartford, and thence to London, but of all the journeys that ever I made, this was the merriest, and I was in a strange mood for mirth. Among other things, I got my Lady to let her mayd, Mrs. Anne, to ride all the way on horseback, and she rides exceeding well; and so I called her my clerk, that she went to wait upon me. I met two little schoolboys going with pickers of ale to their schoolmaster to break up against Easter, and I did drink of some of one of them, and gave him two-pence. By and by, we come to two little girls keeping coves, and I saw one of them very pretty, so I had a mind to make her aske my blessing, and telling her that I was her godfather, she asked me innocently whether I was not Ned Warding, and I said that I was, so she kneeled down, and very simply called, 'Pray, godfather, pray to God to bless me,' which made us very merry, and I gave her two-pence. In several places I asked women whether they would sell me their children, but they denied me all. . . ."

SAMUEL PEPYS (AT 34)

From the Picture by John Hayls in the National Portrait Gallery

Here, in this delightful passage, written two and a half centuries ago, yet as fresh as this morning's buds, we have Samuel Pepys in high spirits as the epicure of life. That was his true character and his great worth. It is as the epicure of life that he is so alluring. His self-revelations are valuable in some degree, and his picture of the times makes him perhaps the finest understudy a historian ever had; but Pepys is greatest in his appreciation of good things. He lived minute by minute, as wise men do, and he extracted whatever honey was to be had. Who else has so fused business and pleasure? Who else has kept his mind so open, so alert? Whenever Pepys found an odd quarter of an hour he sang or strummed it away with a glad heart; whenever he walked abroad his eyes were vigilant for pretty women. No man was more amiable. He drank "incomparable good claret" as it should be drunk, and loved it; he laughed at Betterton; he ogled Nelly Gwynne; he intrigued with men of affairs; he fondled his books; he ate his dinner—all with gusto and his utmost energy. Trivial he certainly was, but his enjoyment is his justification. Samuel Pepys was a superb artist in living. He was a man of insatiable inquisitiveness: there was always something he considered "pretty to see." This gift of curiosity made him one of the best of Londoners. He knew the London of his day well: he saw the great plague and the great fire, and played his lute innocently through both.

Our portrait shows Pepys at the age of thirty-four: he lived to be seventy.

TWO UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF SAMUEL PEPYS.

In 1854 my father picked up for eighteen-pence, at a bookstall in London, a bound volume containing 113 letters in MS., the majority of which he recognised at once as being in the handwriting of Samuel Pepys. In order, however, to make assurance doubly sure, and to ascertain whether anything was known of them, he sent the book to W. J. Thoms, the founder, and at that time the editor, of Notes and Queries, with a request that he would submit the letters for verification to Lord Braybrooke, the editor of Pepys' Diary, who pronounced them to be genuine, in a letter which is printed below. Two of the letters, probably the most entertaining of the collection, were kept back for the family autograph-book, now in my possession; the rest were presented, I believe, to Eton College.

[LORD BRAYBROOKE'S LETTER.]

"Lord Braybrooke has very carefully examined the Pepys Papers, and cannot return them without expressing his best thanks to Mr. Alfred Francis Barnard for his courtesy in submitting them to his inspection. There is no doubt as to the originality of the Letters, which in all probability were left in Pepys' House in York Buildings, when his library was removed to Clapham some years before his death, and which, with many other books and papers, were sold and dispersed instead of passing into the hands of his executors. Dr. Rawlinson, however, rescued a great portion now in the Bodleian Library. The old volume appears from the figures in pencil [each letter was numbered in pencil] to have been very much mutilated, as only 113 letters remain out of 604. The correspondence is exclusively relative to the abuses and reforms of Christ's Hospital, and is of interest as showing how much trouble Pepys took in investigating any subject, in spite of his age and infirmities, to which his attention was directed. . . . It would appear from the Table of Contents, which is in the same form and handwriting as many others in the Pepysian Collection, that there were in the volume letters of Sir Isaac Newton, but they have disappeared, with many others, perhaps handed over to collectors of autographs at different times. Samuel Newton, from whom there are some letters, was Teacher of Mathematics at Christ's Hospital. . . . The old book is worthy of being preserved. It is possible, too, that it might be prized by the Governors of the Hospital and placed amongst their Records. Nathaniel Hawer, of whom Pepys seems to have had a bad opinion, was Treasurer of Christ's Hospital.

"N. Burlington Street, 11 May 54"

The first letter, a holograph by Pepys, is a draft, in a neat and clear hand, of a reply to the Samuel Newton mentioned by Lord Braybrooke, and is written on the back of Newton's letter. As the latter relates chiefly to business details of no present interest, I have extracted from it little more than those passages which contain the excuses that explain Pepys' indignation.

[NEWTON'S LETTER.]

"Hon^d Sir,
"I have sent the Certificate Y^r Hon^r was pleased to call for, and had waited on Y^r Hon^r before this time, if the trouble of removing my Books and Family had not prevented me. I much admire that the unparall'd Mr. [afterwards Sir Isaac] Newton has not yet wrote to our Tr^s [Treasurer, Nathaniel Hawer]. . . . The last Sunday some of my Relations from Y^e other end of the town came to dine (unexpectedly) with me, and have engaged me by promise to returne their Civility by dining with them Y^e next Sunday. so Y^e I fear I shall not have Y^e opportunity of waiting on Y^r Hon^r that day, but intend to be in York buildings to morrow afternoon, when I should think it not onely my greatest hon^r but strongest Interest to receive Y^r further Instructions.

"Y^r Hon^r most obliged faithful and humble servant

"S. NEWTON.

"June, 7th. 1695."

[PEPYS' REPLY.]

"June 11th, 1695, at Noone.

"MR. NEWTON,

"You made me lose all Saturday in Y^e Afternoon; not so much by Y^e not coming (for that might many ways be justifiably prevented) but by Y^e not sending me word that I was not to wait for you. For thō I think no time too much that I employ usefully, I think Y^e least too much that is taken from me to no purpose. Therefore, once for all, pray give me no more occasion for this kind of Complaint.

"I would be glad to see you, there being occasion for it, and Y^e sooner Y^e better. And that you may meet with no disappointment (for I would be as careful of Y^e Time as of my own) pray send me word in Y^e Morning of Y^e Evening when you mean to come, & I will againe stay within and dispose of my Business on purpose for you. And pray bring Y^r Instructions along with you, which you tell me you have now Signed, & have (I presume) a Counter part of from Y^e House. I am

"Y^r truly affect^d Friend & Serv^t

"S. PEPYS."

The second letter in Pepys' hand is a beautifully written holograph, apparently a duplicate of a reply to John Reeves, under-clerk of Christ's Hospital, who seems to have been guilty of the same remissness, and receives a similar rebuke, as Samuel Newton. A copy of the letter from Reeves which called down upon him the wrath of Pepys appears as an endorsement by the latter.

[REEVES' LETTER.]

"Hon^d Sr,

"For not coming according to promise I begg your pardon. But Thursdays raine and yesterday's Comm^{tees} prevented. And for this Morning I am upon payment of Money which is the occasion of sending this from

"Y^r Hon^d Serv^t

"JOHN REEVES.

"20 July, 1695."

[PEPYS' REPLY.]

"Saturday morning. July 20th, 1695.

"MR. REEVES,

"I thank you for Y^e Papers to day, only I would be glad when you are at any time prevented in coming to me when promis'd, you would send me word of it, for I stayd at home all Thursday expecting you, lest you should have come & been disappointed of seeing me; And for Y^e Raine, I would & will at all times bear Y^e Charges in Coach-hire, rather than sett business aside on purpose for you, & not see you. It being Saturday, I am stepping into Y^e Countrey for a little Aire till Monday, & so cannot presently pass Y^e Papers of Y^e Mathematical Acc^t; but shall as soon as I come back. And for Y^e gener^l ones, shall then alsoe satisfy myselfe therein from Y^e Court-Book of Y^e 20th Feby last, whereto you refer me; and to that purpose, if you can spare it, pray let Y^e Beadle bring it me hither on Monday noone.

"I remaine

"Y^r truly affect^d friend

"S. PEPYS."

The numbers pencilled on the above letters are: Newton, 527; Pepys (1), 528; Reeves (not separately numbered); Pepys (2), 575.

F. P. BARNARD.

THE BOOK MARKET.

TWO PENCE OR THREE PENCE?

WE referred last week to the revival of interest in the question of discount in the bookselling trade, and we recorded the opinion of a high authority that a change was not likely to be effected in the near future. It has occurred to us, however, that it would be fair and interesting to collect opinions on the subject from booksellers generally. We have accordingly made inquiries, and these have elicited the courteous and instructive replies from the Trade which we print below.

That the discount system is a born absurdity is, we believe, admitted by everyone, including the happy book-buyer who tenders two shillings and eightpence for a book that is advertised to be worth three shillings and sixpence. But is the book-buyer so happy as he believes himself? Does he get three-and-sixpence worth? Certainly not.

The threepence gained has perhaps been threepence lost. It has meant limited stocks, inferior assistants, uncomfortable shops, and, in a word, the deterioration of the bookseller. This is the confession of the Trade itself. Undoubtedly there are still high-class booksellers, men who read books as well as sell them, and who, even under a system which they stigmatise as "degrading" and "pernicious," can maintain the dignity of an ancient and refined calling; but even these are hampered and discouraged.

Unfortunately there is no exaggerating the strength of the position held by Discount: it is so strong that the proposal to abolish it is no longer mooted; and the proposal actually before booksellers is to reduce threepence to twopence. Could even this be effected, the results, according to our correspondents, would be marked and beneficent.

MESSRS. W. GEORGE'S SONS (Bristol) write:

"The matter of alteration of discount has not been put into a form definite enough to much interest the country trade. If matters can be arranged between the London trade and the copyright owners, the provincials are not likely to make objections; they are tired of the present state of things; but if the publishers of copyright books mean to sell their property in the same old way of many various prices for one article, no benefit will result to the public, and they might as well leave the thing alone."

MR. CHARLES LINNELL, of Messrs. Cornish Bros. (Birmingham), writes:

"The proposal made by the Publishers' Association to the booksellers, that we should revert to the old discount of 2d. off the shilling, cannot be considered as a serious proposal. We have not been enlightened or made aware of the means whereby the general public are to be allured from 3d. to 2d. We should, of course, appreciate the change immensely; but there are no hopes of such a transformation, for the practice of selling new books at prices little above cost has become general: we cannot recede. If all the booksellers in the kingdom were unanimous to-day, would they be like-minded on the morrow? We trow not. As the publishers have a burning desire to improve the condition of the country bookseller, let them begin by sending their books to us carriage paid. The present system curtails profits. The lack of a greater profit is to the detriment of the general public, for that which should be given to well-educated and well-trained assistants is given away in discount. A living can be made, and very often a good one; but the book business requires an amount of application, persistence, and bull-dog perseverance that in any other occupation would very likely lead to fame and fortune. We must live ever hopeful of the future, notwithstanding our dissatisfaction with the present."

MR. FRANK MURRAY (Derby) writes:

"Whether the efforts of the reformers will ever meet with success, even to the limited extent of reducing the discount by 1d. in the 1s., is very doubtful. If the bulk of the trade agree to the proposal, the publishers will then say to the remainder—"If you will not agree to these terms, I shall not charge you the same that I do the others." The selfish man will then buy his books of the middle-man, and continue to sell at 3d. in the 1s.; and it is with this same middle-man that the difficulty will arise; he is very powerful; the publisher cannot do without his support; he gets terms which enable him to sell at the same price as the publisher. Possibly the publisher will be able to bind him as he proposes to bind the bookseller; but it will be difficult, and the middle-man will have this to consider—that every underseller means one more customer for him, and so he will not be too ready to bind himself, while at the same time the publisher depends too much upon him to risk losing his support by enforcing terms. It is this fear of the underseller being able to continue cutting, despite the publisher, by the help of the middle-man which will deter many of the trade from sending in their adherence to the proposals of the associations."

MESSRS. HODGES, FIGGIS, & Co., LTD. (Dublin), write:

"We are scarcely in a position to offer an opinion on the question of '3d. in the shilling,' as we—in company with all other Dublin booksellers—have never gone beyond the '2d.,' and are determined that we never will. We fully recognise that such a discount would be disastrous. Under it high-class bookselling would be impossible, and, in order to pay working expenses, 'remainders,' 'stationery,' and 'fancy goods' would have to be resorted to. The fact that Dublin sets an example of unity and common sense in this matter may surprise and interest their English confrères, and, we trust, will strengthen those who regard 'unity' as impossible. We hope that the efforts now being made by the 'publishers' and 'booksellers' associations will eventually destroy the pernicious system."

MESSRS. TRUSLOVE & HANSON (London) write:

"The proposal made by the Publishers' Association that the discount on books should be reduced from 3d. to 2d. in the shilling is, in our opinion, well worth adoption. It is admitted by publishers that existing terms upon a large number of copyright books are most unsatisfactory, as they do not allow a living profit; and as prospective arrangements with authors preclude publishers from giving better terms, we think their alternative suggestion should be accepted. It is the most practical proposal that has been made since the discount system became general, and if carried out would be the means of securing to the bookseller a fair remuneration for his work and intelligence employed in carrying on his business."

MESSRS. THOMAS BREAR & Co. (Bradford) write:

"Next to a total abolition of all discount, we are entirely in favour of the proposal, which, if carried out, would give the country bookseller some chance of a reasonable profit. Under the present condition of things the new bookseller exists with difficulty out of London, and if by the proposed return to 2d. in the shilling discount some relief was gained, the public would also reap benefit in the way of increased attention and intelligent service. At present it does not pay to invest either brains or money in the book trade. Although buyers are now thoroughly demoralised with the 25 per cent. discount system, we do not think, if the trade is unanimous, that they will object to the extra penny, and it is to be hoped that London booksellers, who have no carriage to pay, and thus do not feel the strain, will throw off their selfishness and fall into line with their less-favoured country cousins."

MESSRS. D. B. FRIEND & Co. (Brighton) write:

"The proposal of the Publishers' Association to reduce the discount to 2d. in the shilling seems to be the most feasible suggestion yet introduced to assist the booksellers; and the scheme should receive the hearty approval of the whole retail trade. No combination of booksellers alone can effect the desired end, but by the publishers uniting to enforce the adherence to the new terms of supply the terrible system of underselling should be effectually remedied on a very large proportion of books issued."

MR. B. H. BLACKWELL (Oxford) writes:

"It is a fact that where 3d. in the shilling is given the stock must either be confined to books in everyday demand, bought in large numbers, or supplemented by miscellaneous goods which bear a 'living' profit. The bookseller who keeps a large and varied stock, ventures in works by new and unknown authors, and keeps a bookshop, takes greater risks, and gives 2d. in the shilling discount. Were the smaller discount generally adopted the public would get better bookshops, authors be better represented; while, by the reduction in the nominal price of books which would ensue, the 1d. would, in practice, be shared between the bookseller and his customer."

MR. GEORGE GREGORY (Bath) writes:

"I should be glad to see the discount off new books abolished altogether, and therefore I should gladly support the reverting to the 2d. in the shilling as a step in the right direction. The matter is entirely in the hands of the publishers. Let them promptly close every man's account (and not open it again) who takes a penny discount off the published prices and there's an end of the matter. Of course all the publishers must agree, or any such action would be useless. The cursed discount question is degrading and demoralising alike to buyer and seller. I may say personally I sell no regular new books since 3d. in the shilling has been the rule in this town."

MR. JAMES G. COMMIN (Bournemouth) writes:

"The proposal that the rate of discount from the published prices of books should be limited to 2d. in the shilling to the public instead of as it at present exists in many of the larger towns of 3d. in the shilling, is one that, if uniformly carried out, would be of undoubted benefit to both booksellers and publishers, and at the same time would make no appreciable difference to the public. The ruinously small margin of profit that exists under the present arrangement is especially detrimental to the publisher, inasmuch as it prevents the bookseller from keeping in stock any but the most popular works and low-priced series, to the exclusion of the more standard and important publications, which, although perfectly safe stock, are not sufficiently rapid in their sale to prove remunerative on the present terms. I have no doubt under altered circumstances this state of things would gradually change for the better. Booksellers would improve the character of their stock. The public would then have an opportunity of seeing the better books as they were published, and having this inducement would be sure to increase their purchases to their own advantage, and to the benefit of the publisher and bookseller alike; and lastly (and not least) the trader would be stimulated to take a more intelligent interest in his business as a bookseller, and not devote his attention to stationery and fancy goods as so many have found themselves compelled to do in order to make both ends meet."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

THE general reading and writing public is probably quite unaware of the amount of trained ability and exact knowledge expended in these days on what they would superciliously throw aside at the first glance as "only school-books." We have before us a fresh batch of such publications in the department of English literature, some of which show excellent work. In the Cambridge Milton for Schools (Pitt Press) Mr. Verity gives us the ninth and tenth books of Paradise Lost, and so completes his scholarly and sensible edition of the great epic, the last two books having been published earlier. Pope's Essay on Criticism, by Dr. Evans (Blackie), is a serviceable little exposition of the poet's masterpiece, but unlucky in appearing at the same time as the edition by Mr. Churton Collins; and Mr. Steele's judicious selections from his namesake's contributions to the Tatler (Macmillan) forms a very proper addition to the list of literary class-books, though certain of the notes are just a little simple. Besides these there are four numbers of Longmans' English Classics, all by American editors, but with a common preface by Mr. P. A. Barnett: Macaulay's Essay on Milton, Scott's Woodstock, Irving's Tales of a Traveller, and the Ancient Mariner of Coleridge. The apparatus of introduction, chronological table, and notes is on a similar plan in each, and each is, in addition, provided with a useful chapter of hints as to methods of study or instruction which are calculated to lay a sound foundation in the elements of criticism. To this treatment the Ancient Mariner, of course, lends itself the most readily, and the casting of a large proportion of the notes into the shape of leading or suggestive questions is a rational device that contributes in a natural manner to that end. Some of the notes in the Scott, however, and many of those in the Macaulay, are surely unnecessary for any English standard above that of a kindergarten. Still, we must remember that the series is also intended for use in the United States. To one reared on the old Spartan system under which four-fifths of the weekly time-table were devoted to classics, and the remaining fifth was allowed for toying with French or mathematics, the introduction of one's favourite play-books into the class-room seems a strange thing. Nevertheless, if carried out with judgment and kept within certain limits, this is unquestionably one of those changes that are changes for the better, and most heartily do we welcome in scholastic harness that master of English who is far too little read to-day, "the father of American literature," Washington Irving. The hours we stole in boyhood and gave to The Conquest of Granada, or The Tales of the Alhambra, till we knew their pages almost as well by heart as we knew the inspiring lines of the Propria quæ maribus, were always thus spent more or less in defiance of the still small voice that whispered the prior claims of Bland's Hexameters or the Præcis Iambica.

THE following spirited piece of guess-work appeared in a recent number of a school magazine as having been executed in an examination:

French.

"Dans un passage très élevé des Alpes où la neige ne fond jamais et s'entasse à une grande hauteur, des religieux ont bâti un hospice pour les voyageurs. Ils ont avec eux des chiens auxquels ils ont appris à chercher les malheureux perdus dans les neiges. Lorsqu'une tempête survient, tous les chiens partent de l'hospice et se dispersent dans la montagne; ils cherchent les voyageurs égarés. Ils portent au cou une clochette avec une gourde pleine d'eau-de-vie. Quand ces bons animaux sentent qu'un homme est sous la neige, ils grattent jusqu'à ce qu'ils l'aient découvert, le réchauffent et aboient pour avertir les religieux."

English.

"In a passage very near from the Alps there the person found his way and waved his hat to a large caravan of religious, and good company for the voyagers. They have offered to take care of the dogs as well they have entertain to fully the quantities lost in the snow. Lorsque, a tempting servant, took the dogs into the hospital and see dispersants in the mountains; they sent the voyagers away. They went to the one closet among a low plain of the edifice. When the good man sentenced which man is of the voyagers, they granted justice to which they have discovered, the rechaffment and obedient servants for averting the religion."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE HEBREW MONARCHY.

London: Feb. 26.

Mr. Andrew Wood seems to doubt whether Prof. Sayce has arrived at any definite conclusions with regard to the chronology of the kings of Israel. I give here the passage which I had in my mind at the time of writing, the italics being mine:

"These contemporaneous accounts of the Western campaigns of Tiglath-Pilezer, which have been rescued from the mounds under which they were so long buried, have at last cleared up the chronology of the later kings of Samaria. The synchronisms established between them and the kings of Judah by the compiler of the Books of Kings have been the despair of chronologists, and various expedients have been devised for reconciling the conflicting dates given in the Scriptural record. . . . The cuneiform annals of Tiglath-Pilezer have swept away all these ingenious schemes. The Biblical chronology must be rejected, and the synchronisms established by the compiler must be regarded as based on an erroneous calculation of dates." (Sayce's Higher Criticism, &c., 3rd ed.; London: S.P.C.K., 1894, p. 406.)

Here is a conclusion most unequivocally stated. It is, of course, open to Mr. Wood to disagree with it or to disprove it. But if he thinks he puts it fairly before divinity students by stating in a note that "some scholars" consider the durations of the reigns discredited, Bishop Usher's chronology being all the time placed at the head of the page, I can only say that his standard of literary fairness differs from mine.

YOUR REVIEWER.

A TEST ON DIVERSITY OF OPINION.

Madison, Wis.: Feb. 15.

Any careful reader of my logical test, republished by "H. C. M." in your columns (January 16), would have observed that the piece of reasoning was offered not for solution, but as a means of testing diversity of opinion. In my letter to Science this is made additionally clear by the following words, which were not reprinted in the ACADEMY: "It is always interesting to test diversity of opinion, particularly on questions of exact reasoning. It is quite difficult to obtain a test which is at once significant and general," &c. The heading of my letter is "A Test on Diversity of Opinion." It is unfortunate that you should have headed it "Prof. Jastrow's Puzzle," as it was in no sense offered as a puzzle. It was chosen not as a problem of special difficulty, but as one about which variation of opinion was likely.

Regarding the problem itself, I have been fortunate in receiving quite a number of interesting replies, mainly from those who have given great attention to the study of logic. Judged by the answers of these scholars, Mr. Blackburn's solution must be pronounced irrelevant and unsatisfactory. His suggestion that the problem is as old as Aristotle indicates that he has not quite appreciated the point of the reasoning. Let me add that, in order to maintain an independence among the answers submitted, I much prefer to have replies sent directly to me.

JOSEPH JASTROW.

RATIONAL EDUCATION.

Sydenham: March 1.

Your correspondents complain that I have avoided their point. I have re-read their first letter, and find, as I thought, that they there claimed that their school was founded in 1889 to translate into fact principles on which we are happily agreed. In showing from their own prospectus that this was not the case either as to matter or manner I thought I was answering their main contention. They now, however, say that this was so in 1894, if not in 1889, and maintain the assertion of plagiarism, without which I should not think of joining issue.

Three points I make essential in carrying out the principles in question: Good school apparatus for teaching by things rather than by descriptions of things; Herbartian methods of instruction; a programme of connected courses adapted to the age of the learners, proceeding from simple to complex subjects and from inductive to deductive instruction.

As to the first, little or no apparatus being supplied to me (quite rightly from the point of view of the headmaster, of course, but not from mine), I had to buy over £24 worth, and still have both the receipts and the articles. As to the other two, had I found them practised at all as I understand them I might have set aside other objections and put my name to the final agreement presented me for signature, and thus become one of the "permanent" masters of the school. But this was not the case.

The time-tables which are cited to overwhelm me can be paralleled by those of almost any school which considers the morning hours best for headwork; and there being as many divergences as similarities, the resemblance does not strike me as strong enough to support the weight of the accusation built on it, especially as the whole of these time-tables might have been omitted from the book without affecting its substance.

I have now shown that however excellent may be the way in which theory is translated into fact at this school, it does not tally with the way in which I think this should be done, and this, with the additional fact that four out of six of the staff are no longer at the school, were two out of sundry good reasons why I did not quote its practice.

Of the detail to which I have referred as original (I said nothing about value), only a small part of this is given in the book—being extracts from the term book of co-ordinated courses, chap. vii., § 5. I have worked out many of these in detail, lesson by lesson, and I regret to say quite alone. But the book is its own witness. I do not fear that any one who reads it on its merits will think it is the result of one year's work, or copied from any source soever.

But in this field there is room for so much hard work that none need be jealous of another, and the perfect system must be the outcome of so many different ways of applying proved principles that I must perforce wish this, and any school which attempts reform all success in carrying it out. The more widely these principles are recognised and applied, the better will be the practice which will ultimately survive; nor need zeal for one's own methods lead one to condemn all others. There is not yet a sufficient body of authority to define orthodoxy!

The suggestion which my critics have misunderstood was that instead of scenting about the book for plagiarism, which does not exist, they should make their criticism constructive, if they must needs break the golden silence.

Mr. Dalton's letter calls for no reply. It says nothing with which I cannot entirely agree.

THE WRITER OF "FOUNDATIONS OF SUCCESS."

[This correspondence must now cease.—ED.]

CAMPION'S "SILENT MUSIC."

London: Feb. 27.

The reviewer of Mr. Churton Collins's Treasury is in error in stating that "Campion's Silent Music . . . has appeared in the Golden Treasury." I do not find any poem answering to the notice of it in Mr. Bullen's two volumes of Lyrics from Elizabethan Song-books. 1387-1888, nor am I acquainted with it. Collins's beautiful "Ode to Evening" is the only unrhymed lyric contained in my collection. May not the lapsus calami be that the verses are in Mr. Beeching's Paradise?

F. T. PALGRAVE.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

ON Saturday afternoon I did perceive a divided duty. The Crystal Palace with its in memoriam Schubert programme seemed the proper place to go to, and yet, like many enjoyable concerts, there was little to notice in it. The "Rosamunde" music and the Symphony in C, two works originally produced in England by Mr. Manns, were safe to be interpreted by him with all due reverence and enthusiasm. At the Queen's Hall, on the other hand, two novelties claimed attention: a "Tragic" Symphony by Felix Draeseke, and the introduction to the second act of Humperdinck's latest opera, "Königskinder." The latter is bright and melodious, scarcely important enough, however, to make much effect in a concert-room. The Symphony is long, but its length was not like the one in the Palace programme, "heavenly." To the composer, judging by the title which he gave to it, the music evidently appeared tragic; the public received it coldly, for they evidently found it tedious. There is plenty of clever writing in the Symphony, especially in the slow movement, which opens in an impressive manner, and in the Scherzo; but much, nay most, of the music lacks soul and meaning. The composer was evidently very much in earnest, yet his ambition was in excess of his strength. I fancy that, like Beethoven, he worked to a picture in his mind, possibly a noble one; but, unlike his great exemplar, Draeseke was not able to find the musical equivalents for the thoughts and feelings excited by his picture: clever technique and colour—the orchestration generally is too noisy, yet some of it is decidedly effective—do not atone for thematic material which only here and there rises a little above the commonplace. Draeseke is now professor of composition at the Dresden Conservatorium. Besides the "Tragic" he appears to have written two other Symphonies, which, unless they are made of much stronger stuff, are not likely to obtain a hearing. Mr. Wood does well to introduce novelties, if only he takes care to select interesting ones. The public never rush after them, and a disappointment like that of last Saturday will have a bad effect. The fact of a new work being included in one of Mr. Wood's usually excellent programmes ought to be a sufficient guarantee that it is one of importance, that it deserves, at any rate, more than one hearing.

DR. JOACHIM made his first appearance this season at the Popular Concerts on Monday evening, and, as is his wont, selected one of the Rasoumowski Quartets (No. 3, in C). Many remarkable quartets have been composed since Beethoven, and yet for depth and nobility of thought, also for powerful workmanship, the master has never been surpassed. The more one hears his music the more wonderful does it seem—wonderful in its skill and in its simple grandeur. Dr. Joachim has shown himself master of many styles: he interprets Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Brahms admirably; it is, however, in Bach and Beethoven that he has won his greatest triumphs. A few seasons ago his intonation was faulty, and it seemed as if his powers were on the wane. Such, however, was happily not the case; the defect may have arisen from ill-health or temporary deafness. On Monday he was in his best form, and together with his worthy associates—Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Paul Ludwig—gave an earnest and able reading of the Quartet. Another fine performance was that of the Brahms Sonata in G (Op. 78) for pianoforte and violin, in which he was sympathetically supported by Miss Fanny Davies. I could not help mentally comparing the rendering of the violin part of that sonata by Joachim and by Sarasate. They both play it in most finished style, but the latter never gets, as it were, to the heart of the music. Joachim really feels what he plays, Sarasate only fancies that he does so. Miss Davies gave as piano solo Mendelssohn's "Presto Scherzando" in F sharp minor. The piece is a difficult one, and she interpreted it well, but it can scarcely be called effective. Her encore—for after much persuasion she yielded—was the showy Op. 7, No. 7, by the same composer, which she performed in exceedingly neat and brilliant manner.

MR. MARK HAMBURG gave a farewell recital at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The programme was too long, and the performances most unequal, and yet the concert proved a great success. In the matter of technique, in life and vigour, Mr. Hamburg's playing is quite remarkable, but when he interprets Beethoven or Chopin you feel that the will must sometimes be taken for the deed. This is as it should be, for the artist is as yet in his teens. The Allegro of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) was given in somewhat rough and unequal manner, and the Scherzo lacked delicacy; the Minuetto and Presto were more satisfactory. The Chopin Sonata was rendered with intense vigour, but not with sufficient poetry; the "Marche Funèbre" left one cold. The "Faschingschwank" of Schumann was the best piece of the afternoon; the first movement, especially, was given with great charm and refinement. The Paganini-Brahms Variations were brilliantly performed; also the difficult Leschetizky "Impromptu" in octaves was dashed off as if it were a mere bagatelle. A clever Gigue by Leschetizky and a graceful Menuet by Paderewski were well rendered, yet neither provoked much enthusiasm.

J. S. S.

It has been given to a couple of English musicians to revive the forlorn art of ensemble playing on two pianofortes. The recital given by Messrs. Ross and Moore on Monday evening at the Queen's Hall was, in many respects, remarkable. Both of these gentlemen have a purity of method and execution as rare as it is deserving of all praise. In comparison with much of the pianoforte playing which is now found acceptable in many quarters, their style is as a chime of bells to the dull blare of a gong. Every note had its true value and significance, and, in the reading of each phrase, there was not feeling only, but—that greater power—the right reserve. There was no vulgar straining to convey more than the composer meant, or to express emotions which do not belong to music at all. It would be difficult to over-praise their delicate performance of two preludes and two studies by Chopin. To those who, brought up on the traditions of the Schumann school, may have objected that Henselt's arrangement of Si oiseau j'étais was taken a few degrees too slowly, it may be said that they have never observed birds on the wing. The motion of flying is peculiarly calm, even, and majestic. Henselt's little piece is generally executed at a terrific pace—in violent contradiction to its beauty and intention. We congratulate Mr. Ross and Mr. Moore on their unusual talents, their wholly exceptional training, their conscience in art.

SCIENCE.

THE article in the Times which threw, if not cold, at least tepid water upon the National Physical Laboratory scheme has caused considerable indignation in higher scientific circles, and the opinion is freely expressed that the Times would do well to vary its scientific articles occasionally with something that bears neither the stamp of prejudice nor the marks of distinctive idiosyncrasy. Lord Lister has gone to the length, for him, of answering the article in detail; but the Times is unrepentant in its opposition, even to the verge of casuistry. The main point on which it bases its objection to a State-built laboratory for research is the lack of scientific enterprise displayed by British manufacturers in comparison with their German rivals. The latter, it considers, have earned a right to the use of the famous Reichsanstalt which was so dear to the heart of Von Helmholtz, because they led the way for it, and can appreciate its benefits. On the other hand, the Times in its reply ignores Lord Lister's statement that the little testing observatory at Kew earns considerably more in fees than the whole of the Reichsanstalt—which is a point in favour of the British manufacturer—and contents itself with a quibbling retort that the Berlin laboratory is "self-supporting to an extent which for Germany is considerable." One might add by the same reasoning that the British manufacturer is self-supporting to an extent which for Germany is inconceivable.

But the British manufacturer has terrible limits, it is only fair to admit, and one of these is his obstinate aversion to foreign weights and measures. It is doubtful whether he realises how much he is handicapped by insularity in this respect; but if he cares to know I think he would be edified by a perusal of the extracts from consular reports collected by the New Decimal Association, established to promote the adoption of a decimal system of weights, measures, and coinage in the United Kingdom. They will be found, neatly condensed, in a report presented to the Committee on Weights and Measures of the Boston Society of Civil Engineers, and printed in the American journal Science for February 19. They include testimony as to the disadvantage at which British trade is placed, from Rotterdam, Milan, Varna, Constantinople, Rouen, Flushing, Marseilles, Lisbon, Algiers, Vienna, Malaga, Madrid, and twelve other places. One consul writes:

"I think I may safely say that to the tradesmen of foreign countries our system of weights and measures is a constant stumbling-block. Not one in a thousand understands it; and rather than suffer the perplexity of it, or risk the loss that a miscalculation would entail, they pass on to our neighbours who write and speak to him, in his native language, of metres and kilos. He thereby knows what he buys, knows what he has to clear through the custom house without risk of fine or forfeiture, and knows the length and cube which leaves him a profit when he sells. For these reasons I doubt not that we lose much valuable trade.

Another gives a concrete instance of business lost owing to the unwillingness of British manufacturers to pander to foreign customs:

"Not long ago," he says, "a man came to me with the price list of a British machinery maker, and I converted for him the specifications into their metrical equivalents. He then said that the machine in question seemed just what he wanted, and that he would order one for trial and give a repeat order if it turned out satisfactory. Meeting me again a short time after, he told me that although he would have preferred buying the English machine, he had imported one of German make—first, because he could not be bothered with recurring calculations based on an unfamiliar system, and, secondly, because the measurements did not coincide with his existing plant of Continental make."

Perhaps the most convincing argument of all, however, if our manufacturers are shy of departing from the traditions of their fathers, is the fact that one of the leading engine-makers of the world, Messrs. Willans & Robinson, of Thames Ditton, have for some years past adopted the metric system of measurement throughout their work with marked improvement in the result. Their account of the matter is short and convincing:

"Our reasons for adopting the metric linear system were mainly two, both commercial: (1) to enable us to continue the interchangeable system on which we work with our Continental licences, and (2) to promote the sale of our engines in countries using the metric system."

"It was considered possible that, though a specialty, the fact of our engines being figured in inches might tell against them when competing with others figured in millimetres. The results have been most satisfactory in all departments. In the drawing office it has been found that the change makes it easier to design, calculate, plot dimensions, check and read drawings. No mistakes have been made that can be traced to the change. In the shops, where we chiefly work to gauges, there has been no difficulty in marking the latter, and marking off is easier. In a short time the men preferred metric measurements."

This is the last word on the subject so far as modern industrial conditions are concerned in this country. If the men prefer the metric system, then is it indeed twice blessed. It is the fear of the men, and of their invincible conservatism towards every change but those favourably affecting hours and wages, that has hitherto restrained many manufacturers from making the experiment.

SIR DOUGLAS GALTON is appealing for funds to carry on the work of the "Childhood Society." This is a society devoted to the scientific observation and classification of children, and it is stated that last year a report was published on no less than 100,000 children examined individually between the years 1888-94. The inquiries made by the society have also proved useful for purposes of social legislation, as in regard to children in reformatories and Poor Law schools. At present about £1,000 are needed to prosecute this work, and taking into account the light recently thrown on juvenile crime, no one can doubt that it is of the highest importance.

H. C. M.

ART.

THE Fine Art Society's roomful of Du Maurier drawings are chiefly done within late years, and have less beauty of execution than has the work of the earlier half of his career. This is, needless to say, a different thing from beauty of design, which never failed him. The chief feeling with which we now look at it all—the line, the drawing, the invention, the literature—is that the vulgarity of Trilby sends back a retrospective blight upon the wit, the delicacy, the elegance that greatly pleased us once. There was something well-bred and even spiritual in the Punch drawings of many years; their wit was exceedingly intelligent; and the publication of Peter Ibbetson helped the conviction that it was so, and added to the list of the Du Maurier graces a tenderness and a sense of the past which seemed of high quality. Then came Trilby, which must needs make any sensitive reader who had liked Mr. Du Maurier's work doubt his own judgments. The cheapness and essential commonness of the book and the play—the intolerable literary manner especially—at once caricatured the man's whole talent. For a time it seemed impossible to admire its most gracious work—the work that had seemed so gracious in no unfastidious or ignoble eyes. The very things that had been done with delicacy in Punch and in Peter Ibbetson were done in Trilby with familiarity; in spite of a certain tenderness and feeling, the book was a real offence, or rather it was the more an offence because those true qualities were in it. But why waste words to complain of vulgarity? No complaint can reach it.

Forgetting Trilby then, if possible, we shall find many an intelligent idea and many a beautiful human shape in this collection. Mr. Du Maurier's wit is singularly free from folly; it has great good sense, gentle good taste, and quite a curious perception of the processes and the interceptions of human communication as it is among ordinary men, women, and children. Some of the passages of the simplicity of children are very charming, and he fits them with lovely expression in lovely faces. There is nothing prettier than the candid doubt in the look and attitude of a little boy: "How pretty that lady is, Papa!" "Very pretty indeed, Tommy!" (Pause.) "I think she's the prettiest lady I ever saw, Papa!" "Really, Tommy?" (Pause.) "Are you quite sure you still love Mummy best, Papa?" Another humorist (before Trilby one would have said a vulgar humorist) would have made a common dowdy joke of this by giving "Mummy" as an ugly woman. "True Humility," again, is an admirable drawing. Here the very young curate, breakfasting at the Palace, assures his Right Reverend inquiring host that parts of his egg are excellent. The curate, the bishop, the bishop's wife, are all fine comedy. And there is some of the finest comedy in many slight, accessory, background faces, throughout the drawings. One wishes for more landscape, in which Mr. Du Maurier has done exquisite things.

A. M.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL,
ENTITLED
THE GREEN BOOK;Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

Translated by Mrs. WAUGH (ELLIS WRIGHT).

With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)

Crown 8vo, art linen, 6s.

FOURTH EDITION now ready.

"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle.

Mr. Courtenay says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigal variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."

"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY MAURUS JÓKAI (Uniform with the above).

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book.... Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.

Authorised Editions, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. each.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN.

'MIDST THE WILD
CARPATHIANS.

"A thrilling Hungarian historical novel. Jókai's extraordinary dramatic and descriptive powers have full play."—Truth.

PRETTY MICHAEL.

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read."—Saturday Review.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

Price 2d., by post 3d.; yearly subscription, 2s. 8d.

THE LITERARY GUIDE:

A Rationalist Review.

Devoted mainly to Books and Publications which deal with Religion, Philosophy, Science, and Ethics from a Rationalist standpoint.

No. 9, MARCH, 1897, CONTAINS:

DR. GOLDWIN SMITH'S GUESSES.
ARISTOTLE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.
THE NEW "ANTE-NICENE" VOLUME
THE SCIENCE OF MIND.
ON BEHALF OF POSTERITY.
THE HUMAN JESUS IN TRAGEDY.
BIBLE STORIES AND HISTORICAL CRITICISM.
MILLS' EARLY ESSAYS.
RELIGION and the SCIENTIFIC SPIRIT.
ETHICS for the YOUNG.
GERMAN CRITICS at WORK.
SIGNS and WARNINGS (gleaned from the Religious Press).
RANDOM JOTTINGS.
CHATS about BOOKS.—V. With J. H. MUIRHEAD, M.A.
RATIONALISM in the MAGAZINES.

* Nos. 2 to 8 may still be obtained.

London: Watts & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the
houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,
and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;

48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and

at BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

A BRILLIANT NOVEL.A DAUGHTER'S GRIEF

By F. H. CLIFFE.

2s. 6d.

"There are numbers of strong situations and skilful and unexpected developments in 'A Daughter's Grief.' The reader follows with the closest attention the unfolding of the plot. The various parts are finished and fitted to one another with considerable art."—Scotsman.

London: BELLAIN & Co., 9, Hart Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application

Offices: 14 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

Chief Office—HOLBORN BAR, LONDON.

Summary of the Report presented at the Forty-eighth Annual Meeting, held on 4th March, 1897.

ORDINARY BRANCH.

The number of Policies issued during the year was 64,241, assuring the sum of £6,507,820 and producing a New Annual Premium Income of £354,526.

The Premiums received during the year were £2,543,282, being an increase of £239,249 over the year 1895.

The Claims of the year amounted to £588,874.
The number of Deaths was 4,598, and 365
Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 455,795.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

The Premiums received during the year were £4,578,793, being an increase of £226,168.

The Claims of the year amounted to £1,706,481.
The number of Deaths was 183,959, and 1,630
Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Free Policies granted during the year to those Policyholders of five years' standing, who desired to discontinue their payments, was 59,534, the number in force being 499,296. The number of Free Policies which became claims during the year was 9,283.

The total number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 12,130,542; their average duration is almost exactly eight years.

The Assets of the Company, in both branches,
as shown in the Balance Sheet, are £27,059,111, being an increase of £3,143,221 over those of 1895. A supplement showing in detail the various investments is published with this Report.

In their last Report the Directors drew atten-sion to the success which had attended the introduction of the special tables combining Life Assurance with a provision for old age.
The popularity of these tables still continues, and it will interest the Shareholders to learn that Endowment Assurances and other forms of provision for old age are largely adopted by the public, the number of Policies securing benefits at age 60 and upwards being over 550,000, and securing capital sums exceeding £23,000,000.

Messrs. Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths & Co. have examined the Securities, and their certificate is appended to the Balance Sheets.

THOS. C. DEWEY, }
WILLIAM HUGHES, } Managers.

W. J. LANCASTER, Secretary.

The full Report and Balance Sheet can be obtained upon application to the Secretary.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

President—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE; the Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF; HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.; Sir HENRY BARKLY, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S.

Trustees—Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S.; Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERRY, K.G.; Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

Committee—

Rev. Canon ALGER,
Dr. J. H. BRIDGES,
Sir F. W. BURTON,
Professor LEWIS CAMPBELL,
R. COPLEY CHRISTIE, Esq.,
J. W. COURTNEY, Esq., U.B.
EARL OF CREWE, K.P.

AUSTIN DORSON, Esq.,
SIDNEY GOSSE, Esq., M.P.,
EDMUND GOSSE, Esq.,
Mrs. J. E. GREEN,
FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.,
Sir C. P. LEBERT, K.C.S.I.

Sir C. M. KENNEDY, C.B.,
K.C.M.G.,
W. E. H. LEOKY, Esq.,
D.C.L., M.P.,
Rev. STANLEY LEATHES, D.D.,
SIDNEY LEE, Esq.,
W. S. LILLY, Esq.

SIDNEY J. LOW, Esq.,
FRANK T. MARZIALS, Esq.,
ST. GEORGE MIVART, Esq.,
F.R.S.,
Sir F. POLLOCK, Bart.,
Rev. Dr. RICE,
H. R. TADDEN, Esq.

The Library contains about 175,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life Membership according to age. Fifteen volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. CATALOGUE, FIFTH EDITION, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

TO ALL WHO WRITE, EDIT, DRAW, or SCRIBBLE.

A Perfect Pen.

For all Literary People.

For all People who use a Pen.

Nothing is so convenient as

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen

(Desk or Pocket size).

It can be carried in the pocket in any position.

The ink can never spill in the pocket: it is a physical impossibility for it to do so.

It has a gold nib, iridium tipped, of the finest quality—fine, medium, or broad point, as ordered.

It writes instantaneously, without shaking or dipping.

Made in several sizes. Price 12/6.

A Perfect Ink Pencil.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

To those who prefer a Stylo Pen, we recommend Caw's adjustable Stylographic Pen, which adapts itself to any handwriting, and can be instantly changed in adjustment, if not quite comfortable.

Price, from 5/-.

A Perfect Lead Pencil.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

"A remarkably smart contrivance."

Black and White.

"Surely a boon to all busy people."

Westminster Budget.

"A design in lead pencils that deserves popularity."—Morning Leader.

"I hope he may make a fortune by it."—Truth.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil looks like an ordinary pencil, and is used like an ordinary pencil. It is the same size as an ordinary pencil. It costs no more than an ordinary pencil of the same quality.

But it lasts at the very least twice as long, because there is none of the waste that occurs through breakage of the lead in sharpening a cedar pencil. This is more especially noticeable in the case of blue and red pencils. In using an ordinary coloured pencil, probably half the crayon-lead is wasted in cutting; and another quarter by the lead breaking in use. The Blaisdell coloured pencils waste none of the crayon in cutting, for there is no cutting to be done, and the crayon does not readily break in use. Hence the saving in lead alone is very great, and the saving of time, trouble, and annoyance is greater still. There are no chips, no dirty smears from crayon dust, and a perfect point is produced instantaneously whenever needed. The same is true of the black-lead Blaisdell Pencil.

The paper covering holds firm until it is desired to remove it. Then all that is necessary is to break the outer cover with a knife or pin, and pull off a spiral of paper. The new point is then ready for use.

Blaisdell Pencils, whether black or coloured, are made in but one quality—the best; but the black-lead pencil is made in all grades of hardness for writing or drawing.

If not obtainable at your Stationer's, send for Specimens—Red, Blue, and Black, post free (in the United Kingdom), 1s.

BLAISDELL PENCIL CO., LTD.

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

The only Perfect Table Gum is LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE.

BECAUSE it STICKS.

BECAUSE it sticks things so that they "stay stuck."

BECAUSE it dries quicker than any gum, being practically a thin, ever-fluid glue.

BECAUSE the less you use the better and tighter it sticks.

MOREOVER, it costs no more than gum or paste, and goes ever so much further.

Of all Stationers at 3d. and 6d.

RUSSIA CEMENT COMPANY,

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 9s. 6d., or Part I., 6s. 6d.; Part II., 3s. 6d. Just published. With 11 Maps.

SOUTH and EAST AFRICA. Being Vol. IV.

of A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. By C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Colonial Office, London.

The First Part giving a History of South Africa down to the Present Day.

The Second including Geographical Chapters on the British South African Colonies, together with an account of British Central Africa and British East Africa.

TIMES.—"Mr. Lucas's book supplies a want, and the public will be glad to have its attention called to the fact, at a period when public attention has been so sharply directed upon South Africa, and partisan literature abounds, of an easily accessible, impartial and trustworthy exposition of South African history."

Already published.

INTRODUCTION. With 8 Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Vol. 1. THE MEDITERRANEAN and EASTERN COLONIES (exclusive of India). With 11 Maps. 5s.

Vol. 2. THE WEST INDIAN COLONIES. With 12 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Vol. 3. WEST AFRICA. With 5 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, with Maps, price 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY of AFRICA SOUTH of the ZAMBEZI. By the Rev. W. P. GRESWELL, M.A., under the auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute.

TIMES.—"A very useful and opportune publication by a very competent writer..... Few men are better qualified than Mr. Greswell to furnish the student or the traveller with the latest and most authentic information."

The EUROPEAN CONCERT in the EASTERN

QUESTION. A Collection of Treaties and other Public Acts. Edited, with Introductions and Notes, by T. E. HOLLAND, D.C.L. 8vo, price 12s. 6d.

Fourth Edition, Revised, demy 8vo, cloth, 22s. 6d.

A TREATISE on INTERNATIONAL LAW.

By the late WILLIAM EDWARD HALL, M.A., Author of "A Treatise on the Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown."

NOW READY, Part V., 3s. 6d. net.

HISTORICAL ATLAS of MODERN EUROPE, from the Decline of the Roman Empire, comprising also Maps of Parts of Asia and of the New World connected with European History. Edited by REGINALD LANE POOLE, M.A., Ph.D. Part V. contains—Map 21. ANGLIA MONASTICA: showing the Principal Religious Houses in the Time of Henry VIII., together with the Dioceses formed after their Suppression. By Miss A. M. COOKE.—Map 51. SCANDINAVIA, 1668-1815. By R. NISBET BAIN, of the British Museum.—Map 77. WESTERN ASIA under the ABBASID CALIPHS, 780. By the EDITOR.

*. A Portfolio has been prepared and can be obtained at the price of 3s. 6d. net.

Twenty-first Edition, Eighty-second Thousand, 3s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES.

By SIR WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., a Vice-President of the Royal Asiatic Society.

The TIMES of INDIA.—"By far the best manual of Indian history that has hitherto been published."

REIS and RAYYAT, Calcutta.—"The publication of Sir W. W. Hunter's history of India is an event in literary history."

LAND-SYSTEMS of BRITISH INDIA: being a Manual of the Land Tenures, and of the Systems of Land-Revenue Administration prevalent in the several Provinces. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.R.A.S. 3 vols., 8vo, with Maps, £3 3s.

LAND-REVENUE and TENURE in BRITISH

INDIA. By the SAME AUTHOR. With Map. Crown 8vo, 5s.

NOW READY, Vol. I., Part II., WEST and WEST-CENTRAL PHRYGIA.

With Illustrations. Royal 8vo, linen, price 21s. net.

THE CITIES and BISHOPRICS of PHRYGIA:

Being an Essay of the Local History of Phrygia from the Earliest Times to the Turkish Conquest. By W. M. RAMSAY, D.C.L., LL.D.

Part I., THE LYCOS VALLEY and SOUTH-WESTERN PHRYGIA, has been already published, price 18s. net.

"Professor Ramsay grasps with a sure hand epigraphy, numismatics, philology, geography, and bends all to his purposes. Every inscription that he reproduces in this volume gains in lucidity and authority by his handling of it; and of every city which he treats we rest assured that we now know all that is to be known at the present moment, and far more than has been known at any previous moment since the East shut out the West from Anatolia."—Athenaeum.

Just published, Second Edition, Revised, extra fcap. 8vo, half-buckram, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PRINCE. By Niccolo Machiavelli.

Translated from the Italian by NINIAN HILL THOMSON, M.A.

Just published, crown 4to, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

A STUDENT'S DICTIONARY of ANGLO-SAXON.

By HENRY SWEET, M.A.

Brevity and conciseness have been aimed at throughout. The meanings are given in plain modern English. References have been omitted, irregular forms are noticed very briefly, and cognate words are given only in Old English itself.

NOW READY, small 8vo, buckram, 10s. 6d. net.

A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of the MAIOLICA and KINDRED WARES in the ASHMOLLEAN MUSEUM, OXFORD. With Introduction, Notice, and Illustrations by C. DRURY E. FORTNUM, Hon. D.C.L.

TIMES.—"We are glad to welcome this literary completion of a noble gift.... A charming book, with excellent photographic reproductions of the best pieces in the collection."

Small 4to, £3 3s. net.

MAIOLICA: a Historical Treatise on the Glazed and Enamelled Earthenwares of Italy, &c., with Plates, Marks, &c. By C. DRURY E. FORTNUM, D.C.L.

Just published, pp. 560, demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

A CRITICAL DISSERTATION ON the ATHANASIAN CREED: its Original Language, Date, Authorship, Titles, Text, Reception, and Use. By G. D. W. OMMANNEY, M.A., Prebendary of Wells.

Just published, with Two Facsimiles, demy 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

THE ORIGINAL HEBREW of a PORTION of ECCELESIASTICUS (XXXIX. 15 to XLIX. 11), together with the Early Versions and an English Translation. Followed by the Quotations from Ben Sira in Rabbinical Literature. Edited by A. E. COWLEY, M.A., and AD. NEUBAUER, M.A.

Just published, Part VI., completing the Work, 21s.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT, and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars. Parts I.—V. (already published), 4to, 21s. each.

EXPOSITORY TIMES.—"This is, and will remain, the Concordance of the Septuagint, and not to the Septuagint only, but to all the Greek versions of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha."

Just published, with Five Plates, small 4to, stiff boards, 13s. 6d. net.

GREEK PAPYRI. Series II.

NEW CLASSICAL FRAGMENTS and OTHER

GREEK and LATIN PAPYRI. Edited by BERNARD P. GRENFELL, M.A., sometime Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Queen's College; and ARTHUR S. HUNT, M.A., Craven Fellow, late Scholar of Queen's College.

Now ready, Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Portrait and Facsimile, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

STEELE, Selections from the "Tatler."

"SPECTATOR," and "GUARDIAN." With Introduction and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON.

"The editorial execution of the work deserves the highest praise."—Saturday Review. "Deserves the hearty support of those associated with the interests of the higher literary education."—Academy.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WARHOUSE, AMEN CORNER. E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Ionsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1297.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES:
No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1442 lots.)
.. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (752, 733 lots.)
.. 53, PHILOLOGY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden. 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 2s. 6d. net, eighth edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Volumes for prompt consideration.—Address 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

FIRST EDITIONS OF MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Alington; Books illustrated by G. and B. Cruikshank, Phil. Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & BAILLON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing Illustrated and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating subjects required.

A GENTLEMAN (M.A. Oxon) who has just completed the preparation for the press of an extensive work of his own, and who has therefore time on his hands, desires to OFFER his SERVICES on the EDITORIAL STAFF of a PUBLISHING FIRM, or in connection with a weekly journal or other periodical publication, to each successive issue of which he would undertake to contribute a literary article. The advertiser possesses very considerable experience both as author and reviewer, having contributed to the Quarterly Review, the Nineteenth Century, &c., &c.—Address, A. B., care of the ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane.

TYPE-WRITERS and CYCLES.
The Standard makes at half the usual prices.
MACHINES LENT ON HIRE, also BOUGHT and EXCHANGED.
Sundries and Repairs to all Machines.
Terms, cash or instalments.
MS. COPIED from 10d. per 1,000 words.
N. TAYLOR, 74, Chancery Lane, London.
Established 1894.
Telephone 4990. Telegrams "Glossator, London."

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, MARCH 18th, at 5 p.m., at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, S.W., the following Paper will be read:—
"GOREE, a LOST POSSESSION OF ENGLAND," by Mr. W. FREWEN LORD.
HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Secretary.
118, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS.—
ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 54, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s.
A. STEWART, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE to ARTISTS.—The DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, MARCH 26th, 27th, and 28th; and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, MARCH 30th.—Forms and Labels can be obtained from the Academy during the Month of March on receipt of a stamped and directed envelope.

THE COUNCIL of the ROYAL INSTITUTE of BRITISH ARCHITECTS are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT of SECRETARY. Applicants must be gentlemen of culture and literary attainments, with a knowledge of architecture, but not necessarily Architects. Proficiency in French essential, and German desirable. Age not less than about 30, or more than 45. The Secretary will be required to devote his whole time to his official duties. Salary £400 per annum. Full particulars can be obtained at the Offices of the Institute, No. 9, Conduit Street, Hanover Square, London, W. Any canvassing will disqualify. Applications addressed to "The Hon. Secretary, R.I.B.A.," No. 9, Conduit Street, W., must be delivered not later than March 26th.

THE SHAKESPEARE READING SOCIETY.

FOUNDED 1875.

PRESIDENT: Sir HENRY IRVING.
A READING of "THE MERCHANT OF VENICE" (arranged and rehearsed under the direction of Mr. WM. POELL) will take place at STEINWAY HALL, LOWER REYMOUR STREET, on FRIDAY, MARCH 26, at 8 p.m. The parts will be taken by Lady Members of the Society, assisted by Miss BATHMAN (Mrs. CHOWK). Doors open 7.30. Carriages at 10.15. Reserved seats, numbered, 2s.; unnumbered, 1s. Members can obtain from the Hon. Sec. free tickets (for themselves only) for the Gallery. Tickets, and particulars of the Society, may be had of Miss CARR, Hon. Sec., 25, Esmond Road, Bedford Park, W. Tickets (other than members' tickets) can also be had at the doors.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS IN SEPTEMBER, 1897.
FIVE OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Two (£150 and £60) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.
Particulars and copies of examination papers on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.).
CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee 16 guineas.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WM. BROWN, 26, Princes Street, Edinburgh.
Edinburgh University Magazine, Jan.-April, 1871.—Wood's Plates for the Arabian Nights.—Vandy Fair Album, 1890-96.—Turner's Liber Studiorum, 3 vols., 1871.—Turner's Annual Tour, Vol. 3, 1835, L.P.

H. DAYMOND, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.
Kipling's Soldiers Three. 1st India ed.
" Plain Tales from the Hills. 1st India ed.
Any 1st India ed.
Bookplates, good old ones.

J. M. WIGLEY, Bookseller, Lancaster.
J. Dictionary National Biography.—Ferguson's Architecture.—Spencer's (H.) Principles of Biology, 3 vols.—Spencer's (H.) Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.—Spencer's (H.) Other Works.—Murray's (Dr.) English Dictionary.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Parker, Warren, Dana, Culland, Cabot; also any Old Specimens. Best and highest prices paid.—Moon, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

R. HALL, Upper Fant, Maidstone.
Wanted, any Bankers' Magazines, Chemical Society's Journal, Chemical News, Bell's Magazine, Sporting Magazine, Statistical Society's Journals, Philosophical Magazine, and any Books on Kent.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

EDITORS IN SEARCH of good FICTION should write for J. F. SPRIGGS LIST of OVER ONE HUNDRED WORKS offered for SERIAL PUBLICATION. The Authors include the most Popular Novelists of the Day.—J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER SERIAL AGENT, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS, whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospectuses post free.—CARRIAGE INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W. Agent wanted.

SALES BY AUCTION.

ORDER OF SALE.
ANTIQUARIAN, LITERARY and ART
AUCTION SALE ROOMS,
12, ROCKLEY ROAD, SHEPHERD'S BUSH GREEN,
LONDON, W.

At 1 o'clock each day.
MONDAY, MARCH 15..... Royal Victorian Prints.
TUESDAY, MARCH 16..... Early English Topography, Maps, Books.
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17..... Old Theatrical Prints and Drawings, Early Irish Maps, Papal Portraits, and Rome Views.
THURSDAY, MARCH 18..... Sixteenth Century Paintings, Engravings and Books—Unpublished Works of the "Kew Bee" Literary Society and existing Copyrights.
FRIDAY, MARCH 19..... Old British Peasants and Navy Prints—Old United States Newspapers—and Early English Duty Stamped Newspapers.
SATURDAY, MARCH 20..... Old English Engravings, Water Colours, Personal Relics of Royalty and Great Men, Barletts, Portraits, Landscapes, and Orval.
JOHN FARNELL, Auctioneer.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,
Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.

An EXAMINATION will take place at UPPINGHAM on the 30th and 31st March and 1st April, 1897, for SIX OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Two of £70 per annum, Two of £50 per annum, Two of £30 per annum, each tenable at the School. Candidates entertained free of charge if application be made by 15th March, 1897.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

An OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP of the annual value of £75 (tenable for one, two, or three years) is OFFERED by the DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUSTEES for COMPETITION.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

READING SCHOOL, BERKS.

EXAMINATION for TWELVE OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, APRIL 14th and 15th.
For information apply to the SCHOOL SECRETARY.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HEISS, Bienna.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS,
1897.—EXAMINATION, July 6th, 7th. One of £20, two of £30, and three Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE RESIDENT, FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS, and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the HEAD MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE (for Ladies), 43 and 45,
Harley Street.—The ARNOTT PROFESSORSHIP of NATURAL PHILOSOPHY will shortly become Vacant.—For particulars apply to the LADY-RESIDENT.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.
TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 3 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 6s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'.

NEW STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF "DIANA TEMPEST."

A DEVOTEE.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY,

Author of

"Diana Tempest," "The Danvers Jewels," &c.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.

A DEVOTEE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DIANA TEMPEST."

DR. DONALDSON SMITH'S IMPORTANT NEW WORK.

THROUGH UNKNOWN AFRICAN COUNTRIES.

The First Expedition from Somaliland to Lake Rudolf and Lamu.

A Narrative of Scientific Exploration and Sporting Adventures.

By A. DONALDSON SMITH, M.D., F.R.G.S.

With nearly 30 Full-Page Plates and numerous Smaller Illustrations by A. D. McCormick, Charles Whympere, &c., and detailed Maps of the Countries Traversed.
Super-royal 8vo, One Guinea net.

Daily News.—"This is a most important as well as original contribution to the literature of African discovery, ethnology, and international problems of the black continent. Lovers of sport will find in it much to captivate them. But perhaps the majority of readers will care most for the information he gives them on the native tribes and their characteristics, and the relations between Abyssinia and the countries on her borders."

Standard.—"We are sorry to lay down this most interesting and pleasantly written volume. It tells, in clear, succinct, and well-chosen language, the tale of a very adventurous journey; it is well illustrated, and contains a series of excellent route-maps."

Times.—"The narrative never lags and is full of interest throughout. Dr. Smith has sporting anecdotes on almost every page, and they are unusually well told. The general result is that, so far as exploration and natural history and other collections are concerned, this must be reckoned one of the most successful of recent African expeditions."

Daily Chronicle.—"The book is clearly written and well illustrated, and is full of interesting points."

SOLDIERING and SURVEYING in BRITISH EAST AFRICA, 1891-1894.

An Account of the Survey for the Uganda Railway, and the various Campaigns in the British Protectorate during the last few years. By Major J. R.
MACDONALD, R.E. Illustrated from Sketches and Photographs by the Author and numerous Plans and a Map. Demy 8vo, 16s.

ON VELDT and FARM: in Cape Colony, Bechuanaland, Natal, and the Transvaal. By FRANCIS MCNAB. With Map. Crown 8vo, 300 pages,
3s. 6d.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"This work will assuredly open our eyes to the position of affairs in South Africa. 'On Veldt and Farm' will, I am sure, be considered a valuable book."

Scotsman.—"Intending emigrants and settlers, as well as students of South African affairs at a distance, will find in the volume much to guide and instruct as well as to amuse and interest them."

FISH TAILS and SOME TRUE
ONES. By BRADNOCK HALL, Author of "Rough Misadventure." With an Original Etching by the Author, and 12 Full-Page Illustrations by T. H. McLachlan.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BEGGARS of PARIS (PARIS
QUI MENDE). Translated from the French of M.
LOUIS PAULIAN by LADY HERSCHELL. Paper boards, 1s.

Times.—"Not only contains a great many amusing and instructive anecdotes, but formulates a definite scheme for the entire suppression of begging as a trade. Lady Herschell's excellent translation should be read by all who are interested in the vexed question of charity-giving, and even to those who read but for amusement it will prove vastly entertaining."

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street.
New York: 70, Fifth Avenue.

A. D. INNES & CO'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

By J. S. RISLEY, M.A., B.C.L.
THE LAW of WAR: a Study of the Legal Obligations and Conditions applying to Belligerents or Neutrals in Times of War. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.
"The book... is admirably done. It avoids technicalities and... is admirably suited to serve as a guide and first introduction to a most instructive subject."—Scotsman.

By A. HILLIARD ATTERIDGE, Special Correspondent of the "Daily Chronicle" with the Dongola Expeditionary Force.

TOWARDS KHARTOUM: the Story of the Sudan War of 1896. With numerous Maps and Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author.
Demy 8vo, buckram, 16s.

Glasgow Herald says: "Possesses a more than descriptive or historic value; it enables the reader to grasp the Egyptian problem....
Will be read with peculiar interest."

By LIEUTENANT-GENERAL M'LEOD INNES, V.C.
THE SEPOY REVOLT: a Critical
Narrative, covering the whole field of the Indian Mutiny, its causes and course, till the final suppression. With numerous Maps and Plans. Post 8vo, cloth 6s.

By GENERAL SIR CHARLES GOUGH, V.C., G.C.B., and ARTHUR D. INNES, M.A.

THE SIKHS and the SIKH WARS.
With 13 Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.
[Ready immediately.]

By G. BOISSIER (de l'Académie Française).
CICERO and his FRIENDS. Translated by A. D. JONES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

By LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ROSS-OF-BLADENBURG,
C.B., late Coldstream Guards.

Dedicated, by permission, to H.M. the Queen.
A HISTORY of the COLDSTREAM
GUARDS, from 1815 to 1896. With numerous Coloured Plates, Drawings, and Maps by Lieutenant Neville R.
Wilkinson. Crown 4to, cloth, gilt top, Two Guinea net.
The Times says: "This magnificent volume... A model of what such a work should be."

By C. R. B. BARRETT.
Dedicated, by permission, to General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G.

BATTLES and BATTLEFIELDS in ENGLAND. With an Introduction by H. D. TRAILL, and profusely illustrated by the Author. Super-royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 18s.
"A remarkably good book of its kind."—Sketch.

By GWENDOLEN TRENCH GASCOYNE.
AMONG PAGODAS and FAIR LADIES

Being an Account of a Tour through Burma. With a Prefatory Note by DONALD SMEATON, C.S.I., Financial Commissioner for Burma. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs. Medium 8vo, buckram, 12s.

"Whoever wants to tread in imagination 'the Road to Mandalay,' and visit that 'cleaner, greener land' of which Mr. Kipling writes so alluringly, could not do better than take the author's of this book for his guide."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW NOVELS.

By MAX PEMBERTON.
CHRISTINE of the HILLS. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s.

The Daily Mail says: "Assuredly he has never written anything more fresh, more simple, more alluring, or more artistically perfect."

By ISABEL CLARKE.
THE EPISODE of ALETHA. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready immediately.]

By EDEN PHILLIPOTS.
LYING PROPHETS: a Novel. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s. Third Edition now ready.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "An excellent novel.... A piece of serious and admirable work.... not unworthy of a place with George Elliot's 'Adam Bede' and 'Mill on the Floss'."

By ESTHER MILLER.
THE SPORT of the GODS. Crown
8vo, cloth, 6s.

The Athenaeum says: "It is very well told.... The novel is exciting and preserves its interest to the end.... Excellent story."

By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Dodo,"
LIMITATIONS. Crown 8vo cloth, 6s.

The Daily Telegraph says: "Mr. Benson has written an interesting and truly human book. His range is much wider than it was, his character-drawing has gained in depth, delicacy, and precision, while the sparkling dialogue which we enjoyed in 'Dodo' has lost none of its old brilliancy."

By FRANCIS GRIBBLE.
THE LOWER LIFE. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 6s.

The National Observer says: "A very remarkable novel, well thought out, well sustained, and inspired from first to last."

By G. R. BURGIN.
TOMALYN'S QUEST. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 6s.

The Daily Telegraph says: "Mr. Burgin has just scored a second shining success with 'Tomalyn's Quest,' a tale of the keenest interest."

London: A. D. INNES & CO., 31 and 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO'S LIST.

2 vols., 8vo, 24s.

MEMOIRS OF BARON LEJEUNE,
Aide-de-Camp to Marshals Berthier, Dessolles,
and Oudinot.

Translated and Edited from the Original French by
Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'ANVERS).

With an Introduction by Major-General MAURICE, C.B.
"There was almost no form of experience in the career of a soldier under Napoleon which this extraordinary and wonderful creature did not see. In reading these memoirs of a life so chequered and of experiences so rich in drama, in variety, in strange situations, one is constantly tempted to think of what the elder Dumas would have made of such an opulent story."—Graphic.

THIRD EDITION, with 6 Portraits, 8vo, 18s.

PICKLE, THE SPY;

Or, the Incognito of Prince Charles.

By ANDREW LANG.

"In this brilliant study of the betrayal and extinction of Jacobitism, Mr. Andrew Lang has triumphantly solved a mystery which once baffled all Europe."—Times.
"Mr. Lang has unmasked a dead traitor, who has lain unsuspected in his Highland grave for close upon seven-score years. It was right it should be done, and he has done it well."—Athenaeum.

"Pickle, the Spy," will be one of the books by which the general reader may remember the year 1897."—Manchester Guardian.

VITA MEDICA: Chapters of Medical Life and Work. By Sir BENJAMIN WARD
RICHARDSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. 8vo, 16s.

"A fascinating book."—Daily News.
"Marked by all the fluency and lucidity of style which made Sir Benjamin Richardson so popular an expounder of medical teachings."—Standard.

NEW BOOK BY PROF. MAX MÜLLER.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the SCIENCE of MYTHOLOGY. By the Right Hon. Prof. MAX
MÜLLER, K.M., Member of the French Institute
2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

CABINET EDITION OF BISHOP CREIGHTON'S
"PAPAcy."

A HISTORY of the PAPAcy from the GREAT SCHISM to the SACK of ROME (1073-1271).
By M. CREIGHTON, D.D. Oxon. and Camb. Lord
Bishop of London. New and Cheaper Edition. In 6
Monthly Volumes. Vols. I. and II. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[Now ready.]

"Those who heard little of Dr. Creighton's merits as an historian till he became a Bishop will be well advised to read this work; while those who knew it already may value it the more for the rise of its author in the ecclesiastical world."—St. James's Gazette.

THE ANNUAL CHARITIES REGISTER and DIGEST for 1897. Being a Classified Register of Charities in or available for the Metropolis, together with a Digest of Information respecting the Legal, Voluntary, and other means for the Prevention and Relief of Distress, and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor. With an Introduction by C. S. LOOCH, Secretary to the Council of the Charity Organisation

Society, London, and an Elaborate Index. 8vo, 4s.

ARISTOTLE and the EARLIER PERI-

PATETICS: being a Translation from Zeller's "Philosophy of the Greeks." By B. F. C. COSTELLO, M.A., and J. H. MUIRHEAD, M.A. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 34s.
"All serious students of Greek philosophy will welcome this translation of a work which belongs to the first rank of Aristotelian literature."—Times.

THE STAPELTONS of YORKSHIRE:

being the History of an English Family from very Early Times. By H. E. CHETWYND-STAPILTON,
Author of "The Chetwynds of Ingestre." With 55
Illustrations. 8vo, 14s.

NEW ROMANCE BY MR. WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE WELL at the WORLD'S END:
a Tale. By WILLIAM MORRIS, Author of "The Earthly Paradise." 2 vols., 8vo, 38s.

The PRINCESS DESIRÉE: a Romance.

By CLEMENTINA BLACK. With 8 Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An uncommonly amusing and skilful adventure."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The reader is carried along without pause to the very last page. It is a stirring and well-written story of the quasi-historical sort."—Literary World.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

MR. MURRAY'S NEWEST BOOKS.

Demy 8vo, 18s.

THE DAWN OF MODERN GEOGRAPHY.

A History of Travel and Geographical Science from the Conversion of the Roman Empire to 900 A.D., with an Account of the Achievements and Writings of the Early Christian, Arab, and Chinese Students and Explorers.

By C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

With Reproductions of the principal Maps of the time.
 "Mr. Beazley has devoted to his difficult task an amazing amount of diligent and painstaking research.....and his literary skill in condensing such a mass of material has enabled him to make a very interesting volume."—Times.

With Map, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE DEFENCE OF THE EMPIRE;

or, The Protection of British Ships, Ports, and Commerce.

A Selection from the Letters and Speeches of Henry Howard Molyneux, FOURTH EARL OF CARNARVON.

Edited by Lieut.-Col. Sir GEO. SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G., F.R.S.

"To Lord Carnarvon the nation owes a deep debt of gratitude for his efforts in the cause of Imperial defence. When we read the few speeches and letters here collected we cannot but feel respect for the energy and pertinacity which led him to press the fortification of our coaling-stations in the face of a thousand rebuffs and delays; sorrow that he has not been permitted to see the almost complete realisation of the aim which he set himself to accomplish."—Pall Mall Gazette.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 13s.

NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1851-72.

Kept by the Rt. Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., sometime Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies; Governor of Madras, 1881-86.

"This is a charming book, full of good things. It consists of the lighter reminiscences of a singularly accomplished man of the world, who in the course of a varied and active life has come in contact with a vast number of distinguished people in many countries."—St. James's Gazette.

With Maps, 8vo, 14s.

THE NAVY AND THE NATION.

By JAMES R. THURSFIELD, M.A., and Lieut.-Col. Sir GEORGE SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G., F.R.S.

"We have called this volume a text-book, it is therefore, perhaps, needful to add that there is not a dry or a dull page in it. Whether it is Mr. Thursfield dealing with the statistics of our seaborne commerce, or Sir George Clarke explaining the relation of submarine mines to war, the subject is so dealt with that not only is it made intelligible to any average Englishman, but attention is riveted by the charm of literary style."—Times.

With Maps and Plans, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

HERODOTUS. The Text of Canon Rawlinson's Translation, with the Notes Abridged for the Use of Students.

By A. J. GRANT, M.A., of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History, Yorkshire College, Leeds; Author of "Greece in the Age of Pericles."
 "The delightful pages of the old Greek, whose flavour has been so admirably presented by Canon Rawlinson will thus be made accessible to a far wider circle than heretofore. There is no better introduction to Greek history and literature than Herodotus, and the English reader gets him here under the best possible conditions."—Literary World.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

EUROPE in the MIDDLE AGE. By Oliver J. Thatcher, Ph.D., and FERDINAND SCHWILL, Ph.D.

This work has been written, by men who have had long experience in teaching, to supply the want of a compendious History of Mediaeval Europe, from the middle of the fourth to the close of the fifteenth century, which has been long felt in Universities and schools. A distinguished Professor of Modern History in one of our leading Universities, to whom a copy has been sent, writes: "The book covers ground on which it has always been hard to get a suitable book for educational purposes, and, so far as I can judge—I have as yet only examined the German History of the tenth century—it is thoroughly sound and clear."

BOOKS FOR LENT.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SERMON on the MOUNT: a Practical Explanation. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Canon of Westminster.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE WORK of the CHURCH in LONDON: a Series of Lectures delivered in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, during the Summer of 1896.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SOME THOUGHTS on the TEXTUAL CRITICISM of the NEW TESTAMENT. By Professor GEORGE SALMON, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each vol.

THE EPISTLES of ST. PAUL to the THESSALONIANS, GALATIANS, and ROMANS. With Notes and Dissertations. By the late B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SOME of the CHIEF FACTS in the LIFE of OUR LORD; and the Authority of the Evangelical Narratives. Lectures preached in St. James's, Westminster. By HENRY WACE, D.D.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the GREEK TESTAMENT: comprising a Connected Narrative of Our Lord's Life, from the Synoptic Gospels in the Original Greek. With Concise Grammar, Notes, &c. By THEOPHILUS D. HALL.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

READY on MARCH 13th.

Post 8vo, with Twenty Maps, price 7s. 6d. net.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF CAVALRY.

BY

GENERAL SIR EVELYN WOOD, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., &c.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.

A FLIRTATION with TRUTH. By

CURTIS YORKE, Author of "Once," "A Record of Discords," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just published.]

"A well-written novel of fashionable life.....The dialogue is essentially 'smart.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A clever, witty, dismal, 'Dodo' kind of book....It has grace and strength of style which it is impossible not to admire."—Freeman's Journal.

"Excellent told, and is nearly all in crisp and clever dialogue, which interests and amuses."—Scotsman.

WORKS BY MR. J. H. CRAWFORD, F.L.S., in uniform binding.

Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

SUMMER DAYS for WINTER

EVENINGS. A Series of Nature Idylls. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The Times.—"With Mr. Crawford's delightful sketches, sometimes telling alone of nature's aspects, sometimes with a thread of story to lend a touch of human interest, a reader must have little imagination if he does not speedily forget the temper that beats against the casement and fancy himself between green earth and blue sky watching the kaleidoscope of the seasons and the changes of the year and the ways of furred and feathered creatures which are so sympathetically described."

THE WILD LIFE of SCOTLAND.

Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The Spectator.—"This is a very delightful as well as informing book, which, in respect of style, recalls Thoreau rather than either Jefferies or Burroughs.....Altogether this book, which belongs to the rare order that can be taken up at any moment and easily read in instalments, is by far the best and most convenient hand-book to Scottish Natural History—in the most comprehensive sense of the word—that has ever been published."

"The best book on the subject."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A NARRATIVE of the BOER WAR.

By T. F. CARTER. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Sheffield Telegraph.—"This great work is history, exhaustive, impartial, and realistic."

The African Critic.—"The book is generally recognised as a standard work on the subject."

JOHN STUART BLACKIE, THE

SELECTED POEMS of. With a Portrait after the Painting by J. H. Lorimer, A.R.S.A. Edited, with an Appreciation by his Nephew, ARCHIBALD STODART WALKER. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The Scotsman.—"A fairly representative selection, with an introduction delightful to read.....The book will be welcome to many."

NEW FICTION.

First Edition of 20,000 copies exhausted. Second Edition now ready.

THE SIGN of the CROSS. A Novel

founded on the famous Play of the same name. By WILSON BARRETT. With a Preface by the BISHOP of TRURO. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book, as well as the play, is a phenomenon of our time, the significance of which, we believe, is wholly for good."—Christian World.

DENYS D'AUVRILLAC. By Hannah

LYNCH, Author of "Daughters of Men," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenaeum.—"May be honourably distinguished from the rank and file of current fiction."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"It is by intrinsic quality of a superior order that this book excels."

MISS CHERRY-BLOSSOM of TÔKYÔ.

By JOHN LUTHER LONG. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Miss Cherry-Blossom is the first view of Madame Ohrysanthème as the New Woman, revolutionising Japanese immemorial custom by her love-making with a young Englishman.....she is charming. The graceful end to the romance comes all too soon."—Saturday Review.

THIRD EDITION.

HER LADYSHIP'S INCOME. By

LORIN KAYE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Times.—"One of the best novels of the day."

The Daily Telegraph.—"A brilliantly written story..... teems with bright, cynical, up-to-date dialogue."

THE MIGHTY TOLTEC. By S. J.

ADAIR FITZGERALD and S. O. LLOYD. Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is one of the best books of adventure that the book season has brought forth."—Manchester Courier.

THE LIGHTER LIFE. By William

WALLACE. Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Anyone with a Parisian side to his character and a full understanding of the spirit which is known as la joie de vivre will appreciate these clever sketches."—Daily Mail.

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE, NORFOLK STREET, W.C.

A SELECTION FROM
BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

*Each Work may be had separately, price 6s.,
of all Booksellers in Town or Country.*

By ROSA N. CAREY.

THE MISTRESS OF BRAE FARM.
SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.
BASIL LYNTHURST.
LOVER OR FRIEND?
FOR LILIAS.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX.
WEE WIFE.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

SCYLLA OR CHARYBDIS?
A BEGINNER.
MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
BELINDA.
ALAS!

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

MY LADY NOBODY.
"GOD'S FOOL."
THE GREATER GLORY.
THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH.
AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

By W. E. NORRIS.

A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER (Reprinting.)
MAJOR AND MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO. (Reprinting.)

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
KITH AND KIN.
FROM MOOR ISLES.
PROBATION. (Reprinting.)
ALDYTH.

By L. DOUGALL

THE MADONNA OF A DAY.

By JANE AUSTEN.

[The only complete Edition.]
EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, AND THE WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, AND PERSUASION.
PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.
SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

IN A GLASS DARKLY.
UNCLE SILAS.
THE HOUSE BY THE CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GIRTON GIRL.
SUSAN FIELDING.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS, AND HOW HE WON IT.
FICKLE FORTUNE.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

DOMESDAY-BOOK AND BEYOND

Three Essays in the Early History of England.

By F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D.,
Downing Professor of the Laws of England in the University of Cambridge, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.
Royal 8vo, 15s.

ATHENEUM.—"The advent of a new book from the pen of Professor Maitland is always an event of importance in the world of law and history... There are points, no doubt, in the author's conclusions which are open to some question, and in a few—a very few—cases he may possibly be mistaken; but it is at least safe to say that Domesday students owe him a real debt of gratitude for his perfect and scrupulous candour."

THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW

BEFORE THE TIME OF EDWARD I. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D., Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 40s.

THREE NEW WORKS ON EDUCATIONAL SCIENCE.

CHAPTERS on the AIMS and PRACTICE OF TEACHING. Edited by FREDERIC SPENCER, M.A., Phil. Doc., Professor of the French Language and Literature in the University College of North Wales, formerly Chief Master on the Modern Side in the Leys School, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

VITTORINO DA FELTRE, and other HUMANIST EDUCATORS: ESSAYS and VERSIONS. An Introduction to the History of Classical Education. By W. H. WOODWARD, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, Lecturer on Education in Victoria University. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THOMAS ARNOLD. His Life at Rugby, and Contributions to Education. Edited by J. J. FINDLAY, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford; Principal of the College of Preceptors' Training College. [Nearly ready.]

BACON'S ESSAYS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by ALFRED S. WEST, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; Fellow of University College, London. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; half-parchment, 5s. [Pitt Press Series.]

POPE'S ESSAYS on CRITICISM. Edited by A. S. WEST, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. [Pitt Press Series.]

EDUCATIONAL TIMES.—"Mr. West's book is not only useful as a 'text with notes'; it is also scholarly and interesting. He has worked with the true literary instinct, and his treatment of the 'Essay on Criticism' is in this respect notably above the level of what we are accustomed to in school editions of isolated works."

THE CAMBRIDGE MILTON FOR SCHOOLS.
New Volume.

COMPLETING THE EDITION OF "PARADISE LOST."
GUARDIAN.—"This edition will, we feel sure, long continue to be the standard school text of 'Paradise Lost.'"

PARADISE LOST. Books IX. and X. With Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Indexes. By A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 2s.

TEXTS AND STUDIES:

Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature.
Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, D.D.

Vol. V. No. 1. APOCRYPHA ANECDOTA. Second Series. By M. H. JAMES, Litt.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 7s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE GREEK TESTAMENT FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.—New Volume.

The EPISTLE to the PHILIPPIANS. Edited by Rev. H. C. G. MOULE, D.D. 2s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

BIOLOGICAL SERIES.
General Editor: A. R. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College.

A MANUAL and DICTIONARY of the FLOWERING PLANTS and FERNS. By J. C. WILLIS, M.A., Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Ceylon. Crown 8vo, 2 vols., 10s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.

General Editor: F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D., late Lecturer in Geography in the University of Cambridge.

ETHNOLOGY. By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S., late Vice-President Anthropological Institute, Corresponding Member Italian and Washington Anthropological Societies. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Second Edition, Revised, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE QUEEN
OF THE MOOR:

A TALE OF DARTMOOR IN THE DAYS OF WATERLOO.

By FREDERIC ADYE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A very pretty little plot of adventure and love is woven out of this material. Interspersed, but not too frequently, are some hunting scenes drawn with great spirit."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"His chapters in praise of the stout hill foxes, and the brilliant runs they give over miles of grass and fern, remind us in their freshness and abundance of life of Whyte Melville at his best.The novel is an excellent one."

Volume II. now ready for delivery to Subscribers.

LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

By Professor W. M. SLOANE, Ph.D., L.H.D.

ILLUSTRATED.

In Twenty Parts at 4s. net each; or in Four Volumes at 24s. net each. (Supplied only in Sets.)

Also ready, Vol. I. and Parts I.—VI.

* * Subscriptions (sent through a Bookseller) will be received at any time and the volumes or parts delivered at such intervals as may be convenient to the Subscriber.

FOREIGN STATESMEN.

NEW VOLUMES.

Edited by Professor J. B. BURY.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

MARIA THERESA. By Rev. J.

FRANCK BRIGHT, D.D., Master of University College, Oxford.

JOSEPH II. By Rev. J. Franck

BRIGHT, D.D.

* * These two volumes supplement one another as a history of the period.

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

Globe 8vo, 5s. each.

Now ready, in Two Volumes,

PROSE WORKS of WILLIAM

WORDSWORTH. Edited by Professor KNIGHT.
With Portraits and Vignettes etched by H. MANESSE.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Promises to be a final edition of one of the greatest and certainly of one of the most voluminous of modern poets."

ESSAYS CLASSICAL By

F. W. H. MYERS. Globe 8vo, 5s.

8vo, 10s. net.

EPIC and ROMANCE. Essays

on Mediæval Literature. By W. P. KER, Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Professor of English Literature in University College, London.

TIMES.—"The book is the work of a scholar and a man of very wide reading."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
The Study of Mythology	297
Mill on Poetry	298
About South Africa	299
The Coldstream Guards	300
Grimm's "Michael Angelo"	300
Small Beer	301
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	301
FICTION:
Clarissa Furlow - Hilda Strafford - Gilbert Murray - God's Failures - The Sentimental Vikings - A Comedy of Three - A Slight Indiscretion - A Leddy in her ain Right - A Golden Autumn - Judy, a Jilt - Weighed in the Balance	303
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	305
New Books Received	306
NOTES AND NEWS	306
Björnstjerne Björnson	308
MR. WILLIAM WATSON AS CRITIC	308
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XVIII., Edmund Waller	309
PARIS LETTER	309
THE BOOK MARKET	310
CORRESPONDENCE	311
ART	311
MUSIC	312

REVIEWS.

THE STUDY OF MYTHOLOGY.

Contributions to the Science of Mythology.
By the Right Hon. Prof. Max Müller, K.M., Membre de l'Institut. (Longman & Co.)

PROF. MAX MÜLLER'S new book may be said to present three aspects: it is controversial, constructive, and expository. Of these three elements the constructive is mainly concerned, so far as it is novel, with Mordvinian mythology. The copious remarks on Greek and Vedic myth contain little that is unfamiliar to readers of the author's other books. Athene, Daphne, and the Dawn shine in their old pre-eminence. In what is expository, perhaps the numerous pages on phonetics and the application of phonetic laws to proper names are the most valuable, though their appeal is only to philological experts. Controversy keeps breaking out constantly from preface to conclusion.

It is not in controversy that Mr. Max Müller chiefly shines. His method is faulty. In place of stating his adversaries' case once for all, giving references to their names and books, he returns again and again to such a subject as "Totemism" without ever setting forth what Totemism, in the opinion of say Mr. J. G. Frazer, really is in all its modifications. As a general rule, he hints and alludes to his English adversaries, states their views in his own way, and furnishes no reference either to the name or the book of the person with whom he is concerned. Sometimes it is, perhaps, impossible to know, and perilous to guess, whom Mr. Max Müller has in his mind. In four lines, on one page, he attributes to one anthropologist the exact opposite of two of that unlucky man's own opinions. Though the error is one of pure inadvertence, it is, none the less, inconvenient.

The controversy is mainly on the old subject. Mr. Max Müller and the philological school explain the problem of mythology by a "disease of language." They analyse ancient mythical names, disengage their original meanings, and, in the light of these meanings, explain the myths. The anthropological school object to the whole method. They point out—quoting Shrader, Tiele, Curtius, Mannhardt, and other scholars—that the analysis of old mythical proper names is a perilous task. This they substantiate by showing that there are almost as many discrepant analyses of the names Athene and Artemis and Achilles, and almost as many alleged original meanings of these names, as there are scholars who attempt to solve the problems. They then object to the logical processes by which the meanings of names, as directly given by divers etymologists, are made to explain the myths. And they point to myths very similar among races who never heard the Greek or Sanskrit names. Meanwhile the anthropologists explain the ugly myths of civilisation as "survivals" among Aryans or Egyptians, from a stage of savagery. Analysing the savage stage of intellect, they demonstrate that the ugly civilised tales are in harmony both with savage thought and ritual, and with the tales which savages actually tell.

This theory and method have assuredly superseded the philological theory and method to a considerable extent. The names of Mr. J. G. Frazer, Prof. Robertson Smith, Mr. Farnell, Mr. Jevons, the folklorists generally (with exceptions), speak for England. Dr. Tylor is the founder, as it were, of the method, in recent times, though he usually applies it to other subjects. In Germany, Mannhardt (ob. 1880), rather as folklorist than anthropologist, sets the most powerful example. Hedoubted, at least, the adequacy of the philological method; he formulated the other method. "The study of the lower races is an invaluable instrument," and so on, while the philological method "in its practical working shows a fundamental lack of the historical sense." Dr. Oldenberg, to judge by Mr. Max Müller's polemic, has applied anthropology to the Veda. In France, M. Henri Gaidoz, with many others; in Italy, Prof. Enrico Morselli, and others, follow similar paths. Against all this view, Mr. Max Müller skirmishes rather than fights a regular battle.

In vol. i., p. 4, our author writes, apropos of the metamorphosis of Daphne:

"Mr. Lang quotes an illustration from the South Pacific that Tuna, the chief of the eels, fell in love with Ina, and asked her to cut off his head. . . . Two cocoanuts sprang up from the buried brain of Tuna. How is this, I may ask, to account for the story of Daphne?"

How, indeed? But who ever said that it did? Mr. Max Müller, as usual, gives no reference. What Mr. Lang says in Myth, Ritual, and Religion (i. 159) as to Daphne is this:

"We may venture to suppose that the story of her change into a laurel is either one of the old stock of similar myths, such as we find among savages, or has been moulded by a poet on the same model. . . . These myths are nature myths, as far as they attempt to account for a fact in nature—namely, for the existence of certain plants and for their place in ritual—the view of Mannhardt."

Such myths, stories to account for a fact, of any sort whatever, are known as "ætiological." So Mr. Max Müller himself writes: "The Tuna story belongs to a very well-known class of ætiological plant-stories, which are meant to explain a no longer intelligible name of a plant, such as snakes-head," &c. Precisely. Where is the difference? Mr. Lang would probably say that such ætiological plant-myths sometimes explain the peculiarities of the plant or "its place in ritual"; sometimes explain the etymology of its name. These latter are myths of "folk-etymology," as when Duddingstone Loch, near Edinburgh, is explained by the tale that Queen Mary as a child "dudded," or made "ducks and drakes" with stones on the water. Or, again, "marmalade" is Maria malade—Queen Mary having eaten marmalade when sea-sick as she came over from France. Folk-etymologies try to explain the etymology of a name of a plant, person, place, or what not. Does the myth of Daphne attempt to explain the etymology of a name? Does the myth explain the name to an ancient Greek? In Mr. Max Müller's oft-repeated theory, Daphne = Dahanâ, Ahanâ = Dawn (ii. 630). How far other scholars agree with him here, and as to Athene = Dahad, may be learned from the works of Welcker, where Athene is "a feminine personification of the upper air"; of Benfey, who looked for Athene in Zend; of Curtius, who voted for "the root dh"; of Preller, who prefers aiθ, whence aiθnp, or ivθ, whence avθos: of Schwartz and Furtwängler, who hold by Athene as "the cloud goddess," or "the goddess of lightning"; while Robertson Smith, reasoning from the ægeus, connects Athene with a Goat tribe of Totemists! Do "folk-etymologies" produce this amusing unanimity of scholarly opinion? And did Mr. Lang, who tells the story of Tuna in a crowd of other plant stories, say that it accounted for the story of Daphne? He referred it (if really a myth, and not a late poetical invention) to a notorious habit of the savage intellect, the "levelling up" of men, beasts, plants, and inorganic nature. Without this intellectual habit, such stories (as Sainte-Beuve acutely remarks) could not be told at all. A modern man—say Mr. Herbert Spencer—who had never in all his life heard a tale of metamorphosis could not invent one. His intellect has not the necessary categories with which the savage stage has supplied us.

As a little clear exposition is worth a world of bickering, we shall explain this matter of folk-etymologies. The village of Stanton Harcourt has given rise to an ætiological myth. An English king, in a battle with the Danes, called out to his general (doubtless, also, his kinsman), "Stand to un, Harcourt!" This etymology, explanatory of the origin of a name, gives birth to a myth. Well, but is the story of Daphne a myth of folk-etymology? Certainly the original Greek narrator did not know that Daphne meant Dawn any more than the English rustic knew what Stanton Harcourt means. But when the rustic invented the fable of "Stand to un, Harcourt!" he had explained the etymology of the name Stanton Harcourt to himself and his friends. He had got what he wanted. On the other hand, when an early Greek said that a laurel grew out of the place where the earth opened and swallowed Daphne as she fled from Apollo, what had he got? Had he explained the etymology of the word "Daphne"? No; he had invented a tale to account for the sacredness of the laurel ("daphne") to the remorseful Apollo. He had not rendered the name "Daphne" by an etymology intelligible to himself. Marmalade = Marie malade, renders marmalade by an etymology intelligible to the popular mind. Stanton Harcourt = "Stand to un, Harcourt," renders Stanton Harcourt by an etymology no less acceptable. To say that a daphne plant sprang from the spot where Daphne was buried does not give an etymology of the word "Daphne," does it?

The process—Mr. Max Müller's process—of the development of myth by "a disease of language" is absolutely distinct from the development of myth by folk-etymologies. Folk-etymologies give a mythical explanation of the etymology of a name. Myth caused by disease of language does nothing of the kind.

Thus, an Aryan, before the separation, said, "The keeper of the gates of the sun pursues the light one." The Aryans separated; those of India kept the original word for "the light one," in the form "Ahanâ," "Dahanâ." The Aryans of Greece kept it (losing its meaning) in the shape "Daphne," the name of a shrub. They also retained the Aryan word for "the keeper of the gates of light" in the shape "Apollo." They also held on, amid changes of language which rendered its original form partly unintelligible to them, to the Aryan phrase, "the keeper of the gates of light pursues the light one." Out of this phrase the word for "pursues" remained perfectly clear, while "keeper" and "light one" (Apollo and Daphne) had lost all intelligible sense and became meaningless proper names. The phrase, the old surviving Aryan phrase, now stood, in Greek, "Apollo pursues Daphne." But the Greeks had a plant called daphne, sacred to Apollo. Why? They did not know, so they combined their information. The Daphne that Apollo pursued, in the unintelligible phrase, must mean that the plant—the daphne, or laurel—grew up on the spot where the earth opened and swallowed the nymph whom Apollo loved.

We know of no proof that verbs retain their meaning in language, in a phrase that persists, while adjectives and nouns become unintelligible proper names. But, even if this is so, does the story of Daphne explain to any Greek hearer the etymology of the words "Daphne" and "Apollo"? Folk-etymology is one thing, the "disease of language" of Mr. Max Müller's hypothesis is another. Seldom do two scholars, in any given case, diagnose the disease in the same way. Therefore, and for other reasons many, their competing discrepancies of interpretation are no basis for another science, that of mythology. Our space is exhausted. But (ii. 737) Mr. Max Müller explains the Athenian custom of ἀρκάειν (to dance a bear-dance) thus: "They [the dancers] were Arkades [Arcadians], and why not ἀρκτοί (bears), and if ἀρκτοί, why not clad in bear-skins, and all the rest?" (ii. 738). Why not, indeed? only the bear-dancers were not Arcadians. They chanced to be Athenian maidens, as Mr. Max Müller had just quoted Harpocration.

MILL ON POETRY.

Early Essays of John Stuart Mill. Selected by J. W. M. Gibbs. (G. Bell & Sons.)

BETWEEN 1829 and 1844 Mill was making his mark as a critical and polemical writer in the columns of the London and Westminster Reviews. He afterwards put together such of these early essays as he thought worth preserving into a volume On Some Unsettled Questions of Political Economy (1844)—not, as Mr. Gibbs says, "his first book," for the System of Logic was published in 1843—and into four volumes of Dissertations and Discussions (1859-1875). Both these works are now out of print, and Mr. Gibbs has thought it worth while to reprint the former, together with a few miscellaneous pieces, of which most are to be found in the Dissertations. It need hardly be said that these writings, interesting as many of them are, do not give us Mill at his best. They are but journalism after all—careful and serious journalism, but journalism still—and Mill had not those ready felicities of style which alone make reprinted journalism tolerable. They will not stand even by the more substantial treatises on the System of Logic and the Principles of Political Economy, much less by that remarkable "human document," the Autobiography, or those thoughtful and robust essays On Liberty and On Representative Government, which for so many have been the first impulse towards an enlightened political and social speculation. With some of the contents of the present volume we cannot now occupy ourselves. The interest of Mill's early studies in economics is by this time little more than historical, and much the same may be said of the essay on Jeremy Bentham, a sufficiently luminous analysis of the doctrine from which Mill's own philosophy took its rise—"the hole of the pit whence he was digged." But there is a group of essays which are curious as marking something of a crisis in the writer's career, and of these perhaps a few words may be said. They are respectively headed What is Poetry? (1833), The Two Kinds of Poetry (1833), and Tennyson's Poems (1835). In that stupendous upbringing of Mill which the Autobiography relates, poetry played a very insignificant part. The elder Mill, it is recorded, "never was a great admirer of Shakespeare"; and though, of course, the boy read Homer and Virgil, Sophocles and Horace, and the rest—he read everything—yet it is clear that the whole stress of his training was laid upon the orators, the historians, and the philosophers. It was in 1828 that he first read Wordsworth, and this event synchronised with a very marked change in his mental attitude, which must probably be ascribed to the influence of James Sterling and of F. D. Maurice. Henceforward the spiritual elements in human happiness became of greater significance to him; he ceased to subscribe to Bentham's dictum, that the pleasure of reading Shakespeare and Milton only differed in quantity and not in kind from the pleasure of playing pushpin; he paid attention to poetry; and he formed the celebrated conviction that when the goal of progress had been reached the human race would still find its highest function in the perusal of Wordsworth.

Readers of The New Republic will remember the famous remark of Mr. Herbert when this was repeated to him: "Did Mill really ever say anything so sane as that?" It is of this period, then, in Mill's life that the essays now before us are characteristic. It is perhaps natural that he should approach poetry in the mood rather of the philosopher than of the critic. It is his impulse to ask the abstract question, "What, essentially, is poetry?" But this question is notoriously the starting-point of all the formulas by which poetry has ever been sterilised: for it leads at once to the conclusion, "This, or that, falls outside the definition: therefore it is not poetry"; while the critic, beginning at the other end with "This, or that, by the pricking of my thumbs, is poetry: what are its characteristics?" is certainly more likely to arrive at some fruitful result. In any case, whether it is desirable to define poetry or not, Mill, at least, does not succeed in reaching an adequate definition. Having come to poetry through Wordsworth and Shelley, what he does define is, very naturally, lyric poetry. Poetry, he says, is "the delineation of emotions"—Wordsworth, by the way, put it better, "emotion remembered in tranquillity"—and then our good logician proceeds unconsciously to refute himself by the deduction that "an epic poem, in so far as it is epic (i.e., narrative), is not poetry at all."

When we follow Mill from the definitions to the media axiomata of poetics we soon find that he has not the sure touch nor, in that special sphere, the adequate knowledge of the true critic. He makes the quite true antithesis between the poetry of culture and the poetry of temperament, and applies it, we venture to think, quite wrongly to Wordsworth and Shelley. Wordsworth wrote often enough merely from the brain; but, surely, when he is at his lyrical best, as in "The Solitary Reaper" or in "Three years she grew in sun and shower," his note is every bit as temperamental, as inspired, as Shelley's. The criticism of Tennyson's early volumes is similarly defective. One need not lay much stress on the general recognition of Tennyson's merit; Mill was singularly fair-minded, and, moreover, the Quarterly had taken the opposite point of view. But it is curious that while Mill distinguishes and fully appreciates the young poet's power of creating natural scenery in harmony with human emotion, yet he fails to see what to us now seems the one pre-eminent feature of these early poems, and actually comments upon a supposed imperfect and unmelodious versification as their chief fault. The essay on Carlyle's French Revolution, which Mr. Gibbs here reprints for the first time, is an interesting bit of wreckage. It is a mere review, consisting, indeed, of quotation to a larger extent than the modern reviewer thinks permissible; but it reminds one of the curious way in which Mill was bound up throughout with the fortunes of the book. It was his studies in the French Revolution which originally supplied much of the material upon which it was based, and then, when the MS. of the first volume was completed, it was by one of Mill's servants that it was accidentally burnt. One may well think highly of the friendship which could survive such a catastrophe.

ABOUT SOUTH AFRICA.

South Africa: a Study in Colonial Administration and Development. By W. Basil Worsfold. Second edition. (Methuen.)

South Africa as It Is. By F. Reginald Statham. (Fisher Unwin.)

It is not surprising that a second edition should so soon be required of Mr. Worsfold's serviceable manual of South African affairs, the first having appeared late in the year 1895. Despite its somewhat uninviting equipment, small type, poor binding, and crowded pages unrelieved by a single illustration, despite even of a distinctly jejune style, his unpretentious little volume has gained the public favour, thanks to its excellent arrangement, clear and concise exposition, and especially its painstaking efforts to get at the truth amid the clouds of prejudice and misrepresentation by which the actual relations continue to be obscured in our South African Colonies and dependencies.

Within the space of a little over 300 pages the author has contrived to give a succinct and remarkably lucid account of historical and political events, from the first Dutch Settlement in the middle of the seventeenth century, down to the present imbroglio. Room has even been found for an interesting chapter on South African Literature, in which the writings of Thomas Pringle and Olive Schreiner are duly appreciated.

A few slips and inaccuracies, inevitable in a book overflowing with details of all sorts, may be noticed in view of future editions. The award to the Free State for the surrender of its claims to the Griqualand diamantiferous area was, we believe, £90,000, not £100,000 as here stated (p. 46). The "eastward" expansion in North America should obviously be the westward (p. 63). The area of the British coal measures is a good deal more than 4,000 square miles (p. 154). "America" must be a misprint for Australia in the reference to "the change from alluvial to quartz mining in both the United States and America" (p. 162). Monomotapa is still spoken of as a "district" (p. 106), although it is now known to have been a personal title ("Lord of the Mines"), not a territorial designation. The Congo State is not "traversed" by the Stevenson Road (p. 264), but runs just within British territory between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika. More serious is the statement (p. 114 and elsewhere) that the Bantus encroached from the north on the Hottentot domain south of the Zambesi synchronously with the arrival of the Dutch and Portuguese in the same region. The whole of this region was, beyond doubt, originally held by the Hottentots and Bushmen, as long ago shown by Lichtenstein. But the Bantu encroachment is not a recent, but for Africa a prehistoric, event, long prior to the advent of the Europeans or even of the Arabs. The Hottentots had been dispossessed of the south-eastern lands some thousands of years ago, or almost certainly before the appearance in those parts of the gold-seeking Himyarites, or whoever were the builders of the Zimbabwe monuments described by Mr. Theodore Bent.

Mr. Statham's claim to navigate these stormy South African waters is based, he tells us, on a twenty years' residence in the capacity of a journalist, and on a personal acquaintance with most of the leading characters in the eventful drama which he describes. Nevertheless, he cannot be accepted as a trustworthy pilot, for he has obviously launched his vessel almost confessedly in the interest of one of the rival parties. The period dealt with is restricted to the last two decades, that is, from the temporary annexation of the Transvaal in 1877 to the Jameson raid and its immediate consequences.

It may be freely admitted that the stirring incidents of this boisterous period are treated in brilliant fashion and in a clear, fluent style, which makes the book very pleasant reading, especially for those who share the author's views on the main points at issue. But others may be less favourably impressed by a picture which certainly betrays a regrettable lack of the artistic sense. One side, the British, is all black, the other, the Dutch, is all white; while the utter absence of tone seems to betray the special pleader, who has a brief in hand, rather than the serious historian anxious for the truth, and careful to weigh his judgments.

This is a heavy indictment, almost as heavy as that brought by Mr. Statham against the English administration and against nearly all the prominent British residents or settlers in South Africa from Livingstone to Mr. Cecil Rhodes; but it will be found fully justified by a large number of passages stamped by palpable bias and partisanship. The outrages inflicted by the Boers on Livingstone are euphemistically spoken of as "misfortunes," for which he had to thank the British Government rather than "any action by Dutch settlers in the Transvaal." Mr. Rhodes is, of course, the incarnation of all evil, regarding whose conduct "toleration and silence would be little short of a crime." Hence the granting of the charter is naturally "regarded as the most extraordinary usurpation of power ever perpetrated since the Popes gave over the Peruvians into the hands of Pizarro. . . . It was an act which would have been paralleled if, in the middle of the last century Great Britain had made half a dozen private persons a present of the whole American continent westward of the Mississippi and Missouri."

Well, but that is about exactly what Great Britain did do, when, in 1732, George II. granted James E. Oglethorpe and a few others the "Georgia Charter," which actually covered the whole region from the Savannah and Altamaha Rivers to the Pacific Ocean. And has Mr. Statham never heard of the East India, Virginia, New England, and Hudson Bay Charters? Dr. Leyds, the deadliest foe to Imperial British interests anywhere south of the Zambesi, is, of course, canonised as "the ablest and most cultured official in South Africa," while the intrigues to bring about a German intervention, of which he was and still is the chief instigator, are described as "seeking the moral (sic) support of friendly Powers." Similarly the Emperor's telegram was merely "a congratulatory message without any arrière pensée, though perhaps a little officious." Then the Outlanders have no grievances; "the majority do not want the franchise," and presumably also do not want education, this matter being also pooh-poohed, while we are opportunely reminded by Mr. Worsfold, who deals in facts, that "out of £103,000 set apart for education for the current year, £800 only is assigned for English schools."

In his account of the continuous conflicts between the Imperial and the Boer Governments, Mr. Statham never once refers to the "Apprentice" question, on which almost everything turned. His version of the filibustering Boer raid into Bechuanaland and the ephemeral Stellaland Republic is equally silent as to the true inwardness of that incursion, which, as everybody knows, received the "moral support" of Germany, its real object being to block the highway to the North, to cut off the English from access to the interior of the continent, and eventually enable the Transvaal to join hands with German South-West Africa. The scheme was thwarted by Sir Charles Warren's expedition of 1885, and that able officer consequently shares the fate of all other champions of the paramount Power. He "returned to England to confound those who had most warmly supported him in South Africa with an exhibition of his intemperateness as a Commissioner of Police." Surely no further proof of animus can be needed than this unworthy sneer at the leader of an expedition which, as we are again opportunely reminded by Mr. Worsfold, "stands out in the history of South Africa as perhaps the one completely successful armed intervention of the Imperial Government," which "restored to Englishmen the prestige and position which they had enjoyed in former days."

Mr. Statham's book is well printed in bold type on stout paper, but it has been supplied neither with an index, an adequate table of contents, nor even a map. These sins of omission are not pardonable in a work dealing with problems which no one seems to understand too well, and which even the alternately dull and humorous proceedings of the Royal Commission may leave, after all, to be settled by the co-operation of forces too wide and vast to be controlled from any one quarter.

THE COLDSTREAM GUARDS.

A History of the Coldstream Guards from 1815 to 1895. By Lieut.-Col. Ross of Bladensbury, C.B. (Innes & Co. 1896.)

THIS is an excellent account of the achievements of the Coldstream Guards, from 1815 to 1895, written by Col. Ross of Bladensbury, a well-known Irishman, and once a distinguished officer of that famous regiment. We wish that the author had extended his research to the annals of the corps, from its first origin, especially as his work carries us back to the past, in its numerous illustrations of the arms, the accoutrements, and the soldiery of the seventeenth and the eighteenth centuries. The narrative, however, within its limits, is very good; indeed, the résumé of the events of the Crimean War is one of the best and most judicious we have ever read. The only fault we have to find with the book is that it runs rather too much into general history; and the errors we have noticed are extremely few. Macmahon, not Bosquet, led the French at the fall of the Malakoff; Surgeon Wyatt was not present "at the Siege of Paris," a misprint, no doubt, for that of Sebastopol; Malplaquet was not one of "Marlborough's greatest triumphs"; Ligny was anything but "a delusive victory." The narrative begins at the close of the campaign of 1815; Col. Ross has very fairly described its incidents. The Coldstreams held Hougomont on the great day of Waterloo. Their heroic defence of the post and that of the other British regiments powerfully contributed to the result of the battle, for it weakened the left wing of the French Army, and changed into a disastrous attack what was meant for a feint. The names of Sergeant Graham and of Col. Macdonnell stand out, among others, for a grand deed of valour; they closed the gate of the château in the face of the enemy, and probably saved the entire position. The Coldstreams formed part of the allied army, which occupied France, under the command of Wellington; their conduct, like that of all the British soldiers, contrasted honourably with that of the ferocious Prussians intent on humiliating and trampling down France. During the long peace from 1818 to 1854 the regiment was chiefly engaged in ordinary home duty, and was only for a time—in Canada—on foreign service; but it always maintained its high standard of discipline and true military worth. Yet the British army, as a whole, declined in this period, in organisation, and as an instrument of war; this was but too evident when the trial of the Crimea came. Col. Ross, we have said, has admirably described this contest; he has risen here to the level of real history. We must, however, pass over most of his narrative; suffice it to say there is scarcely so good an account of the vacillation which prevailed in our councils, of the tactical blunders seen at the Alma, of the administrative failures that wrecked our army, of the strategic mistakes committed before the siege, of the appalling sufferings of the winter of 1854-5—the whole forming a sorry passage of war, if we consider it in its broad aspects, but a passage illustrated by mighty deeds of heroism, constancy, and noble endurance. Col. Ross, we may add, rather absolves Lord Raglan from much of the blame that has fallen on our Commander-in-Chief.

The Coldstreams had more than a proportionate share in the glories and the disasters of the Crimean War. They did not play a very decided part in the closing scenes of the siege of Sebastopol, but they struggled through the ordeal of the trenches for months; and at one time they were so reduced in strength that they only mustered 100 men under arms. Their excellence in the field was most apparent in the earlier stages of the chequered contest; they formed part of the Guards in the fight on the Alma; the steadiness of their advance and the precision of their fire as they pressed forward to the aid of the Light Division attracted the admiration of thousands on the spot. It was the old duel between line and column, as old as that of legion and phalanx; the extended formation was successful, for it was composed of better men. "Our men could not have done it," a French officer exclaimed. The most conspicuous instance, however, of what the Coldstreams were seen on the terrible day of Inkermann, the grandest exhibition history has shown of the heroism and stubbornness of the British infantry. Col. Ross's account of this battle is especially good: it is impartial and picturesque alike; it places in full relief the great deeds of the regiment. The Russian generals, no doubt, committed mistakes; they were much hampered by unforeseen obstacles; but, had their troops been men nearly as good as our own, had their unwieldy masses been more easy to handle, their attack could hardly have failed of success. A handful of Guards on the Kitspur and in the Sandbag Battery fought and defeated enemies sixfold in number.

Col. Ross dwells at length on the numerous reforms which have been made in the British army since the period of the Crimean War; but this is rather outside the scope of his subject. He is a laudator temporis acti, and it has yet to be seen whether the short service system, without a conscription—its true supplement—will stand the trying test of experience, and whether our military organisation is not still defective. The standard of the education of our officers has, however, been raised; the training of the soldier has been much improved; the army, as a whole, stands on a greatly higher level. The Coldstreams, since the close of the Crimean War, were engaged in Egypt, under Lord Wolseley, and took part in the admirably conducted campaign which came to an end at Tel-el-Kebir. They had a detachment, too, employed in the advance which unhappily failed to save Gordon—the result of fatal indecision at home; and they had a sharp struggle with the hordes of the Mahdi and Osman Digna in the march from Suakim. The regiment retains its high place in the service; and should the occasion present itself, it will be what it was at Malplaquet, at Dettingen, at Waterloo, at Inkermann.

Col. Ross's book has been well published. The illustrations are numerous and valuable.

GRIMM'S "MICHAEL ANGELO."

Life of Michael Angelo. New Edition, with Additions, illustrated with Photogravure Plates. By Herman Grimm. Translated by Fanny Elizabeth Buntrell. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

THOSE who are familiar with this Life of Michael Angelo will readily understand why it has reached an eighth edition—those who as yet do not know it will find the history of a most perplexing period set forth with a rare discrimination, a deep insight, a convincing logic, and with a power of enlisting the reader's interest and sympathy which never loses its hold.

Florence, the fertile mother of an immortal family of artists; Rome, the seat of God's vicegerent; faithless, intriguing nobles; fickle, passionate people; popes and cardinals, pre-eminently dissolute and avaricious even for that unprincipled age; France and Germany incessantly fighting and intriguing for the fair cities and vineyards of Italy; and the Pope ever striving to be on the side of the strongest battalions—these make up the sombre fabric of the times through which run those wonderful golden threads of art which have delighted our eyes ever since.

For whether from a real love of beauty, or from vanity and a desire to have their names associated with works likely to live in men's minds and veneration, from whatsoever cause, these men—scheming, vicious and faithless—nevertheless hungered and thirsted after art and held artists in high esteem, and in his own lifetime they were able clearly to anticipate the verdict of posterity by placing Michael Angelo above all artists in the world.

Herr Grimm's criticisms are as just as his history is logical, but both history and criticisms have occasionally to be rewritten owing to the constantly shifting perspective of advancing time, and though what he says or said of Michael Angelo is true—as much to-day as when the century was only half through—we who see are changed; and those qualities which our fathers felt perhaps with emotion leave us cold, while that which moves us was almost ignored by them.

Michael Angelo and Raphael—the one from his Titanic force and daring sublimity, the other from a combination of qualities—had entirely dominated men's minds. Now as these two were the roof and crown of the Renaissance, the ultimate expression of that great artistic epoch, all criticism was founded upon them; and as improvement seemed impossible, so imitation became the only resource for artists unfortunate enough to be born after this last word had been spoken.

Michael Angelo was the greatest exponent of force that has ever lived. His times were troubled, evil days, but they were times of energy; the very sins were the result of a passionate, ungovernable, irresponsible force of character. See Julius II., Michael Angelo's best patron, hurrying from his sick-bed to carry on sieges and wars; defeated, but never overcome; old, but never tired; thwarted in one scheme, he would hurl himself into another—this iron old pope was a type of his time.

Changes were so rapid from utter defeat to supreme success that the hopeless pessimism which clogs our actions, that plethora of experience that chokes initiative, did not exist, and Michael Angelo, the grandest soul of his time, full of its energy but devoid of its base passions, has hewed an imperishable memorial of this splendid force out of the white rocks of Carrara.

But there are other sentiments that govern men besides the emotion produced by great forces. It would be an idle criticism to say that Michael Angelo felt none other, still it must be conceded that of those tenderer qualities that lie in the one word charm he was barren. He astonished and overwhelmed, and it is not given to mortals to overwhelm and charm us at the same time. Space does not allow us an analysis of that train of causes which have brought about the modern reaction in favour of earlier schools. Men like Donatello and Sandro Botticelli touch us through their very reserve and modesty; and even with their immature powers of expression we feel that their appreciation of nature was nearer to ours than that which came after, and so perhaps from our very limitations, perhaps partly from the mere swing of the pendulum, it has come to pass that the springs of inspiration that for three centuries had flowed from Michael Angelo and Raphael have in these latter days become dried up.

The illustrations throughout this delightful book are excellent process reproductions from the works of artists mentioned in the text.

SMALL BEER.

Selections from the Letters of De Brosse.
Translated by Lord Ronald Gower.
(Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.)

CHARLES DE BROSSES' two limit-dates were 1709 and 1777. Between them he read many books and wrote one or two, greatly concerned himself with the government of Dijon, became first President of the Burgundian Parliament, travelled a little, and penned many letters. The first French collection of these letters was published in 1839, and since then there have been half a dozen editions. Lord Ronald Gower's is the first English translation. Lord Ronald Gower calls them "immortal," and tells us in his preface that his great aunt, Lady Granville, writing to her brother in 1842, said, "You have no idea, the amusement of reading 'De Brosse's Letters' over again here. His fun, his perfect simplicity, his good-natured malice and joyous recklessness, make him an enchanting companion." To the changes in thinking that have come about since 1842 we may, we hope, attribute some of our own incapacity to share this opinion. We have given the book the attention that is demanded by the correspondence of a witty Frenchman, and have come out at the end unrewarded. We have found little malice, less fun, and no joyous recklessness at all. On the other hand, we have skipped pages and pages of very excellent guide-book stuff and have been interested in descriptions of customs, ceremonies, and, especially, of persons, quite the most interesting of whom is the Old Pretender, who was then holding his court in Rome as King of England.

"The Pretender [De Brosse wrote] is easily recognised for a Stuart; he has it written in his face. He is tall and thin, and resembles the portraits of his father, James II., very closely, and also the late Marshal Berwick, his natural brother, only that the Marshal had a sad and severe expression, whereas the Pretender's is not only sad but silly. He does not lack dignity in his manner, and I have never seen a prince hold a court circle with so much grace and ease. He has occasionally to appear in public in spite of the retirement in which he lives, although he has none of the actual glitter about him appertaining to other sovereigns; but he does his best to make himself liked in a town to which he owes much, and he occasionally exerts himself at public ceremonies, when his sons do the honours, while he only appears for an hour or two. He is ultra *dévo*t, and his mornings are passed in prayer at the grave of his wife in the Church of the SS. Apostoli."

There is much more in the same minute manner (pp. 178-183). De Brosse, however, has not often such good luck in celebrities. People who would like to know how Rome and Genoa, Florence and Naples, struck an intelligent man a century and more ago, will find these letters entertaining enough. We quote, finally, a good story of one of the spies of James III., a certain Baron de Stock:

"Hardion was showing several people, including our friend the Baron, the King's chamber at Versailles. All at once a certain gem, well-known to you by the name of Michael Angelo's seal, was missed. A diligent search was made, everyone looking for it high and low without success. Hardion then said to the Baron, 'Sir, I am personally acquainted with all the company, you alone excepted; besides, I feel anxious about your health. You look very yellow, which shows that you are bilious; I cannot help thinking that a little emetic, taken on the spot, will do you good.'"

This is quite in the manner of Sherlock Holmes. The remedy, immediately applied, had the desired effect: the Baron had swallowed the gem. In conclusion, we ought to say that both Lord Ronald Gower and his publishers have acquitted themselves well of a not very necessary task.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

The Country of the Pointed Firs. By Sarah Orne Jewett. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

A GOOD book was never made of slighter material than that which Miss Jewett has so deftly manipulated in this pretty story of a New England fishing village. From beginning to end there is nothing in the nature of what we call incident, nor is there a single love passage—indeed, there is hardly a character under sixty years of age,—yet to readers at all fond of quiet humour and gentle, simple folk, and unaffected, unassuming literary grace, this book will be real enjoyment. The intimacy of the home among the lowly is a sweeter thing in Scotland and New England than it is with us. The English are neither so simple nor so contented. Contentment is, indeed, the great secret. Similarly, Scottish and New England writers are more in love with this beautiful hearth-life than are English writers: they see it with clearer vision and describe it with more tenderness. Miss Jewett's book is a little epic of contentment; and it is here that she differs most markedly from Miss Wilkins, whose eyes are more ready to see what is melancholy. The Country of the Pointed Firs is rich in human kindness; and Mrs. Todd and Mrs. Blackett are notable additions to that gallery of good women which most readers like to wander in now and again.

The History of Tom Jones. By Henry Fielding. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

A CURIOUS note is prefixed by the anonymous editor of this generous book. "This reprint," he writes, "of the first edition of Tom Jones is as accurate as it has been possible to make it. In a few instances corrections of obvious misspelling have been made. The quotations have, however, been left with their errors. It is curious to note that, since the first appearance of the novel in 1749, no less than 21,000 alterations have been made in the original text, some of them, indeed, of such a peculiar character that the entire sense of sentences has been completely changed. At times one sentence has been divided into three or four; at others, three sentences have been knocked into one. This volume professes to be merely a restoration of garbled versions, and is presented to the reader in the state in which it was intended to be presented by the author, Henry Fielding." The publishers have done their best to make a readable edition for a small price.

The Pickwick Papers. Vol. II. "Gadshill Edition." (Chapman & Hall.)

THIS, the second and concluding volume of Pickwick, under Mr. Andrew Lang's editorship, calls for little comment in addition to that which we made when the first volume appeared. We still believe that such a book is better in one-volume form; and there our objections end. Mr. Lang has made his notes as brief and as few as possible: one upon Lant Street, one on Prooshan Blues, one on Profel machines, one on Tipcheese (which Mr. Lang thinks to be the game Bunyan was playing when he had a "call"), one on Fanteegs, one on the Fleet Prison, one on the Red-faced Nixon, and one on Crumpets. These are all.

The Misfortunes of Elphin and Rhododaphne.

By T. L. Peacock. (Macmillan & Co.)

WITH this volume the illustrated reprints of Peacock's novels in the "Peacock" series are completed, and altogether they make as delightful a set of books as one can want. In many ways the last is, we think, the best. It contains that magnificent drinker, Seithenyn, and the incomparable War Song of Dinas Vawr:

"We brought away from battle,
And much their land bemoaned them,
Two thousand head of cattle,
And the head of him who owned them."

Peacock's irony is also at its mellowest, and in none of his writings is his intellect fuller-blooded. To this reprint Prof. Saintsbury supplies an interesting preface, and Mr. F. H. Townsend a large number of illustrations, for which we have little but high praise. The pictures on pp. 63 and 72 are as good as anything that Mr. Townsend has done, and there is spirit and intelligence enough in all his work to make him one of the best of living illustrators. The printing of the pictures might be better.

* * *

A Dictionary of the Language of Mota. By the Rev. H. R. Codrington and the Ven. J. Palmer. (S.P.C.K.)

THE language of Mota has nothing to do with those that ride on motor-cars, though it may not, at times, be less strange. The language of Mota is the tongue spoken by some eight hundred persons on Sugarloaf Island, which is one of the Banks' group lying to the north of the New Hebrides in the Pacific; and this little dictionary has been prepared for the use of Melanesian missionaries. It seems to have been well done. Although not tempted to acquire Mota for ourselves, we must admit a desire to say some of the soft simple things that come naturally to a Sugarloaf Islander. Thus: "Ineia usurik, nau we mule we gaw o ororo we map avune qatuna." That, at first sight, is not too perspicuous a remark. It means, however, "He is my father's sister's husband, I go and take up a handful of dust and put it on his head." Even in this country, which is so perfect that it can furnish forth Melanesian missionaries, that is a proceeding for which sometimes there is justification—many of us have uncles who deserve similar treatment. Another pleasant Sugarloaf custom is glanced at in the phrase, "Bleg matmateas," which means "To sing a song on returning from dunning a debtor that he may hear."

* * *

A Pilgrimage to Beethoven. By Richard Wagner. (The Open Court Publishing Company: Chicago and London.)

THIS sketch, miscalled a novelette in the preface to the translation, and miscalled, on the title-page, a novel, though well known to students of Wagner's life, has, we believe, not before been issued in English in separate form. The present version was made by Otto W. Meyer. We quote part of the invocation "Indigence with which the spirited little masterpiece opens:

"O Indigence! thou care-bringer! protectress Divine of the German musician (unless he have reached the haven of director at some court-theatre)! O carking Indigence! as I ever do, so let me now, in this reminiscence from my life, first bring dutiful obeisance to thy praise and honour! Let me sing of thee, thou stedfast companion of my life! Always loyal, never hast thou forsaken me! With a strong palm, thou hast warded from me all shocks of propitious luck. . . . But if it may be, pray do thou at length find some other foster-child than me. For, indeed, I should—if it were only for the sake of curiosity—like to learn from personal experience what manner of existence I might manage to lead without thee. . . . But, ah! I see that I grow impious. Forgive, O thou divine protectress, the blasphemous wish which just escaped me. 'Twas but momentary; for thou seest within my heart, and well thou knowest how wholly thine I am, and ever shall be, though it came to pass that there were a thousand court-theatres in Germany! Amen!"

Had Wagner given to literature the time and thought he gave to music, there would still be a Wagner Society.

* * *

Through London Spectacles. By Constance Milman. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

A DOMESTIC essayist, to hold us, must have either a fascinating personality or a fresh and whimsical way of looking at things. For up to a certain point every man is his own essayist, can supply his own embroidery to common matters: it is therefore necessary before he can be persuaded to buy the lucubrations of another that he should be much tempted. Miss Milman, the author of the pleasant book which lies before us, though she is agreeable company, is never, we fear, quite indispensable: she never says more than the ordinary thing in an ordinary manner. She says it with good humour, and we are conscious of an active mellow intellect at the back of the book; but that is all. At the social evenings of an amateur literary society these papers would have noticeable merit, but print demands something better still. The subjects are well chosen—Miss Burney, and Miss Edgeworth, Sir Thomas Browne, and Charles Lamb, Old Ballads, and Margaret of Newcastle; Brilliant Endings, and Cornish Echoes, and so on—and Miss Milman, at any rate, is never dull.

* * *

In Childhood's Country. By Louise Chandler Moulton. (James Bowden.)

WE cannot understand this book at all. From the design on the cover, and the title, and the dedication ("For Beryl Kernahan"), and the size of the type, we suppose it to be meant for children. Yet the illustrations, by Miss Ethel Reed, are too affected and sophisticated ever to please or interest children (except, perhaps, as puzzles), and the verses are strangely mixed in character. Thus on one page is this little piece, called "The Happiest Folks"—

"I think the dolls are the happiest folks!
Nobody plagues them with practical jokes;
They have a nice house with a parlour-maid,
And the rent of it never has to be paid;
They wear their best clothes whenever they please,
And have nothing to do but to take their ease"— which is appropriate enough; but, later, we come to roundels and rondeaus, which are tiresome reading even to adults, and this scrap, called "The Lily's Rival"—

"I saw a flower in the garden,
She said her name was Rose!
Ah, Lily, pity and pardon,
She robbed me of my repose."

The last line in the mouth of anyone is silly enough, but no child possibly could say it. Again, there is a quatrain called "Monk and Maid"—

"All day they sit, demure on the shelf,
The Bronze-Brown Monk and the Blue-Delft Maid;
But whenever the lights are out at night,
They kiss and whisper, I am afraid."

Why "afraid"? No child would say "afraid." These poems, we might remark in passing, are printed each on a separate page measuring about nine inches by seven. There are longer pieces, too, and some of them are rather pretty, particularly "The Robin's Funeral"; but the book has been ill-considered by its author.

* * *

Industries and Wealth of Nations. By Michael G. Mulhall. (Longmans & Co.)

IN his preface to this book Mr. Mulhall modestly disclaims anything like originality, and explains that all he has done was to select from the works of others, and to bring the results into a narrow compass. He has proved himself, as on previous occasions, a master in the art of compression, and his small volume is a mine of detailed and useful information. We have first a general survey of the position of the nations of Christendom considered in relation to such questions as population, agriculture, manufactures, transport, mines, commerce, railways, earnings per inhabitant, taxation, and debt. Then each country is considered in greater detail by itself. Some idea of the advance of the English-speaking peoples may be formed from the statement that while during the last sixty-five years the European nations have increased 62 per cent., the people of the United States have increased 626 per cent., and of the British Colonies 510 per cent. Our language, which in 1831 was spoken by 35,000,000 people, is now the common tongue of 120,000,000 persons. Some of the most curious figures are those grouped under the heading of agriculture. Thus it is startling to find that while in Europe a farm labourer is credited with the production of three tons of food, the American is credited with twelve tons. The European peasant works harder than an American farm hand, and yet the American produces four times as much. The American labourer cultivates twenty-one acres, while nine acres is the average per man in France, and eight in England. The improved agricultural machinery in use in America accounts for this difference, and, of course, in the States the land is cultivated far less intensely—the average value of the crop per acre being only 43s. as compared with 84s. in France, and 126s. in the United Kingdom.

And yet we cannot help fearing, however, that in spite of all its clearness, this volume will often prove a trap for the unwary. Thus the reader sees that Ireland and France stand together with the lowest birth-rate in the world. The figures are clear, but there is nothing to explain that this is not because the average of children to a marriage in Ireland is small, but because it is the land of the very old and the very young, a large proportion of the persons of marriageable age having emigrated. Ireland and France may rank together at the bottom of the list, but they owe their places to different causes.

Whitaker's Almanack, 1897. (12, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

THE editor of Whitaker in his preface invites suggestions for the improvement of the Almanack, and as it is a pity that one of the most important of its divisions should fall so far below the general excellence of the rest as to be of but little use to the inquirer, we venture to call his attention to the unsatisfactory character of those portions of the educational section which come under the headings: "The Great Public Schools," "Metropolitan Grammar Schools," "Provincial Colleges and Grammar Schools." On what principle the exalted title of "Great Public School" is conferred it is impossible to conjecture. An examination of the catalogue of institutions so honoured makes it evident that the selection as a whole is not based on claims of antiquity, numerical superiority, scholastic brilliance, social dignity, or any combination of these or other conceivable recommendations. On what grounds certain schools are included, and certain schools are excluded, we confess ourselves unable to understand. Whether some are treated with injustice, while others enjoy more than justice, at the hands of the compiler, is a consideration which, perhaps, matters little to Whitaker; but it does matter to Whitaker that any of its information should be ludicrous to the expert and misleading to the layman. Again, what is the meaning of the second heading, "Metropolitan Grammar Schools"? A large proportion of those so designated never were "grammar schools" at all, either in title or in type; and if they were, or had been, the term "grammar school" has long ceased to possess any definite connotation, embracing as it does schools of the first, second, and third grades, and ranging inclusively from some of our most aristocratic boarding schools to many a modest foundation in the smaller provincial towns or larger villages. The footnote to this column is ridiculous. An analysis of the motley collection which appear in the category of "provincial colleges and grammar schools" would reveal similar absurdities. Technically there is but one way of classifying English schools—that is, to arrange them in separate lists according to their various grades as laid down in their schemes. Probably, however, for practical purposes, the best method to adopt would be to place those schools which are represented on the Head Masters' Conference in one list, and to relegate to a second list those represented on the Head Masters' Association only; indicating in each case whether it be a day school, or a boarding school, or a mixed day and boarding school. With regard to assistant masters, it would be sufficient to print the names of those who are masters of boarding houses. To render it of any value the whole of the school section of the Almanack needs recasting on these lines. As it stands, it conveys to the parent no notion of the real position, educational or otherwise, of different schools; and so far from being a general guide to such system of Secondary Education as exists in this country, an inspection of its pages merely makes confusion worse confounded.

FICTION.

Clarissa Furiosa. By W. E. Norris. (Methuen & Co.)

TRULY Mr. Norris has the pen of a ready writer. Far be it from us to grumble at the frequency with which he gratifies his admirers. Our complaint is with the bulk rather than with the number of his achievements. The story of Clarissa Furiosa careers gently on for some four hundred pages, and we are bound to say that three-fourths of these are made up of what, in the case of a less distinguished author, we should not hesitate to call padding. The story is, of course, imperturbable, cheerful, and philosophical, written in a vein of happy optimism. The subject is the salvation of a good old family by the acquisition of filthy lucre. The son, who has a past, marries, with the help of his mother, an heiress. Unfortunately, the heiress has views on the equality of the sexes, and the past, together with the present, which is made in the same image, soon leads to a separation. Clarissa goes off with her dollars and gathers about her a crew of knickerbockered ladies and minor poets with long hair and slimy morals, who do the business at the back of the stage, while the match-making mother tries again in the foreground. It is her daughter this time who is to become the bride of a rich French Vicomte; and the question is whether, with Clarissa's warnings in her ears, she will accept him. Of course she ought not to, but this would not be optimistic, and so, after several chapters of elaborate deliberation, she does. Truly an impotent and empty conclusion, in which principles that have been paraded are gently laid down, and one closes with a yawn upon the orthodox bridal-wreath. Surely there must be those among Mr. Norris's most devoted readers who sometimes sigh for the touch of a vanished hand, the hand that wrote The Rogue, and Major and Minor, and My Friend Jim.

Hilda Strafford. By Beatrice Harraden. (W. Blackwood & Co.)

THAT wistful story, Ships that Pass in the Night, so wound its way into the hearts of its readers that a new book by its author is an event. But the volume before us will, we fear, come as a disappointment; for Miss Harraden's peculiar charm is missing from its pages—that gift (so apparent in her first long story and also in some of the tales in In Varying Moods, her second book) of attracting sympathy to a central figure, half visionary, half spoilt child, and wholly lovable. We cannot consider Miss Harraden a novelist of much range: her characterisation is weak; she has not observed life with much acuteness; but she is strong on two counts—one being this faculty for giving to her admirers just the kind of pathetic figure they want, and the other her very extraordinary understanding of the difficulties that beset the stricken, the lonely, and the disappointed. In Hilda Strafford there is little of Miss Harraden's old gentleness, and none of that humour lying very near to tears which lit up the story called At the Green Dragon—a quality which Miss Harraden alone can supply. Hilda Strafford is the bitter history of a woman who left England somewhat against her will to join her lover on his ranch in California, and to become his wife. Once there, ill-fortune comes; the husband is over-anxious, and Hilda is consumed with regret for a life she deems misspent and with longing to be at home again. How she passes through the ordeal we must leave the reader to discover. We are not ourselves convinced that Miss Harraden has accomplished her desire: to such a nature as Hilda Strafford's, and to such a struggle, a mere short story cannot do justice; and there is much which the reader is entitled to expect that is not here related. As it stands, the story interests, but it does not, as it might, we think, bite itself into the mind. The other story, The Remittance Man, is but a sketch, pleasant enough but very slight. Throughout the book Miss Harraden is eloquent of her new love, California.

Gilbert Murray. By A. E. Houghton. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THERE is a kind of book which perplexes the reviewer. He cannot extol it loudly or condemn it heartily, for neither its merits nor its demerits are so prominent as to draw attention to themselves. He does not like to damn it with faint praise, the invariable resource of the slovenly critic; nor to be churlish about a book which will probably give pleasure to hundreds. Gilbert Murray is that sort of book. It is eminently readable and eminently wholesome; its plot is as interesting as the plots of most other novels; its characters are nearly as human, and its situations almost as exciting. Yet one can find very little to say of it which is not merely explanatory. The hero finds himself suddenly plunged from affluence to poverty. He begins the world by driving a baker's cart; he goes as a waiter to a fête, where he spills a cup of tea over the dress of the young lady whom he afterwards marries; he becomes a clerk; he writes for the magazines—a favourite recreation of all save the most self-denying heroes; and eventually gets a post as secretary to an M.P. Meanwhile, his fortunes have been curiously interwoven with those of an old college rival, who becomes also his rival in love, and is in the end saved from suicide by the unselfish Gilbert Murray. There is a large field for novels which one can read of an evening without danger of nightmares, and which one can read of a morning without neglecting the day's duties to finish them; and Mr. Houghton's book will help to fill an unexceptional corner of it.

God's Failures. By J. S. Fletcher. "Key-notes Series." (John Lane.)

THE local colouring of Mr. Fletcher's stories is that of some wapentake of rural Yorkshire, not on the high moors, but where the great shire slopes down to the homelier English scenery of the Midlands. In the description of village landscape and village life, Mr. Fletcher shows much of the temper of the idyllist. He moves among fields and hedges with a patient observation and a close tenderness. But in his delineation of human life and fate as set against the country background, it is the tragic rather than the idyllic that he affects; and we must own to finding a certain monotony in his tales of ruined careers with their inevitable ending in a convenient halter or the nearest ditch. Sombre passions and morbid temperaments spring like buttercups in Mr. Fletcher's pastures. However, a writer must needs seek an artistic unity in his own fashion, and if the range of these stories is limited, their manner is at least restrained and conscientious. There is no flashy or insincere work in them. For the touch of humour in it, we may be allowed to name "Poor Dan'l" as our favourite among the rest. The selection of the story bearing the title "Light o' Love" for the first place is, one supposes, a concession to the taste of the "Keynotes" Series. It is, at least, no indication of the tone of the volume.

The Sentimental Vikings. By R. V. Risley. (John Lane.)

WE have nothing but welcome for translations from Celtic or Scandinavian saga. They bring a fresh and vital stimulus into letters, new fire from heaven. But of the deliberate imitation or adaptation of such models which is so favourite a modern archaism, we are not quite so sure. Even the genius of William Morris never induced us to thoroughly enjoy his prose romances, or to feel that the epithet "Wardour-street" was altogether undeserved. And if even Mr. Morris, then much more Mr. Risley must come under the condemnation. His Viking tales are put in the mouth of a contemporary minstrel, who tells in days of old the fortunes of his lord in war and wooing. There is a good deal of bloodshed and also a good deal of ale. But if you like the convention, then you should like Mr. Risley's application of it. He has the gift of picturesque and poetic narrative, and has happily caught the vague outlines and the overhanging melancholy of Old Norse romance. Of the story of the Oar-Captain he says:

"The story is rough, like the natures of men, and full of storm of nature and sea, as if a fury had run down the pages. But there are soft threads in its rough woof—I tell it just as the Oar-Captain told it."

The quotation may perhaps serve to explain the title.

A Comedy of Three. By Newton Sanders. "Little Novels Series." (T. Fisher Unwin.)

MR. SANDERS loves violent contrasts. Fiction knows no greater miracle of selfishness than Patricia Crewdson; her sister Rachel is a paragon of meekness and other virtues not commonly found; Herbert Omerod, who completes the trinity, is the most devoted lover you will meet with in three months' conscientious perusal of erotic novels. And, indeed, one need not pine for the reappearance of the sort of man who lets himself be consistently flouted by his fiancés in her days of poverty, who does not expect a single love-letter during an indefinite absence, who is practically turned out of the house by her when he goes to tell her that her mother is dying, but who, nevertheless, calmly jilts her sister and returns to his old allegiance when her short-lived affluence is past. Even the minor characters of the book leave the same impression of being personified abstractions. Mrs. Crewdson might be Peevishness, Mr. Dennington-Parker Respectability, and Mr. Bernard Dennington-Parker Stolidity. Mr. Sanders would achieve better effects if he were content to use lower tones. We know that extremes meet; but so numerous a convocation of them as is found in this Comedy of Three fails to convince.

A Slight Indiscretion. By Mrs. Edward Cartwright. "Little Novels Series." (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is an unpretentious little study of the ethics of flirtation. The lady knows it is a flirtation. The gentleman does not, and when he finds out he shoots himself. The theme has been treated before, but Mrs. Cartwright's variation is abundantly justified by its simplicity and insight. The character of Maud, the flirt, is well drawn.

A Laddy in her ain Richt: a Brief Romance. By Mrs. Tom Kelly. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THERE is one delectable thing about A Laddy in her ain Richt, and that is an excellent reproduction (by way of frontispiece) of a portrait—by whom we know not, but set down as—of the lovely "Alicia, Countess of Karmore." That portrait piques our interest and predisposes us to be taken with the story of the lady. But, alas! and alas! disappointment and weariness grow as we read. It proves mere windiness of sentiment and wordiness of speech; and yet it had possibilities. There is a very picturesque Highland glen; there is also a good Highland character, Niel MacCrin, the gamekeeper; and there is a runaway daughter with a love-match. Moreover, there is an immense amount of shooting; so much that we cannot determine whether the "brief romance" which the secretary, Robert Graeme, purports to tell is truly of love or of sport.

A Golden Autumn. By Mrs. Alexander. (F. V. White.)

A NOVEL by an old and practised hand like Mrs. Alexander is like a bit of character-acting by an old stager: the "go," the inspiration may be wanting; but the long exercise, the smooth and facile method are all there, producing with little or no effort an artistic effect which youth and inexperience may toil to compass with much striving and many tears, and fail egregiously. A Golden Autumn is a well-contrived and well-conducted story of matrimonial friction between a pair, who are well enough mated, but for les convenances; they separate and come together again, after some while, and that is their "golden autumn." It is a sufficiently interesting and amusing story, done—as we have said—with the ease, skill, and the calculated effect of the old hand; and Lady Mary Damer is particularly well and freshly rendered.

Judy, a Jilt. By Mrs. Conney. (Jarrold & Sons.)

"THE girl is impossible," was the Hon. Mrs. Hunter's comment on the young lady in question. It is too true. Judy was impossible. She was the sort of girl who spends half her life in doing things which she spends the other half in regretting. The tempestuous progeny of a sharper and a ballet girl was not suited to the equable atmosphere of drawing-rooms, though she took kindly enough to the hunting field and to the officers of the 25th. The circumstance of her becoming engaged to the grizzled colonel of the regiment, instead of to the officer who bestowed his hand on a rector's daughter, supplies sufficient explosive material to make an interesting novel. Judy is, indeed, a very clever study of feminine character in one of its most fascinating phases. The girl who does heartless things while not herself heartless may be a contradiction in terms, but the world is still illogical enough to admit her as a fact. Poor Judy, though she is in love with another man, tricks herself out in all her finery with intent to entrap the miserable lout who is coming to visit her mistress, his aunt. She succeeds: to her own undoing. Judy, it should be said, is a tragedy.

Weighed in the Balance. By Harry Lander. (John Lane.)

THERE is a desperate earnestness about the composition of Mr. Lander's Weighed in the Balance which nearly compromises its real power. The writer has produced a strong piece of work, but its strength repels for want of a single attractive character in the story. Yet as a picture of a money-making society, and a psychological study of a "man of the people" with such a man's ideals of success, this book is a notable one. And its succession of scenes, from the Yorkshire manufacturing district to the roughest mining camp in America, are drawn with considerable talent. The latter part of the story is a picture of unredeemed Mammonism. And yet it is the writer's purpose and not his limitation. There lingers in the memory that description of the Yorkshire lad's boyhood and his finer possibilities. Here is one scene from the Calvinistic chapel, when Hannah Sarah, the most popular lass in the mill, made her "confession":

"However infamous the others might be, she, at all events, was pure and unsullied as an angel. As she spoke I had a mist before my eyes, and turned hot and cold with horror, for she seemed to be the worst sinner there. Wringing her hands, with her face wet with tears, she confessed to half-a-dozen 'unpardonable sins,' one 'thorn in the flesh,' a stumbling-block, and a cloud between herself and the Lord.

"I sprang to my feet and cried, 'Mr. Downey, don't ee believe she, our Hannah Sarah be th' best lass o' th' toon. Thee ask our John Thomas and neighbour Norton . . .'
" 'Jimmy,' said the minister very kindly, 'you're too young to understand the goodness of God and the blessed sacrifice of Christ.'"

This earlier part is first-rate; but "The World," "The Flesh," and "The Devil" are depressing. Let Mr. Lander give us more about Yorkshire.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1897.

No. 1297, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 8	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

MR. MEREDITH ON COMEDY. THE expected reprint of the essay on Comedy which Mr. Meredith once upon a time contributed to the New Quarterly Magazine comes at last, 105 pages strong, cased in brown buckram. The magazine article, it should be mentioned, was itself a version of a lecture delivered at the London Institution on February 1, 1877. Mr. Meredith has not thought it needful to write a preface, but we quote the following passage in which he touches on the rarity of true comedy under the sun:

"There are plain reasons why the comic poet is not a frequent apparition, and why the great comic poet remains without a fellow. A society of cultivated men and women is required, wherein ideas are current and the perceptions quick, that he may be supplied with matter and an audience. The semi-barbarism of merely giddy communities, and feverish emotional periods, repel him; and also a state of marked social inequality of the sexes; nor can he whose business is to address the mind be understood where there is not a moderate degree of intellectual activity.

"Moreover, to touch and kindle the mind through laughter demands more than sprightliness, a moral subtle delicacy. That must be a natal gift in the comic poet. The substance he deals with will show him a startling exhibition of the dyer's hand, if he is without it. People are ready to surrender themselves to witty thumps on the back, breast, and sides; all except the head: and it is there that he aims. He must be subtle to penetrate. A corresponding acuteness must exist to welcome him. The necessity for the two conditions will explain how it is that we count him during centuries in the single number."

A COLLECTION OF BALLADS. MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL have begun to issue a new series of duodecimo volumes called "Chapman's Diamond Library."

The series is intended to include the masterpieces of English literature mainly in the form of anthologies or collections. Thus the first volume, just published, is A Collection of Ballads. Mr. Andrew Lang has edited this. The next two volumes will enshrine Sonnets, and Epigrams and Epitaphs. From Mr. Andrew Lang's preface to his selection of old English and Scottish ballads we quote the following passage, in which he indicates the beginnings of song in all countries:

"Poetry begins, as Aristotle says, in improvisation. Every man is his own poet, and, in moments of strong emotion, expresses himself in song. A typical example is the Song of Lamech in Genesis:

'I have slain a man to my wounding
And a young man to my hurt.'

Instances perpetually occur in the Sagas: Getin, Egil, Skarphedin are always singing. In Kidnapped Mr. Stevenson introduces 'The Song of the Sword of Alan,' a fine example of Celtic practice: words and air are beaten out together, in the heat of victory. In the same way the women sung improvised dirges, like Helen; lullabies, like the lullaby of Danæ in 'Simonides'; and flower songs, as in modern Italy. Every function of life, war, agriculture, the chase, had its appropriate magical and mimetic dance and song, as in Finland, among Red Indians, and among Australian blacks. 'The deeds of men' were chanted by heroes, as by Achilles; stories were told in alternate verse and prose; girls, like Homer's Nausicaa, accompanied dance and ball play, priests and medicine-men accompanied rites and magical ceremonies by songs."

THE late Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson finished the chapters of his Vita Medica, now published by Messrs. Longmans, on the evening in which his last illness seized him. How noble and fervent was Dr. Richardson's conception of his own calling appears in the following passage, which he quotes in his preface from an address delivered by him in 1867 to the St. Andrews' Graduates' Association:

"The glories of that happier time, for which all creation yearns, what are they but the glories of life relieved from pain, from want, from care? Are not these reliefs our duties? Is it not our office to be the first of men to pluck the curse of pain from the whole earth? Is it not our office to economise the gifts of Nature, and lend her wealth to health? Is it not our office to soothe the troubled mind and bring the disturbed brain to equilibrium of power? If these be not our offices, who are the blessed that claim them? If they be—then the sweetest singer of Israel, telling of the times when 'there shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days'; and the Roman poet singing the

'Ultima Cumæi venit jam carminis ætas
Magnus ab integro sæclorum nascitur ordo';

and the mighty apostle, thundering through the ages, 'The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death'; then these are our prophets, proclaiming to us our mission, and assuring us that, if the mission be faithful and their prophetic visions true, we, in life or in death, shall be as kings in the kingdom of our Father."

The unselfish activities and enthusiasms which pulsed through Dr. Richardson's career are surely reflected in the dedication which he chose for his book: "To the Student of the Future."

TWO works on educational OTHER BOOKS. methods, issued by the Cambridge University Press, call for mention. The one is entitled Chapters on the Aims and Practice of Teaching, and is edited by Mr. Frederic Spencer, M.A., of the University College of North Wales; the other—which might well bear the same title though it belongs to a remote epoch—is a series of essays on education by Vittorino da Feltre and other Humanist educators. Mr. Spencer has committed the various branches of school work—Greek, Latin, French, History, Geometry, Chemistry, &c., &c.—to separate hands for treatment, while the tone of the work is indicated by his insistence that the important thing is not to determine what shall go into a curriculum or be kept out, but how best to teach whatever is taught. The essays of Vittorino da Feltre and his fifteenth century contemporaries are edited by Mr. W. H. Woodward, who has undertaken his task in the belief that it will serve a good purpose to consider "the experiences and the avowed ideals of a period in which our classical education of to-day received its first and, in some respects, its noblest impress." Beauty and Art is the comprehensive and problematical title of a nicely published book by Mr. Aldam Heaton. The title-page is decorated with three gentian flowers in all their blueness. Mr. Aldam's essays, which are outspoken, are concerned with "Taste," "Beauty in Form and Colour," "The Decoration of the Home," "Fabrics," and "Furniture and Decoration." Several of these have been read before various architectural associations. Eastern Persian Irak, by General A. Houtum-Schindler, is published by the Royal Geographical Society through Mr. John Murray, and is practically a first account of certain terra incognita in Persia.

A NEW edition of "Burns," NEW EDITIONS. bound in buckram, prodigally gilded, and displaying an excellent "Lemercier-gravure" of Nasmyth's portrait of the poet opposite a designed and rubricated title-page—such is Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Co.'s latest enterprise in cheap publishing. This stately volume of nearly 600 pages is issued at three-and-sixpence, and will be sold at the usual discount by the bookseller. The edition claims to be very complete; a glossary is not wanting, and the preface is the one which Burns wrote in the Kilmarnock edition of 1786. The "Temple Classics" series is slowly taking all literature for its province. It now gives us the first volume of a new edition of Florio's Montaigne. This supplies the want—which was becoming acute—of an inexpensive, yet worthy, presentation of the most persuasive and reasonable of moralists. The present edition is edited by Mr. A. Rayney Waller, who will supply notes, appendices, and glossaries to each of the volumes, the sixth, and last, of which will be seen by November. Mr. Percy Faraday Frankland's Our Secret Friends and Foes has reached a third edition. Into it Mr. Frankland has put a new chapter dealing with the most recent applications of bacteriological knowledge in medicine and agriculture. It should be remembered that the book is for the general reader. The official Year-Book of the Church of England for 1897 is before us; it forms the fourteenth annual issue of this useful publication.

* * * *

Flames, by Mr. Robert Hichens, the author of The Green Carnation and An Imaginative Man, is a very bulky novel, and, judging by the opening chapters, is likely to make the flesh of a good many of its readers creep. A Passing Madness is Miss Florence Marryat's new and perhaps ninetieth novel; and its title may be taken in the most literal sense, the story being concerned with a clouded mind into which we believe the sunshine of reason pierces its way again. Guavas the Tinner, by S. Baring-Gould, looks like strong meat. The frontispiece gives us a wild moor, in the foreground of which we see a man, a woman, and a wolf. The man is standing against a high post, with his left hand raised above his head and transfixed to the post by a knife driven through the palm. Entering to him on the right is a tall and stately woman. The half-tamed wolf glares at her approach. The man is Eldad Guavas, a tinner, thus punished for appropriating gold, the due of the Crown according to law. The time is that of Elizabeth. The woman—but the story is Mr. Gould's. Mr. Joseph Forster makes, we fancy, his first attempt in novel-writing in From Grub to Butterfly. From this early sentence, "My story opens in the small, dirty back kitchen of a sordid-looking tenement very near Walworth-road Station," we are perhaps justified in thinking that the vogue of the "mean street" is not without attractions to the author. The Career of Claudia is a new novel by Frances Mary Peard, the author of The Rose Garden and other stories. We may say that this is a story in which the impact of an advanced girl on her old-fashioned cousins in a country house is described and elaborated. Quo Vadis is the latest translation from the work of Sienkiewicz, the Polish novelist. It has just been issued by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. in the English of Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, who, in a short, interesting introduction, reminds us that, whereas Sienkiewicz's three earlier stories—With Fire and Sword, The Deluge, and Pan Michael—were concerned with the early struggles between Poland and Russia, Quo Vadis carries us away into the great conflict of moral ideas with the Roman Empire—that conflict "from which Christianity issued as the leading force in history." Quo Vadis, we may add, has been a great success in America.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

TEXTS AND STUDIES. Edited by J. Armitage Robinson, D.D. Vol. V. No. 1: Apocrypha Anecdota II. By M. R. James. Cambridge University Press. 7s. 6d.
THE APOSTOLIC MINISTRY IN THE SCOTTISH CHURCH. By Robert Herbert Story. Blackwood & Sons. 7s. 6d.
A DEAD MAN'S THOUGHTS. By Rev. Edgar Foster. The Roxburghe Press. 3s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHY.

VITA MEDICA. By Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson. Longmans, Green & Co. 16s.
THE STORY OF ALBERT THE GOOD. By W. J. Wintle. The Sunday School Union. 1s.
FOREIGN STATESMEN: MARIA THERESA. By Rev. J. Franck Bright, D.D. AND JOSEPH II. By the same author. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.

HISTORY.

THE STAPLETONS OF YORKSHIRE. By H. E. Chetwynd-Stapilton. Longmans, Green & Co. 14s.

ANTIQUARIAN.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS: WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL. By the Very Rev. Dean Farrar. WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL. By the Rev. Canon Benham. ST. ALBAN'S ABBEY. By the Rev. Canon Liddell. YORK MINSTER. By the Rev. Dean Pury-Cust. Isbister & Co. 1s. each.
THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. English Topography: Part IX.—Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Rutlandshire. Elliot Stock.

GEOGRAPHY.

EASTERN PERSIAN IRAN. By General A. Houtam-Schindler. John Murray. 8s.

FICTION.

FROM GRUB TO BUTTERFLY. By Joseph Forster. Ward & Downey. 6s.
FLAMES. By Robert Hichens. Wm. Heinemann. 6s.
THE CAREER OF CLAUDIA. By Frances Mary Peard. Richard Bentley & Son.
A PASSING MADNESS. By Florence Marryat. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
ALL IN ALL. By Corinna Bruce. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
SELF-SEEKERS. By André Raffalovich. Leonard Smithers.
GUAVAS THE TINNER. By S. Baring-Gould. Methuen & Co. 6s.
A SPOTLESS REPUTATION. By Dorothea Gerard. William Blackwood & Sons. 6s.
"QUO VADIS." By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Translated from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. J. M. Dent & Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

CHAPTERS ON THE AIMS AND PRACTICE OF TEACHING. Edited by Frederic Spencer, M.A. Cambridge University Press.
VITTORINO DA FELTRE, AND OTHER HUMANIST EDUCATORS. By William Harrison Woodward. Cambridge University Press. 6s.
UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: CHAUCER—THE PROLOGUE AND THE MAN OF LAW'S TALE. Edited by A. J. Wyatt, M.A. 2s. 6d.
PITT PENS SERIES: BACON'S ESSAYS. Edited by Alfred S. West, M.A. Cambridge University Press. 3s. 6d.

PSYCHOLOGY.

UNTHINKABLES. By Frederic H. Balfour. Richard Bentley & Son.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

ON VELDT AND FARM. By Frances Macnab. Edward Arnold. 8s. 6d.

POETRY.

CHAPMAN'S DIAMOND LIBRARY: I. A COLLECTION OF BALLADS. Edited by Andrew Lang. Chapman & Hall, Ltd.
THE POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BURNS. Bliss, Sands & Co. 3s. 6d.

ART AND BELLES LETTRES.

BEAUTY AND ART. By Aldam Heston. W. Heinemann. 6s.
AN ESSAY ON COMEDY. By George Meredith. Archibald Constable & Co. 5s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE OFFICIAL YEAR-BOOK OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND: 1897. S.P.C.K. 8s.
THE NARRATIVE OF MY EXPERIENCE AS A VOLUNTEER NURSE IN THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR. By Anne Thacker. Abbott, Jones & Co. 3s. 6d.
THE ANNUAL CHARITIES REGISTER AND DIGEST. Longmans, Green & Co. 4s.

SCIENCE.

OUR SECRET FRIENDS AND FOES. By Percy Faraday Frankland. S.P.C.K.
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY: SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT, 1895-6. Part III.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE first number of the new paper to be produced by amalgamating The British Review and The National Observer will be dated March 20. Its title will be The British Review and National Observer. Mr. W. H. Mallock will be the editor, having the benefit of Mr. Vincent's advice; and the price will be threepence. Lord Dunraven, who was the owner of The National Observer, will retain a proprietary interest.

YET another daily paper! The new venture is to be called the Daily American. It will be published by Mr. Arthur C. Pearson; and, as its name implies, will be the organ of the American colony in London. Arrangements have been made for a special telegraphic service from the United States.

THE real feature, as all connoisseurs are aware, of the great Wallace collection which is left to the country upon terms so easy to acquiesce in, is its stupendous treasures of French Art—not chiefly, as has been pointed out erroneously, the now perhaps over-rated works of the "Romantics," from Delacroix downwards, but, rather, the far more characteristic, epoch-making works of the French school; the masters of the eighteenth century, from Watteau to Fragonard. French eighteenth century art is not represented in the Wallace collection by drawings, as in the De Goncourt, or by fine prints, as in the De Behague collection; but by furniture and pictures. In the gallery of Hertford House there is assembled an all but unparalleled collection of Reissner marquetry, of Buhl cabinets, of delicate and costly things fashioned by Gouthière. All over the house the collection of French paintings attests the taste not only of the late Sir Richard, but of the late Marquis.

THE Watteaus, though it is true that they do not rival the treasures of Potsdam—where, among other things, the engraved version of "L'Embarquement pour Cythère" is to be found—and though they do not include among their number any one thing comparable with a certain picture which it is the privilege of Edinburgh to display—are yet of a kind to remove from us the reproach that the National collections in London possess no instance of Watteau's art. Bouchers, which used to be looked down upon, and which, no doubt, the devotees of the Primitive still sneer at, are present in fine quality; and among the Fragonards there is the gay and famous picture called "Les Hasards Heureux de l'Escarpolette"—a pretty lady happy, and, by her prettiness, the cause of happiness to others, as she sits in a swing.

To the late Dr. Cobham Brewer, who has just died at the age of eighty-seven, all journalists, and a considerable proportion of the public, owe a debt of gratitude for his admirable books of reference—The Reader's Handbook and The Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. Dr. Brewer's was a busy life. His Guide to Science, written in both English and French, has given thousands of children their first intelligent interest in the laws of nature.

ONE of the last of the race of great print-sellers passes away by the death of M. Bouillon, of the Rue des Saints-Pères. Like Clément, whom he succeeded, he held the honoured post of "Marchand d'Estampes de la Bibliothèque Nationale"; and, though he was not at all a frequent traveller, the very greatest print sales, whether in London, Vienna, or Berlin, saw him, in his unemotional and semi-Flemish way, the sure acquirer of treasures worth a thousand guineas apiece. Some of the finest and rarest Rembrandts that ever came into the market had passed through his hands. Sitting—where he was generally to be found—in his little front shop only a door or two up the street from the quay and the river, M. Bouillon had seen and judged, and given the most honest and capable advice upon, the class of engravings of which people of the wealth of the Rothschilds are accustomed to dispute the possession.

M. BOUILLON—he was known only as "Monsieur Jules" in the great days of Clément—was not actually old—he was of comfortable middle age—but he was of the old school. The modern conditions of what is called the "print market" do not tend to the perpetuation or repetition of such a type; yet even now, fortunately, the collector in London or in Stuttgart, in Berlin or Vienna, is not at a loss in obtaining sound judgment upon things of value—there are younger men in the field. But M. Bouillon was of a time when Marc Antonio was rated as the equal of Dürer, and when, in etching, Ostade and Berghem were collected in preference to Méryon.

MR. H. G. WELLS, who will be the guest of the evening at the next dinner of the New Vagabond Club, is already at work upon a new novel. The story he lately finished—The War of the Worlds—an eerie account of those who dwell in Mars, and the effect of their sudden appearance upon these islands—will appear serially in Pearson's Magazine. Mr. Frankfort Moore is no less indefatigable than Mr. Wells. Two novels from his pen may be expected shortly—The Jessamy Bride (which recently ran through The Illustrated London News) and The Millionaire.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING has recently finished a new story, of some twelve thousand words in length, which he calls Slaves of the Lamp.

MR. W. B. YEATS, the Irish poet, has three books in preparation. These are The Sacred Rose, a volume of fantastic stories; The Shadowy Waters, a volume of poems; and a novel to be called The Benisons of the Fixed Stars. Good titles, all three.

THE English scholar and the American scholar, when it comes to "howlers," are much on an equality. The Atlantic Monthly cites a few recent mistakes of American origin. Answering a literary paper, one student referred to Wordsworth's "Ode on Intimations of Immortality felt in Childhood"; another summarised D. G. Rossetti's poetical achievements by saying, "Rossetti wrote a number of sonnets and put them in his wife's coffin; they were called the 'House of Wife.'" Another said "Shelley lived in the clouds and was struck by lightning"; another, "Shelley tried to penetrate the ruling principle of life, but it easily eluded him."

OUTSIDE of literature, as the students would say, the statements are not less welcome. "King Charles," wrote one competitor, "did not realise that anything important had taken place until he was executed." "The early Germans," wrote another, "had no word for what we term a carbuncle, but the pain experienced from stepping on one was so great that a forcible term had to be borrowed from the Latin."

In connexion with the appearance of Mr. Meredith's Essay on Comedy I might remark that "C. K. S.," writing in the Illustrated London News, says that there are rumours in New York of a stage version of Evan Harrington.

In the same paragraph "C. K. S." mentions that Mrs. Hodgson Burnett is dramatising A Lady of Quality, and Mrs. W. K. Clifford one of her stories. Meanwhile, a version of Tess has been produced in New York very successfully. On the other hand, Mr. Marion Crawford's attempt to turn Dr. Claudius into a play has been a conspicuous failure. Why Dr. Claudius should have been chosen out of all Mr. Crawford's novels I cannot conceive; for there is nothing dramatic in it, except the ascent to the masthead, and that is the kind of incident that occurs "off."

THE first four volumes of Messrs. Isbister & Co.'s series of little monographs on the English cathedrals are very attractive. In Miss Kate Douglas Wiggin's humorous tale, A Cathedral Courtship, there is a character—Aunt Celia—quite typical of the cathedral lover, to whom they should all be dedicated. The books, which are extremely slight, have been entrusted to authorities. The Dean of Canterbury writes of Westminster Abbey; the Dean of York, of York Minster; Canon Benham, of Winchester Cathedral; and Canon Liddell, of St. Alban's Abbey. The illustrations, which by their very nature cannot do justice to the dignity of the architecture, but, at any rate, convey a rudimentary idea of it, are by Mr. Herbert Railton, Mr. Alexander Ansted, and Mr. F. G. Kitton. I rather wish that white parchment had not been chosen for the covers, because it so quickly soils; but otherwise one has only praise.

LONGFELLOW's Wayside Inn, which is situate at Sudbury, Massachusetts, has, I am glad to say, fallen into good hands. A Boston antiquarian has bought the house for the purpose of converting it into a permanent memorial of the poet. He intends to restore it to the condition in which it was when Longfellow wrote there, and to add objects of interest. The Wayside Inn will thus become more of a shrine than ever.

I FIND in the Journal of Education a "gumption paper" recently placed before the boys in a school at Clapham to test their knowledge of the life around them. It seems to me a very excellent plan to ask these general questions. I quote a few of the Clapham questions, of which there are twelve in all—

"Name the authors of The Pilgrim's Progress, Paradise Lost, Bleak House, Utopia, She, The Earthly Paradise, Sartor Resartus, A Tale of Two Cities.

"In connexion with South Africa, give (a) the name of the President of the Transvaal; (b) the names of three of the leaders of the recent raid into that country; (c) the name of the English Colonial Secretary. (d) Where are the leaders of the raid at the present time?"

"What planet is now a brilliant object in the S.E. sky at 8 p.m.? Make sketches of the Great Bear and Orion. During what months are meteors most common? Compare the weather of October and November of this year.

"In connexion with cricket, give (a) the champion county for 1896; (b) the name of the Australian captain; (c) the name of the batsman who made the greatest number of runs last season; (d) the winner of the 'Varsity match; (e) fill in the names to the following initials of celebrated cricketers: W. G. —, K. S. —, J. T. —, W. W. —, K. J. —, S. M. J. —.

"Sketch, side by side, a leaf of an oak tree and one of a Spanish chestnut."

In a symposium in the Temple Magazine on the art "of writing" a short story, Mr. Robert Barr quotes the following piece of counsel once offered to him by the late Captain Mayne Reid: "Never," said the gallant captain, "never surprise the British public; they don't like it. If you arrange a pail of water above a door so that when an obnoxious boy enters the room the water will come down upon him, take your readers fully into your confidence long before the deed is done. Let them help you to tie up the pail, then they will chuckle all through the chapter as the unfortunate lad approaches his fate, and when he is finally deluged they will roar with delight and cry, 'Now he has got his dose!'"

I TURN always with particular readiness to the remarks of the East Aurora School of Philosophy which are published at the end of the vivacious and belligerent Philistine month by month. In the current number the East Aurora come "down" on Mr. Edward W. Bok, of the Young Ladies' Journal, and on the hub of the universe. This is how Boston is treated:

"Let's see, let's see, what's that they pursue in Boston? Oh, yes, Culture, that's it. In East Aurora we don't have to pursue for Culture—she feels at home and abides with us."

At the annual meeting of the corporation of the Royal Literary Fund, held on Wednesday at Adelphi-terrace, Sir Theodore Martin presented the registrar's report, which showed that thirty-three grants had been made during the year, to the amount of £2,080, as compared with forty-three grants, amounting to £1,905, in 1895. The cash account showed the receipts for the year to have been £3,067, and the disbursements £2,639, leaving a balance of £428.

THE bidding for the original MSS. of Keats's Endymion and Lamia at Messrs. Sotheby's on Wednesday was spirited. Mr. Pearson carried off both prizes, for the sums of £695 and £305 respectively.

THE ONLOOKER.

THE loan collection in connexion with the Amateur Art Exhibition will this year consist of portraits by Count d'Orsay and A. E. Chalon, R.A., old English enamels (Battersea, Bilston, &c.), and Marcasite jewellery. The Hon. Mrs. C. Eliot, hon. secretary, would be much obliged if anyone willing to lend any of the above would communicate with Lady Stephenson, 46, Ennismore-gardens, S.W.

At the forthcoming meeting of the Folklore Society, to be held at 22, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, on Tuesday next, at 8 p.m., under the presidency of Mr. Alfred Nutt, a paper "On the Fetish View of the Human Soul," which promises to be of exceptional interest, will be read by Miss M. Kingsley, the well-known African traveller, who will also exhibit some Fan charms.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will publish shortly The Canon, by Mr. Lewes Hartley, an historical work dealing with one of the most difficult of modern problems—namely, what constituted the canon of the priest, artist, and writer of antiquity. Everybody knows that there was a literary and artistic canon regarded among Greeks, Hebrews, and Christians as something venerable and holy. The writer points out that mysterious secrets, similar to those of the old Pagan cults, are contained in the description of the Tabernacle, Solomon's temple, Ezekiel's visions, and the new Jerusalem of the Apocalypse.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL are publishing this week a work entitled Cecil Rhodes: a Biography, and an Appreciation, by "Imperialist," with map and portraits and supplementary chapters by Dr. Jameson, entitled "My Reminiscences of Cecil Rhodes." This is the only authoritative biography of the Right Hon. Cecil Rhodes, and contains important matter not hitherto given to the public. The book, in crown 8vo, cloth bound, contains over 400 pages.

PROF. GILBERT MURRAY's History of Ancient Greek Literature, the first volume in Mr. Heinemann's new "Literatures of the World" Series, will be published on March 12.

MESSRS. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, New York, have secured the American copyright of the new Dictionary of the Bible which is being edited by the Rev. James Hastings, D.D. They will publish it simultaneously with Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh.

BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSEN.

MR. SHERARD, whose record of a conversation with Ibsen recently lent vivacity to the pages of The Humanitarian and caught Christiania by the ears, now, in the March number of the same magazine, passes Björnson under review; but with only a fraction of the spirit with which he tackled the author of Little Eyolf. Admonished, perhaps, by the reception which was given the Ibsen interview in Christiania, he no longer adopts the interview form, and we have from him but one remark in Björnson's own words, and that a question. "What, sir," he asked of Mr. Sherard, "may have impressed you most in our capital town?" Mr. Sherard's reply occupies some two hundred words, and he then adds: "I cannot remember what was Björnson's comment on my remark." After this, except that it contains one or two other of the novelist's opinions, the article becomes an account of Björnson's characteristics, such as any perceptive critic might have prepared without a visit to the man at all. One is disappointed in Mr. Sherard: he led us to expect more to him, if to no other in these dull times, the present writer looks for something of recklessness and the vivid historic present. It is hard when our sharpshooters, the raiders of journalism, such as he, baulk us of our hopes. Yet it must be conceded that Björnson, both as author and as personality, is less interesting than Ibsen, that other Scandinavian luminary. Side by side they shine, but Ibsen's is the stronger light, although were Ibsen eliminated Björnson would be no mean literary hero for a nation to exult over. As a force he is not to be equalled. Ibsen is the greater genius, but Björnson fills a larger place in the field. He is always the man of action, the unrelenting, reforming force. Ibsen stands by and observes.

Let us, however, see what manner of man Björnstjerne Björnson may be according to the chastened "study" which Mr. Sherard offers. He is sixty-five and yet a boy. His "enthusiastic optimism is that of the merriest lad." "He is buoyant, he is exuberant, a man of torrential eloquence." Christiania, on the occasion of the Nansen reception, was "ringing with Björnson's leonine voice"—such is Mr. Sherard's graphic way of putting it—while the disappearance of Ibsen was everywhere commented upon. Yet the disappearance of Ibsen should by this time be understood. Mr. Sherard was indeed so struck by the bonhomie, the sociability and joviality of the man, that he ventured to say something of the contrast such a temperament offered to the "gloomy moroseness of one whom the world has come to look upon as the expositor of the Norwegian characters." This was daring, but successful. Björnson answered, "repudiating that person's claim to represent the Norwegians in any way." "That person" is an illuminative phrase; and it is a little hard on the author of Pillars of Society and Brand if it is not allowed that he represents the Norwegians "in any way." The rift between Björnson and Ibsen must be gaping horribly for such a remark to be possible. Of his other contemporaries Björnson did not choose to speak. He seemed, says Mr. Sherard, somewhat to resent a question whether he knew personally such or such an author. Such discretion proves that Björnson at any rate knew Mr. Sherard.

Björnson is a patriot. His patriotism takes the form of protesting against the preference for Sweden which in King Oscar is so evident. It does not, however, keep him as a dweller in his beloved Norway; Copenhagen is his headquarters, and he is often in Paris, often in Italy. When in Christiania he uses a hotel; his Norwegian home is at Aulestad, where one of his sons is an agriculturist, about eight hours distant. In this house Björnson, though no teetotaler, enforces teetotalism. He holds that at a time when the drink difficulty is so serious as it now is in Norway, a Norwegian who loves his country's good must abstain from alcohol for the sake of example.

Besides the son who is an agriculturist, he has one in the Chinese Customs and one an actor. His daughter, Fru Sigurd Ibsen, is reputed the wittiest and prettiest woman in Christiania. Björnson's favourite among his own works is the play Ueber die Kraft. Such is the extent of the information about Ibsen's brother in letters which Mr. Sherard is disposed to give us. An interview with a man of "torrential eloquence" might have yielded more.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON AS CRITIC.

AN OLD FEUD RECALLED.

MR. RIDER HAGGARD is now so retiring a writer, and so chastened is his imagination, that only by those whose memory for literary events is good would it be believed that he was once the cause of a very Donnybrook row among the critics. Few authors—and probably no writers of tales intended solely to entertain—have been more turbulently attacked and defended. For Mr. Haggard's defence Mr. Andrew Lang—in the reviews—and schoolboys—everywhere—were chiefly busy, although he numbered, and still numbers, many other good intellects. For the prosecution the late Mr. James Runciman was prominent, backed by a large force. Among these was a certain anonymous writer who made the Fortnightly his arena, and of whose prowess (and the anti-Haggard turmoils generally) we are reminded by an article in the current Westminster Review. This article, which is signed "M. C. Hughes," is an appreciation of Mr. William Watson, and the statement is there made that the unsigned attack upon Mr. Haggard in the Fortnightly of September, 1888, called "The Fall of Fiction," which excited such controversy for a few weeks, was from Mr. Watson's pen. To those within the pale the secret was known at the time, but the public was not initiated, and Mr. Watson did not reprint the article in his Excursions in Criticism. His indictment of Mr. Haggard is memorable for more reasons than one: for the vigour of its style—it is quite the most vigorous thing in prose that Mr. Watson has done; for the invincible and whole-souled hostility which it displayed to Mr.

EDMUND WALLER

From the Picture by John Riley in the National Portrait Gallery

Haggard's peculiar genius; and also for the spirited reply which it drew from Mr. Lang in the October Contemporary. Mr. Lang was never in better form: he met his adversary as squarely as it is possible to meet a man who conceals his identity, and hit straight from the shoulder, blow after blow. We do not propose to re-open the matter. It would be fair neither to Mr. Watson, who may have changed his opinions, nor to Mr. Haggard, who has lived down the outcry against him. But it is, we think, of interest to admirers of Mr. Watson to know where they may find the poet in this Berserk mood. Readers of The Year of Shame know that mood in poetry. In prose it is unfamiliar.

There is, however, a passage in Mr. Lang's article in protest against Mr. Watson's contention that because Mr. Haggard was popular fiction had therefore fallen, which for its temperateness and sound sense may well be quoted to-day:

"It is not possible," wrote Mr. Lang, "as far as history shows, that any form of literature should be perpetually 'culminating.' We have not a Thackeray, we have not a Dickens; in the face of the admirers of Robert Elsmere I shall not say that we have not a George Eliot. But have we not, as befits an advanced democracy, the small change, la monnaie, of these authors? Would Dickens not have delighted in much of Mr. Besant's work, which, indeed, is often as enjoyable as Dickens'? Would Thackeray have failed to recognise a worthy follower in Mr. Norris, who is, indeed, the Thackeray of a later age? As to Mr. Stevenson, if Sir Walter would not have been proud to sign many passages in Kidnapped, if Hogg would not have given 'a herd of paulies' to have written Thrawn Janet, my taste is the more sadly to seek. The student is not to be consoled with who has a novel of Mr. Christie Murray's 'by his bed-head' or in his railway carriage; in Mr. George Meredith we have a mine of gold, perhaps needing a little to be worked over by the explorer; and for unassuming diversion, and a merry heart that goes all the way, we have Mr. James Payn. He who can read High Spirits and not be convulsed almost hysterically may go write articles on 'The Fall of Fiction,' and may therein forget the existence of Mr. Thomas Hardy, and of Mr. William Black, and of Miss Rhoda Broughton. Fiction has not fallen; fiction can never fall while human nature lasts."

To the writer in need of a literary subject we might recommend a history of the literary disputes—plagiaristic and otherwise—of the last quarter of the century.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XVIII.—EDMUND WALLER.

IF you ask a high-school girl concerning Edmund Waller, the chances are she will quote you the first two lines of "Go, lovely rose," and come to an hesitancy. The imperfectness of the information matters the less, because, like so many other men, Waller is not represented at his best in the anthologies. The thin prettiness of the stanzas to a rose conceals a sentiment which is partly false, and, so far as true, is familiar to every lyricist since Ausonius. But it is not the utmost that Waller can do. His muse has but a scrannel pipe, and is much dependent upon superficial occasion, yet now and again she does most unmistakably catch the ring of authentic poetry. Had one to swear by a single specimen, it would be the lines to Sacharissa's sister, Lady Lucy Sidney.

"TO A VERY YOUNG LADY.

- "Why came I so untimely forth
Into a world which, wanting thee,
Could entertain us with no worth
Or shadow of felicity,
That time should me so far remove
From that which I was born to love?"
- "Yet, fairest blossom! do not slight
That age which you may know so soon;
The rosy morn resigns her light,
And milder glory to the noon;
And then what wonders shall you do,
Whose dawning beauty warms us so?"
- "Hope waits upon the flowery prime;
And summer, though it be less gay,
Yet is not looked on as a time
Of declination or decay;
For with a full hand that does bring
All that was promised by the spring."

The diction, though redeemed by two happy Latinisms, will not throughout bear a searching analysis; but the neatness and polish of the whole are undeniable. The thought is not altogether a commonplace, and it is enunciated with a simplicity and a precision of which the age into which Waller was born could show him few examples. Simplicity and precision were, indeed, sadly to seek in the Caroline school; and it would be hard to match among the sons of Ben Jonson the happy lucidity of Waller's experiment in the metre dear to Wither:

"TO PHYLLIS.

- "Phyllis! why should we delay
Pleasures shorter than the day?
Could we (which we never can)
Stretch our lives beyond their span,
Beauty like a shadow flies,
And our youth before us dies.
Or would youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings and will away.
Love hath swifter wings than Time:
Change in Love to heaven will climb.
Gods, that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate."

The inspiration has burrowed beneath a half-century of "metaphysical" verse, and derives straight from the limpid rills of Elizabethan pastoral.

But Waller is rarely inspired. Essentially his temperament was not that of the poet, but of the ready courtier and eloquent politician. The larger part of his biography is occupied by intrigue, always with something of the histrionic touch in it. It is not a pretty part that he plays. He shifts from faction to faction, gets entangled in a silly plot, betrays his fellow-conspirators, makes his peace with Cromwell, panegyricizes him, and at the Restoration cancels his panegyric with an epigram. For serious poetry, as for serious statesmanship, he had hardly the instinct. Yet his verse was all the vogue at the courts both of the first and the second Charles. His tombstone records him as "inter poetas sui temporis facile princeps": and until the Romantic revival discredited him, this was his effective reputation among the critics. He had, of course, the knack of gallantry, and if My Lady Carlisle put on mourning, or the scandal was bruited abroad that My Lady Sunderland painted, Mr. Waller's ready pen was always at hand to tag the affair into a compliment. And his importance in the history of English verse is out of all proportion to his merit or his genius. He did much—as much as Cowley or any man—to recall the world from the charms of the strained and the fantastic, to the charms of the simple in artifice. He was of the pioneers who gave the first check to the domination of Ben Jonson and of Donne, and made straight the ways for the clarifying reigns of Dryden and of Pope. It is with the evolution of heroic verse that Waller's name is most closely bound up; but it is upon the octosyllabic rather than the decasyllabic couplet that he has the finer touch. With a happier fate this metre, rather than that, might have become the poetical instrument of a century, and it would at least have had the advantage of declining to challenge the rhythms of blank verse. However, the gods were on the side of the decasyllables, and in the forging and tempering of the heroic couplet into the trenchant rapier it was to become Waller had "a whole hand, or at the least a main finger." In his old age the wit who had epigrammatized his way through life wrote some lines in which, for once, he touched upon the rarer wisdom and the deeper pathos.

"The seas are quiet when the winds give o'er,
So calm are we when passions are no more!
For then we know how vain it was to boast
Of fleeting things, so certain to be lost.
Clouds of affection from our younger eyes
Conceal that emptiness which age describes.

"The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed, Lies in new light, through chinks that time has made;
Stronger by weakness, wiser, men become,
As they draw near to their eternal home.
Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,
That stand upon the threshold of the new."

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE pompous announcement of M. Edouard Pailleron's latest contribution to modern French drama led us to expect something of the value of Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie. But nothing could possibly be slighter than his volume of Pièces et Morceaux. One must be an Immortal to give such importance to mere fugitive work and drawing-room trifles. The three short dramatic pieces of which the volume is partly comprised are light, amusing reading, but scant entertainment, even with the aid of the most delicious toilettes of Paris and the charming grace and talents of Mlle. Reichemberg, Bartet, and Marsay for the audience of the classical Comédie Française.

"Mieux vaut Douceur" is not by any means so good as its pendant proverb, "Et Violence." The first shows the volatile Parisian husband overcome by the artistic mildness of his wife, a subtle ingénue. The second exhibits the same form of unsatisfactory monster captivated by the violent jealousy of a wife far from simulating the ingénue—on the contrary, a suspicious widow some years older than her adored and just married partner. The scene between the jealous wife and her husband's wise and witty cousin, Henriette, is quite worthy of the author of Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie. Hearing that the wife, in order to test her husband's virtue, has given him a false rendezvous, Henriette exclaims: "You want your husband to betray you without betraying you, to learn if he would be likely to betray you!" and her asides on jealousy and passion are delightful. "To say that she adores him, I ask myself what more could she do if she hated him!" The wife cries: "Oh, women! there isn't one who is not perfidious, lying, depraved, except you and me; and you, even——" Henriette protests. She is secure from the ravages of passion because she is never bored or curious. Her diatribe against passion is capital. Tyrannical, selfish, brutal, hateful, she qualifies it. Stupid when a woman is free; dirty when she is married. She is too proud to allow a monsieur, on pretext that he adores her, begin by insulting her in showing her that he wants her, and end by insulting her in showing her that he has had enough of her. The excellent reasons that follow against the discomforts of a liaison are as witty as they are sensible. The scene of reconciliation is, for such delicate workmanship, somewhat spun out and puerile. But clever as these two proverbs are, they are in terrible contrast with classical work of the same kind. To reach Musset by this road is an achievement beyond the inferior talent of a Pailleron. Nevertheless, one must laugh aloud even in library stillness at the brilliant little piece, "Un Grand Enterrement." The wit has none of Musset's exquisite grace, charm, delicate brilliance, and social polish. But there is a good deal of fineness in its less suggestive satire, and the characters are in capital relief. Pégomas, through the undertaker's protection, is going to speak at the great man's funeral, and explains all the splendid things he intends to say at the grave.

"You knew him, then?" asks somebody. "Not the least in the world. I called at his office three times, and was shown the door. That I could not say, but the spontaneous and respectful homage of a heart overflowing with gratitude, a revelation of a charity all the more ignored as it never existed, in causing a delicious surprise, will honour his character as well as mine, and, besides, my name will appear in all the evening papers."

The scene is very Parisian, very modern and amusing in the fullest sense.

To say that we are not yet done with the literature of Elle and Lui, and that round the graves of those miserable, unfortunate lovers of Venice, the strident voice of scandal continues not to murmur, but to clamour, is a pronouncement of destiny against illustrious frailty more excessive than that even merited by such sins against taste and passion as those of George Sand and Alfred de Musset. Hardly a month ago we had M. Paul Marieton's Histoire d'Amour, the defence of Musset; to-day we have La Véritable Histoire d'Elle et Lui by the Vicomte de Spoelbesch de Lovenjoul. It is sentence enough, one would think, to possess such a name; but the intrepid viscount adds to this misfortune the duty of defending at this late hour (and after the melancholy Sainte-Beuve-Sand correspondence!) great George, le parfait honnête homme, of these somewhat ghastly so-called romantic thirties! Oh, the ins and outs, the contradictions on both sides, the mountain of lies accumulated round that eternal correspondence of George and Alfred! The goings to and fro of friends, relatives, outsiders, and enemies to decide whether the love-letters of this unhappy pair shall be burnt, or delivered before witnesses into the hands of one or the other, or their representatives! Now it is George who copies out the mutual correspondence (worse than eating cold soup, surely), and offers it for the cool inspection of Sainte-Beuve. Then Alfred gets both series of letters, in two packets, tied with black ribbon and sealed alike. Being drunk, he cannot tell which is which, and calls in his attorney to decide. The attorney calls for George Sand's man of affairs. Neither possess the clue, the Immortal continuing half or whole seas over. Meanwhile he dies, with the momentous question still unsolved. Which is George, which is Alfred? Nobody knows. The packets are identical. Whose property they are remains a vexed question. One thing we may decide in this tale of lies, invectives, statements that can never tally, that the meanest of the squalid trio is Paul de Musset, and the honestest, the cleanest, and fairest, in spite of her lies and frailties, is undoubtedly the only honest one of the party—misguided, magnanimous George. With a little humour, and less tense a feeling of the historic value of her amatory correspondence, she might have been spared a considerable portion of this posthumous scandal. From the first she would have burnt Musset's worthless correspondence, and insisted on his burning hers, and thus escaped this tragically farcical prolongation of her "entrance into the poetry of the century" in company with her sorry Romeo, her melancholy representation in the century's psychology "as an example, unique and extraordinary, of what the romantic spirit can make of creatures become its prey." To live in obscurity may be a relative blessing; but no one, after this deluge of indiscretions enduring two-thirds of a century, and forming a colossal literature round two poor human beings, will be disposed to deny that it is an unquestionable blessing to love and part in obscurity.

H. L.

NEW BOOKS.

La Véritable Histoire d'Elle et Lui. Vicomte de Spoelbesch de Lovenjoul.

Hortense de Beauharnais. C. d'Arjuzon.

Les Matinales. Paul Reboux.

THE BOOK MARKET.

SOME CITY BOOKSHOPS.

THERE are less effectual ways of feeling the pulse of the reading public than to stroll through the streets with a weather-eye to the booksellers' windows. That theory, at all events, was strengthened by a journey made one afternoon this week from Liverpool-street to St. Martin's-le-Grand. The sky was clear, the air vernal, and the wish to be abroad was no doubt father to the thought just expressed. Still, a bookseller's window is not "a concatenation of fortuitous coincidences"; on the contrary, it is an appeal to the public eye dictated by interest and planned by knowledge. This was demonstrated in the very first window that came under notice—that of Mr. Stoneham's shop in Liverpool-street, immediately opposite the Great Eastern Hotel. Here a considerable section of window space had been set aside for Prayer-books and Bibles, a feature which clearly pointed to the Lenten season. This was, of course, compatible with the usual display of current and standard literature, and we noted that Liverpool-street bookbuyers are being angled for with Ziska, Phroso, Trooper, Peter Halket, Mr. Magnus, and Messrs. Chapman & Hall's new shilling edition of Dickens's complete works. But this was not all. It was clear that a sufficient number of strenuous young clerks, doubtless of both sexes, pass Mr. Stoneham's shop to make it worth while to keep a good stock of Nuttall's Dictionaries, Cassell's French and German Dictionaries, and other educational aid books.

Now in New Broad-street Mr. Stoneham dresses another shop in another fashion. The dictionaries vanish; the sixpenny novels also; and the display is some degrees more literary, and many degrees more stately. Here Phroso and Ziska reign, with Hilda Strafford quietly prominent; while the Chandos and Scott "libraries" make a brave and orderly show. The Liverpool Street Station sends out two great streams of foot passengers—one to the Bishopsgates, the other toward the Bank—and we fancy Mr. Stoneham has discerned differences in the two crowds and allowed for them. Moving West we do not move out of Mr. Stoneham's domain. His shop opposite the Stock Exchange cannot be ignored. Here is no Lenten literature; but room is found for nearly two dozen copies of The Directory of Directories, and several of a still bulkier work, The Stock Exchange Year Book, 1897. The shilling edition of Made in Germany is also suggestively to the front, as also a shilling pamphlet, born of the hour, called Irish Finance, an Un-Royal Commission, and a Lady, a name evidently distilled from a title more familiar. Here, too, Phroso offers healing to worried brains. But the colour note of all is the Corellian blue of Ziska. In all Mr. Stoneham's shops the appeal of the window is, if we may say so, to the hurried man of business, nowise to the careful book-taster or student. The book of the hour comes to the front because it is the book of the hour, and safe buying.

This is City-like. Yet the shop of Messrs. Jones & Evans, in Great Queen-street, is different. Here the book of the hour is not underlined. Often as not the best places are filled by good books published a season or more ago, and the latest work of a popular author is often less visible than his latest but one. Thus not Margaret Ogile, but The Little Minister represents Mr. Barrie; and works like The Bondman, Rodney Stone, the Herb Moon, and Jude the Obscure still display their frontispieces close to the window-pane. Here bookish books, too, find favour; belles-lettres; standard libraries like the "Peacock Library" of Messrs. Macmillan, and the "Temple Classics" of Messrs. Dent; and sumptuous and antiquarian books that are more commonly seen in the literary West than the commercial East. Messrs. Jones & Evans's is distinctly the shop for the City bibliophile.

Everyone knows how, as one passes westward into Cheapside, high finance and wholesale trade give place to roaring retail business. The labyrinths of streets to the right and left of Cheapside are populous of young employés and employées. Hence in his Cheapside shop Mr. Stoneham—for his territory is not yet traversed—has provided a window, gay, various, and appropriate. Here cycling maps and road books give colour. Humorous books and thrilling books, and books with frontispieces that rivet the eye, are the most honoured. And here, again, Lent receives its due. Can it be Lent that has dictated a lavish display of Mr. Coulson Kernahan's God and the Ant, and The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil? And it is pleasant to find the window peculiarly rich in editions of Dickens, Thackeray, Scott, Ainsworth, Lytton, and Dumas. Nevertheless, not here, nor elsewhere, is the reign of Ziska disputed. Such is the fact. Where Cheapside at last divides stands the Peel statue, and behind this and its attendant flower-girls Mr. Dunn's great bookshop—the largest probably in the City—spreads its title-pages to the willing eye. The windows stretch round into the cool and quiet of Paternoster-row. There is room for impartiality, and we find it. Phroso and Ziska, Peter Halket and The Man of Straw, and Hilda Strafford and Mr. Hichens's new novel, Flames, can be given the precedence due to their freshness, yet they do not knock too fiercely at the door which flew open to many a good book of older date. Mr. Dunn was, we believe, the first bookseller to bind large quantities of books in calf and half-calf as gift-books. These gift-books have been a speciality of the firm for many years, and the display they make in the Paternoster-row window of Mr. Dunn's Cheapside establishment is a fine one. Prayer-books and Church of England hymn-books have always been largely stocked here, a circumstance which is explained by the solemnizing nearness of St. Paul's. To continue—and to be negligent of appropriate sequence—Mr. Dunn shows a very large number of Messrs. Chatto & Windus's good old-fashioned two-shilling novels in the well-known pictured covers. Here Huck Finn holds up his dead rabbit; here the English tourist in Prince Otto gazes at the prostrate Princess (in three colours); here Mark Twain's hero tenders his million-pound note. We have admired the pictures on these novels from childhood; and our wonder grows that they have been produced systematically by only one firm. By the way, Mr. Dunn's shop occupies the site of the house where Cowper's John Gilpin, whose real name was John Beyer, once dealt in linen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"MR. HENLEY'S 'BURNS.'"

Crowborough, Sussex: March 8.

The very generous article which Mr. Francis Thompson has devoted to vol. iii. of The Centenary Burns appears to be written on the assumption that the book and the work are "Mr. Henley's." Permit me to say that any such assumption is absolutely baseless.

The plain truth is, indeed, that had Mr. Henderson's collaboration not been available I should never have undertaken the task of producing The Centenary Burns; and that there is not a sentence, not an opinion, not a conclusion in our part of The Centenary Burns for which Mr. Henderson is not jointly responsible with myself.

W. E. HENLEY.

THE DISCOUNT SYSTEM.

London: March 9.

Not the least interesting feature of the reformed ACADEMY to many of us is "The Book Market," and especially valuable to publishers are the reports of your correspondents. The art and mystery of selling books is never learnt, except behind the counter; and those of us who have not the advantage of meeting face to face those excellent people who spend their substance in bookshops must needs depend for our information as to the manners and customs, the needs and aversions, of the bookbuyer entirely upon such reports as you give us weekly under this head.

Holding these opinions, I shall not be inconsistent, although I may seem audacious, if I hint that the less editorial comment we get the less occasion there will be to find fault. In your issue of March 6, for instance, there is rather more comment than usual, and, consequently, rather more to find fault with.

Speaking of "The Discount System," you venture upon what I think is a very questionable statement. You say: "Unfortunately, there is no exaggerating the strength of the position held by discount; it is so strong that the proposal to abolish it is no longer mooted."

Now I think you will find, if you look more closely into the matter, that although there is less talk about "discount" than before, its foes are not fewer nor less active. Indeed, a silent revolution is taking place, and the "writing on the wall" may be seen by all who are not wilfully blind in such a chronicle as the monthly lists of new books. I refer, of course, to the steady progress of the "net" system. Look at the record for a busy month like December, and you will see that out of 536 books issued 111 of them are published at net prices. At Christmas, therefore, every fifth book asked for was a net book. I shall be told, no doubt, that I am wrong because comparatively few of the popular books (novels) are issued at net prices; but I reply that novels are ephemeral, and at the end of five years the proportion of net books in steady demand would be in a far greater proportion; for, speaking generally, it is the "discount" books that will die, not the "net" books. How many of the six-shilling novels now issued at that absurd price for purposes of discount will live even six months? The public that buys books is growing too wise to pay even 4s. 6d. for two or three hundred pages of fiction.

When I ventured, two or three years ago, to predict the downfall of this rotten and ridiculous plan of advertising books at about one-third more than their value, many of my confrères regarded me as a too sanguine person; but I think that you will see reason ere long to modify considerably your opinions as to the "strength of the discount system," now that it has been proved that the public will have a good book if it is to be got, whatever the price may be. Those who have tried it will affirm that at all prices, from 31s. 6d. to 2s. 6d., you can sell net books in hundreds and thousands with only one reservation—they must be books that book-buyers want.

GEORGE REDWAY.

[When we wrote that the abolition of discount is no longer mooted, we were contrasting former proposals with the present official and, as we hope, practicable one of reducing three-pence to twopence. We think a third of a loaf is better than no bread; but we made our dislike of any discount plain. We should rejoice to believe that we had exaggerated the strength of the system as a whole.—ED. ACADEMY.]

A R T.

AT THE PAINTER-ETCHERS.

THE Exhibition of the Royal Society of Painter-etchers shows the continued vitality of the art of Etching in England; and though it contains nothing by Mr. Whistler, Mr. Raven Hill or Mr. Edgar Wilson (who, indeed, are not members of the Society), nor by Mr. Frank Short, (who is, and whose absence vexes me sincerely), the exhibition is in the main thoroughly representative. It has variety, and it has strength. The general level that is attained this year is distinctly a high one. There is, I hope, less than ever of purely popular work, of meretricious attractiveness—work as certain to be radically bad in the pictorial arts as it is in Literature: it appeals only to the outsider, the inexpert, the ill-informed, and the ill-organised; and with these no serious artist in any art need be concerned. If pure etching, the simple bitten line, is less exclusively relied upon than may have once been the case, that is no misfortune, and implies no decline in the merit of the exhibited work; for under the term of Painter-Etching every form of original engraving may take shelter—the line engraving of Mr. Sherborn, that recalls Aldegrevier, may lie down with the soft-ground of Mr. Oliver Hall, that recalls Cotman, with the aquatint of Mr. Urwick, say, which recalls Girtin, and with the mezzotint of the veteran President, Sir Seymour Haden, which, going exactly as far as it is safe to go, with the medium employed for this particular purpose, is wholly and delightfully original. Continuity of line—line always closely observed, yet very flexibly rendered—characterised the etched landscape of Sir Seymour, which the collector cherishes, and now in his later years the President has found in pure "scraping" the opportunity for conveying, none the less certainly, a dignified conception, and realising a luminous effect.

To make the tour of the Gallery in regular order is to see first the etchings of Col. Goff—a charming and varied group, in which it is permissible to place first either “The Forge,” which has a delicate and homely charm, or the “Destruction of the Chain Pier,” which is most vigorous and legitimately telling, or even “Pine and Olive Trees, Monaco,” which has unquestionable grace. One of Mr. D. Y. Cameron’s prints has a needlessly abrupt, a far too arbitrary, contrast of shadow and light; but we can readily forgive Mr. Cameron that one mistake, so firm a draughtsman is he, so able to impress us with varied themes—now decorative book-plates, large and simple, now such a rendering of old Rouen houses as would have done no discredit to Méryon’s hand, and has something of his spirit. Perhaps Mr. Watson has not quite Col. Goff’s or Mr. Cameron’s variety; but as an architectural etcher he has always had firmness and knowledge, and now he gets into his work something of the engaging mystery, something of the artistic uncertainty and charming fancifulness which was to be desired, so that the work becomes, in a measure, creation as well as record. For a whole long generation, Mr. Legros has been practising, without compromise of any kind, his austere and dignified art. Charged it is sometimes, for all its austerity of line, with dramatic action, with human emotion, as in “Le Triomphe de la Mort.” Give me, for choice, however, the absolute restfulness, the delicate reticence, of “Le Pont du Moulin.” “L’Allegro” is a graceful, almost a luxurious, drypoint by Mr. A. W. Bayes: “Grief,” a majestic nudity by Mr. E. Slocombe. M. Helleu, though not at his best, is ever an engaging artist. Favourable words are spoken justly of several of the prints of Mr. Holmes May, Mr. Bryden, Mr. Charlton, Miss Bolingbroke, Mr. Charles Holroyd—admirably, indeed, does Mr. Holroyd assert the range and dignity of his art. But in this particular place there is but room enough, or time enough, to insist, ere I close, upon the quiet and sterling worth, the restful charm of Mr. Oliver Hall, who looks at Nature with the large style and with the traditions of our classics, and to make mention of the imaginative grasp and technical resource with which Mr. William Strang addresses himself to an interpretation of The Ancient Mariner—in itself the most imaginative thing in Nineteenth Century Literature.

F. W.

MUSIC.

“ALSO SPAKE ZARATHUSTRA.”

SUCH is the title of Richard Strauss’ latest tone-poem, produced for the first time in England at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon. According to Mr. C. A. Barry, the analyst, this extraordinary composition is as great a puzzle as the composer’s “Eulenspiegel.” In the latter work, although it was not easy always to make out the particular merry prank which was being illustrated, the music was there to enjoy and, to a certain extent, to admire. In “Zarathustra,” on the other hand, the programme seems the chief thing, for music, in the proper sense of the term, is, for the most part, conspicuous by its absence. The section headed “Of Delights and Passions” is interesting; it contains characteristic thematic material worked up into a fine Wagnerian frenzy, quite suitable to the superscription. Then, again, the opening of the work, with its “Nature” motif, treated also in Wagnerian style, is impressive. But the rest seems a Babel of sounds with little sense.

A POEM of Friedrich Nietzsche, in which he expounds his peculiar philosophy, was the source whence Strauss sought inspiration. Nietzsche, like Plato, Shakespeare, Goethe, and other poet-philosophers, dreamt of a race of men nearer perfection than at present exists. According to Zarathustra—that is, Nietzsche himself—man finds no real consolation in religion, no real satisfaction in the pursuit of knowledge; force of will and love of earth will be the distinguishing features of the new man, or, in Goethean phraseology, the Uebermensch. For art purposes such a programme does not seem altogether unreasonable: a solemn, followed by a scientific, section, and then a kind of glorified ending after the manner of Liszt in some of his symphonic poems. Mr. Barry is right when he says that, in this composition, facts and events are subservient to feeling and emotion. Still, certain indications in the score show—as do the headings of many of the movements in Kuhnau’s “Bible” Sonatas—that the composer desired the thought which prompted the mood to be revealed. Berlioz, in the preface to the score of his “Symphonie Fantastique,” tells us that he considered his music quite capable of standing on its own merits, apart from the fantastic explanatory programme which he drew up. And there is much truth in his contention, except, perhaps, with regard to the highly realistic movement entitled Marche au supplice. Strauss’ work, however, so novel in form, so peculiar in conception and treatment, is certainly in need of a clue; and yet although a clue through the labyrinth of sounds is given, it only serves to show the hopelessness, the folly of much of the undertaking. The section typical of religion is dull, and the one relating to science is intensely ugly—still, the use of the Gregorian intonation of the “Credo” in the one, and of the fugue form in the other, convey a certain meaning. But what about such headings as “Of Back-Worlds-Men,” or “The Convalescent One”?

WAS Strauss really in earnest when he wrote this work, full of clever effects, yet also full of atrociously discordant sounds? Or was he showing the absurd results to which programme-music leads, if pushed to excess. I would like to think the latter was his object, yet I fancy that in such a case he would have made his intention clear. Anyhow, he seems to me to have sounded a loud note of warning to himself and to all composers who are inclined to make music express what is actually beyond its powers. Strauss is an able musician, and if only he pursue a right course may rise to eminence. If Nietzsche’s philosophy attracts him, let him follow it, and seek to become an Uebermensch; but when he is engaged in his art let him cast that philosophy to the winds.

RELIGION, so far as I can understand Nietzsche, with the hopes which it engenders of a future and a nobler life, is but a mirage which deceives man and prevents him from realising all his latent powers; it is a mark of weakness, not strength. To discuss the validity of such opinion is not within my province. Yet I would call to mind three works, the evident outcome of religious feeling, which justly rank among the noblest treasures of art: Bach’s Mass in B minor, Mozart’s Requiem, and Wagner’s “Parsifal.” The materialistic philosophy of a Nietzsche may be capable of raising man to a higher stage of existence, but Christianity, even if only a dream, seems more congenial to musical art which, in its highest form, is by no means of the earth, earthy.

THE rendering of Strauss’ difficult work under the direction of Mr. Manns was not altogether without reproach, yet for a first performance deserves praise. The conductor opened the concert with a fine specimen of “back-world” music, namely, one of the six symphonies written by Haydn for the Loge Olympique, Paris. It may not display either the depth of thought or the sublimity of a Beethoven symphony, but its charm, brightness, and freedom from all feeling of effort served to intensify the ugliness, gloom, and labour of the modern work: the one refreshed, the other wearied. Between the two came Schumann’s piano-forte Concerto in A minor, interpreted by Mlle. Hona Eibenschutz. Her technique was excellent, but her reading of the work lacked dignity and repose.

UNTIL last Monday I had not had the opportunity of hearing the Bohemian String Quartet (MM. Hoffmann, Suk, Nedbal, and Wihan). Their third programme included Haydn’s Quartet in D minor, surnamed, probably from its opening theme, the “Quinten Quartett,” and Dvorák’s Quartet in A flat (Op. 105), two works in which the Bohemian element prevails, though in the case of the older master it is more under control. The admirable ensemble, finish, and spirit of the performances fully justified the enthusiastic reception given to the interpreters. Miss Fanny Davies joined them in Brahms’ magnificent pianoforte Quintet, and the warm and national influence of the Bohemians evidently inspired the lady, who was heard at her best. A fourth concert is announced for next Monday.

J. S. S.

Digitized by Google.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL,
ENTITLED
THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

Translated by Mrs. WAGAN (ELLIS WATSON).
With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

FOURTH EDITION now ready.

The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art. —Daily Chronicle.
Mr. COCHRAN says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book, in force and fire and prodigal variety he reminds one of the older Dumas."
"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season." —Pall Mall Gazette.

BY MAURUS JÓKAI (Uniform with the above).

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. . . . Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment." —Daily Chronicle.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.
Authorised Editions, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. each.Translated from the Hungarian by E. NISBET BAIN.
'MIDST THE WILD
CARPATHIANS.

SECOND EDITION.

"A thrilling Hungarian historical novel. Jókai's extraordinary dramatic and descriptive powers have full play." —Truth.

PRETTY MICHAEL.

SECOND EDITION.

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read." —Saturday Review.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS

CECIL RHODES.

By "IMPERIALIST" and Dr. JAMESON.

Containing supplementary chapters entitled

"MY REMINISCENCES OF CECIL RHODES."

By Dr. JAMESON.

With Portrait and Map of South Africa.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[On Monday, March 15th.

This book deals fully with the personal and political life of Mr. Rhodes, contains very important unpublished facts, and is the only extant biography.

NEW BOOK BY W. S. LILLY.

ESSAYS AND SPEECHES. By
W. S. LILLY. Author of "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought," "A Century of Revolution," &c. Demy 8vo, 12s.
[Next Week.]

NEW WORK BY COL. G. B. MALLESON.

THE RIVERS AND LAKES of AUSTRIA, BAVARIA, and HUNGARY (with a Sketch of the Ambles and Ligneville in Rhenish Prussia). By COL. G. B.
MALLESON, C.B.I. With Map. Crown 8vo. [Next Week.]

NEW VOLUME OF CHAPMAN'S DIAMOND LIBRARY.
ENGLISH SONNETS. Collected and Edited by A. T. QUILLER COUGH. With Introduction and Notes and Full Index, and Three Woodcut Portrait Illustrations by Simon Harmon Voder. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth and gilt top, 2s.;
limp calf, 4s. [Next Week.]

NEW VOLUME OF THE "CENTENARY" EDITION OF CARLYLE.OLIVER CROMWELL'S LETTERS
AND SPEECHES, with Elucidations, by THOMAS CARLYLE.
With an Introduction by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L. Vol. I. with a Portrait on steel of Oliver Cromwell, and Photogravure Portraits of Charles I. and Prince Rupert. Square crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (Forming Volume VI. of the Centenary Edition of Carlyle's Works.)NEW VOLUMES OF THE "GADSHILL" EDITION OF DICKENS.LIFE and ADVENTURES of NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. 2 Volumes, with an Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG. 60 Illustrations by Phiz, and a Portrait of Charles Dickens by Maillie, engraved by Flindon.
Square crown 8vo, 12s. (Forming Volumes IV. and V. of the Gadshill Edition of Dickens' Works.)

CHAPMAN & HALL (LIMITED), LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

THE ACADEMY.

PRICE 3d.

Published every Friday morning, and obtainable through any Bookseller at home or abroad.

A PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENT of UNIQUE INTEREST GIVEN WITH EACH ISSUE.The following Portrait Supplements have already appeared:—

1896.
BEN JONSON	November 14
JOHN KEATS	" 21
SIR JOHN SUCKLING	" 28
TOM HOOD	December 5
THOMAS GRAY	" 12
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON	" 19
SIR WALTER SCOTT	" 26
1897.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON	January 2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY	" 9

1897.
LEIGH HUNT	January 16
LORD MACAULAY	" 23
ROBERT SOUTHHEY	" 30
S. T. COLERIDGE	February 6
CHARLES LAMB	" 13
MICHAEL DRAYTON	" 20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	" 27
SAMUEL PEPYS	March 6

To-day's Issue.
EDMUND WALLER.MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BESTENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS	COUNTRY
from ONE GUINEA per annum.	SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

*Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.*Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

*For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.*

Specimens and Price List on application

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REPRODUCTIONS in PERMANENT
PHOTOGRAPHY (the Carbon process) of the chief treasures
of the Great Continental Galleries, including

THE PUBLIC and PRIVATE GALLERIES of ROME.
THE UFFIZI and PITTI GALLERIES, FLORENCE.
THE ROYAL MUSEUMS of BERLIN and DRESDEN.
THE MUSEUM of the LOUVRE, PARIS.
THE PICTURE GALLERIES of HOLLAND and BELGIUM
THE MUSEO del PRADO, MADRID.

Etc. Etc. Etc.

This almost exhaustive series of Autotypes includes nearly every work of Art of interest to the Artist, to the Historical Student, and to the Lover of Pictures. The selection of Works to be reproduced has in every instance been made under the advice of eminent
Authorities and of the Official Directors of the respective Collections.
By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 16 by 18 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of Twelve Shillings each.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

SIR EDW. BURNE-JONES.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

A large series of the Chief Works of these Masters reproduced in various sizes, at prices ranging from 3s. 6d. to Three Guineas.

Full particulars of the Collection of Autotype Reproductions of the Works of Old and Modern Masters will be sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

BIRKBECK BANK.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

TO ALL WHO WRITE, EDIT, DRAW, or SCRIBBLE.

A Perfect Pen.

For all Literary People.

For all People who use a Pen.

Nothing is so convenient as

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen

(Desk or Pocket size).

It can be carried in the pocket in any position.

The ink can never spill in the pocket: it is a physical impossibility for it to do so.

It has a gold nib, iridium tipped, of the finest quality—fine, medium, or broad point, as ordered.

It writes instantaneously, without shaking or dipping.

Made in several sizes. Price 12/6.

BRITISH DEPOT: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

A Perfect Ink Pencil.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

To those who prefer a Stylo Pen, we recommend Caw's adjustable Stylographic Pen, which adapts itself to any handwriting, and can be instantly changed in adjustment, if not quite comfortable.

Price, from 5/-.

A Perfect Lead Pencil.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

"A remarkably smart contrivance."

Black and White.

"Surely a boon to all busy people."

Westminster Budget.

"A design in lead pencils that deserves popularity."—Morning Leader.

"I hope he may make a fortune by it."—Truth.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil looks like an ordinary pencil, and is used like an ordinary pencil. It is the same size as an ordinary pencil. It costs no more than an ordinary pencil of the same quality.

But it lasts at the very least twice as long, because there is none of the waste that occurs through breakage of the lead in sharpening a cedar pencil. This is more especially noticeable in the case of blue and red pencils. In using an ordinary coloured pencil, probably half the crayon-lead is wasted in cutting, and another quarter by the lead breaking in use. The Blaisdell coloured pencils waste none of the crayon in cutting, for there is no cutting to be done, and the crayon does not readily break in use. Hence the saving in lead alone is very great, and the saving of time, trouble, and annoyance is greater still. There are no chips, no dirty smears from crayon dust, and a perfect point is produced instantaneously whenever needed. The same is true of the black-lead Blaisdell Pencil.

The paper covering holds firm until it is desired to remove it. Then all that is necessary is to break the outer cover with a knife or pin, and pull off a spiral of paper. The new point is then ready for use.

Blaisdell Pencils, whether black or coloured, are made in but one quality—the best; but the black-lead pencil is made in all grades of hardness for writing or drawing.

If not obtainable at your Stationer's, send for Specimens—Red, Blue, and Black—post free (in the United Kingdom), 1s.

BLAISDELL PENCIL CO., LTD.,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

The only Perfect Table Gum is LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE.

BECAUSE it STICKS.

BECAUSE it sticks things so that they "stay stuck."

BECAUSE it dries quicker than any gum, being practically a thin, ever-fluid glue.

BECAUSE the less you use the better and tighter it sticks.

MOREOVER, it costs no more than gum or paste, and goes ever so much further.

Of all Stationers at 3d. and 6d.

RUSSIA CEMENT COMPANY,

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

BLISS, SANDS & CO.

NEW COPYRIGHT WORKS.

NOVELS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WALTER RAYMOND.

CHARITY CHANCE.

A Novel by WALTER RAYMOND. With Frontispiece by T. H. Robinson. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

OLIPHANT SMEATON.

OUR LADDIE.

A Novel by OLIPHANT SMEATON. Fully Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY S. R. CROCKETT.

LADS' LOVE.

An Idyll of the Land of Heather. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "Bog Myrtle and Peat," &c. Fully Illustrated by Warwick Goble. With Frontispiece Portrait of the Author by Frank Richards. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

[Ready March 15.]

ARABELLA KENEALY.

BELINDA'S BEAUX,

And other Stories. By ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Janet of Harley Street," Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

[Ready this month.]

FREDERIC CARREL.

THE ADVENTURES OF JOHN JOHNS.

A Novel by FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The City." Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

[Ready this month.]

RICCARDO STEPHENS.

MR. PETERS.

A Novel by RICCARDO STEPHENS, Author of "The Cruciform Mark." Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

[Ready this month.]

PORTLAND BOARD AKERMAN and NORMAN HURST
TRISCOMBE STONE.

A Romance of the Quantock Hills, by PORTLAND BOARD AKERMAN and NORMAN HURST. Price 6s.

[Ready shortly.]

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS'.

A MAN OF MOODS.

By H. D. LOWRY.
6s.

"Has a lightness and deftness of touch that make it a pleasure to look at or into his literary handiwork."—Scotsman.

A TALE OF THE THAMES.

By J. ASHBY STERRY.
6s.

"'A Tale of the Thames' is an extremely pretty, idyllic story."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW WORK BY H. R. HAWEIS.

THE DEAD PULPIT.

By Rev. H. R. HAWEIS.
7s. 6d.

A Volume of Sermons containing an estimate of the New Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Temple) and the New Bishop of London (Dr. Creighton).

With personal notices of A. P. Stanley (Dean of Westminster), F. D. Maurice, F. W. Robertson, and the Doctrines of Restatement.

Large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

Uniform with the Falstaff Shakespeare.

THE

LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D.

And the Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides.

By JAMES BOSWELL, Esq.

Edited, with Notes, and a Biographical Dictionary of the Persons named in the Work,

By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A., F.S.A.,

Author of "The Life of James Boswell," "Boswell and Crocker's Boswell," &c., &c.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

PORTRAIT OF SAMUEL JOHNSON (PHOTOGRAPHURE).

PORTRAIT OF JAMES BOSWELL.

"THE ROUND ROBIN."

FACSIMILES OF JOHNSON'S WRITING.

BOSWELL'S MAP OF THE TOUR.

In one large, handsome, and well-designed volume.

SIZE: Large super-royal 8vo, 10½ by 7½ inches, uniform with "Shakespeare."

TYPE: Re-set from New Bourgeois Type of the same fount as this line is printed from, and printed with large margins.

PAPER: Choice antique laid.

TITLE-PAGE designed by RICHARD MATTHEW, and printed in red and black.

BOUND in dark green cloth of the best quality, with label in green and old gold.

Price 3s. 6d. Offering absolutely unique values.

Cheapest Books in the World Series.

2s. per vol.

NEW VOLUMES.

2s. per vol.

THE HISTORY of TOM JONES: a Foundling.

By HENRY FIELDING. A verbatim and unbawdlerised reprint of the First Edition (1749), 512 pages, with Frontispiece Portrait of the Author, uniform with "Robinson Crusoe."

THE ROMANCE of WAR. By James Grant.

With Frontispiece Portrait of the Author. 480 pages, uniform with "Robinson Crusoe."

* The above works are all reset from new type, with title-pages in red and black, and are printed on choice antique laid paper.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

BURNS'S POETICAL WORKS.

SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON.

The COUNT of MONTE CRISTO.

BURLEIGH LIBRARY.

1s. 6d. per vol.

NEW VOLUMES.

1s. 6d. per vol.

ALICE; or, The Mysteries. Bulwer Lytton.

MARY BARTON.

Mrs. Gaskell.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED.

IVANHOE.

Sir Walter Scott.

LAYS of the SCOTTISH CAVALIERS.

JANE EYRE.

Charlotte Bronte.

W. E. Aytoun.

THE CAXTONS.

Bulwer Lytton.

VANITY FAIR. W. M. Thackeray.

ERNEST MALTRAVERS.

Bulwer Lytton.

THE SCARLET LETTER.

N. Hawthorne.

THE APOLLO POETS.

A Series of EDITIONS DE LUXE of the Classic Poets.

THE TEXTS HAVE ALL BEEN COLLATED WITH THE UTMOST CARE

The following is a List of the Five Volumes which will be published this Spring:—

THE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BURNS. [Now ready.]

THE POETICAL WORKS of HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

THE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN MILTON.

THE POETICAL WORKS of LORD BYRON.

THE POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

SUMPTUOUSLY PRODUCED IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

Each volume contains a frontispiece photographure portrait.

Each Work is re-set from new type. Title-pages and other ornaments in red and black, designed by M. H. Robinson.

SIZE: Extra large demy 8vo, 6½ by 9 inches.

PAPER: White high-class antique laid.

BINDING: Solidly bound, with heavy bevelled boards, in red buckram specially manufactured for the purpose, with inlaid panel on the front, and richly decorated with gold on front and back, and gilt top.

Price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

LONDON: BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, BURLEIGH STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1298.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.

LATEST CATALOGUES:—
No. 51 SEMITIC—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1443 lots.)
No. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (793, 792 lots.)
No. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

CATALOGUE, No. 1. General. Theological, Medical.
Princess Beatrice Birthday Book, 25s.; Sampson Low's English
Catalogue. All very cheap.
J. A. STEPHEN & Co., 9, Barrack Street, Dundee.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 2s. 6d. net, eighth edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction,
Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Volumes for prompt consideration.—
Address 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

Telegrams: MORUMIT, LONDON. [Established 1819.]

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND EXPORTERS,
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.

Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 19, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 64-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
22, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

EDITORS IN SEARCH of good FICTION should
write for J. F. SPRIGGS LIST of OVER ONE HUNDRED
WORKS offered for SERIAL PUBLICATION. The Authors include
the most Popular Novelists of the Day.—J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER
SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING (Remington Machine).—Author's
MS. COPIED with care and returned promptly. 10d. per 1,000 words. No charge for paper.—Address "CYRUS," Willing's, 162, Piccadilly.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of all kinds COPIED.
Special attention given to work requiring care, such as Scientific and Technical, &c. Translations and Duplicating at moderate terms.
Northland.—Misses E. & J. PETER, 435, Mansion House Chambers,
11, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

Professor W. BOYD DAWKINS, M.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., will on THURSDAY NEXT, March 25th, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of THREE LECTURES on "THE RELATION of GEOLOGY to HISTORY" (1) The Incoming of Man; (2) The Frontier of History in Britain; (3) Roman Britain.
Subscription to this Course, Half a Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS.—
ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 54, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s. A. STEWART, Secretary.

A GENTLEMAN (M.A. Oxon) who has just completed
the preparation for the press of an extensive work of his own, and who has therefore time on his hands, desires to OFFER his SERVICES on the EDITORIAL STAFF of a PUBLISHING FIRM, or in connection with a weekly journal or other periodical publication, to each successive issue of which he would undertake to contribute a literary article. The advertiser possesses very considerable experience both as author and reviewer, having contributed to the Quarterly Review, the Nineteenth Century, &c., &c.—Address, A. B., care of the ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department. For particulars
apply to the Secretary at the College.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

AN OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP of the annual value of £75 (tenable for one, two, or three years) is offered for the R. DANIEL J. O'NEILL TRUSTEES for COMPETITION. For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss Hulse, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.
1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £80, two of £60, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT, FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the Headmaster, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

No. 1, MARCH 24th, Price 1d.

PITMAN'S FRENCH WEEKLY.—An entirely new, high-class, French-English Serio-Comic. Charmingly illustrated and delightfully got up. Sixteen large pages of amusing, interesting reading (French and English side by side), crisp jokes, easy conversation; hints for Society of Arts Exams; advice by experts: "How to Learn French in a few weeks." Revised by the native French staff of Pitman's Metropolitan School.
Price One Penny, of all Newsagents and Bookstalls.
SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, Limited, 1, Amen Corner, London, E.C.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season of 12 months. Prospectus post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR-ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agent wanted.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERE HANFSTAENGL of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the
leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c.,
&c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

P. S. KING & SON, 12 and 14, King Street, Westminster.—Marshall (J. G.) Minorities and Majorities. 1883.
Baily (W.) Scheme for Proportional Representation. 1890.—Baily (W.)
Proportional Representation in large Constituencies. 1871.—Droop
(H. R.) Different Methods of Electing Representatives. 1890.—Cumulative Method of Voting, as exhibited in the late School Board Elections, Birmingham. 1871.—Smith (W. E.) Fair Representation.
1888.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bozman, Walker,
Giles, Calland Cabot; also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—Moore, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

H. S. NICHOLS, 62A, Piccadilly. — Burton's
Arabian Nights, 16 vols.—Divorce, any Trials, in book form.—
Platt's (O. A.) Italian Gardens.—Ross's (Sir C.) Wildfowling.—
Lauter's Jeu de Maille.—Keats (Kilmecott).—Freuville Murray's Imprisonment in Spanish Convent (Visately).

"THE TIMES."—WANTED the FILE of "THE TIMES" Newspaper for 1827 (and 1825-18 inclusive).—
State price, bound or unbound, to the LANSHAMIAN, University Union Society, Cambridge.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

(Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

J. W. SMITH, Stationer, Printer, and Book-seller,
J. 4, Deptford Broadway, S.E.—Ecce Britannia. Third Edition.
1776 complete. Cheap.—Temple Bar. Half-bound. 1874-83.—Cornhill.
Half-bound. 1871-82.—Belgravia. Half-bound. 1873-82.—Library Copies.
Offer.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REPRODUCTIONS in PERMANENT PHOTO-
GRAPHY (the Carbon process) of the chief treasures of the Great Continental Galleries, including

THE PUBLIC and PRIVATE GALLERIES of ROME.
THE UFFIZI and PITTÍ GALLERIES, FLORENCE.
THE ROYAL MUSEUMS of BERLIN and DRESDEN.
THE MUSEUM of the LOUVRE, PARIS.
THE PICTURE GALLERIES of HOLLAND and BELGIUM.
THE MUSEO del PRADO, MADRID.
Etc. Etc. Etc.

This almost exhaustive series of Autotypes includes nearly every work of Art of interest to the Artist, to the Historical Student, and to the Lover of Pictures. The selection of Works to be reproduced has in every instance been made under the advice of eminent
Authorities and of the Official Directors of the respective Collections.
By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 18 by 15 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of Twelve Shillings each.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.
SIR EDW. BURNE-JONES.
DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

A large series of the Chief Works of these Masters reproduced in various sizes, at prices ranging from 2s. 6d. to Three Guineas.

Full particulars of the Collection of Autotype Reproductions of the Works of Old and Modern Masters will be sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—
ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	s. d.
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	8 6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4 6
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2 6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY. BOOKS OF the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE
English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (6s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

WORKS BY THE LATE PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E.

5th EDITION COMPLETING 22,000.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

THE LOWELL LECTURES ON THE ASCENT OF MAN.

"In none of his works is Mr. Drummond's literary skill more strikingly manifested. The style has even more of the writer's wonted grace and facility, and his command of analogy has never been employed with better effect, and productive of more varied and suggestive illustrations."—Saturday Review.

32nd EDITION COMPLETING 119,000.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL WORLD.

"One of the most impressive and suggestive books on religion that we have read. Indeed, with the exception of Dr. Maudslayi's 'University Sermons,' we can recall no book of our time which showed such a power of restating the moral and practical truths of religion so as to make them take fresh hold of the mind and vividly impress the imagination."—Spectator.

7th EDITION COMPLETING 34,000.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TROPICAL AFRICA.

"Professor Drummond is here at his very best. The article on mimicry especially is worthy to rank with anything ever written by Wallace, Bates, or Darwin himself on this fascinating subject."—Academy.

PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND'S BOOKLETS.

White leatherette, 1s. 6d. each; cloth, 2s. 6d. each.
THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD. 330th Thousand.
PAX VOBISCUM. 130th Thousand.
THE CHANGED LIFE. 80th Thousand.
THE PROGRAMME OF CHRISTIANITY. 80th Thousand.
THE CITY WITHOUT A CHURCH. 60th Thousand.

Fancy boards, 1s. 6d.; leather padded, 2s. 6d.
BAXTER'S SECOND INNINGS. Third Edition.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD,

And Other Addresses—containing:
The Greatest Thing in the World.—The Programme of Christianity.—The City Without a Church.—The Changed Life.—Pax Vobiscum.

Ready next week.
FOURTH EDITION COMPLETING
40,000.
Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

MARGARET OGILVY.

By her Son, J. M. BARRIE.
With Etched Portrait by MANESS.

"In 'Margaret Ogilvy' everything has been set down, nothing is clouded, nothing concealed, nothing exaggerated.... The record is without a jarring passage, and so real is the presentation that it is hard to believe that it is not fiction."—Academy.

WORKS BY J. M. BARRIE.

- Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, price 6s. each.
1. AULD LIGHT IDYLLS. 10th Edition.
 2. A WINDOW IN THRUMS. 14th Edition.
 3. MY LADY NICOTINE. 6th Edition.
 4. WHEN A MAN'S SINGLE. 10th Edition.

KATE CARNEGIE and THOSE MINISTERS. By IAN MACLAREN.

"Kate Carnegie" is a notable book, and one in which Ian MacLaren has bettered the best work he has previously given us."—Daily Chronicle.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
Eleventh Edition, completing 60,000.
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

BESIDE the BONNIE BRIER BUSH. By IAN MACLAREN.

Fourth Edition, completing 80,000.
Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

THE DAYS of AULD LANG SYNE. By IAN MACLAREN.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

FOURTH THOUSAND NOW READY.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.
With 16 Full-page and numerous Text Illustrations.
Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE QUEEN OF THE MOOR:

A Tale of Dartmoor in the Days of Waterloo.

By FREDERIC ADYE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"His chapters in praise of the stout hill foxes, and the brilliant runs they give over miles of grass and fern, remind us in their freshness and abundance of life of Whyte Melville at his best.... The novel is an excellent one."

GRAPHIC.—"It is long since we have read a novel with so much unbroken pleasure."

FOREIGN STATESMEN.

NEW VOLUMES.

Edited by Professor J. B. BURY.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

MARIA THERESA. By Rev. J. FRANCK BRIGHT, D.D., Master of University College, Oxford.

JOSEPH II. By Rev. J. FRANCK BRIGHT, D.D.

* These two volumes supplement one another as history of the period.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A very lucid and comprehensive survey of the history of Austria during a critical period."

BY FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LANDSCAPE in POETRY, from

HOMER to TENNYSON. With numerous representative Quotations. By FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.

SPECTATOR.—"In a delightful book on the place of landscape in poetry we have an exquisite series of illustrations, from Homer to Tennyson, of the curious significance of landscape in the expression of human emotions."

EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

Globe 8vo, 6s. each.

Now ready, in Two Volumes.

PROSE WORKS of WILLIAM

WORDSWORTH. Edited by Professor KNIGHT. With Portraits and Vignettes etched by H. MANESS.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Promises to be a final edition of one of the greatest and certainly of one of the most voluminous of modern poets."

ESSAYS CLASSICAL. By

F. W. H. MYERS. Globe 8vo, 6s.

FIFTH EDITION, NOW READY.

8vo, 12s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the LAW of the CONSTITUTION. By A. V. DICEY, Q.C., B.O.L., of the Inner Temple, &c.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE.

NEW VOLUME.

Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ISAIAH. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.). The Text is that of the Revised Version. It is used by special permission of the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

THE
NATIONAL OBSERVER

AND

BRITISH REVIEW.

3d.

WEEKLY.

The Proprietors of

THE NATIONAL OBSERVER

AND OF

THE BRITISH REVIEW

have arranged to amalgamate these two properties, and they will therefore appear in future as one paper under their joint title.

THE
NATIONAL OBSERVER

AND

BRITISH REVIEW.

3d.

WEEKLY.

The first amalgamated issue appears to-day, Saturday, March 20th.

Mr. W. H. MALLOCK will be the editor, supported by members of the staffs of both papers.

THE
NATIONAL OBSERVER

AND

BRITISH REVIEW.

3d.

WEEKLY.

The price will be—

THREEPENCE weekly.

The paper is obtainable at all Messrs. Smith's Bookstalls, and of all News-agents, or direct from the Offices, 37 and 39, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST

SIXTEENTH EDITION READY THIS DAY.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Forty-one Years in India:

FROM SUBALTERN TO COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

By FIELD-MARSHAL

LORD ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR, V.C.

Besides Maps and Plans, the Volumes contain Portraits on Steel and Copper.

"Lord Roberts's narrative traverses all the critical periods of Indian war and politics during the last forty years. He writes of them as an eye-witness, as an expert, and latterly as the chief actor in the closing scenes of an eventful drama; his story produces the vivid impression which comes out of accurate knowledge and strange personal experiences."—Spectator.

"A book which is at once intensely interesting and exciting, and at the same time supplies a vast quantity of first-hand knowledge, invaluable alike to the statesman and the political student. And, last of all, it is a remarkable revelation of the type of character rare in all ages—that of a man at once great and fortunate who has remained simple, modest, and unspoiled by success."—World.

A NEW NOVEL

At all Libraries and Booksellers'.

THE CAREER OF CLAUDIA.

By F. M. PEARD,

Author of "The Rose Garden," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

FLORENCE MONTGOMERY'S STORIES.

I. MISUNDERSTOOD. Twenty-fifth Edition. With 6 Illustrations by Du Maurier. Crown 8vo, 6s.

II. THROWN TOGETHER. Twentieth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

III. SEAFORTH. Ninth Thousand, with Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

IV. THE BLUE VEIL, and other Stories. Small crown 8vo, 3s.

THE HEAVENS. An Illustrated Handbook of Popular Astronomy. By AMÉDÉE GUILLEMIN. Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.S., and RICHARD PROCTOR, F.R.A.S. Demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

CURIOSITIES of NATURAL HISTORY. By FRANCIS TREVELYAN BUCKLAND, late Her Majesty's Inspector of Fisheries. Popular Edition, with a few Illustrations. Each Series separately, in small 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

THE MODERN COOK. By Charles ELME FRANCOATELLI, late Maitre d'Hotel to Her Majesty. Demy 8vo, Thirtieth Edition, containing 1,600 Recipes and 60 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

THE COOK'S GUIDE. By the Author of "THE MODERN COOK." Sixty-fourth Thousand. Small 8vo, containing 1,000 Recipes, with Illustrations, 5s.
"An admirable manual for every household."—Times.

A YOUNGER SON'S COOKERY BOOK
By a YOUNGER SON'S DAUGHTER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW ISSUE OF THE NOVELS of Mrs. HENRY WOOD

THE STORY OF CHARLES STRANGE
(Fifteenth Thousand),
IS NOW READY.

In red cloth, gold lettered on side, similar to the 3s. 6d. Edition, 2s. 6d.
In green cloth, gold lettered on back, but with a plainer binding, 2s.

To be followed at regular intervals by the other Stories in the Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

FAMOUS SCOTS—New Vols.

Price 1s. 6d. each; or cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant SMERATON.

The Standard says: "Mr. Smeraton presents a very interesting pen-and-ink picture of one of the most remarkable figures in English literature."

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith LEASK.

The Morning Leader says: "The defence of Boswell in Mr. Leask's delightful study is one of the finest and most convincing passages that have recently appeared in the field of British biography."

The Daily News says: "Mr. Keith Leask gives a very fair and amusing portrait of Boswell."

THOMAS CHALMERS. By Prof.

W. G. BLAIR, D.D.

The Bookman says: "Dr. Blair gives us a very complete view of Chalmers's wonderful career."

NEW EDITION, completing Tenth Thousand of
SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By Eve BLANTYRE SIMPSON.

The Daily Chronicle, under the heading of "The Prince of Pain-Killers," says: "It is indeed long since we have read such a charmingly written biography.... There is not a dull, irrelevant, or superfluous page."

FLETCHER of SALTOUN By

G. W. T. OMOND. [In March.

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.
Eleven Volumes now ready.

Messrs. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER beg to announce the issue of New and Uniform 3s. 6d. Editions of the following

FAVOURITE NOVELS BY ANNIE S. SWAN.

3s. 6d.—Shella. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—The Gates of Eden. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—The Guinea Stamp. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—Maitland of Laurieston. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—Briar and Palm. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—St. Veda's. [Ready.
3s. 6d.—Who Shall Serve?
3s. 6d.—A Lost Ideal.

THIS DAY, in post 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 5s.

A MAN'S VALUE to SOCIETY.
Studies in Self-Culture and Character. By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS.

THIS DAY, in crown 8vo, cloth extra, illustrated, price 1s.

LADY BLANCHE BALFOUR. A Reminiscence. By Rev. JAMES ROBERTSON, D.D., Whittinghame.

This short sketch and study from memory of the mother of Mr. A. J. Balfour and the sister of Lord Salisbury will be read with interest by both followers and opponents of these eminent men.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "GOLDEN NAILS" SERIES.

THIS DAY, in post 8vo, cloth extra, price 1s. 6d.

KINGLESS FOLK; and Other
Addresses on Bible Animals. By Rev. JOHN ADAMS, B.D.

DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK. In post 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

BIBLE CHARACTERS—ADAM to ACHAN. By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., Author of "Bunyan Characters," "Lancelot Andrewes," &c.

The TIMES says of "A Cycle of Cathay": "It is perhaps the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

A CYCLE of CATHAY:
China, South and North. With Personal Reminiscences. By the Rev. W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., Ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and numerous Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

FROM FAR FORMOSA:
Its Islands, its People, and Missions. By GEORGE LESLIE MACKAY, D.D., Twenty-three Years a Missionary in Formosa. Edited by Rev. J. A. MACDONALD. Third Edition. With Portraits, Illustrations, and Maps. 7s. 6d.

EAST. PERSIAN LIFE and CUSTOMS.
With Scenes and Incidents of Residence and Travel in the Land of the Lion and the Sun. By R. G. WILSON, M.A., Twenty Years a Missionary in Persia. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, gilt top, with Map and Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

THE JAMESON RAID. The Story of an African Orla. By Mr. F. E. GARRETT, the Editor of the "Cape Times," the leading paper in South Africa. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Anybody who proposes to follow carefully the proceedings of the Select Committee cannot do better than post himself up by a perusal of Mr. Garrett's pages.... Mr. Garrett discusses fully, and apparently after access to the best information, the rumours, suggestions, and insinuations which have been in the air with regard to the connection of the Colonial Office with the concentration of forces on the Transvaal frontier."—Daily News. "Without a dull page from start to finish."—Cambridge Review. "Most novels would come in a poor second."—Full Mail Gazette.

THE CRISIS in the EAST. England's

Position. Read "THE NATION'S AWAKENING." By

SPENSER WILKINSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"The book points out the way that leads to the solution of the problems arising in the present and near future in the spirit of a truly national policy."—Deutsche Rundschau. "Of the highest value towards the formation of a national policy, of which we never stood in greater need."—Athenum. "Deserves in our judgment to be widely read and deeply pondered by British statesmen and politicians of all ranks and parties.... Makes for clear thinking, and for facing squarely, courageously, and with open eyes the great problems which confront us in our foreign policy."—Spectator.

"The most noteworthy book on Democracy since Mr. Lecky's."—Glasgow Evening News.

PROBLEMS of MODERN DEMOCRACY.

By EDWIN LAURENCE GODKIN. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"These admirable essays....—Glasgow Herald. "He talks freely, and always sensibly and to the point, and very often with more than ordinary wisdom."—The Times. "The book ranks with Mr. Lecky's recent volumes."—National Review. "The work of a practised pen, indeed of a distinguished writer."—Athenum. "A noteworthy collection of essays."—Manchester Guardian. "Honest men will admire the courage of his criticisms."—The New Saturday.

"Of all the books which have been published on Whitman this is the best."—Daily Chronicle.

WHITMAN: a Study. By John Burroughs.

12mo, cloth gilt, 2s. net.

"Altogether the most complete, the most sympathetic, and the most penetrating estimate of Walt Whitman that has yet been written."—Daily Mail. "A very interesting volume."—Full Mail Gazette. "It would be difficult to say anything better about Whitman."—The World. "Most interesting and suggestive."—The New Saturday.

"This is the most valuable book on the history of English education that has seen the light for many a long year."—Journal of Education.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS, 1546-1548. By A. F.

LEACH, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of all Souls, Oxford, Assistant

Charity Commissioner. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"A very remarkable contribution to the history of secondary education in England, not less novel in its conclusions than important in the documentary evidence adduced to sustain them."—The Times. "An interesting volume, and well worked out."—Full Mail Gazette. "A valuable contribution to our knowledge of the growth of education in England."—Leeds Mercury. "A very interesting book."—Manchester Guardian. "One of those books that, as soon as they are written, are regarded by the student as indispensable."—Spectator.

"Perhaps no one book is so important to the student of Dante as the chronicle of his contemporary Villani."—Athenum.

THE CHRONICLE of VILLANI. A Book for Dante Students. Translated by ROSE E. SELFE. Edited by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We welcome the book not only as a real help to students of Dante, but as revealing to all English readers the leading characteristics of one of the most fascinating and lifelike of mediæval chronicles.... Mr. Wicksteed's introduction is brief, sober, competent and welcome-like."—Manchester Guardian. "There are many other fascinating passages in this work, which we consider on its own merits one of the best of the clearer understanding of the text of Dante's divine masterpiece absolutely indispensable."—Leeds Mercury.

"We commend the work."—Educational Times.

THE FAEBIE QUEEN. By Edmund Spenser.
Edited from the Original Editions of 1590 and 1609. With Introduction and Glossary. By KATE M. WARREN. Book I. 1s. 6d. net. To be completed in six volumes.

"A very serviceable and neat edition."—Westminster Gazette. "An excellent reading-book for students of English literature in schools; it is by no means merely an educational work, but will suit the purposes of a large number of readers who desire to be acquainted with the great allegory merely as lovers of poetry."—Spectator. "We can bear testimony to the ability and success with which Miss Warren has edited this volume."—Birmingham Daily Post. "A useful and compact edition."—Leeds Mercury. "Beautifully printed, well bound, and of a convenient pocket size. There is an excellent glossary, tersely expressed, which not only gives the meaning of difficult words, but explains the classical and other references generally treated in elaborate notes. It is not etymological."—Educational Times.

"Of unusual merit."—Daily Mail.

MADGE o' the POOL. By William Sharp.
Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"It would be hard to point to anything more brilliant or more satisfactory amongst the writers of Mr. Sharp's generation."—Glasgow Herald. "Fresh and notable work."—The Observer. "Really excellent work."—Manchester Guardian.

A NEW BOOK BY "UNCLE REMUS."

SISTER JANE. By "Uncle Remus." 6s.
"Shows the hand of a master."—The New Saturday. "Of all Mr. Harris's recent stories 'Sister Jane' is the best."—Academy. "Mr. Harris's delightful story."—Literary World.

Now first issued in book form.

AN ESSAY on COMEDY. By George MEREDITH. 5s. net.

NEARLY READY.

IMPERIAL DEFENCE. By Sir Charles DILKE and SPENSER WILKINSON. New and revised edition. 2s. 6d.

ANGELA'S LOVER. By Dorothea Gerard.

Paper, 1s. Cloth extra, 2s.

A WRITER of FICTION: a Novel. By CLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife." Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

HER MAJESTY'S GREATEST SUBJECT:

a Novel. By R. S. THORBURN, I.C.S. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., Westminster.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
Epic and Romance	331
English Schools at the Reformation	332
A Speculative Geologist	333
A Sunny Book	334
The Points of the Horse	334
Some Theological Books	335
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	336
FICTION:
The Way of the Wind—The Speculators—A Pearl of the Realm—Charity Chance—The Supplanter—Joan Seaton—The Bloom of Faded Years—Lady Jean's Son—The Finger and the Ring—The Star Sapphire—Molly Melville	337
POETRY:
Elfinn's Luck—The Love-Philtre—Two Decades of Song—Shreds and Patches—Christ and the Courtesan—Poems	329
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	330
New Books Received	331
NOTES AND NEWS	331
PROFESSOR DRUMMOND	333
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XIX., Wilkie Collins	334
THE BOOK MARKET	334
CORRESPONDENCE	335
ART	335
DRAMA	336
SCIENCE	337
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	337

REVIEWS.

EPIC AND ROMANCE.

Epic and Romance. Essays on Mediæval Literature by W. P. Ker, Professor of English Literature in University College, London. (Macmillan & Co.)

WE have had from France for many years excellent criticism of mediæval literature; the honoured name of Gaston Paris (whose recent election to the Academy was but a fitting acknowledgment of long and fruitful work) will occur to everyone in this connexion, and there are younger scholars, MM. Bedier and Jeanroy, for instance, whose studies have been not only illuminative, but also good reading. In other countries something, too, has been done—Ten Brink has made a praiseworthy attempt to estimate the position of many Middle English writings. Criticism on a few mediæval authors, such as Dante, Villon, Joinville, has been ample in bulk, though not always so satisfactory in quality. But, in general, it may be fairly said that the great majority of literary mediævalists have had to work at the publication of MSS., to settle questions of language, to toil at glossaries and charters, in order to investigate, and even resuscitate, dialects and establish the correct texts of even the better known masterpieces that engage their energies and enthusiasms. The labours of two generations have resulted in a great mass of more or less satisfactory material: what must be done now is to criticise this from every point of view that is likely to give insight. Mediæval classics demand the treatment that has long been accorded to the classics of Greece and Rome, the same patient and trained consideration, the same æsthetic instinct, the same broad intelligence. No criticism can be other than imperfect that assumes to settle the Homeric problems without knowledge of the epical developments of other literatures: the early phases of the Greek drama are curiously enough best illustrated by the chorus-plays of Mægala—to multiply instances were needless. The general history of literary developments in the West of Europe postulates the careful and delicate criticism of mediæval literature before it can pretend to explain the rise and progress of those modern forms in which thought and fantasy are enshrined for our own generation, as they were (with a difference, of course) for the generations of Shakespeare, of Pope, of Byron, and Scott, and Shelley. Marot and Spenser were not merely amusing themselves when they went back to Villon and Chaucer, as painters go back to the master-painters of the past, for encouragement and warning and suggestion; though the work of the Court psalmist and songster is a world apart from that of the vagabond and criminous clerk; and there is a deep gulf fixed between the Elizabethan Platonist and the Edwardian Epicurean—Italianate, indeed, both, but how opposed in style, in feeling, and in humour!

This book of Mr. Ker's is the forerunner, we would hope, of many good English books of criticism devoted to literature expressed neither in Latin nor Greek. The field is enormous, bovates unmeasured only waiting for the skilled husbandman. Englishmen have proved themselves shrewd, sober, and sagacious critics of the "tongues" and "humanities": they may do great things in this wider scope that is open to their efforts. And this performance of Mr. Ker is surely of good augury.

The purport of his book, then, is, briefly, this. After an introduction defining terms and range, and bringing out the peculiarities of the two tendencies, epic and romantic, in Teutonic literature, with much keen observation and much acute reflection, markedly free from exaggeration and prejudice, intent always upon the main themes, the author devotes his second chapter to the epic poetry of the Teutons, giving full and serious treatment to each phase and outcome of its spirit. Their oldest epics (carmina antiqua quod unum apud illos memoria et annalium genus est, according to a revered authority) are noticed, and their character, as it may be divined from the extant fragments and paraphrases, and from descendent poems, is aptly drawn. Next the English and German lays of the heroic cycles of Theodric and Beowulf, where it is noticed that there was a development going on which was turning the short episodic lays into regular epics "not by a process of agglutination," but by a change in spirit and imagination; the plan of the old story being kept in its simplest irreducible form, while the poet sought incessantly for "the force and magnificence of a lofty and eloquent style. It was for the attainment of this pitch of style that the heroic poetry laboured in Waldere and Beowulf with at least enough success to make these poems distinct from the rest in this group."

The history of the Northern or Scandinavian epic is "the converse of the English development." It tends, with some exceptions,

"further and further away from the original common Teutonic type, from which all these common forms and phrases have been derived that are found in the 'Poetic Edda,' as well as in Beowulf or the Heliand. . . . The rhetorical expansion of the older forms into an equable and deliberate narrative was counteracted by the still stronger affection for lyrical modes of speech, for impassioned, abrupt, and heightened utterance."

The infection of foreign models in one case, in the other the strengthening of the dramatic element in the old poetry (an element absent in England and Germany, save in a few surviving folk-forms), is clear, as Mr. Ker would admit; but he is concerned with tendencies and the underlying preferences that, under different vital conditions, were gradually making themselves felt, and he accurately describes these.

After a critical survey of the Scandinavian heroic lays, he concludes that they are neither of the ballad nor of the conventional epic class. They are not ballads, because their style is different—it is a style ambitious and capable of progress—not conventional epics, because they are essentially short, incapable of agglutination, artistically complete in themselves (whether they follow the older episodic type or the later summarising type); and also because of their strong dramatic and lyrical ethos.

"If ever epic poetry was made by a conglomeration of ballads, it must have had other kinds of material than this. . . . The need of a comprehensive epic of the Niblungs was not imperative. Neither was there any demand in Athens, in the times of Sophocles and Euripides, for a comprehensive work—a Thebaid, a Roman de Thèbes—to include the plots of all the tragedies of the house of Cadmus. It was not a poet, but a pure journeyman, who did this sort of work in the North; and it was not till the old school of poetry had passed away that the composite pure history of the Volsungs and Niblungs, of Sigmund and Sinfliotli, Sigurd, Brunhild, Gudrun and Atli, was put together out of the old poems. The old lays, Northern and Western, whatever their value, have all strong individual characters of their own, and do not easily submit to be regarded as merely the unused materials, waiting for an epic composer who never was born."

Here as regards the matter in hand one cannot but agree with Mr. Ker, and much that he says is worth the consideration of those who are concerned with the Iliad and Odyssey. He is no less convincing when he touches on the "besetting temptations" of the heroic poets English and Scandinavian—the tendency to flat, didactic tameness in the former, the danger of over-emphasis and conceits in the latter.

"The triumphs of alliterative poetry in the first or English kind are the lay-swellings passages of tragic monologue, of which the greatest is in the Saxon Genesis—the speech of Satan after the fall from heaven. The best of the Northern poetry is all but lyrical: the poem of the Sibyl, the poems of Sigurd, Gudrun, Hervor. . . . Almost as if they (the Northern masters) had known the horror of infinite flatness that is all about the literature of the Middle Ages, as if there had fallen upon them, in that Aleian plain, the shadow of the enormous beast out of Aristotle's Poetics, they chose to renounce all superfluity, and throw away the makeshift wedges and supports by which an epic is held up. In this way they did great things, and Voluspá is their reward."

This is well said, and though some might prefer, as I do, the Helge lays and the old Atle lays to Voluspá, Mr. Ker's decision agrees with that of the best judge I have known.

The analyses of the various Northern treatments of the Sigurd and Atle cycle episodes are excellent and convincing. Their variations are clearly explained to be "different presentations of the same subject not produced by accident or by casual and faulty repetition of a conventional type of poems, but by a poetical ambition for new forms. . . . As in the Athenian or English drama the story of Œdipus or of Lear might be taken up by one playwright after another, so in the North the Northern stories were made to pass through changes in the minds of different poets. . . . The relation of the Atlamal and Atlakviða is like the relation of Euripides to Æschylus. . . . The idylls of the heroines, Brunhild, Gudrun, Oddrun are not random and unskilled variations, they are considerate and studied poems expressing new conceptions and imaginations."

And this theme is carefully and ingeniously worked out.

In Beowulf's lay the Grendel and Grendel's Dam adventures interest Mr. Ker most, and he looks upon the Dragon part as rather "that of a late school of heroic poetry attempting, and with some success, to extract the spirit of an older kind of poetry, and to represent in one scene an heroic ideal or example with emphasis and with concentration. . . . But, while the end of the poem may lose in some things by comparison with the stronger earlier parts, it is not so wholly lost in the charms of pathetic meditation as to forget the martial tone and the more resolute air altogether. . . . The virtues of Beowulf are not those of a fictitious paragon king, but of a man who would be missed in the day when the enemies of the Gauls should come upon them."

Whether one agrees with this estimate or not, it is worth thinking over.

The description of the epic proper is good and distinctly quotable:

"The epic keeps its hold on what went before and on what is to come. Its construction is solid, not flat. It is exposed to the attractions of all kinds of subordinate and partial literature—the fairy story, the conventional romance, the pathetic legend—and it escapes them all by taking them all up as moments, as episodes and points of view, governed by the conception or the comprehension of some of the possibilities of human character in a certain form of society. It does not impose any one view on the reader; it gives what it is the proper task of the higher kind of fiction to give—the play of life in different moods and under different aspects."

But the best part of this volume is, to my thinking, that on those wonderful prose epics the Icelandic Sagas:

"The life of an heroic age—that is, of an older stage of civilisation than the common European mediæval form—was interpreted and represented by the men of that age themselves with a clearness of understanding that appears to be quite unaffected by the common mediæval fallacies and 'idolisms.' This clear self-consciousness is the distinction of Icelandic civilisation and literature. It is not vanity or conceit. It does not make the Icelandic writers anxious about their own fame or merits. It is simply clear intelligence, applied under a dry light to subjects that in themselves are primitive, such as never before or since have been represented in the same way. The life is their own life; the record is that of a dispassionate observer. . . . The conventional form of the Saga has more of the common mediæval restrictions of view. . . . The invention of the common form of the Saga is an achievement which deserves to be judged by the best in its kind. . . . In their temper, also, and in the quality of their heroic ideal, the Sagas are the inheritors of the older heroic poetry. . . . They are imaginative dealing in actions and characters; they are not ethical or sentimental treatises, or reviews of chivalry."

This is, surely, sound shrewd appreciation. Excellent, too, is the individual criticism of of the Sagas analysing the simple tragic and broadly comic elements they contain. Laxdæla, Hrafnkels Saga, Bandamanna Saga, Sturlunga are each discussed, and the contrast between Joinville and Sturla is brought out in a masterly and convincing way. Mr. Ker has felt the Herodotean charm of the Icelandic masters, and has understood and expressed the powerful and keen qualities of the prose instrument they devised and employed, anticipating many of the finest properties and possibilities of the modern novel.

The chapter on the old French epic has much new and good in it. The place of the Chansons de Geste among the other Teutonic forms of epic is exactly and ably indicated. Its "gas-engine" propulsion, par une suite d'explosions successives, toujours arrêtées court et toujours reprenant avec soudaineté (as M. Gaston Paris puts it), its narrative neither stunted nor laboured, though continually broken, its massive diffusiveness, its style not prismatic but diaphanous, its contracted acquiescence in simple formulas, its too frequent inability to grapple really effectively with its story, its capacity of representing "strenuous and unruled life in a comprehensive and liberal narrative, noble in spirit and not much hampered by conventional nobility or dignity," its clumsy comedy, its long struggle with the invading romantic element, and final complete overthrow are all aptly noticed. With Mr. Ker's judgment on Roland, Garin, Raoul of Cambrai and Huon most students of these poems will heartily agree. Perhaps he is a little too stern towards the Orange cycle, whose glorious episodes atone for the wearisome super-plenitude of hapless Moors, and the stupid brutalities of Rainoart au tinel.

In his final section on the old romantic schools of France there is much fine and careful criticism, many enlightening remarks. It is not with the romantic spirit and its best manifestations that he is so greatly concerned as with the mass of the romantic output. He is considering less the sublimities of the Grael and the Lancelot prose than the elegant, fluent sentimentalities of Benoit and Chrestien, or the quaint pseudo-classicism—as, for example, the corrupt following of Ovid (which was through the Vetula to end later in such splendid results as Celestina). He is not tracing the influences of the Celtic magic, but rather the working of the classic leaven, the fermenting orts of the Greeks' and Romans' confection.

The book ends with an admirable exposition of the position and achievement of Chaucer—

"The 'Knight's Tale' is a complete and perfect version of a mediæval romance worked out with all the resources of Chaucer's literary study and reflexion, tested and considered and corrected in every possible way."

"Anelida" is

"Chaucer's essay in that delicate abstract fashion of story which formed one of the chief accomplishments of the French Romantic school."

His "Troilus and Criseyde"

"is the poem in which mediæval romance passes out of itself into the form of the modern novel. . . . Instead of leaving it a romance, graceful and superficial as it is in Boccaccio, he deepened it, and filled with such dramatic imagination and such variety of life as had never been attained before his time by any romancer, and the result is a piece of work that leaves all romantic conventions behind."

Personally, I think Mr. Ker rather overrates Chaucer; but it is a pleasure to find the case for him put so wisely and well as he has put it here.

After reading the charming versions of the appendix, one puts down the book with a hope that another volume of studies by the same hand may follow before very long. Above all, one would wish Mr. Ker to undertake the historic and æsthetic criticism of the Arthurian cycle, for the "matter of Britain" is of supreme importance in mediæval letters. One would like to hear what he has to say on Rutebeuf, on Villon, on Long William, on Walther, on Henryson. He must not try and escape the "burden of Dante." There is plenty of work for an earnest and capable student, endowed with the love of his subject and that balanced judgment and self-control that mark the true critic.

I have said my say, and while I have tried to let the book speak for itself, I hope I have answered the author's kindly request for my opinion. I can only deplore that my master and fellow in those Northern studies which Mr. Ker has so warmly and judiciously advocated may never behold a book in which he would, I am sure, have taken unmixed delight.

F. YORK POWELL.

THE OLD GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

English Schools at the Reformation. By A. F. Leach. (A. Constable & Co.)

It is not too much to say that this is the most important contribution to the history of English education below the universities that has yet appeared. Students of the subject have for some time past entertained grave and growing doubts with respect to the validity of the position claimed for Edward VI. and the Reforming party as the patrons and promoters of higher education. It has been left to Mr. Leach to vindicate these doubts, and to demonstrate that the fabric of this claim is based upon a vision. His book will clear away once for all any misconception that may still exist upon the subject—at any rate, so far as historical scholars are concerned; but popular delusions die hard, and that the commonly accepted view which he has clearly proved to be erroneous will be discarded forthwith by the multitude is too much to hope for. Still, the fable has received its death-blow, and its decease is but a matter of time.

Mr. Leach's book is not written to assert an iconoclastic theory or a startling paradox. His conclusions are founded on the contemporary records, and his authorities are placed before his readers in full. Every statement made in the first part of his volume may be checked and verified by reference to the second portion. "Edward VI.: Spoiler of Schools," is a trumpet-blast that will startle the smug complacency of many a good Protestant clergyman in his country parsonage: yet, if such a one can still hug his gratissimus error after reading the evidence set forth, he must, indeed, be of a stiff-necked generation. "With Edward VI. personally, of course," says the author, "we are not concerned, the expression 'Edward VI.' is only a short form for the predominant protector of the moment." The number of grammar schools (and the term includes Winchester and Eton) in 1535 is estimated at over 300; and they performed the same functions as those schools which prepare boys for the universities at the present day. Besides these, there were chorister or song schools, and elementary schools; a complete system, in fact, of primary and secondary education. The grammar schools were, as a rule, departments of cathedral churches, monasteries, collegiate churches, colleges, hospitals, chantries, or gilds, while some were, like St. Paul's School, independent foundations. All but the last class would necessarily be affected by any legislation that dealt generally with religious and semi-religious institutions; and the Act of 37 Henry VIII., which dissolved the greater monasteries, including as it did colleges, hospitals, and other ecclesiastical establishments, swept away a large number of schools. The survivors were left as victims for the Chantries Act of Edward VI. Although the King states in his Journal (Literary Remains of Edward VI., p. 414) that the sale of the possessions of the chantries, colleges, and free chapels was "for the payment of my dettes," it was intended that the grammar schools should be endowed with a portion of the landed estate, or of the proceeds of the sale, and a temporary provision in the shape of fixed payments was directed to be made pending the issue of a "further order" which was to carry out the endowment scheme: but owing to the disorders of the time, and the financial embarrassments of the government, that "further order" never came. In response to the dissatisfaction which was strongly expressed at the making away with the schools and "the devilish drowning of youth in ignorance," a few schools were refounded by Letters Patent, and a portion of the ecclesiastical estates restored to them or other lands given in their place. But the great majority had to remain content with the fixed stipend, which, though fairly adequate in some instances for the time being, became, through the diminution in the purchasing power of money, steadily less so, and eventually too infinitesimal to be of any value for the purpose intended. The result in a great number of cases, where no future benefactors came forward, was the extinction of many of these schools, and those that did survive were sadly crippled in their usefulness. On the other hand, those to which endowments in land had been re-granted, came in for all the advantages of the "unearned increment," and

"by their wealth and by their good works we can measure the loss sustained by their contemporaries and compeers, who were restricted to a fixed sum that has long since shrunk to a miserable pittance."

With the grammar schools went the song schools and the elementary schools, and the blow inflicted on musical education by the disappearance of the former is dwelt upon with some pardonable bitterness. That England was, relatively to the conditions, far better provided with secondary schools than it has ever been since was more than suspected by those who have investigated the subject of mediæval education, and Mr. Leach shows that this was so. His figures work out for the country at large as one grammar school among every 8,300 of the population, instead of one for every 23,000 as appears from the Schools Inquiry Commission's Report to have been the case in 1865. In some counties the proportion is even higher: as in Herefordshire, which had 13 among 60,000, and Essex, which had 16 among 22,000. The attendance also was large: "wherever numbers are mentioned they are surprising for their magnitude." The standard of the teaching, too, in Latin at least, obviously could not have been low. As regards the class that frequented the grammar schools in town or country, it was "the younger sons of the nobility and farmers, the lesser land-holders, the prosperous tradesmen." Touching the moot point of the meaning of the phrase "free school," Mr. Leach rules in favour of Dr. Johnson's guess, but supports his ruling with facts and arguments which seem to place the question beyond further controversy: so that after all a free school meant "a school in which, because of the endowment, all, or some of the scholars, the poor or the inhabitants of the place, or a certain number, were freed from fees for teaching." Finally, to sum up,

"as for poor Edward VI., meaning thereby the ruling councillors of his day, he cannot any longer be called the founder of our national system of secondary education. But he, or they, can at least claim the distinction of having had a unique opportunity of re-organising the whole educational system of a nation from top to bottom, without cost to the nation, and of having thrown it away."

We have noticed one slip: "head master" for "high master" of St. Paul's School on p. 57, though the latter is rightly put on p. 90.

A SPECULATIVE GEOLOGIST.

Autobiographical Sketch of James Croll, LL.D., F.R.S., &c., with Memoir of his Life and Work. By James Campbell Irons, M.A. (Edward Stanford.)

NATURE gave James Croll a purely philosophical mind, and it was in the application of this gift to geological and cosmical speculation that he achieved success. He drifted into geology, but his eye often looked beyond the circumstances in which the necessity for existence had placed him, to the airy region of metaphysics, where stones and strata give place to ideals, and the entire universe is reduced to a process of determinations.

"There were," he wrote in his autobiography, "two important and, to most people, interesting sciences for which I had no relish, namely, chemistry and geology, more particularly the latter. . . . In truth, it was more by accident than by choice that I became a geologist."

It was only after spending a precarious life as millwright, joiner, tea-dealer, temperance hotel-keeper, insurance agent, and janitor of Anderson's College and Museum, Glasgow, that, at the age of forty-six, he was given a post of comparative comfort on the staff of the Geological Survey of Scotland, his duty being to act as secretary and accountant of the Survey at Edinburgh. This was in 1867, but before that time he was known in the scientific world as an original speculator on perplexing problems in physics and geology.

The paper which laid the foundation of Croll's scientific reputation was on the causes of the changes of climate during the glacial epoch. It is very well known that over a large part of this country, North America, and the Continent, evidences of ice-action are found in the form of grooves and deep scratches on smoothed rocks, boulders which must have been conveyed far from their original homes, and rounded blocks. These features have long been regarded as witnesses to the former existence of abundant ice and glaciers in regions which now enjoy temperate climates. Various theories have been propounded to account for the change of climatic conditions which must have occurred, but none have been so widely accepted as that worked out by Croll. Starting with certain astronomical facts as to the change of form of the earth's path around the sun, and of the direction of the earth's axis, when long periods are considered, he arrived at the conclusion that the length of winter varies regularly in consonance with these cosmical mutations. At present the winters are eight days longer than the summers, but the excess may be as much as thirty-six days, in which case the summer's sun would be unable to melt all the winter's frozen mantle, and the accumulation of ice and snow thus brought about would eventually produce an Arctic climate in temperate latitudes. With a view to determine when the conditions capable of producing this result had occurred in the past and would recur in the future, Croll calculated the form of the earth's orbit for three million years back and one million years onward. As a result of his computations, he assigned the commencement of the last glacial epoch to a date 240,000 years ago, and regarded it as ending 80,000 years before the present time. For a generation this astronomical explanation of cold periods in the earth's history dominated geological thought, but opinion has lately gone against it.

Philosophy was Croll's first and last love; his first work was on the "Philosophy of Theism," and when old age was creeping upon him, he renewed his metaphysical studies, and reverted to the consideration of such subjects as force, matter, determinism, causation, evolution, &c., his thoughts upon them being afterwards formulated in The Philosophical Basis of Evolution, published shortly before his death. In this work, Croll contended that evolutionary processes betokened intelligent purpose, and that the course of nature must be under the direction of a Supreme Will.

Croll's life was not without its interesting incidents. Before his appointment upon the Scottish Geological Survey could be secured, the Civil Service Commissioners expected him to pass an elementary entrance examination, but he was plucked in arithmetic and English composition. Those who have likewise failed will cherish the remembrance of this defeat of genius. Notwithstanding the failure he obtained the appointment; for, upon the recommendation of Lord Kelvin,

"the Civil Service Commissioners, with a wisely liberal relaxation of their rules, accepted his great calculations regarding the eccentricity of the earth's orbit and the precession of the equinoxes during the last 10,000,000 years as sufficient evidence of his arithmetical capacity, his book on the Philosophy of Theism and numerous papers published in scientific journals as proof of his ability to write good English."

Croll was of a very retiring nature. Though he contributed as many as ninety-two papers to scientific literature, as well as many sporadic letters, he was only personally known to a small circle of friends. Even when the British Association met in Edinburgh in 1871, he did not attend any of the meetings, notwithstanding that he was then official representative of the Geological Survey Office in that city.

Many other points referring to Croll's scientific work and his characteristics could be mentioned, but enough has perhaps been said to exhibit the broad features of both. If we add to the geological dissertations already mentioned his book on stellar evolution and his papers on ocean currents, which he maintained were produced by the prevailing winds of the globe, we have a group containing his most weighty contributions to science. What stands out more clearly than anything else in his life and letters is the philosophic bent of his mind; his heart was never wholly given to geology, and he was glad when his retirement from the Geological Survey enabled him to go back to abstractions.

Mr. Irons is a deep admirer of Croll, and the trouble he has taken to build up a tribute to his friend's memory deserves a measure of praise. But for all that, we think he has not exercised sufficient discrimination, and he seems to have included material simply because it was available. Another defect is the large amount of duplicated matter, practically all the biographical account being a repetition of the autobiography, or of statements found elsewhere in the volume.

A SUNNY BOOK.

On the Trail of Don Quixote. By August F. Jaccaci. Illustrated by Daniel Vierge. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

THE author and the artist who have made this book were to have journeyed together through La Mancha. This proving impracticable they went separately in the same year, Mr. Jaccaci following his friend, and using his drawings as an itinerary. The result is a delightful book, full of sunshine and silence; full, too, of glimpses of the gaunt Knight, to whom La Mancha has paid the homage of changing as little as possible, since his shadow quitted her plains. Most of M. Vierge's illustrations might be illustrations to the story told by Cervantes. Here are the dry, stony plains, the white-walled villages, the trains of muleteers, the surly goatherds, the inns filling and emptying with brown-skinned carriers and labourers, the crazy windmills dotting the distant slopes, the dust-raising flocks of sheep, and the freakish sunshine working its will on all. Perhaps nothing in Mr. Jaccaci's notes so connects the La Mancha of Don Quixote with the hardly less remote La Mancha of to-day as this alternation of sunshine and gloom. How many a page of Quixote's adventures comes back as we read:

"Decrepit buildings, half-ruined villages, ragged mendicants, have their daily hour of unrivalled splendour. Dilapidated objects and commonplace scenes touched by the sun of the south are turned by this incomparable magician into visions of loveliness. In the course of the day the glorious light dwells on each detail of the landscape, in turn giving it inexpressible charm and beauty, and leaving it a dull corpse whose life has departed."

We now understand how that wizard sun helped the Knight's madness. It was in the horizontal rays of the early morning, on the plain of Monteil, that he saw the windmills as giants; but says Mr. Jaccaci:

"Poor Quixote does not seem so mad after all when one first sees the row of mills [on the Campo de Crigitano] set irregularly on the crest of a hill, and looking like nothing one has ever seen, more like a collection of queer primitive toys stuck there by the weird caprice of a lunatic. As one approaches and views them one by one, those clumsy-looking affairs, propped up like very aged persons, are thoroughly fantastic. No wonder the worthy knight mistook them for giants."

In this paralytic land much chatter runs on the Knight, and the villagers quarrel to decide where Cervantes, or his hero, was born, or what Quixote did here, or what was done to him there. But their knowledge of the matter is small. This is how a lazy fellow, a connoisseur of bull-fighting, and a loafer in the little inn at Argamasilla, delivered himself on the Book:

"Yes, Señor, Don Quixote was a funny chap. It's a great book though, and known to the whole world, even to the heathen and to the English, and the others. I read it, and found it droll reading, but the best of it I did not get. There is much in it for persons of learning. They all say who know that the science of the world is there, and that when you understand it you can get as rich as you want. But I am ignorant, and was only amused. Don Quixote was a very ridiculous fellow, surely! Think of his taking those wenches at the Venta for castle maidens! Jesu, what an ass he was! And Sancho, you say? Well, he is like you and me, he wants to eat and sleep and get along with everybody in a nice way. But, then, I don't know the book. There is something in it I can't get hold of, which makes priests and the like read it over and over. Don Federigo, a lawyer, who lives now in Madrid, says there is not another book like it, so full of politics and everything."

That is good. Mr. Jaccaci is to be thanked not only for a charming commentary on Don Quixote, but for having induced the greatest living master of pen and ink drawing to do for La Mancha and Quixote what he—a Spaniard—could alone have done. M. Vierge's drawings number nearly one hundred and fifty. Many of his subjects are so slight and commonplace that an inferior artist would have scorned them. Here they live and speak and allure.

"MAKE AND SHAPE."

The Points of the Horse. By Captain M. Horace Hayes. Second Edition. Illustrated. (W. Thacker & Co.)

It is safe to assert that no man in England knows more about the horse as a species than Captain Hayes does. He has spent many years in travelling the world over, teaching the secrets of training and breaking; and in course of his career must have handled examples of the majority of breeds known to man. It was this very breadth of knowledge which, in the eyes of English readers, impaired the utility of the first edition of this book; for it is certain that therein he accorded English breeds of horses no greater share of attention than others, and notably passed over the hunter classes with a lightness that amounted to heresy. Two years' residence in the shires has opened his eyes to this defect and its gravity; hence the new edition making amends for the sins of omission in the first.

The book now is one deserving of high praise. Captain Hayes is an acknowledged authority on horse flesh; but it is not every master who is at such pains to teach well what he knows himself. Every page bears indication of care and patience in collecting and preparing a vast mass of detail. The illustrations form a great feature of the work, and these betray an amount of inquiry and research which speaks eloquently for the thoroughness of the author's method. He has made it his object to secure photographs which shall show in greater or less degree every good point and every bad one that should be sought or shunned in the conformation of the horse; a task which involved, he tells us, inspection of about ten thousand animals. We fully appreciate the difficulty of grouping some 400 illustrations, to very many of which frequent reference is required throughout the work, and therefore, we are disinclined to be critical; but we think that in arranging the plates the educational value of contrast has been somewhat overlooked. For example, we find facing p. 210 five photographs of legs showing large bone below the hock; facing p. 212 are photographs showing light bone: it would have been an improvement to transpose a couple of the figures for greater facility of comparison. Captain Hayes is well up to date in those sections relating to English breeds; but is he quite right in referring to extravagant action as being "greatly prized among fashionable harness horses"? We are inclined to think that fashion has condemned as the monstrosity it is, the showy equine absurdity which raised its knee to its bit and put down the foot about one-fifth of a natural stride from the spot whence it was lifted. Hyde Park on a fine June day is the best field for observing the fashion in carriage horses; and we are decidedly of opinion that the horse which throws out his legs and covers the ground has been more in evidence during the last few seasons than the "high stepper" which uses his forelegs like a pavior's rammer. We are glad to find confirmed by so good an authority the belief we have long held, that fast galloping across ridge and furrow is probably more trying than the jumping to the shoulders of the hunter. The repeated jar the rider feels when crossing such land proves the severity of the strain on the forehead.

SOME THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

The Spirit on the Waters: the Evolution of the Divine from the Human. By Dr. Edwin A. Abbott. (Macmillan & Co.)

WHETHER or not one accepts all Dr. Abbott's conclusions — his version of the doctrine of the Trinity, of the Divine Sonship of Jesus, of the theology of St. Paul — it will not be possible to deny that he has made an interesting book. He writes temperately, sanely, and with evident conviction and sincerity; and the product of his labours may bear comfort and encouragement to many who, imbued with the sentiment of Christianity, are troubled by the results of criticism applied to its authentic documents and the past history of the Church. There is a wise saying, with which Dr. Abbott is familiar, as to the imprudence of putting unfermented wine into old skins; and it occurs to us that, in his attempt to express in the language of Christian theology his views as to the mystic truths of the spiritual life, the author has run a danger which he might have avoided. Ink would fail us to enumerate the heresies into which, in his attempt to rationalise Christian dogmas, Dr. Abbott technically falls; and if he has managed to preserve the terms, he has succeeded, in some instances, at the expense alike of the words themselves, which he has wrested from their integrity, and of the lucidity which is so invaluable in a treatise intended for popular use. But it shall not be gainsaid, the book makes for righteousness.

Footprints of the Apostles as Traced by St. Luke in the Acts. By Herbert Mortimer Luckock, D.D. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

IN these volumes the Dean of Lichfield pursues the narrative of the early days of the Christian Church, which he began under the title Footprints of the Son of Man. The book does not appeal to so wide a circle of readers as does, for instance, Dean Farrar's treatment of the same subject. The Protestant Dissenter, who gives the latter work a place of honour on his shelves, would reject Dr. Luckock's book, for he insists upon the Divine constitution of the episcopate. Even the Low Churchman must avoid the Dean's exposition of the Acts, for it is full of a kind of Popery, in respect of the sacramental system; and a Catholic must similarly keep clear of it, if for no other reason, because the writer ignores the supremacy of Peter, and because on the subject of grace his ideas are hard to reconcile with the teaching of the schools. There remains that section of the Church of England of which Dean Luckock is a distinguished ornament. For the clergy of that school of thought which has grown out of the Oxford Movement these volumes provide a singularly helpful magazine of Scriptural defences, and they will besides serve singularly to lighten the task of adapting to the popular understanding the comments requisite for the elucidation of the historical narrative.

The Influence of the Scottish Church in Christendom: Baird Lecture for 1895. By Henry Cowan, D.D. (A. & C. Black.)

DR. COWAN uses the term Scottish Church in the widest sense, so as to include not only the post-Reformation Kirk by law established, but the Catholic Church of the Middle Ages, and it would seem also the Protestant Episcopal communion existing, from the sixteenth century downwards, side by side with the first-named. These six lectures, therefore, cover a very wide field, and the breadth of their survey gives them an interest more than provincial. Yet not the least important lecture of the series is the last, upon the influence of the Scottish Church in the promotion of political liberty and spiritual independence. None of the Protestant Churches has so constantly maintained the principle of national responsibility for the provision of religious ordinances, and, at the same time, has so strenuously opposed every encroachment from the side of the secular power upon the doctrines of spiritual autonomy.

Village Sermons. By the late E. J. A. Hort, D.D. (Macmillan.)

OF a very different type are the two-dozen sermons which a well-advised filial piety has prompted Mr. A. F. Hort to arrange for publication. They are simple with the simplicity that waits upon consummate scholarship, fervent with the chastened ardour of a cultivated man, sonorous and dignified with a style formed upon the music of the English Bible and the gravest writers of the National Church. There is nothing of Carlyle, Emerson, and Stevenson in them (we believe these were the three writers prescribed by a correspondent in a contemporary as the proper sources of inspiration for a curate who would be on a level with the times), but there is a great deal of Isaiah, Paul, and John. Twelve of the discourses are rather of the nature of lectures upon the books of the Bible. They are distinguished at once by tact and by sincerity; a child could understand them, and a scholar could hear them pleasantly and with profit.

The Hope of Israel. By the Rev. F. H. Woods. (T. & T. Clark.)

UNDER this title, Mr. Woods reprints the lectures lately delivered by him in Lincoln's Inn Chapel on the foundation of Bishop Warburton. Important from their intrinsic merit, they are doubly so as marking this vast change which has recently come over the Protestant Churches with regard to the interpretation of the Bible. The intention of the pious founder was, as Mr. Woods reminds us, "to strengthen that branch of Christian evidences which rests upon the fulfilment of prophecy." Yet his latest lecturer finds himself compelled to declare that "even religious men are seriously asking whether the prophets had any real predictive power at all" — a question which he himself answers by supposing that they were gifted with "a strong creative imagination. . . . The announcement of God's judgments and goodness directed their minds to the future in which God's way would be justified. This, combined with natural clear-sightedness, produced those often vivid pictures of the future, which, though not fulfilled in all the details which their vivid imagination painted, nor quite as they themselves seem to have expected, were yet fulfilled in their main features, and point to a very remarkable, if we ought not to say supernatural, power of foresight, such a foresight as to justify their own claim to inspiration."

In elaboration of this, he points out that "the prophets were mistaken in all of what we may call the outward aspects of the Messianic hope," that "it would be an anachronism to say that the prophets predict an incarnate God," and that the beautiful figure of the "Man of Sorrows" in Isaiah liii. typifies only the Jewish nation. The apparent acceptance in the New Testament of the Davidic authorship of the (Maccabæan) Psalm cx., he gets over by assuming that "our Lord's knowledge on these points was really limited by the time in which He lived." On the other hand, he claims that "there is hardly a single element of the religious and spiritual side of Jewish prophecy which has not been partially fulfilled in Christian history." Everyone anxious to discover an intelligent reconciliation on such points between religion and science should read this book. To the profane critic the question "What would Bishop Warburton have thought of it?" will probably suggest itself.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

The Land o' Cakes and Brither Scots. By T. B. Johnstone. (Alexander Gardner.)

SCOTSMEN who have lived in lands other than their own are in many cases excellent men; but when they take public speech "by the haun," or the pen of a ready writer, stay-at-home Scotsmen are apt to be a trial. They are convinced that in all respects, bodily, mental, and moral, theirs is a race which is superior to all other races; and they do not hesitate about saying so. Mr. T. B. Johnstone's work is like all the others of its large class. It is a monument of conceit and immodesty. Here, once more, we have familiar inquiry into "the characteristics of Scotsmen" and "the causes of Scottish characteristics," together with the usual tedious self-glorification. From the schoolmaster's point of view the book is written well; the chapters are fillets of history, creditably cooked; but, none the less, the performance will make any travelled Scot who reads it blush with vicarious shame. Sir Walter did not write as the modern Northmen do. He saw worth in Englishmen, in Flemings, and even in Muslims, and in his writings he did not withhold his appreciations. Respectfully calling to this fact the attention of the modern Scots, we assure them, in the friendliest spirit, that the less they write about their "characteristics" the more the characteristics will be perceived by Englishmen, and the better liked.

Golf in Theory and Practice. By H. S. C. Everard. (George Bell & Sons.)

THE new book on golf is not without faults. There is fearsome bombast in it. The iron clubs of bygone ages, we are told, "appear, from their enormous weight, to be better adapted to the sport of hammer-throwing than to the usual circumstances necessitating their use." Again:

"preservative against wet is a coating of dissolved gutta-percha; a few parings of balls may be put into a small stoppered phial and covered with bi-sulphide of carbon; but the learner should flee from the haunts of men, for the smell is as the quintessence of a thousand sewers, and to remain in the company of fellow-mortals with an unstoppered bottle is to court the malison of one's closest friend."

Likewise: "Knocking two strokes into one, you will have taken the bread out of your enemy's mouth, and the only cereal he will taste for the nonce will be the bread of affliction." If they judged by those citations only, our readers would conclude that Mr. Everard was a dull man striving to be bright. We make haste to say, therefore, that his lapses into vulgarity of style are very few. His book, on the whole, is quite admirable. His knowledge of golf and golfers is exceedingly minute and intelligent, and his gift of exposition is extraordinary. We should say that there is scarce a good golfer who will not become a better from studying the work.

Sophocles: the Seven Plays in English Verse.

By Lewis Campbell, M.A. (Murray.)

MR. CAMPBELL, the accomplished Greek professor at St. Andrews, publishes a new edition of his Sophocles in English verse. We are of those who vastly prefer prose translations of poetry to verse translations, except when a Shelley, or Fitzgerald, or Rossetti is the translator; and Mr. Campbell, though no mean master of poetic phrase and rhythm, is not a poet. His versions of Æschylus and Sophocles are obviously excellent in scholarship, but as poems they are decent, uninspiring, mildly interesting. No doubt, much may be said in favour of such translations, for those whose classical scholarship is either in its infancy or its decay: it stimulates or reminds such scholars to meet with the ancient tragedies upon a side purely artistic and imaginative, to recognise or to remember that, after all, the art and imagination are the things of immortal moment. But readers wholly innocent of classical learning, to whom Greek is an absolutely unknown tongue and the genius or spirit of Greece a mystery, will not profit by such means. For the secret of Sophocles, to take but him, lies in his language, inextricably interwoven with it: the English verse can give the general meaning and drift of his sentences, but not the subtlety of his magic, the elusive delicacy of his style, the artful grace of his ways. He sinks, in another language, from himself into a sort of Attic Racine—fine, indeed, yet frigid, shorn of his mellow glory. Most versions of classical poetry read like modern imitations of the originals: the vital spirit has left them, and we are conscious of a certain depressing deadness. As a death-mask, rigid and frozen, to the living features with their mobile play and animation, so are translations of ancient poetry to that poetry itself. It is not true that the language of literature is an accident, not an essential: it is not true that Dante is Dante in German, that Milton is Milton in French. As well might we transpose and transform the materials of painter and sculptor and think to lose nothing. "A very pretty poem, but you must not call it Homer," is a saying of universal application. Mr. Campbell's poetic translations have their merits, conspicuous and plentiful, but they are not Sophocles, not Æschylus; no, not even adumbrations of them. In the new preface the date of Mr. Matthew Arnold's death is misprinted 1883 for 1888.

A Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited by E. K. Chambers. (Blackie & Son.)

MR. E. K. CHAMBERS is assuredly among the foremost of our younger critical scholars, and has already done a goodly deal of excellent editing. To a great and patient erudition, especially in the literature of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, he unites a fine literary sense, a fresh and frank enjoyment of good art, which preserve him from any approach to dull or eccentric pedantry, to prosaic theorising. Much knowledge often seems to atrophy the sense of humour, to deaden the power of recognising the impossible or the absurd: witness how many a German upon Homer and Shakespeare! But Mr. Chambers will never lose either his common sense or his good taste, and any book of his editing is sure to be edited worthily. A Midsummer Night's Dream, recently published in the "Warwick Shakespeare" series, is no exception. It is wonderfully rich in illustrative matter, and no aspect or interest of the play is neglected. Perhaps the most valuable piece of work is the essay upon The Fairy World, as variously conceived or treated by Shakespeare's age; it is a fascinating theme, of which the investigation is rendered fruitful in the extreme, through the great progress of folklore in recent times. Not that the writer in any degree swamps poetry with anthropology, but there is just enough of sound science to stimulate a student and suggest thought. In his treatment of chronological and historical questions Mr. Chambers is modestly convincing and delightfully sane: two rare praises for Shakespearian scholars. In brief, here is an edition to be unreservedly commended.

The Sources of Spenser's Classical Mythology. By Alice Elizabeth Sawtelle, Ph.D. (Yale.) (Boston: Silver, Burdett, & Co.)

ANY work of literary scholarship with the imprimatur of Prof. Albert S. Cook, of Yale University, is likely to be meritorious, and Miss Sawtelle's little Spenserian "classical dictionary" is painstaking and useful. Perhaps it does not altogether make sufficient allowance for Spenser's debt to the Italians, and credits him too uniformly with a classical knowledge at first hand; but it certainly emphasises with great effect the undoubted fact of his studies, both wide and deep, in antiquity. Miss Sawtelle's work won her a doctorate in the English department of Yale, and she has well deserved it.

All-Fellows: Seven Legends of Lower Redemption, with Insets in Verse. By Laurence Housman. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

A KIND of fantastic Franciscanism, sometimes more bizarre than beautiful, yet always with elements of beauty—that is what Mr. Laurence Housman gives us here. Fellowship with piteous creatures, "lower" natures, outcasts and waifs, the orphans and starvelings of life, is here commended to us through parabolic legends, mystical folklore, little tales wrought gently and delicately in cunning words. Between them come snatches of verse, which seem at once aloof from the tales, yet subtly relevant to them, and illustrations, which are in Mr. Housman's happiest manner of design. It is a difficult, a perilous form of literary art that he practises: the excellently quaint is so near to the foolishly uncouth, the sensitive to the sentimental, and a forcing of the note would ruin all. But here there is none of this, only a very singular and choice success: it is a book of most pleasant beauty, and will find response to its appeal. Some of its touching tales are in the spirit of Arnold's "Saint Brandan" and "Neckan":

"O ruth of God," the priest cried out,
'This lost sea-creature saved!'

and the Neckan's sigh :

"The earth hath kindness
The sea, the starry poles;
Earth, sea, and sky, and God above—
But, ah, not human souls!"

And in such things there is more than a graceful, pathetic fancy: there is a very sound strain of theology. Mr. Housman's "Legends of Lower Redemption" have some of the highest saints upon their side, and some of the highest singers.

* * *

The Eclogues of Virgil. Translated by Sir George Osborne Morgan. (Henry Frowde.)

WE have been both surprised and delighted by this little volume, with the modest promise of its preface, and the admirable performance of its appointed task. Our surprise is caused by the closeness with which the hexameter of the Eclogues can be rendered into English hexameters; our delight arises from the apparent ease with which the translator accomplishes a work which is really most difficult. The literalness of the translation is most remarkable, line after line showing a word for word rendering of the original, without the smallest sacrifice of rhythm or swing. Verse translations of the Eclogues are by no means numerous; of hexameter renderings we cannot call to mind a single one. But Sir George Osborne Morgan has effectually disposed of the late Lord Derby's denunciation of the English hexameter as a "pestilent heresy," and shown that it is the only metrical dress for Virgil's sylvan muse. It is a little remarkable that, in spite of the scholarly care that is everywhere manifest, the translator should have ventured—in the second line of the first Eclogue—on a spondee in the fifth foot. One can only grieve that the cares of public life have prevented Sir George from carrying out his original intention of translating the whole of Virgil. But even for this fragment—dedicated appropriately to Mr. Gladstone as one who has known how to lighten the cares of a statesman by the recreations of a scholar—every lover of Virgil will be grateful.

FICTION.

The Way of the Wind. By Charles Kennett Burrow. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

WE have a vague impression of finding Mr. Burrow's Asteck's Madonna among the more promising of first books. The promise is well redeemed in the maturer work with which he now comes before us. The Way of the Wind is a singularly beautiful and, within its limits, a singularly complete novel. Mr. Burrow's style is serene; he has made his ideal of the subtle and restrained, rather than of the vivid and the forcible. The choice has its element of renunciation; something that insists upon itself is needed to capture the multitude; but those to whom a patient art is dear will have their pleasure from Mr. Burrow's unaffected English, with its sober charm and its careful attention to the architecture of sentence and paragraph. The story is not unworthy of its presentment. Frank Herriot and Arthur Barron are friends, old friends of college days. Herriot, an honest country gentleman, with poetry in his soul, marries in illusion. The wife amuses herself in town and leaves her husband to befriend his tenants. Arthur Barron is entrapped by her beauty into a genuine passion. After a long struggle temperament triumphs, and he goes "the way of the wind." The tragedy of the thing lies in the utter unworthiness of the woman, to whom two lives are sacrificed. She is a light woman, essentially a wanton, within the conditions of her birth and upbringing. She rises to the level of neither man; her husband she almost unconsciously dupes from the beginning; her lover she never makes an effort to comprehend. In the moment of passion she is a vague disappointment to him; his remorse bores her; and before long she leaves him and returns to Herriot. The drama is worked out with psychological insight and human pity, and with a profound sense of the genuinely tragical elements in life. We welcome in Mr. Burrow a notable recruit to the ranks of serious writers of fiction.

The Speculators. By John Francis Brewer. (Methuen.)

THE speculators are, heaven be praised, not Stock Exchange speculators. Their comedy has nothing to do with "slumps" and "options." At the opening of the story Lord Tremayne, George Colborne, and Frank Barrow are engaged in a triangular controversy on the origin of the moral sense in the pages of the "Modern Spirit," a review. It is, in fact, the familiar motive of the philosopher in love that Mr. Brewer puts before us. His polemical moralists, for all their theories, are the caprice of the earth-spirit, tossed about and made ludicrous by the promptings of purely human impulses and brute instincts. It is a pretty bit of comedy. To enjoy it, however, you must accept Mr. Brewer's point of view. It is not life that he gives you, but a fantasia of life: life as he chooses, with humorous intent, to interpret or frankly to distort it. And your liking for the book will depend on your sympathy with the interpretation, with the selection, for the purposes of exaggeration or caricature, of elements that of course are really there. In any case, it is undeniably a clever book, and would perhaps be a brilliant one, if much of the inspiration were not so obviously derivative. To write a novel in epigrams is not as easy as it looks. In its latter-day form it has become complicated with a desire to translate into literature the methods of impressionism in painting. Impressionism asks so much confidence that it is bound to be absolutely sincere; the least affectation, the least attitudinising, and you are gone. Mr. Brewer has wit and penetration, and he can write; but the conditions of his success are to take himself seriously and to abjure posing. At present he does not always command our confidence.

A Pearl of the Realm. By Anna L. Glyn. (Hutchinson.)

It is strange that it should be accounted a recommendation, in the case of a novel, that in it fiction has been made subordinate to fact. Such, however, is Miss Glyn's simple boast, and whatever credit is due to this subordination we willingly allow her. The writer seems to have received her first inspiration from a chance allusion to "the sumptuous House called Nonesuch" in a MS. "Life of the Earl of Arundel," where it is described as "a pearl of this realm." About this palace she has built up her tale. She expresses a modest doubt whether to readers unfamiliar with the parish of Ewart her story will have much interest. But, to tell the truth, the story depends very much less than its author supposes upon local associations. For our own part we derived most pleasure from the occasional glimpses of the Queen Henrietta Maria, with whom the little heroine, Margerie, took refuge from her wicked guardian, and some descriptions of old London. Considerable pains have been taken to reproduce the manners and speech of the period; the historical facts are accurately outlined; and though the story would have been improved by further compression, at least it gives evidence of conscientious and intelligent work. There are some pretty love scenes and a deal of thwarted villainy.

Charity Chance. By Walter Raymond. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

Charity Chance is above all things a pleasant book and as such it ought to be very welcome. There is an old-world flavour, an utter lack of modernity, about Mr. Raymond's writings which makes them particularly attractive in these days of many problems. Somerset is at least a century behind the times, probably the most old-fashioned county in the kingdom, and Charity Chance, like the author's earlier work, Love and Quiet Life, is full of that great and restful quietness which is so characteristic of the county and so full of charm to the casual visitor whose brain throbs with the ceaseless hum of the cities. Mr. Raymond is, indeed, a somewhat superficial observer, absorbed in a poetical contemplation of the beauties of the country and the quaintness of its inhabitants and wilfully ignorant of the sordidness of much of the life around him. The steady degradation of the farmer is a sad reality: there is a wealth of hidden tragedy in the bitter fight ever raging between the old and the new.

Mr. Raymond strives after no originality of plot. He tells an old story, the history of a girl with aspirations engaged to a young man whose tremendous healthiness of mind and body refuses to sympathise with the vague restlessness that comes of doing nothing and dreaming much. The appearance of the inevitable poet with long raven-black hair and large, far-off, wandering eyes, a Radical "who does not believe in God, or Queen Victoria, or tithes," leads to the inevitable complications, but Mr. Raymond will have no tragedy. In his hands we feel that the story ends naturally in the now unconventional showers of rice and old slippers.

The Supplanter. By B. Paul Neuman. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. NEUMAN sets a rather dangerous example in this book. The Supplanter is simply the story of Jacob and Esau, told in fifty chapters instead of a few verses, and framed in the nineteenth century instead of a prehistoric epoch. The fidelity of the transcript is daring. The Jacob of the narrative buys his elder brother's birth-right, not, indeed, for a mess of pottage—though a frivolous reader might say that the heir of the Jordans had messes enough and to spare—but for £1,000 down. He deceives his sick father by the Scriptural device of wearing his brother's coat—a “hairy” one, by the way—and so wins the blessing of the firstborn. Again, it is the mother who is the prime mover in these trickeries; and, when the fraud is discovered, it is to a distant relative (whose dealings with him are quite in the manner of Laban) that the impostor flees in fear of his life. All this is curious; but it is not a source of strength to the book—a clever, but unequal production. Once the Biblical theme is abandoned, the wheels of Mr. Neuman's inspiration manifestly drag; and the last part of the book, though interesting to readers of Mrs. Humphry Ward, shows a falling off in point of the qualities dear to the average novel-reader. Indeed, that person is likely to miss many of the beauties of Mr. Neuman's book, which is thoughtful to a degree rare in days when novels tend more and more to run in the serial groove. The character of Jim, who is a coward and knows that he is a coward and rebels against the knowledge, is a clever study.

Joan Seaton. By Mary Beaumont. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

IN this book the authoress proves that she not only possesses the capacity for writing short stories in a fresh and dainty style, as was shown by her first book published a year ago, but that she is also able to hold our interest in a more elaborate tale. As in A Ringby Lass, the scene is laid in Yorkshire, and the characters are racy of the soil. The story concerns itself principally with the Stansfelds, the Seaton, and the Pigots, families whose “forefathers had been battle comrades and private friends for centuries, with an occasional historic break in the friendship still remembered in the dale.” The interest centres in the loves of Humphrey Stansfeld and Joan Seaton; but there is a minor romance, which is frustrated by an ambitious mother: this is tenderly treated. The final repentance and confession of the proud and capable Mrs. Seaton is well portrayed. The character of Joan Seaton is attractive, and in her father we have a picture of a personality both strong and sweet. The Yorkshire character, with its common sense, its sarcasm, its outward roughness and inner kindliness, and its pervading superstition, is well delineated, and the authoress leaves no doubt in the reader's mind of her familiarity with the class of people about whom she writes. Here is her estimate of the Dalesman: “But the ancient virtues still abide. The soil which has tenaciously cherished old superstitions has fostered in some minds a religious faith and a spiritual insight to be matched only in the lives of the greater saints.”

The Bloom of Faded Years. By Walmer Downe. (Greenock: James M'Kelvie.)

THE author of this work apparently knows nothing of literary style or structural coherence. Such sentences as the following should have been impossible: “. . . commenced to various tasks.” “Appearances go a long way with regard to everything.” “I despise to pull down a counterful of goods. . . .” The scene of the story is laid mainly in Edinburgh, though some of the characters pay flying visits to Ireland, the United States, and Havana. Half the characters talk in high-flown periods, while the other half express themselves in broad Scottish. Mr. Downe is at his strongest in dialect. When he writes English the result is best described in his own words: “Some people have a matter clearly defined in their own brain, and state it to another as they think quite satisfactorily, but in reality 'tis shrouded in ambiguity.”

Lady Jean's Son. By Sarah Tytler. (Jarrold & Son.)

WHEN Lady Jean's Vagaries appeared anonymously about two years ago none of the critics who welcomed it so warmly recognised in the writing of the bright Scotch story the experienced hand of Mrs. Tytler. On the title-page of the present volume, however, the authorship of the earlier story is formally acknowledged. Lady Jean's Son, a complete work in itself, forms an admirable sequel to Lady Jean's Vagaries, and, in style, treatment, and subject, is a worthy successor to that volume. Like its predecessor it is a story of Edinburgh in the eighteenth century, and deals for the most part with the celebrated Douglas case. That case was heard in Edinburgh before sixteen judges, who found for Andrew Douglas, but on being taken to the House of Lords that decision was reversed, and “Jock” Douglas, as his friends called him, was triumphantly reinstated. Into the comparatively well-known incidents of the famous trial Mrs. Tytler has woven the threads of a very pretty little love story. She takes for her heroines two Scotch girls, one the daughter of an earl and the other a simple gentlewoman, and so contrives that the result of the trial is inextricably bound up with their happiness. In fact, if Jock Douglas wins his case Lady Margaret is to bestow her haughty person on him, and little Jeanie Erskine is to marry the rising young barrister who conducts the defence.

The characters of the two girls and their admirers are interesting studies, and the effect on their respective temperaments of the weary waiting while the case drags on to a conclusion is admirably rendered.

The Finger and the Ring. By Charles James. (Ward & Downey.)

MR. JAMES has produced his novel thirty years too late. Had it appeared in the sixties, such a clever approach to Dickens' style might have been appreciated; but now Mr. Andrew Lang has told us that Dickens is not read by the new generation, and on this assumption we should not like to predict any great measure of popularity for Mr. James's clever and painstaking novel. We use the word painstaking advisedly, for the author follows his model closely in depicting a large number of characters, and in describing their actions at great length with a superabundance of detail. Mr. Treacle is a faint echo of Sam Weller, with a dash of Tom Pinch; the Marquis of Fritchington irresistibly recalls Mr. Dombey; Gerty, in the first portion of the story, has a distinct likeness to Miss Pinch; Judd's Rents might be a modern Tom-all-alone's; and Mr. Doran, the Preacher, and Mr. Snowdrop all remind one here and there of other characters by the same author. The style shows a similar want of originality, and many of Dickens' mannerisms are closely reproduced. At the same time, we do not wish to imply that Mr. James's book is not a clever one; it requires ability to produce even a good imitation of so great an original.

The Star Sapphire. By Mabel Collins. (Downey & Co.)

THIS is a book with a purpose, but the story is not sacrificed in the endeavour to teach a moral lesson. It deals with the problem of an inherited craving for alcohol, and the development of the tragedy is not weakened by exaggeration. Philip Tempest, the husband of the fated woman, is a strong, as well as pathetic, personality, and the story of his chivalrous care of the beautiful woman whose vicious habit has killed his love is effectively told. Laurence Monkwell, the “Star Sapphire” of the book—who in hard work as a hospital nurse strives to find solace for a hopeless love—is a strong and interesting character.

Molly Melville: a Tale for Girls. By E. Everett-Green. (Nelson & Sons.)

MOLLY MELVILLE is a lovable creation, and her career will be followed with sympathy by Mrs. Everett-Green's girl readers. The characters are well portrayed, and the interest of the story is maintained throughout. The book does not lack incident: a railway accident, a perilous experience in a subterranean cave, and a snowstorm, all help to bring incipient love affairs to happy issues.

POETRY.

Elfinn's Luck, and Other Poems. By A. E. Hills. (A. D. Innes & Co.)

The Love-Philire, and Other Poems. By Helen F. Schweitzer. (John Macquellan.)

FROM Lord Tennyson and Adelaide Procter the author of The Love-Philire has her literary derivations:

"So Tristram took the sea with fair Ysolt—
Ysolt the beautiful, Mark's destined bride—
And through the long blue summer days they sailed Ever away."

Her volume begins with seven pages in that familiar manner. Tennyson himself, in his lifetime, was a little sore about imitation, for imitation is hardly ever, despite the proverb, a form of flattery. Moreover, the trick was well and easily caught, as the inventor knew when he wrote—

"Most can grow the flower now,
For all have got the seed."

The author of The Love-Philire cultivates the Muses' garden to most purpose when these are her flowers. The shorter pieces that follow, and have their poetical mother in Miss Procter, are less successful.

Mr. Hills has a way of his own as well as a Tennysonian way. When Elfinn's father decrees to him the bride who has refused his suit, the youth declares:

"Leave me to win the maiden: for her hand
Without her love were but a hiltless sword
Which cleaveth while one grasps it."

The whole tale of Elfinn's Luck is well and vigorously told; and the Boy Bard, who appears at the King's Court, says a monumental thing in its way when he cries out:

"And all earth's songs are in each song I sing"—especially, of course, Tennyson's songs. Other happy lines has Mr. Hills in his shorter poems, as where he says:

"Love is the only yes—all else denies."

His sonnet, "A Death-bed Judgment," expresses, with feeling and solemnity, a thought that belongs mainly to modern poetry. It has already been broadly expressed by another living poet in the lines:

"Is it the all severest mode
To see ourselves with the eyes of God?
God rather grant at His assize
He see us not with our own eyes!"

Mr. Hills's quite original rendering of the same reverent reversal of the familiar attitude is as follows:

"Weak-purposed, fallen; purposeless, wind-swayed, base,
Discredited, self-scorned; son of the sky
Condoning, half, the vileness of the sty,
Mire-splashed, plume-broken, recreant from the race,
Despairing, callous! Dost murmur, 'There is grace?'"

Scarlet turn snow because one haps to die!
Penitence real, when sin no more can buy!
With this dare meet Omniscience face to face!

"And yet at times I feel God knows, at times
God pities, times God strengthens—I might dare.

But there is one to whom I could not tell

My thoughts so needless vile, my follies, crimes:
Oh, my pure childhood's soul, thou couldst not spare—
Hurl thy scorned recreant into deepest hell!"

Two Decades of Song. By Capel Shaw. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Shreds and Patches. By James Dowman. (W. Jolly & Sons.)

MR. CAPEL SHAW, in some "Lines from a Poem written to my Father," thus declares himself:

"Deem it not strange that I have further gone
Than thou thyself wilt go in casting off
The bonds that ignorance fastened on our race."

Emancipated as he is Mr. Shaw apostrophises Paradise as "the fabled home of rest," and "a dream of some pain-bitten mind." But Mr. Shaw had his dreams, too, it seems. He would use his "soul unfettered" and his "dauntless mind" to "scale the summit of glory" and "win the praise of my kind":

"Fruitless again! Have I won them,
Greatness and honour and fame?
Nay, they are still ungathered,
The people know not my name.

"Alas! I have done but little
Of all that I thought to do.
Little, too little, I say to my soul,
For one who is thirty-two."

As the book is entitled Two Decades of Song, the age of the author leaves us the loophole of supposing that some at least of the contents were written before the author had begun his teens.

Mr. Dowman would have done better to confine himself to verses of the "Coortin' in the Kailyard" order, in which he has a certain directness and melody. Mr. Dowman, too, is "Disillusioned of old superstitions,

From dogma set free";

so, of course, he is very scornful of the "Maudlin Moralisers," of whom he says:

"With groan and gasp they will recite
Each evil grown gigantic."

And they are indicted again as to the dance:

"They can smell the social evil
In a polka or a reel,
And the waltz will play the devil
If the nerves a tremor feel."

Nevertheless, we have Mr. Dowman hymning Savonarola, who was, of course, the arch-Puritan of his time. But Mr. Dowman is not really at home except in denunciation. And who has it next? The poetaster:

"Of all who have sacrificed thought
None equal the class poetaster;
With sense he's successfully fought,
And dulness he rules as a master.
He longs for the Laureate's bays,
Imagines he shows inspiration,
And mumbles his meaningless lays
That gain well-deserved—execration."

If you have a sermon that teaches you nothing else, therefrom you can learn patience, says George Herbert. There are verses, too, themselves empty, from which you may draw your fill of the little ironies of our common human destiny.

Christ and the Courtesan. By R. H. Fitzpatrick. (W. Stewart.)

MR. FITZPATRICK is an admirer of Rossetti, and so far we have no grievance against him. But when his admiration seeks to express itself by the method of imitation we are bound to make a protest. The audacity of his subject might be excused if there were any sign of genius in the treatment; but when in the elaboration of a fantasy so repulsive there is betrayed so plentiful a lack of training in the elements of syntax, a sense of humour so rudimentary, and a self-assertiveness so immoderate, mercy seems out of place. For an instance of the writer's humility, see the prelude "Jesus," in which his august subject is implored not to weep that he is forgotten, but to take courage from Mr. Fitzpatrick's example and philosophy. Then, to console him, Mr. Fitzpatrick's white roses

"Shall draw thy ghost of beauty from above
To quicken a new birth."

For an instance of what a sense of humour would have suppressed, read—

"And then she sang. Ah, God! to see the moon
Out-leaning, all one ear, to revel in that tune."

The rhyme also is worthy of remark. And, finally, here follows an instance—and it does not stand alone—of Mr. Fitzpatrick's regard for Saxon syntax:

"For 'tis in moments thus [i.e., such as this] we live."

Another:

"And her bosom white was a land where grows Lilies [sic] mingling with the rose."

Yet now and again we catch a glimpse of something better.

"The unshuttered eyes are empty, busy death Is draping those fond windows" is vivid, if not altogether novel, and a few such lines scattered over his fifty pages suggest that the day may come when Mr. Fitzpatrick will dislike Christ and the Courtesan as much as we.

Poems. By J. B. Selkirk. (W. Blackwood & Son.)

MR. J. B. SELKIRK's poems will doubtless interest the Scottish man. For the indifferent Southerner, we fear, too much seems to hang on dialect. What is commonplace in English gains a sanctity for the Scot by reason of being in the tongue hallowed by Burns. Stripped of dialect, his muse appears thus:

"GOOD-BYE.

"We stood together while the bell was ringing,
There in the busy station by the sea;
Near us a soldier's wife in tears was clinging Close to her husband's side. No word said we,
But, looking both away, our own eyes met:
A quick confusion took me, and a blush
Went up her lovely eyes and face; but yet
No word was spoken, till there came a rush
Of hurrying feet, and in the buzz and crush
I held her hand a moment; I forget
What then was said, for speaking was cut short

By first the engine's whistle, then a snort—
'Twas off! O Lord, what trifles, more or less,
Can block a lifelong contract—No or Yes!"

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1897.

No. 1298, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

MR. HARDY'S NEW NOVEL. The Well-Beloved appeared as a serial under the fuller title of The Pursuit of the Well-Beloved in the Illustrated London News in 1892. Since then Mr. Hardy has re-written a few of the chapters, and the story now appears in six-shilling form, being the seventeenth of the Wessex novels. The Isle of Slingers, in which the drama is chiefly laid, turns out to be Portland Bill, and the importance of this localisation is made clear by Mr. Hardy in his Preface, from which we quote the following:

"The peninsula carved by Time out of a single stone, whereon most of the following scenes are laid, has been for centuries immemorial the home of a curious and almost distinctive people, cherishing strange beliefs and singular customs, now for the most part obsolescent. Fancies, like certain soft-wooded plants which cannot bear the silent inland forests, but thrive by the sea in the roughest of weather, seem to grow up naturally here, in particular amongst those natives who have no active concerns in the labours of the 'Isle.' Hence it is a spot apt to generate a type of personage like the character imperfectly sketched in these pages—a native of natives—whom some may choose to call a fantast (if they honour him with their consideration so far), but whom others may see only as one that gave objective continuity and a name to a delicate dream which, in a vaguer form, is more or less common to all men, and is by no means new to platonic philosophers."

The book is divided into three sections, under the headings: "A Young Man of Twenty," "A Young Man of Forty," and "A Young Man Turned Sixty." The following lines by Crashaw are quoted by

Mr. Hardy on the page facing the first section:

"Now, if Time knows
That Her, whose radiant brows
Weave them a garland of my vows;

"Her that dares be
What these lines wish to see:
I seek no further, it is She."

SOME HISTORIES. MR. HEINEMANN'S series of short histories of the Literatures of the World promises to be useful and interesting. The first volume, dealing with Ancient Greek Literature, is by Mr. Gilbert Murray, who is practical in his aims.

"I have tried," he writes, "at first unconsciously, afterwards of set purpose—to realise, as well as I could, what sort of men the various Greek authors were, what they liked and disliked, how they earned their living and spent their time. Of course, it is only in the Attic period, and perhaps in the exceptional case of Pindar, that such a result can be even distantly approached, unless history is to degenerate into fiction. But the attempt is helpful where it leads to no definite result. . . . It was not by 'classic repose,' nor yet by 'worship of the human body'; it was not even by the possession of high intellectual and æsthetic gifts, that they rose so irresistibly from mere barbarism to the height of this unique civilisation; it was by infinite labour and unrest, by daring and by suffering, by loyal devotion to the things they felt to be great; above all, by hard and serious thinking."

A series of books similar to the above, and equally important, is that which Prof. George Saintsbury is editing, illustrative of "Periods of European Literature." In chronological order the first volume of the series is The Dark Ages, by Prof. W. P. Ker, but Mr. Saintsbury's book on The Flourishing of Romance and the Rise of Allegory, which is second in that order, has appeared first. Mr. Saintsbury explains in a general preface the scope and character of the series, which will consist of twelve volumes. In the present one, written by himself, we find chapters on "The Function of Latin," "Chansons de Geste," "The Matter of Britain," "The Making of English and the Settlement of European Prosody," &c.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF CAVALRY. GEN. SIR EVELYN WOOD'S new book, bearing this title, is confessedly written for soldiers, but there is no doubt that many general readers will find interest in its pages. Sir Evelyn's aim is to show what cavalry can do when skilfully handled, and especially to stimulate English cavalry officers, on whom the system of umpiring on field-days has, he believes, pressed rather hardly of late years. Twelve notable examples of cavalry work are expounded in as many chapters, each achievement being awarded a map for greater clearness. The following passage in Sir Evelyn's preface is interesting:

"It will be observed that England, Poland, and Russia each furnished the troops for only one of the feats I have selected, Austria two, and France two, while North Germany is credited with five out of the twelve achievements. This is to be accounted for, so far as our cavalry is concerned, by the fact that though it had many opportunities of achieving success in the Peninsular War, yet the leading of its commanders, being more indicative of courageous hearts than of well-stored minds, was often barren of results."

MR. ARTHUR SYMONS thus explains his poetic intentions in his new volume of poems entitled Amoris Victima:

"I wish this book to be read as a single poem, not as a collection of miscellaneous pieces. It is an attempt to deal imaginatively with what seems to me a typical phase of modern love, as it might affect the emotions and sensations of a typical modern man, to whom emotions and sensations represent the whole of life. It is a study, under the conditions of many moods, of a particular kind of personality, as it might be acted upon by the travail, exultation, and disaster of the only kind of passion which could be conceived as obtaining persistent dominance over it. Each poem is, I hope, able to stand alone, but no poem has been included without reference to the general scheme of the book, the general psychology of the imaginary hero."

The book is a slim octavo, and contains over thirty poems, mostly short lyrics. The free handling of the institution of Marriage which has obtained in Fiction and in real life during late years accounts for a book like Marriage Questions in Modern Fiction and Other Essays on Kindred Subjects. The subjects treated by Mrs. Chapman include "The Decline of Divorce," "Marriage Rejection and Marriage Reform," and "The Indissolubility of Marriage." The last paper won the emphatic support of Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace when it appeared in Lippincott's Magazine, seven years ago. Essays in Liberalism, by Six Oxford Men, is dedicated to Mr. John Morley. The Six Oxford Men, whose names are appended to these articles, were drawn together by the debates and elections of the Oxford Union Society. In a clear and modest preface they state their aim to be "the statement of a few definite principles applied to various departments of politics." The writers of these essays believe that the Liberal party has of late been too neglectful of principle, too enamoured of programmes and details. Their endeavour has been to re-assert Liberal doctrine in six papers: entitled "The Liberal Tradition," "Liberalism and Wealth," "Liberals and Labour," "Liberalism in Outward Relations," "A Liberal View of Education," and "The Historic Basis of Liberalism." The second and concluding volume of the late Mr. John O'Neill's The Night of the Gods has a preface by Mrs. O'Neill, and a brief memoir of the author by Mr. Grattan Geary. The chapter headings of this volume include "The Wheel," "Buddha's Footprint," "Dancing," "The Sphere," "The Number Seven," &c.

NEW FICTION. Saint Eva, a novel by Amelia Pain (Mrs. Barry Pain), is the first effort in fiction by this lady. The book has the advantage of a frontispiece by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, suggested, we may presume, by the character of the heroine. Wilt Thou Have This Woman? is a new novel by Mr. J. Maclaren Cobban, who has already given us The Red Sultan, Master of His Fate, and other good stories. We observe that the narrative opens in a squire's country house on a golden September day, and ends practically at the Old Bailey. Between these extremes of locality there should be room for much incident, and Mr. Cobban's chapter headings give further promise of it. Patience Sparhawk and Her Times, by Gertrude Atherton, is a study of United States womanhood. In an explanatory dedication to M. Paul Bourget, Miss Atherton credits him with having alone, of all foreigners, "detected, in its full significance, that the motive power, the cohering force, the ultimate religion of that strange composite known as 'The American,' is individual will." Miss Atherton's aim is to show that this extraordinary independence of character, with all its dangers and advantages, makes "the quintessential part of the women as of the men of this race." The development of Patience Sparhawk fills little less than 500 pages. The cover and title-page are designed in a sort of play on the girl's name (Sparrow-hawk). A posthumous novel by Mrs. Hungerford is sure of a welcome. Lovice, published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, contains about forty chapters, is very full of dialogue, and bears on its title-page the quotation:

"Be to her virtues very kind,
Be to her faults a little blind."

Secrets of the Courts of Europe, by Mr. Allen Upward, is a series of short stories with a strong political flavour; they are issued in book form after running through Pearson's Magazine. Lovers of the novel of adventure will probably seize upon They That Sit in Darkness, a story of the Australian Never Never. Mr. John Mackie, its author, writes:

"I figured, in a humble way, as a pioneer of civilisation in the wild country it has been my endeavour to describe in these pages. I was the first white man to build a house and settle on the Van Alphen River in the far Northern Territory, and it was there I supported life, for weeks together, on crows, hawks, snakes, and currajong roots."

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

CAMBRIDGE GREEK TESTAMENT FOR SCHOOLS: THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS. By Rev. H. C. G. Moule. Cambridge University Press. 2s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

OSCAR RHODES. By "Imperialist." Chapman & Hall.
THE SEPOT REVOLT. By Lieut.-General Macleod Innes, V.C. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.
A HISTORY OF ANCIENT GREEK LITERATURE. By Gilbert Murray. William Heinemann. 6s.
CENTURY CLASSICS: PAST AND PRESENT. By Thomas Carlyle. Ward, Lock & Bowden.
PERIODS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE. By George Saintsbury. William Blackwood & Sons.
THE ORDER OF THE COIF. By Alexander Pulling. William Clowes & Sons. Second edition. 10s.

POETRY AND BELLES LETTRES.

AMORIS VICTIMA. By Arthur Symonds. Leonard Smithers. 6s.
THE CROSS BENEATH THE RING, AND OTHER POEMS. By E. F. M. Benecke. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 2s. 6d.
THE PIERROT OF THE MINUTE. By Ernest Dowson. With Frontispiece, &c., by Aubrey Beardsley. Leonard Smithers. 7s. 6d.
THE MONTHS. By Leigh Hunt. William Andrew & Co. 2s.

DRAMA.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. AVON edition. Kegan Paul. 3s. 6d.

MILITARY.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF CAVALRY. By General Sir Evelyn Wood. George Bell & Sons. 7s. 6d.

FICTION.

THE WELL-BELOVED. By Thomas Hardy. Osgood, Mollvaine & Co. 6s.
SWORN ALLIES. By M. E. Le Clerc. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
SECRETS OF THE COURTS OF EUROPE. By Allen Upward. J. W. Arrowsmith. 6s.
THEY THAT SIT IN DARKNESS. By John Mackie. Hutchinson & Co.
SAINT EVA. By Amelia Pain. Osgood, Mollvaine & Co.
SWEET IRISH EYES. By Edith E. Cuthell. Skeffington & Son. 3s. 6d.
WILT THOU HAVE THIS WOMAN? By J. MacLaren Cobban. Methuen & Co. 6s.
LOVICE. By Mrs. Hungerford. Chatto & Windus. 6s.
THE QUEEN OF THE MOON. By Frederic Adye. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
PATIENCE SPARHAWK AND HER TIMES. By Gertrude Atherton. John Lane. 4s. 6d.
A LAST THROW. By Alice M. Diehl. Digby, Long & Co. 6s.
'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS. By Marius Jókai. Jarrold & Sons. 5s.

ANTIQUARIAN.

ENGLAND IN THE DAYS OF OLD. By William Andrews. William Andrews & Co. 7s. 6d.
YORKSHIRE ARCHEOLOGICAL SOCIETY: RECORD SERIES, VOL. XXI: YORKSHIRE LAY SUBSIDY. Edited by William Brown.

MYTHOLOGY.

THE NIGHT OF THE GODS. By John O'Neill. Vol. II. David Nutt.
THE POPULAR RELIGION AND FOLK-LORE OF NORTHERN INDIA. By W. Crooke, B.A. Second edition. 2 vols. Constable & Co. 21s.
RELIGION OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS. By Alfred Wiedemann, Ph.D. H. Grevel & Co. 12s. 6d.

POLITICS.

AMERICAN ORATIONS. Edited by Alexander Johnston and James Albert Woodburn. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.
ESSAYS IN LIBERALISM. By Six Oxford Men. Cassell & Co. 3s. 6d.

TRAVEL.

SOLDIERING AND SURVIVING IN BRITISH EAST AFRICA, 1891-1894. By Major J. R. L. Macdonald, R.E. Edward Arnold. 16s.

EDUCATIONAL.

ARNOLD'S SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE: KING RICHARD II. Edited by C. H. Gibson, M.A. CHILDE HAROLD. Edited by Rev. E. C. Everard Owen, M.A. Edward Arnold. 1s. 6d.
EDUCATION OF GIRLS AND WOMEN IN GREAT BRITAIN. By C. S. Bremner. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 4s. 6d.
BLACKIE'S SCIENCE TEXT-BOOKS: AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF HYGIENE. By H. Rowland Wakefield. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.
A SECOND FRENCH COURSE. By J. T. Beuzemakers, B.A. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.
SELECTIONS FROM THE "SPECTATOR." With Introduction and Notes, by Rev. Henry Evans, D.D. Blackie & Son. 2s.

SCIENCE.

THE ELEMENTS OF ELECTRO-CHEMISTRY. By Dr. Robert Lüpke. Translated by M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A. H. Grevel & Co. 7s. 6d.

FOREIGN.

LES HOMES NATURE. Rachilde. Mercure de France.
L'ETAT ET LES EGLISES EN PRUSSE SOUS FRÉDÉRIC GUILLAUME IER. Georges Pariset. Armand Colin & Cie.

MISCELLANEOUS.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY: MUNICIPAL REFORM IN THE UNITED STATES. By Thomas C. Devlin. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 4s.
MARRIAGE QUESTIONS IN MODERN FICTION. By Elizabeth Rachel Chapman. John Lane.
THE JUBILEE BOOK OF THE EDINBURGH PHILOSOPHICAL INSTITUTION.
HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS. By Helen Campbell. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 4s.
STEPS TO THE TEMPLE OF HAPPINESS. By Henry Smith. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 5s.
FISH-TAILS AND SOME TRUE ONES. By Bradnock Hall. Edward Arnold. 6s.
THE VALUE OF LIFE. By C. E. Burke. With a Preface by Aubrey de Vere. Catholic Truth Society. 1s.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Goldsmith Memorial has been successfully carried through by Mr. J. W. Hales. In November last he made the announcement of the intention to insert a window in honour of Oliver Goldsmith in the church of which, at the time of Goldsmith's birth, his father was curate. Since then it was found necessary to make a second appeal, or, rather, to emphasise the first. Now, however, Mr. Hales is able to state that enough money has been subscribed, and a design for the window has been approved. A Goldsmith window is also to be inserted in St. Saviour's, Southwark.

PROF. DRUMMOND left ample materials for a biography, though I believe no writer has been decided on. The general impression seems to be that Dr. James Stalker, who was his lifelong friend, will undertake the work. Prof. Drummond's was a charming personality, and that he had many sturdy champions was shown when his theological views were discussed at the Free Church Presbytery in 1895. During his illness many prominent men had journeyed long distances to visit him. Prof. George Adam Smith was often at his bedside. He retained full intellectual consciousness to the end, and one of his last messages was to Mr. Moody, the evangelist.

THE death of Prof. Drummond calls to mind the warfare that waged between the booksellers on the publication of The Ascent of Man. Prof. Drummond had great faith in the net system, and the book was issued at seven-and-sixpence net. Though the majority of booksellers sold it at the net price, there were exceptions. A large firm of London booksellers, for instance, declared that they did not recognise the right of the publishers to dictate terms, and sold the book at seven shillings. A large number of booksellers refused to stock the book at all, and, in the trade, the comparative small sale of 22,000 which The Ascent of Man has attained is generally attributed to this fact. This seems to show that, at least with high-priced books likely to have a large sale, the net system does not answer.

MR. JEROME's not very convincing list of authors (which was a little too much like the petition of the nine tailors of Tooley-street) at any rate proved that most literary men whose sympathies are with Prince George more nearly resemble Douglas Jerrold than Lord Byron in the present situation. Jerrold used to tell that he and Laman Blanchard once met in the street and fired each other with the idea of hastening to Greece to assist that luckless nation. "But," added Jerrold, "a smart shower coming on in the midst of our plans washed all the Greece out of us." And just now it is very showery.

THERE are, however, exceptions. Among the four British gentlemen who, fortified by a banquet at the National Liberal Club, started on Monday last to lend their aid to Greece, was Mr. Allen Upward. As Mr. Upward is a novelist, a humorist, and a poet, Byron may be said in some measure to have set his example not in vain. Mr. Upward, who is a barrister by profession, is known to the readers of The Idler by a series of grimly comic descriptions of "The Horrors of London." His books, Secrets of the Courts of Europe and One of God's Dilemmas, show much promise. Mr. Upward is essentially a man of action, and once was so bold as to stand for Parliament.

ONE wishes that Miss Marie Corelli would acquire the art of silence. I do not mean that one wishes she would cease to write: I mean that one wishes she would cease to "answer back," as schoolboys say. In the current London Figaro Miss Corelli "replies to her critics" once again, ostensibly with the purpose of burying the hatchet; although, as it turns out, her idea of the right place of sepulture for this weapon is (like Mr. Whistler's) in her adversary's skull.

In this particular instance Miss Corelli is mainly incensed by the remark of a reviewer (by the way, she ought not to call all reviewers critics; but that is a characteristic looseness of diction) who accused her of appealing successfully to "the great heart of the vulgar," and her reply is as much a defence of the vulgar—that is, the reading public—as of herself. The vulgar might have been left to take care of their own affairs. At any rate, Miss Corelli hardly clears the reading public of aberrations of taste by remarking that they buy also the works of Mr. Barrie, Mr. Kipling, Mr. Weyman, Mr. Hall Caine, Mrs. Humphry Ward, and Mr. Wilson Barrett, who are "all working in the same field of literature with me." Not all, Miss Corelli. And there are many reading publics.

CONCERNING Mulvaney's death, still unrecorded, a girl living in Arizona has written to Mr. Kipling. She tells him that the return of Mowgli to the "man pack" of civilisation (more or less) was an outrage to her sense of the proprieties, and she implores the author at any rate to arrange for Mulvaney to die "a worthy death on Indian soil and not go back to England"—and respectability. This request is one in which all who know and honour Terence Mulvaney (and who does not?) will join.

MR. KIPLING wrote in reply. He began by saying that he had done all he could for Mowgli in making him a married man and a servant of the Government (see In the Rukh), and continued: "But as to Mulvaney, his fate cannot be altered. If you remember the curse of Shielygh laid on him by old Mrs. Sheehy, he was to 'die quick in a strange land seeing his death before it came and unable to stir hand or foot.' Some day I may tell how that came upon him." Mr. Kipling added that he couldn't write stories by sitting down at a table and dipping his pen in the ink-bottle. "Stories 'happen along,' as they say in this part of the world, and, unlike the cattle on your ranch, they cannot be hurried."

MR. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS also has been lately the recipient of letters concerning his best-known puppet, the incomparable Van Bibber. The inquirers wished to know if Van Bibber was imaginary or a presentment of Mr. Davis himself. The reply is that Van Bibber is imaginary. A doctor at Baltimore, however, where Mr. Davis once studied, probably supplied the name. Anyway, it seems that this gentleman is obliged to spend a good deal of time in assuring questioners that he is not the original of Mr. Davis's hero.

THE negro poet, Mr. Paul Lawrence Dunbar, whose Lyrics of Lowly Life will soon be published here, is reading in public in this country under the auspices of Miss Pond, the daughter of Major Pond, the American entrepreneur. Miss Pond had some doubts as to how the venture would turn out, for when engaging Mr. Dunbar she asked him if he could swim. He said he could. "Because," she added grimly, "we may have to swim back."

In the current number of Education there is a nice instance of the literal standpoint from which the healthy boy judges poetry. Dr. Joyce, giving evidence before the Manual and Technical Instruction Committee, was arguing that the results system had, to a great extent, relieved scholars of the necessity of taking thought. As a proof of his contention he told the Committee that he was accustomed to ask children the meaning of this verse:

"She is a rich and rare land,
She is a fresh and fair land,
She is a dear and rare land—
This native land of mine."

Few children knew what their native land was; and fewer the significance of the epithets. One boy considered "fair land" to mean good soil, and went on to explain that "She is a dear and rare land" was another way of stating that in his country the rents are too high.

MR. STEPHEN CRANE's Maggie was recently the half-subject, Mr. Morrison's Child of the Jago being the other moiety, of a careful article by Mr. H. D. Traill, in one of the reviews. It seems, however, that there is more than one way of approaching this work. A little New York girl, aged about ten, recently returned Maggie to a circulating library and asked instead for Nelly's Silver Mine, which is not, I fancy, quite of the same order. A bystander, amused at the incident, asked the child's opinion of Mr. Crane's book. She replied that she liked it pretty well, but added, "It is rather young for me. It is written for little children." Mr. Traill will like to know of this. It seems to stamp the "new realism."

MR. JOHN S. FARMER has in preparation a series of privately printed choice reprints of scarce books and unique MSS., which will be issued by Messrs. Gibbings & Co. The first of the series, to be issued immediately, will be Goddard's Satirycall Dialogue, of which only one copy is known to exist. Goddard flourished in the early part of the seventeenth century, belonged to the Middle Temple, and was extremely caustic in his satire on women. He published three books, which Dr. Furnivall, in 1878, prepared for republication, but which were never issued. Dr. Furnivall's notes and material have now been placed at the disposal of the present editor.

THE ONLOOKER.

THE annual meeting of the Selden Society will be held in the Council Room, Lincoln's Inn Hall, on Wednesday, March 24, 1897, at 4.30 p.m. Lord Herschell will preside.

MR. F. C. BURNAND and Mr. Phil May have collaborated in a work which takes the form of a guide to Kent. The book will be more amusing than its title suggests, and will include a number of illustrations by Mr. Phil May of summer life in the prosperous seaside towns of the Garden of England. Mr. May has also almost finished an album of drawings under the title From Petticoat Lane to Buckingham Palace.

MR. CHARLES SAYLE has completed the correction of his anthology In Praise of Music. It is arranged on the lines adopted by the late Alexander Ireland, in his Book-lovers' Enchiridion, and contains extracts both in prose and verse from the writings of the earliest times down to the present day. It will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock almost immediately.

A UNIFORM cheap edition of the Hibbert Lectures is now being issued by Messrs. Williams & Norgate in monthly volumes at three and sixpence each.

MR. KIPLING's new story, "Slaves of the Lamp," will be published in the Cosmopolis, beginning in the April number.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will publish in a few days a biographical sketch of Lady Blanche Balfour, the sister of Lord Salisbury, and mother of the Hon. Arthur J. Balfour. The booklet, which contains a number of portraits and illustrations, is written by the Rev. James Robertson, D.D., of Whittingehame.

Mr. Devil's Head is the title of a story by Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, written for Messrs. Tillotson's syndicate of newspapers, through which it will begin in May.

MR. LEWIS L. KROFF is translating from the Hungarian a romance by his famous fellow-countryman, Jókai, called The Pasha's Darling; or, the Last Days of the Janissaries. Mr. Redway is to publish the book.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish next month My Life in Christ, or Moments of Spiritual Serenity and Contemplation, of Reverent Feeling, of Earnest Self-Amendment, and of Peace in God; being extracts from the diary of the Most Reverend John Ilitch Sergieff ("Father John"), of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Cronstadt, Russia.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS announce a novel by a new author, entitled Allanson's Little Woman, which they will publish within the course of the next few days in their Greenback series of popular novels.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND.

(From a Correspondent.)

PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND died at Tunbridge Wells on March 11. For more than eighteen months he had been suffering from a general breakdown in health, and the end was not unexpected. He was only forty-six years old.

Henry Drummond came of a well-known Scottish family. His uncle, Mr. Peter Drummond, established the famous Stirling Tract Depository, which still issues yearly an immense amount of literature of the strictly evangelical order, and his father, who was a wealthy seed merchant at Stirling, took a prominent part in the religious life of his county. The late Professor was educated at Crieff, where "Ian Maclaren" was one of his greatest friends, and subsequently spent some years at the University of Tübingen. Throughout his life he always kept in close touch with current German thought and literature. At Edinburgh University he studied geology under Prof. Geikie, and would undoubtedly have obtained the degree of Doctor of Science had he not given up his scientific work to join Mr. Moody. He went through the complete course of theological training, and qualified for the ministry at the Free Church College, and was, I believe, actually ordained. In 1873 the revivalist, Mr. Moody, visited Edinburgh, and the young student came under his influence. For two years Prof. Drummond accompanied Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey through England, Scotland, and Ireland, and everywhere he addressed enormous gatherings; everywhere he made countless friends. Prof. Drummond, with his kindly persuasiveness and his wonderfully attractive personality stood out in strange contrast to the evangelist, whose rough-and-ready eloquence suited his message. It was characteristic of Prof. Drummond that although in subsequent years he considerably changed his point of view, he always remained a firm friend of both Sir Archibald Geikie and Mr. Moody. The latter especially stood by him, in face of the most bitter attacks, though he has been heard to say that the "apes were almost too many for me." In 1876 Mr. Moody returned to America, and Prof. Drummond was appointed, largely owing, I believe, to the suggestion of Prof. Geikie, Professor of Natural Science at Glasgow Free Church College—a post he held until his death. About this time, in addition to his ordinary lectures to the students, he delivered a number of addresses on social and religious subjects to working-men at the Possilpark Mission, of which he had charge, and out of this double work—the co-mingling of science and theology—grew the idea of the series of papers which was to make Prof. Drummond one of the most popular authors of his generation. The various addresses that are contained in Natural Law in the Spiritual World appeared in the Clerical World, a weekly twopenny paper edited by the Rev. Joseph Exell, which enjoyed but a short and chequered existence. The papers attracted some attention, and in a collected form they were refused by at least two leading London publishers. Prof. Drummond, in describing the various vicissitudes through which his MS. passed, says: "To be served a second time with the black seal of literature was too much for me, and the doomed sheets were returned to their pigeon-holes and once more forgotten." Mr. M. H. Hodder, however, had read the articles in serial form, and, happening to meet the author one day in Paternoster-row—he had already come across him at Mr. Moody's meetings—he suggested that his firm should publish the book. The offer was accepted. Prof. Drummond re-wrote many of the chapters, and had just time to correct the proofs before he started on an expedition to East Central Africa, for the purpose of reporting on the natural resources of Nyassaland and the surrounding countries.

The reception of Natural Law in the Spiritual World is one of the most curious bits of literary history of this century. Prof. Drummond had certainly no idea of the success which was to attend his book; and I believe that it was only after considerable hesitation that he refused an offer of £40 from the editor of the Clerical World for the complete copyright of the articles. I have before me the figures of the first few editions. In April, 1883, 1,000 copies were printed and the book was issued at 7s. 6d. At first it failed to attract much attention, and a second edition of 1,000 copies was not called for until the middle of July. On August 4 a review appeared in the Spectator which unquestionably was the making of the book, and the sale went up by leaps and bounds. At the beginning of September another 1,000 copies were printed, in October 2,000, in November 2,000, and so on. In March, 1887, a cheaper edition was issued, at 3s. 6d., after 51,000 of the 7s. 6d. edition had been sold. The current edition bears on the title-page the words: "Thirty-second Edition, completing 119,000"! In view of the attacks which were subsequently made on the book by the strictly evangelical school of theologians—at least fifteen volumes, not to mention innumerable articles in various magazines, were at different times written as counterblasts to Natural Law—it is interesting to note that at first it was received with delight as the greatest answer to the prevailing materialism that had appeared. Several prominent Evangelicals went so far as to start a fund for the free distribution of Natural Law, and it was only after some years had passed that they discovered that the idea underlying the book was totally heterodox.

Prof. Drummond returned from Africa to find himself famous. Offers of work poured in upon him from every part of the kingdom; but he consistently refused to write to order, and his literary output is comparatively small. For many years he waged perpetual war with the reporters, and there must be an immense collection of addresses and lectures which have never been given to the world in any permanent form. Prof. Drummond was of an excessively modest and retiring disposition; he was an enthusiastic angler, and during the long vacations, when he was not travelling in Africa, Australia, the South Sea Islands, Java, the Malay Peninsula and Japan, or lecturing for Mr. Moody to the students at Northfield, he was to be found in one of the small villages in the north of Scotland. I have met several who thus came into contact with him, and he has been described as one of the most delightful companions, a man "who never talked shop."

The Greatest Thing in the World was issued in book form at Christmas, 1889, when it was published in white paper covers with gold lettering at a shilling. The idea of such a "Christmas card" was new, the get-up of the book was attractive, the title caught the public fancy and the sale was perfectly unprecedented. In six months 185,000 copies were sold. The style was subsequently extensively copied, but the booklets still sell well. The figures at this time are: The Greatest Thing in the World, 330,000; Pax Vobiscum, 130,000 (whereas the first edition of The Greatest Thing consisted of only 20,000 copies, the first issue of Pax Vobiscum was 100,000); The Changed Life, 89,000; The Programme of Christianity, 80,000; and The City Without a Church, 60,000. Thirty-four thousand copies have been sold of Tropical Africa, Prof. Drummond's account of his various journeyings, and 30,000 copies of Baxter's Second Innings, a booklet for boys published in connexion with the Boys' Brigade, an institution in which the author took the deepest interest, and which he continually advocated in the Press, especially in an article in Good Words.

In the spring of 1893 Prof. Drummond delivered the "Lowell" Lectures in Boston. He had long contemplated a sequel to Natural Law in the Spiritual World, a book that should appeal more especially to scientific men. He had, I believe, completed the lectures at least a year before he delivered them. The tremendous reception he received in America, where his books had sold by the hundreds of thousands, disconcerted him somewhat, and at the last moment he decided to re-write several of his lectures in a style more suitable for such popular audiences. The excitement in Boston was intense. A ring of speculators was formed to buy up a large number of the tickets, and these were sold at fabulous prices.

The Ascent of Man was the most criticised book of the year. It does not fall within the scope of this article to discuss Prof. Drummond's position either as a theologian or a scientific man; but it is, I think, admitted by all that the Ascent of Man was not final, and a definite statement of Prof. Drummond's position was eagerly awaited. I do not think, however, that he has left behind any exhaustive work of this character.

Prof. Drummond will be remembered not so much as the man who tried to reconcile science and theology, but as the greatest leader of young men the century has seen. He was a young man himself, keenly interested in all the movements of the day; and in his booklets he preached the gospel of a wider, larger, more joyful humanity, a gospel which will always appeal to young men. His books have been translated into nearly every European language, and his influence for good has been world-wide.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XIX.—WILKIE COLLINS.

WILKIE COLLINS was at his greatest in construction. Many novelists have written better than he, but none has excelled him as the builder of a plot. Planning was with him a much more arduous task than writing; for, once schemed out, the story went briskly forward and gripped like a vice. Wilkie Collins did not pause on the road to be sententious or humorous or satirical, although it was in his power to be all three; nor did he expend labour on the examination of motives and temperamental subtleties. His business was to tell a story so that it would hold the reader to the exclusion of all else. And he did it. If on the way, without causing delay or relaxation of grasp, a character might be elaborated, well and good. Thus in The Moonstone we have the old servitor's babble concerning Robinson Crusoe, which, though not exactly indispensable to the narrative, is, at any rate, no blemish; and here we suspect it might be maintained that the old man's garrulity is another proof of Wilkie Collins's art: he gives him just enough discursiveness to excite the reader to increased curiosity.

Yet although his genius did not incline him to minute psychological studies, Wilkie Collins was still as concerned as any writer could be for the accuracy of his character drawing. No artist at any time has taken his work more seriously. A bundle of letters addressed by Collins to a London editor, which now lies before us, abundantly illustrates this point. From the careful corrections in his proofs, and his alarm lest any alteration should be made by another hand, we learn how thoroughly considered was every line of his stories and how significant every syllable. The following passage (which has not hitherto seen the light), on a subject near the heart of all editors who cater for the family, is particularly interesting:

"The other alteration [wrote Collins] I cannot consent to make. The 'damns' (two 'damns' only, observe, in the whole story) mark the characters at very important places in the narrative. The 'compromise' which you suggest is simply what they would not say. I know of no instances of a writer with any respect for his art or for himself who has ever made the concession which your friends ask of me. My story is not addressed to young people exclusively—it is addressed to readers in general. I do not accept young people as the ultimate court of appeal in English literature. Mr. Turlington [the character in the story in question] must talk like Mr. Turlington—even though the terrible consequence may be that a boy or two may cry 'Damn' in imitation of him. I refer your friends to Scott and Dickens—writers considered immaculate in the matter of propriety. They will find damn where damn ought to be in the pages of both those masters. In short, I am damned if I take out damn!"

In another of these letters Collins, after cursing the forgetfulness which has led him into an error, says:

"But the devil (I believe in the devil) lies in wait for one in these matters—and while he lets you see the large errors, he blinds you to the little ones. I enclose the corrected proof, and register my letter—in case the devil tries his hand at some more mischief between France [where the letter was written] and England."

Wilkie Collins's most accomplished follower was the late Hugh Conway, whose Called Back and Dark Days were worthy of the older hand. Mr. B. L. Farjeon, in Great Porter Square, gave promise of continuing the tradition, but he soon abandoned it. Mr. Conan Doyle, our present-day mystery weaver, is at once more robust and more episodic. The time seems to have gone by for such sustained thrills, such debauches of suspense, as Wilkie Collins gave his admirers. It will be long before his books cease to be read. The Woman in White, The Moonstone, and The Dead Secret, lengthy though they be, will enthrall many generations yet.

Our portrait shows the novelist in middle age. In later life he wore a beard. Wilkie Collins died in 1889 at the age of sixty-five.

THE BOOK MARKET.

SOME WEST CENTRAL WINDOWS.

LAST week our literary peripatetics brought us from Liverpool-street as far as Mr. Dunn's large shop at the head of Cheapside. This week a saunter through Holborn and the Strand seemed to promise entertainment. What better starting-point than Messrs. Bumpus's at Holborn Bars? There you enter the City; there you leave it; and a broad pavement and a gracious bend in the line of the street give emphasis and space to one of the best-known book strongholds in London. From the Furnival's Inn side of the street, or even from a passing 'bus, Messrs. Bumpus's window looks ever the same; but at close quarters it becomes a chronicle of literary events and a not illiberal education. Here you may gather information that will enable you to dine out with credit for a fortnight; and then you may come again. It is not superfluous to know that the twenty-five volumes of the latest edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica is now to be bought for twenty-four pounds, less than a sovereign a volume. Chambers' Encyclopædia is here also, but being both of later date and much less costly it commands its full price. It is well to be reminded, too, that only three guineas stand between you and the illustrated edition of Green's History of the English People, which you have so long vowed, and so long neglected, to place on your shelves. But these belong to the old brigade. Their position is assured, their ticketing is modest; you need not hurry. With certain great books of the hour it is far otherwise. It would be strange indeed if Mr. Richard R. Holmes's Queen Victoria would brook your calm. This is the book of the year—in a sense, the book of the century. It is produced under the gracious supervision of Her Majesty in the proudest year of her reign; and the price, like the Jubilee fever, is going up, up. The edition on Japanese paper, published at £10, is worth £25 at the moment of writing. But to obtain it even at that price is barely possible. The ordinary edition, published at £2 8s., is ticketed £3, and will rise in price—all the more certainly because considerable doubt exists as to the number of copies which Messrs. Boussod, Valadon & Co. will be willing to strike off. They have a splendid reputation to keep up in this matter, and the moment imperfection in the plates sets in printing will stop. Mr. Bumpus will try to get you a copy; but his despair grows more beautiful every day. Let us follow the sunset to Messrs. Cornish Brothers' shop, nearly opposite the Avenue Hotel. Messrs. Cornish, like other booksellers, will receive your subscription for the new and limited edition of the novels of Charles Lever, which Messrs. Downey & Co. will issue during the next two years, month by month, in half-guinea volumes. Harry Lorrequer leads the procession. At the first blush there may seem little chance in these days for so old-fashioned a humorist as Lever to exercise his old spell. But it must be remembered that no other uniform edition of Lever's works is now in the market, and that this edition will surpass all others, excepting, of course, the rare first editions in paper covers. The novelist's daughter, Mrs. Neville, is editing the series, which will be embellished by all the original plates etched by "Phiz" and George Cruikshank, over six hundred in number. These are to be supplemented in several of the later volumes by wood engravings by Mr. Luke Fildes, R.A., Mr. M. E. Edwards, Mr. Gordon Browne, and other artists. The printing of this edition has been entrusted to Messrs. T. & A. Constable, of Edinburgh, who have had a new bold, clear type cast for the work. The size of the page is octavo, and the volumes will be printed on laid paper specially made for this edition. Each volume will contain on an average 500 to 600 pages, and will be light to handle. The edition will be strictly limited to 1,000 copies for sale in Great Britain and America, and the type will be distributed after printing. Here again, therefore, delay is dangerous. It should be remembered that the Edinburgh edition of Robert Louis Stevenson's works, published at the same price and in the same quantity, has nearly doubled in value and is still keenly sought after. Not that Lever makes the same claim on this generation, but a "boom" in Lever is not the most improbable of all literary events. Messrs. Cornish have the novels of the hour well to the front, Mr. Crockett's A Lad's Love enjoying the most prominence, while Mr. H. G. Wells's The Wheels of Chance still "keeps its state in Rome," along with such later arrivals as Ziska, The Well-Beloved, Peter Halket, and Guacac the Tinner. Mr. Le Gallienne's Quest of the Golden Girl is not seen in the window, but Messrs. Cornish display the effective poster which Mr. John Lane has issued for its advertisement. This may be described as an arrangement in grey, black, and gold, disclosing a nun-like maiden. The Quest is in favour among booksellers, and is already in its third edition. Continuing yet a little westward we come to Mr. William Glaisher's shop, close to the Inns of Court Hotel. Mr. Glaisher is one of the largest "remainder" booksellers in London, and his shop is a happy hunting-ground to the more knowing among book-buyers. It is astonishing what good books become remainders. We recently found Mr. Glaisher selling Dr. Richard Garnett's Twilight of the Gods at a third of its original cost: it is a book of mature wit that has somehow missed public favour. Here many a fine art book of yesterday may be picked up at a large reduction. The costly edition of the Tavern of the Three Virtues, with Vierge's illustrations, is now offered at a little more than a fifth of its first price.

WILKIE COLLINS

From the Picture by Sir John Millais, P.R.A., in the National Portrait Gallery

CORRESPONDENCE.

MACLEOD OF ASSYNT AND "PICKLE THE SPY."
Bernera, Stornoway, N.B.

Mr. Dunning MacLeod is a strange investigator, if he thinks there was not a vestige of truth in a story which is plainly shown in the course of his letter to have been hardly exaggerated even by presumably prejudiced historians. He admits that Neil MacLeod captured Montrose, and surrendered him to an accredited officer. What further baseness could constitute treachery? Shall we allow that open hostility is to escape censure, while hostility combined with strategy, in a single individual, is to brand descendants of the strategist and other members of the clan with everlasting infamy? Most people will surely see that there is but little practical difference between Mr. Dunning MacLeod's own admission and the version of the story that gave umbrage to his righteous spirit. Further, the hatred of the Edinburgh W.S. to the Clan MacLeod—a matter of not the slightest interest to a MacLeod, one would think—has in Mr. MacLeod's own admission fully as much reason as ever to overtake the important clan to which your correspondent belongs. Only let us charitably suggest that its force should be spent on the Assynt branch of the MacLeods, it being well known that all bearing a Highland surname are not necessarily, if even usually, of the ilk so called. Besides, the Edinburgh W.S. in question, your own reviewer, and other detractors of honest "Pickle the Patriot," as he might possibly be called, should rather see to it that they begin in earnest to hate themselves and other undoubted descendants of those anti-Jacobites who gave the coup de grâce to all Jacobite aspirations. And if the present generation is to hang its head for shame for the baseness of a former generation, they are very important persons indeed who should first show signs of contrition for the bloodthirstiness that set the price of £30,000 upon the devoted head of the young Chevalier. Hey, presto! rubicund countenances on this score should be more numerous down your way, across the Border, than here in Bonnie Scotland, where "nane wad betray."

But it is a much more agreeable thing to reprobate others than ourselves. And as to poor "Pickle," I feel sure that his employers were as blameworthy as the scapegoat of their treachery. In truth, however, did Pickle do the least real harm to the Stuart cause, or the least real good to the Guelph? Did he not rather earn an honest penny by duping the English Government—a matter for approbation, all good Jacobites would allow—with information which could not hurt the already hopeless Stuart cause? Further, if that was not so, I fancy there is, alternatively, very good material indeed available in Mr. Lang's book and elsewhere for a readable article headed "Pickle the Patriot." Surely there is in our midst some anti-Jacobite and sound Hanoverian who will exculpate MacLeod of Assynt, and rehabilitate MacDonell the Spy.

I am a bit of a Jacobite myself, but how could I wish that Montrose or Charles had won? Must not every man of sense admit that, to say the least, it might have fared badly with our country had either won, and that our real sentiments at the present day respecting sovereign government are scarcely consistent with contempt for men who only did what we should have applauded them for doing had we been parties in those stirring scenes. Really, common sense should have restrained the exuberant contempt of scribes descended from those who ruined Montrose and Charles.

The true apology for MacLeod of Assynt should be a plea for justification, and for Glen-garry of disinterestedness and anti-Jacobitism. Nobody of repute will think the less of Mr. Dunning MacLeod for his connexion with the former, while Mr. Lang and his publishers are the real gainers by the transactions of the Spy. Of the latter we dare say, Requiescat in pace!
HECTOR MACAULAY.

THE DISCOUNT SYSTEM.

London: March 15.

Mr. Redway's interesting letter in your last issue, anent the discount system, is very opportune, and pretty nearly covers the whole field of discussion on this important question. The remarks at the end of his letter, that books published at net prices must be books that book-buyers want, hits the right nail on the head.

The question, however, remains, Who is to discriminate between the good, bad, and indifferent books?

The public is capricious, and sometimes when a book is adversely reviewed, and even condemned, it often sells well.

Does Mr. Redway know the books that book-buyers want? If he does, how gladly would some of us beg for a little of that omniscience with which he is so abundantly blessed.

Alas! I am afraid it is now, and always will be, a case of Chacun à son goût.

That no language is too strong to denounce the absurdity of publishing a book at twice its proper value for the purpose of taking it off again is apparent to the youngest recruit in the publishing trade, and however devoutly we may wish to discontinue this practice, we have still to remember that existing customs are not so easily changed, and that English people are naturally conservative.

What we want is combination.

If the publishers will combine to bring out their books at net prices the difficulty will vanish, there being no alternative for the book-buyer. But unity is strength. There must be combination.
R. A. EVERETT.

COWLEY'S "HYMN TO LIGHT."

Clun Vicarage, Salop: March 11.

In the ACADEMY of February 27, p. 255, the reviewer of Mr. Churton Collins's Treasury of Minor British Poetry writes: "So far as we know, Cowley's 'Hymn to Light' has been given in no anthology before." Archbishop Trench, in his Household Book of English Poetry, gives eighteen stanzas of it (cviii., p. 119), including the exquisite lines—

"The violet, Spring's little infant, stands Girt with thy purple swaddling-bands," and in the Notes, p. 403, defends the omission "of nine out of the twenty-six stanzas of which this fine hymn is composed, believing that it has gained much by the omission." He also prints the puzzling line—

"Of colours' mingled light, a thick and standing lake,"

as if "colours'" must be treated as a genitive plural, though he expresses himself as little satisfied with the result.
C. WARNER.

A R T.

IT is not a little strange to find a Water-colour Society with a diploma and distinctions, with a known name, with a council, a page of members, and every circumstance of state, offering to London such an exhibition as the present one at the Royal Institute, Piccadilly. These large rooms are filled, to speak with no more than a just and convenient generality, by drawings that might be the discouraging work of the pupils of an undistinguished water-colour painter of thirty years ago. It is through no weak prepossession in favour of new fashions that this date is mentioned as a reproach. The undistinguished work of thirty or more years ago had a commonness, a provincialism, and a dulness of its own day; anyone can verify this—Art is immortal, and the water-colours of the actual time are still to be seen. And while in Bond-street, close by, in the Royal Academy itself, in Pall Mall, even in Suffolk-street, times have moved, and artists have moved somewhat with them, there has been set up, it seems, a very temple of old-fashioned English water-colour in Piccadilly, and the period of the old fashion has been chosen, as it were, for its impotence. Not, of course, that there was any real deliberation in the matter. It has been nothing, evidently, but the helpless continuance of a mere habit. And that continuance might have been expected, considering our insular traditions, within the shades of the private schools of ladies. What is nothing less than astonishing is to see the results exhibited in a foremost gallery in London. The catalogue, by the way—we must be allowed to mention it—is solidly bound, has a string and a pencil attached, and is illustrated. The effect of laborious and faint-hearted pupilage, let us add emphatically, is as manifest in the work signed by names that are followed by the initials R.I. as in the work of the other contributors. Everywhere, if there is a figure-subject, it is inept, at a standstill, weak as water, perfectly undramatic. You can imagine a very young girl stippling away at the costumes in her natural feebleness. These groups, nevertheless, are seldom the work of girls. If there is a landscape, you have the lifeless, unskilful, untaught, unready execution, the lightless skies, the heaviness, the slowness, the lack of unity, the poor patchwork, the added finish, the small manner, the hesitation and perseverance at once—all the characteristics that go together to make a familiar whole. Above all, let it not be supposed that the artists of the Institute have intended anything so definite or so legitimate as a return to the methods of water-colour practised by the really early English masters of that art. They have gone no further back than the time when the art was at its worst. With this kind of matter the several rooms are almost filled. Among the few names that one finds signing work of alien aspect in such a spiritless company are those of Mr. Yeend King, Mr. Moffat Lindner, Mr. Alsop, Mr. Tuke, Mr. Alfred Parsons, Mr. Haité, Mr. Edwin Bale, Mr. Minns, Mr. Cotman, Mr. Mackintosh, and Mr. Austen Brown.

A COLLECTION of the paintings and drawings of James Maris at the Goupil Gallery in Waterloo-place shows this admirable artist generally at his best. His river scenes, his quays and harbours, are painted with an emphasis all his own, foreground-shadow and distant light being the more usual comparison. Sometimes he looks towards the light, and gets the shadow side of things without the use of shadows from the sky; but oftener the light is behind him, it shines upon his distances, and picks out the pearls of bright city buildings, while strong cloud-shadows darken the reds and blues of barges in the nearer planes. There is so much vigour and interest that you are willing to ignore a certain suggestion of able manufacture. M. Maris's skies are much alike, but they are full of colour, movement, buoyancy, and life. They are fine skies, little less than masterly, and yet a little less. They have no magic or spirituality, even when, as in "The Three Windmills," he looses fugitive wild sunshine from the vapour of a storm. It is finely and aptly but not greatly done. The largest sky is in "Seaweed Harvest," and there the clouds fly high with a fulness of cloud structure, but neither here is the art above a certain mark which a supreme master always over-passes. For freshness—and, in spite of the brilliance of the execution, freshness is not the prevailing quality—"Stormy Weather" is conspicuous; and for harmony, "The Outer Oratory." This last, with a few like it, is in a different manner, with less of the fresh-air liveliness of the rest. M. James Maris's water-colours have hardly the light of the oil-paintings, in which the brightness of horizon or sky-line leaves the happiest memory.

FOR Miss Anna Nordgren's oil-paintings, water-colours, and pastels, at the Clifford Galleries, 21, Haymarket, there should be a cordial welcome. Visits such as hers should suffice to make the Institute impossible. She is at her best in the vibration of sun and atmosphere, as in "The Daughter of the House," an orchard scene of the utmost vitality and delicacy; but her work is finely complete and free in the "Interior from Brittany," where the things are just touched, but full of form and colour. Great brightness goes with a chilly colour in "Concarneau Church," but the chilliness is not that of a really bad colourist. The drawing of the boy's face is questionable in "Children," but the spring and action of the younger child are quite admirable. There is too much experiment, perhaps, in the painting of a face in shadowless daylight ("Britta and Baby"), and the effect is not quite happy. But it cannot be said that Miss Nordgren is weaker in heads than in landscape; see the excellent profile in "Music in a Cottage" and the secure drawing of "A Mother," though here the child has hardly sufficient weight—the commonest fault! But in the living landscape she is, perhaps, at her best—an educated painter with a spirit of her own.

A. M.

DRAMA.

"SAUCY SALLY," produced on the tenth of this month at the Comedy, is a rather poor play very well played. Mr. Burnand has got out of "La Flamboyante" a few situations that are in themselves decidedly, though rather mechanically, diverting, but to arrive at them, the conventions of farce—especially that of almost impossible coincidence—are stretched as far as I have ever seen them stretched in my life. The characterisation is conventional, which is more or less a necessity in farce, and it is not without of vastly amusing types. One part of it, however, impels me to a little disquisition. There is a lady in it called Cecile, who ought to be a cocotte. But the English being what they are, she is described (with a grin, you understand) as a lady "who gives music-lessons to a school in St. John's Wood." She plays the part of a cocotte, except that her "lovers" are suitors, and the audience understands her to be one; but it is supposed to be necessary for its feelings to invest her with this silly ambiguity. Now, the hypocrisy which demands such a thing is both foolish and vile; however, that is not Mr. Burnand's fault, and I do not blame him for paying homage to it, pending the disappearance of that stupid indelicacy of taste in England, which refuses to hear plainly of certain phases of life, and yet enjoys sly allusions to them. But this fiction of Cecile being a music-mistress is utilised in the plot for bringing the peccant husband's wife and mother-in-law into her apartments—the music-mistress had rooms in Jermyn-street—on the pretence that the wife was a former pupil. That makes the plot altogether absurd, which is a pity. A little directness in such matters would improve our farces; if contemporary English audiences are too holy to stand a simple cocotte they should do without her altogether. Let us be "moral," if we may not be "happy and free." The only character—to leave generalisations—in the play which had any dash of originality was that of a grateful sailor who insisted on giving presents to the supposed and embarrassed preserver of his life. The dialogue was not witty, but neither was it vapid. And Mr. Burnand must be given credit for fitting his cast very admirably. So much for the play.

It was extremely well played. Mr. Hawtreys was in his very best vein. He had to lie, which was lucky, and he was given fair scope for those little delicacies of touch and intonation which are his strength. I have never seen him play better. But, after all, I have seen him play as well, and taking him for granted to some extent, I was really more interested in watching Mrs. Charles Calvert, whose mother-in-law was a revelation in comedy to me. They are generally tiresome parts, and this one was not distinguished in the writing of it above its fellows; yet out of it Mrs. Calvert got as good a piece of pure comedy as I have ever seen. Expression of face, voice, and gesture were all severely admirable. In particular there was a moment when she and others were supposed to be leaving hotel in a hurry on a false alarm; the others were bustling about with luggage while she stood still with her back to the audience; yet in that moment she absolutely possessed the stage, the very picture of matronly worry and trepidation. Mr. Hawtreys is extremely fortunate to have her in his cast. He is fortunate, too, in Miss Jessie Bateman, a comic actress of very considerable promise. I praised her some months ago for her acting in "Woman's World," a play which ran for an afternoon at the Court. Her part in "Saucy Sally" was an easier one, but it was also less effective—the stock young wife of farce—and it is much to her credit that she made it as noticeable as it was. She made every point with delightful aplomb and self-possession, and with a catching sense of fun. Mr. Hendrie played the eccentric sailor with much finish and consistency. Miss Abbott was clever and animated in the difficult part of Cecile: it was not her fault if it was inconsistent with itself. To finish, a far worse play would be worth seeing with such acting as there is at the Comedy.

"SAUCY SALLY" was preceded by "Byways," a one-act piece by Mr. G. S. Payne. The costumes were those of the "School for Scandal," and there was a fitful attempt to make the dialogue correspond thereunto. A young profligate had seduced a girl, and when he promised to marry her he was accepted by her parents (and apparently by the audience) as a paragon of sympathetic generosity. Will any casuist tell me if the moral was all that it should have been? I do not pretend to be a judge of such things; but I tremble to think of my fate at the hands of certain critics if I had put such a sentiment into a story. It was a rather pretty little play, moderately well acted.

I HAVE no objection to Nelson or any other historical person being put onto the stage, but he is being done to death a little too much at present. The cock-pit scene is all very well, but two editions of it in so short a time fatigue. Of the two, I thought Mr. Abingdon did better than Mr. Forbes Robertson: he may not have been more like Nelson, but he was more like a dying man. "The Mariners of England," by Mr. Robert Buchanan and "Charles Marlowe," is a better play than "Nelson's Enchantress," in the sense that in construction it is more like a play. In dialogue and in characterisation it is infinitely worse, which is saying a good deal. I mean that it is very silly and impossible, but that, of course, does not mean that it is not ever adapted by its authors to the tastes they designed to gratify. It is full of foolishly expressed patriotism and false sentiment and claptrap generally, and its plot is a farrago of nonsense. I hesitate to criticise its naval details, since I notice that Admiral Field has said they are realistic. I may say they are surprising. Mr. Charles Glenney was very manly and robust and affecting. Mr. Abingdon was distinctly good; he carried through a scene in which he had to dismiss a bad officer with dignity and verisimilitude.

Mr. Sleath, as the villain in question, was over-subdued for melodrama. He quite suggested a villain in real life. By the way, his repentance in the last act and his hand-shaking with the hero annoyed me very much; but that was Mr. Buchanan's fault or the fault of Charles Marlowe. There is some good "spectacular effect" in the piece, which is being played at the Olympic.

G. S. S.

SCIENCE.

IS the problem of colour-photography about to be solved? That is a question which a good many people are asking just now, and it may be as well to state exactly how far it can be answered. I have seen every process calling itself "colour-photography" which has yet appeared, and at the present moment there are no fewer than five such processes calling for recognition. I exclude, of course, anything in the nature of hand-tinted or artificially prepared photographs, such as the Zurich "photochromes," which are in every shop window abroad, and the gentle atrocities obtained by what is known as "cristoleum" painting, a form of boudoir art.

Of the photographic processes—more or less pure and none of them simple—two depend on the use of coloured glass screens to get the effects: one owes its colours to "interference," and the remaining two are secrets. The Ives method of colour-photography consists in taking three negatives of the object simultaneously on different parts of a plate, through red, green, and blue-violet screens respectively (the actual tints are subject to variation), corresponding to the supposed three primary colour sensations of the eye. These negatives are individually colourless, and so are the positives taken from them; but they differ materially in detail, so that if the three transparent positives are recombined through three tinted screens to form a single image once more, the original colours are reproduced with remarkable faithfulness. The explanation of the process is that the red screen weeds out all rays but those which are red or akin to red—in other words, allows only those parts of the object to be photographed which are radiating red light, and appear to us red; the green screen similarly admits only green rays or those akin to green; the blue screen only those which are blue or akin to blue. Yellow rays would pass in by the red and the green screens—not the blue; other compound colour rays would be separated up and allowed to pass in the same way through the proper screens corresponding to the colour nerves by which we are able to perceive them. Mr. Ives has been at work a great many years on his invention, the "chromoscope," an ingenious arrangement of mirror surfaces for splitting up and afterwards recombining his three images, and has recently succeeded in giving a stereoscopic appearance to his results.

EQUALLY beautiful and less complicated are the colour-photographs of Dr. Joly, shown not long since at the Royal Society. In this case a screen is also used both in photographing and reproducing the originals, but the primary sensations are represented by alternate lines of orange, green, and blue, engraved with extreme fineness on a sheet of glass resembling a diffraction grating, and the rays on reaching the screen are weeded out selectively by the lines of colour. The three complementary negatives of Ives are thus obtained in a blended form, distributed minutely over the image, and the positive, when viewed once more through the ruled screen placed to register, reproduces the colours brilliantly without greater offence to the eye than is the case with a fine-screen process block.

M. LIPPMANN, of Paris, has invented a method of reproducing colours directly which not only discards the use of tinted glass screens, but is also incomparably more delicate and ingenious than either of the foregoing. It depends upon the optical phenomenon known as interference, the action to which we owe the colours of thin transparent films, such as soap-bubbles. M. Lippmann takes a specially prepared sensitive plate, of which the gelatinous medium is exceedingly fine-grained and homogeneous, and backs it with a layer of mercury to give a mirror-surface. When rays of various colour-values strike this plate they are reflected back off the mirror, and, meeting the on-coming vibrations, set up what are called stationary waves within the thickness of the sensitive film. In this way the inventor has succeeded in giving the film a striated structure, in which the distance apart of the striæ varies according to the length of the waves. In viewing the photographs when white light is thrown at a certain angle upon such a film, it is reflected back as coloured light, in which the colour at every point corresponds to the colour of the original object. The worst of this beautiful discovery is that the photographs must be seen obliquely in order to perceive the colours.

THE remaining two methods which I shall mention are affairs of the moment, and one of them at least has practically never been seen in public until the other evening, when it was exhibited at a photographic club. These are the processes of M. Villedieu Chassagne (a recent protégé of Sir Henry Trueman Wood) and Mr. W. Bennetto, who among the solitudes of Cornwall appears to have hit on some extraordinary discovery. We have heard a good deal, at the Society of Arts and elsewhere, of M. Chassagne's coloured photographs. As results they are poor and unconvincing, like nothing so much as lightly tinted silver-prints. Their interest lies in the remarkable manner in which they are produced. According to the published accounts, M. Chassagne has discovered a colourless solution, with which he washes the plate he is about to expose. The resulting negative looks like all other negatives. He washes over the film to be printed in the same way, and the effect of this double washing is that when the print is dipped successively into three coloured liquids—red, green, and blue—the colours attach themselves automatically to the right parts of the picture, blending to give the effects of mixed colours. Sir Henry Trueman Wood and Captain Abney say that they have seen the process carried out, so that at present one is not in a position to criticise the accuracy of the inventor's claims. But one thing is certain, should the process turn out to be genuine, the selective property transmitted to the film by the mysterious secret solution should open a way to some very interesting and novel researches in the domain of optical physics. Of Mr. Bennetto's process it is not possible even to say so much, for no details concerning it have been published. It appears, however, that Mr. Bennetto claims to have really discovered a film which will photograph natural colours—in other words, that his colours are produced directly by the action of light on chemical substances. If this be true, it is the final solution of the problem, and to judge by some of the tests which have been imposed, it must either be true or else the process is a fraud. Mr. Bennetto's photographs are singularly good as results, far more so than M. Chassagne's. It is a pity that the exigencies of commercial protection require that they should be kept a secret. Until the mystery is cleared away, and the process fully explained, one cannot do otherwise than accept them with a certain amount of reserve.

H. C. M.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

By the mistake of "inflating the most intense and profound of her convictions with an unreal and histrionic rhetoric," Olive Schreiner has "just missed writing a tale which might have produced something like the effect of Uncle Tom's Cabin." So the Spectator, instancing the "streams of flowery and pretentious eloquence" with which the Son of Man unfolds His commission to the trooper. The African Critic thinks the purpose of the book as "an anti-Rhodes manifesto" will be frustrated by its "evident desire to prejudice." To the Pall Mall this "passionate political pamphlet" is a blow "beneath the belt," and it "could wish it had been written by any one save the author of The Story of an African Farm." So also the Standard declares it to be "not fair fighting." The Weekly Sun is carried by "the earnest force, the pathetic note, the poignant art" out of "the lower levels of political bias." Mr. Courtney, in the Daily Telegraph, writes: "A novelist who . . . cuts the Gordian knot by assuming her views to be identical with those of the most sacred personage in history is guilty of . . . bad taste certainly, and, it may be, a serious lack of common sense. . . . Most people will read the book and be sorry it was ever written. . . . An effective indictment without doubt, full of literary force and charm. But what are we to say of a writer who attempts in this fashion to settle controverted issues?" As to its literary merits, the Speaker observes that there can be no question. "There are passages which one reads with a sudden thrill of wonder and surprise." To the audacious introduction of our Lord into the narrative the reader is reconciled by the "skill and delicacy" of the treatment. While blaming the author for the form into which she has thrown her indictment, the Speaker believes that "she has spoken little that is not true, and has written no word in which she herself does not believe profoundly."

"It has to be acknowledged," writes the Saturday reviewer, "that 'Q.' does not rank, at present, among poets: he is not sufficiently the master of a charm exclusively his own." Rossetti and his sister, Shirley, Wordsworth, even Rudyard Kipling, "have passed into the crucible, and we are faintly conscious of their presence; . . . but it does not modify our impression of him as an excessively clever and interesting writer, who is more than justified in employing the medium of verse." "He has," writes the Speaker, "the true romantic spirit, and his ballads have something of a haunting quality." Having quoted "The Gentle Savage," the critic comments: "It will be seen that this work has just the faint ineffable touch and glow that make poetry. . . . It is a minor and technical defect . . . that he has sometimes difficult inversions and an occasional harshness of metre and awkwardness of construction." "His verse," writes the Manchester Guardian, "is scholarly; to an ear accustomed to the poets it is full (perhaps too full) of reminiscences, but the originality it shows is of the robust kind that is not killed by a knowledge of the achievements of others." "It is not all perfection," says the Daily News. "The poem 'Shadows' has a forced note, and 'Dolor Oogo' abounds in wilful obscurities which the old ballad writers never attained by the worst fortune of accident."

"A RETROGRESSION," says the Chronicle, "from the serious purpose of Limitations, but Mr. Benson must not complain if the public prefers it. The flesh is weak—and the Babe is often very funny."

"This genial production," writes the Telegraph, ". . . is open to none of the objections that were raised against Mr. Benson's first successful story"; it "is rife with clever definitions, as well as graphic character sketches." "Butterflies and champagne and fireworks are delightful in their way," says the Pall Mall, "but Mr. Benson gives you so much of them that it is well to take him in short stretches and with considerable intervals. He is too conscientiously funny, in short. . . . Excellent fooling, but . . . Mr. Benson's cap and bells are too persistently noisy." "If we except two episodes," writes the Spectator, ". . . the book is one long apotheosis of what the principal characters would call 'piffle' and 'footele.' Now and again Mr. Benson is genuinely amusing, but . . . for ourselves we find The Babe B.A. quite as irritating as the rose-coloured sentimental novel of University life, against which it may be regarded as a practical protest."

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL,

ENTITLED

THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

Translated by Mrs. WAUGH (ELLIS WRIGHT).

With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)

Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

FIFTH EDITION now ready.

The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art. Daily Chronicle. Mr. Cochrane says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigious variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas." "Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By MAURUS JÓKAI (Uniform with the above).

BLACK DIAMONDS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. . . . Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.

Authorised Editions, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. each.

Translated from the Hungarian by R. NISBET BAIN.

'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS.

SECOND EDITION.

"A thrilling Hungarian historical novel. Jókai's extraordinary dramatic and descriptive powers have full play."—Truth.

PRETTY MICHAEL.

SECOND EDITION.

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read."—Saturday Review.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS beg to announce that they have published this week "ROBERT the BRUCE and the STRUGGLE for SCOTTISH INDEPENDENCE" ("Heroes of the Nations" Series), by Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P., fully illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth 5s.; also a New Novel, entitled "THAT AFFAIR NEXT DOOR," by ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of "The Leavenworth Case," crown 8vo, cloth 6s. Both of these volumes can be obtained at all the Libraries.

Now ready, CHEAP EDITION, Illustrated, 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 10s.

THE ORDER OF THE COIF.

By Mr. SERJEANT PULLING.

Containing the Early History of the Order, together with an Account of the Aula Regis, and the Courts at Westminster Hall derived from it—The Justiciar—The Judges and Serjeants of the Coif—The Apprentices ad legem—The Inns of Court—The Forms, Solemnities, and Usages kept up by the Bench and the Bar—Records and Memorials of the Old Order, and its many Distinguished Members—Their Legal and Social Position, and the gradual Innovations on the Old Institution.

"A monument of well-digested research. . . . An important contribution to the history of the Bench and Bar of England."—Illustrated London News.

London: WILLIAM CLOWES & SONS, LIMITED, Law Publishers 27, Fleet Street, E.C.

TO ALL WHO WRITE, EDIT, DRAW, or SCRIBBLE.

A Perfect Pen.

For all Literary People.

For all People who use a Pen.

Nothing is so convenient as

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen

(Desk or Pocket size).

It can be carried in the pocket in any position.

The ink can never spill in the pocket: it is a physical impossibility for it to do so.

It has a gold nib, iridium tipped, of the finest quality—fine, medium, or broad point, as ordered.

It writes instantaneously, without shaking or dipping.

Made in several sizes. Price 12/6.

A Perfect Ink Pencil.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

To those who prefer a Stylo Pen, we recommend Caw's adjustable Stylographic Pen, which adapts itself to any handwriting, and can be instantly changed in adjustment, if not quite comfortable.

Price, from 5/-.

A Perfect Lead Pencil.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

"A remarkably smart contrivance."

Black and White.

"Surely a boon to all busy people."

Westminster Budget.

"A design in lead pencils that deserves popularity."—Morning Leader.

"I hope he may make a fortune by it."—Truth.

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil looks like an ordinary pencil, and is used like an ordinary pencil. It is the same size as an ordinary pencil. It costs no more than an ordinary pencil of the same quality.

But it lasts at the very least twice as long, because there is none of the waste that occurs through breakage of the lead in sharpening a cedar pencil. This is more especially noticeable in the case of blue and red pencils. In using an ordinary coloured pencil, probably half the crayon-lead is wasted in cutting, and another quarter by the lead breaking in use. The Blaisdell coloured pencils waste none of the crayon in cutting, for there is no cutting to be done, and the crayon does not readily break in use. Hence the saving in lead alone is very great, and the saving of time, trouble, and annoyance is greater still. There are no chips, no dirty smears from crayon dust, and a perfect point is produced instantaneously whenever needed. The same is true of the black-lead Blaisdell Pencil.

The paper covering holds firm until it is desired to remove it. Then all that is necessary is to break the outer cover with a knife or pin, and pull off a spiral of paper. The new point is then ready for use.

Blaisdell Pencils, whether black or coloured, are made in but one quality—the best; but the black-lead pencil is made in all grades of hardness for writing or drawing.

If not obtainable at your Stationer's, send for Specimens—Red, Blue, and Black—post free (in the United Kingdom), 1s.

BLAISDELL PENCIL CO., LTD.,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

BRITISH DEPOT: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

The only Perfect Table Gum is LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE.

BECAUSE it STICKS.

BECAUSE it sticks things so that they "stay stuck."

BECAUSE it dries quicker than any gum, being practically a thin, ever-fluid glue.

BECAUSE the less you use the better and tighter it sticks.

MOREOVER, it costs no more than gum or paste, and goes ever so much further.

Of all Stationers at 3d. and 6d.

RUSSIA CEMENT COMPANY,

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

MR. MURRAY'S PUBLICATIONS, SEASON 1896-1897.

BIOGRAPHY AND MEMOIRS.

- NOTES from a DIARY, 1851-1872. Kept by the Right Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., sometime Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Governor of Madras, 1861-4. Two vols., crown 8vo, 18s.
- The UNPUBLISHED WORKS of EDWARD GIBBON. Including Six Autobiographies, Correspondence, &c. Price Verbatim from MSS. in the Possession of the Earl of Sheffield. With a Preface by the EARL of SHEFFIELD. With Portraits, 3 vols., 8vo, 36s.
- Vol. I.—THE SIX AUTOBIOGRAPHIES. Edited by JOHN MURRAY. 12s.
- Vol. II.—GIBBON'S PRIVATE LETTERS to his FATHER, his STEPMOTHER, LORD SHEFFIELD, and OTHERS, from 1735 to 1794. Edited, with Notes, by ROLAND E. PROTHERO. 24s.
- LORD BOWEN: a Biographical Sketch. With Selections from his Unpublished Poems. By Sir HENRY STEWART CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E. With Portrait, fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d.
- A MEMOIR of the late SIR JOHN DRUMMOND HAY, P.C., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., sometime Minister at the Court of Morocco. Based on his Journals and Correspondence. With a Preface by General Sir FRANCIS de WINTON, K.C.M.G. With Portrait and Illustrations, 8vo, 16s.
- The LETTERS of FREDERIC, LORD BLACHFORD, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, 1868-1871. Edited by GEORGE EDEN MARINDIN. With Portraits, 8vo, 16s.
- OUR SEVEN HOMES: Autobiographical Reminiscences of the late Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Schönberg-Cotta Family." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- The LIFE of BRIAN HODGSON. By Sir WILLIAM W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I. With Portraits, 8vo, 14s.
- LIFE and LETTERS of SAMUEL BUTLER, D.D. (Head Master of Shrewsbury School, 1798-1836, and afterwards Bishop of Lichfield). By his Grandson, SAMUEL BUTLER, Author of "Erewhon," &c. With Portraits, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

- RUNNING the BLOCKADE: a Personal Narrative of Adventures, Risks, and Escapes during the American Civil War. By THOMAS E. TAYLOR. With an Introduction by JULIAN CORBETT, Illustrations by R. T. PRITCHETT, and Maps. SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- The JAPANESE ALPS; an Account of Climbing and Exploration in the Unfamiliar Mountain Regions of Japan. By Rev. WALTER WESTON, M.A., F.S.A., Member of the Alpine Club, late British Chaplain, Kobe, Japan. With Maps and Illustrations, medium 8vo, 21s.
- The HEART of a CONTINENT: a Narrative of Travels in Manchuria, the Desert of Gold, the Pamirs, &c. From 1884-1894. By Captain FRANK YOUNGHUSBAND, C.I.E., Indian Staff Corps, Gold Medalist Royal Geographical Society. FOURTH EDITION. With Maps and Illustrations, medium 8vo, 21s.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- COMMON THOUGHTS on SERIOUS SUBJECTS. Addresses to the Elder Students of the Rajkumar College, Kanpur. By the late CHESTER MACNAGHTEN, M.A. Edited with an Introductory Memoir, by ROBERT WHITEHEAD, Master at Rugby School. With Portrait and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 9s.
- The WATCH SONG of HEABANE, the WITNESS. A Poem. Based on the Traditions of the Early History of the World. A NEW POEM BY AN ANONYMOUS WRITER. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- SOPHOCLES. The Seven Plays in English Verse. By the Rev. LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews, and Hon. Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- The NAVY and the NATION. By JAMES R. THURSFIELD, M.A., and Lieut.-Col. Sir GEORGE SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G., F.R.S. With Maps, 8vo, 14s.
- The DEFENCE of the EMPIRE; or, the Protection of British Ships, Ports, and Commerce. A Selection from the Letters and Speeches of Henry Howard Molyneux, Fourth EARL of CARMARVON. Edited by Lieut.-Col. Sir GEO. SYDENHAM CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G. With Map, crown 8vo, 5s.

THEOLOGY AND RELIGION.

- The SERMON on the MOUNT. A Practical Explanation. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- The WORK of the CHURCH in LONDON. A Series of Lectures delivered in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, during the Summer of 1896. Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.
- DEAN HOOK'S CHURCH DICTIONARY. A Popular and Cheaper Edition. 8vo, 12s.

HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY.

- HERODOTUS. The Text of Canon Rawlinson's Translation. With the Notes Abridged for the Use of Students. By A. J. GRANT, M.A., of King's College, Professor of History, Yorkshire College, Author of "Greece in the Age of Pericles." With Maps and Plans, 3 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
- EUROPE in the MIDDLE AGE. By OLIVER J. THATCHER, Ph.D., and FERDINAND SCHWILL, Ph.D. With Maps and Plans, crown 8vo, 9s.
- The DAWN of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. A History of Travel and Geographical Science from the Conversion of the Roman Empire to 900 A.D., with an Account of the Achievements and Writings of the Early Christian, Arab, and Chinese Students and Explorers. By C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. With Maps, 8vo, 18s.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- HANDBOOK of PHYSIOLOGY. NEW EDITION OF KIRKE'S HANDBOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY. By W. D. HALIBURTON, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Physiology, King's College, London, thoroughly Revised. With upwards of 600 Illustrations, including some Coloured Plates. Large crown 8vo, 14s.
- ELEMENTS of PHILOSOPHY. Edited, from Notes of Lectures delivered at the College, 1870-1892, by (Mrs.) C. A. FOLEY RHYE DAVIDS, M.A. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.
- ELEMENTS of PSYCHOLOGY. By G. CROOM ROBERTSON, late Grote Professor, University College, London. TWO NEW UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS.

JOHN MURRAY. ALBFMARLE STREET.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1299.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
TEST CATALOGUES:—
No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1442 lots.)
" 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (762, 732 lots.)
" 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

CATALOGUE (No. 8) of Scarce, Curious, Rare, and Valuable Books sent free on application to DAVID JOHNSTONE, Bookseller, 47A, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

BERTRAM DOBELL issues CATALOGUES of valuable and interesting Second-hand Books at frequent intervals, and will be glad to send the same to bookbuyers free of charge. Collectors visiting the neighbourhood should not fail to call and make their wants known to Mr. BERTRAM DOBELL, 77, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 3s. 6d. net, eighth
edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction
Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for volumes for prompt consideration.—
Address 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND EXPORTERS,
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co.
Telegrams: MOPUSILL, LONDON. (Established 1819.)

FIRST EDITIONS OF MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c.
The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World.
Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER.—PAD.
(THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospectuses post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR-
ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agents wanted.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS.—
ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 5A, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s. A. STEWART, Secretary.

AUTHORS OF NOVELS and SHORT STORIES
adapted for Serial Publication are invited to communicate with Mr. J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster
Square, London, E.C.

TO LITERARY MEN and others.—Experienced
M.D. OFFERS HOME to RESIDENT PATIENT or
BOARDER. Good house in sheltered part of Harrogate. Hunting,
Golf, Fishing, &c. Special advantages for Photography, and exceptionally good Library. No children. Close to Baths and Wells.
References given and required.—Apply M.D., Literary Club, Prospect
Hotel, Harrogate.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)
WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bosman, Walker,
Giles, Reverley, Cabot, Pace; also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—MOORE, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

EDUCATIONAL.
ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,
Cooper's Hill, Staines.
The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars
apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.
An OPEN THEOLOGICAL SCHOLARSHIP of the annual value
of £75 (tenable for one, two, or three years) is OFFERED by the
DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUSTEES for COMPETITION.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 1, St. James's Square, Manchester.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HEISS, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.
1897.—EXAMINATION, July 6th, 7th. One of £20, two of £60, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the HEAD
MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

TYPE-WRITERS and CYCLES.
The Standard makes at half the usual prices.
MACHINES LENT on HIRE, also BOUGHT and EXCHANGED.
Sundries and Repairs to all Machines.
Terms, cash or instalments
MS. COPIED from 10d. per 1,000 words.
N. TAYLOR, 74, Chancery Lane, London.
Established 1884.
Telephone 6990. Telegrams "Glossator, London."

TYPE-WRITING (Remington Machine).—Author's
MS. COPIED with care and returned promptly. 10d. per 1,000 words. No charge for paper.—Address "CYREN," care of Willing's Advertisement Offices, 162, Piccadilly.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS. of all kinds COPIED.
Special attention given to work requiring care, such as Scientific and Technical, &c. Translations and Duplicating at moderate terms
Shorthand.—Misses E. & J. PUTZ, 493, Mansion House Chambers,
11, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON.—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
PRESIDENT.—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS.—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev.
the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES.—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

J. & E. BUMPUS, Ltd.,
350, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.
Booksellers to Her Majesty.

Just issued. NEW CATALOGUE of SECOND- HAND BOOKS for the Collector and the Library, containing many First Editions of Popular Works, Handsomely Bound Sets of Standard Books, &c., including:

NOTES and QUERIES. Complete set, with Indexes.
101 vols.

ANNUAL REGISTER. Complete set. 139 vols.

BURTON'S ARABIAN NIGHTS. 16 vols.

BADMINTON LIBRARY. Large paper.

ALPINE POETS. Complete set of Pickering's edition.

GARDINER'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. Library
edition.

GOULD'S BIRDS from HIMALAYAS. Folio, uncut.

INGOLDSBY LEGENDS. First edition.

LIFE in PARIS.

LONDON ARBORETUM.

MOTLEY'S HISTORIES.

PEPYS'S DIARY. Ed. Wheatley. Large paper.

RECORDS of the PAST.

ROWSEBY'S BOTANY. First edition.

SPORTING MAGAZINE.

MANNING and BRAY'S SURREY.

DALLAWAY'S SUSSEX. Illuminated copy.

SYMOND'S RENAISSANCE. 7 vols.

STEVENSON'S WORKS. Edinburgh edition.

VOLTAIRE'S WORKS. Translated. 35 vols.

SURTESS' SPORTING NOVELS. First editions.

PORTFOLIO. 19 vols. 1870-1896.

NICHOLS'S PROGRESSES of QUEEN ELIZABETH and KING JAMES. 7 vols., fine copy in full blue morocco.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. Japanese vellum edition.

MARIE ANTOINETTE, LA DAUPHINE. Japanese vellum edition.

SCOTT'S NOVELS. First editions.

LIBRARIES PURCHASED.

BOOKBINDING a distinctive branch.

From the cheapest cloth and daintiest art linens to the most elaborated specimens of skilled handicraft.

Tattered Books and Manuscripts repaired and cleaned in the most economical and careful manner.

Sets of Modern Standard Authors in serviceable coverings, bound to open perfectly and freely, and tooled appropriately.

WEDDING BOOKS bound in white, gracefully decorated with gold, and inlaid coloured flowers, in single volumes and sets.

BOOK-PLATES, a speciality. Designs suggested and originated, and Sketches submitted.

MINIATURE REVOLVING BOOKCASES, perfectly balanced, and constructed to swing with the fullest freedom.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT for DEVOTIONAL
BOOKS.—Bibles, Prayer-Books, Lent Manuals, Sets of Church Books, &c., &c. Many thousands always to select from, in bindings to satisfy every taste.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."
Ready this day, 18s. net, in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net.

Volume L. (RUSSEN—SCOBELL) of the DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Volume I. was published on January 1st, 1885, and a further Volume will be issued Quarterly until the completion of the Work.

THROUGH LONDON SPECTACLES.

By CONSTANCE MILMAN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"Altogether a very pleasant and companionable little book."—The Spectator.

Ready this day, with a Portrait, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
THE AGE of the DESPOTS. By the late JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

* * * This is Volume I. of a NEW and CHEAPER EDITION of "THE RENAISSANCE in ITALY," in 7 vols., large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. The remaining volumes will be published at intervals.

Ready this day, crown 8vo, 6s.
FROM GRAVE to GAY: being Essays and Studies concerned with certain Subjects of Serious Interest, with the Puritans, with Literature, and with the Humours of Life, now for the first time Collected and Arranged. By J. ST. LOE STRACHEY.

SECOND AND COMPLETING VOLUME OF THE "HISTORY OF THE HEBREW PEOPLE."

Ready this day, with Maps and Chart, crown 8vo, 6s.
A HISTORY of the HEBREW PEOPLE from the Division of the Kingdom to the Fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. By CHARLES FOSTER KENT, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Biblical Literature and History, Brown University.

HISTORY in FACT and FICTION.

By the Hon. A. S. G. CANNING, Author of "Lord Macaulay: Essayist, and Historian," "The Philosophy of Charles Dickens," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"An intensely interesting book I do not think that I ever saw the difficulties of the Eastern Question in so clear a light as I did after reading the short chapter which Mr. Canning devotes to it."—Pall Mall Gazette.

FIVE NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

CAPTAIN CASTLE: a Tale of the China Seas. By CARLTON DAWK, Author of "Yellow and White," "Mount Desolation," "Kakemonos," &c. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE YOUNG CLANROY: a Romance of the '45. By the Rev. COSMO GORDON LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Told with a breezy and healthy vigour, as well as with simplicity."—Observer.

OUT of the DARKNESS. By Percy FENDALL and FOX RUSSELL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Considerably above the average Well written, with a carefully elaborated plot, and some originally conceived and strongly individualised characters."—Court Journal.

GILBERT MURRAY. By A. E. HOUGHTON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is a welcome relief when the flood of current fiction brings to the reviewer's door such a story as 'Gilbert Murray.'"—Speaker.

UNDER the CIRCUMSTANCES. By ARCHIE ARMSTRONG. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is refreshing to come across an intelligent novel which can be pleasantly read by young and old. This is a well-told story of to-day, written in good English."—Athenaeum.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE.

For APRIL.—PRICE ONE SHILLING.—Contents:—

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR (April).

A DAY of CELEBRATION: an Anniversary Appeal. By WALTER BESANT.

THE STORY of SCOTT'S RUIN. By LESLIE STEPHEN.

DUELS of all NATIONS: German Duels and their Punishments. By JAMES PEMBERTON-GRAVE.

THE COST of COUNTRY HOUSES. By C. J. CORNISH.

MORRANT'S HALF-SOVEREIGN. By EDEN PHILLIPOTS.

AN OLD GREEK ROMANCE. By CHARLES ELTON, Q.C.

THE PATRIOT'S PROGRESS. By STEPHEN GWYN.

THE MOON'S MIRACLE. By WALTER RAMAL.

RECOLLECTIONS of FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE By Sir EDWARD STRACHEY, Bart.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. Chapters X.-XII. By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," &c.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO.,
15, WATERLOO PLACE.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

THE TWO CYCLING BOOKS OF THE SEASON.
Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, elegant, 2s. 6d.

LADY CYCLING. By Miss F. J. ERSKINE.

An eminently practical handbook which all women cyclists will find invaluable. It deals with the health and social aspects of cycling, cycling dress for town and country, with makes of machines, correct and incorrect methods of riding, with riding in towns, touring, hill-climbing, with bicycle gymkhanas, with the care of the machine, &c. The book is not only practical, but is issued in an elegant form which should adapt it for ladies' libraries or tables.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, elegant, 2s. 6d.

ALL ROUND CYCLING. By Sir B. W. RICHARDSON, G. LACY HILLIER, EVELYN EVERETT GREEN, C. RIVERS VINE, JOHN WATSON, F.C.S., P. A. THOMAS, B.A.

COUNT TOLSTOY'S LONGEST AND MOST MAGNIFICENT WORK.

IN TWO DOUBLE VOLUMES, 7s.

WAR and PEACE. By Count Tolstoy.

Contains 1,600 pages, printed in very clear type.
This is not only one of the finest, but probably one of the longest novels ever written, occupying, as it does in this edition, 1600 large and closely printed pages. Notwithstanding its vast length, its multitude of figures, the number of events it deals with, the interest of "War and Peace" is not only intense, but unbroken throughout the immense march of the story, so that no reader, great though the undertaking is, will fail to read to the end once he has started on the book.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

IMPORTANT ADDITIONS.

WORKS BY ROBERT BROWNING.

THREE VOLS., NOW READY.

PIPPA PASSES, and other Poetic

Dramas. By ROBERT BROWNING. With an Introductory Note by FRANK RINDER.

VOL. II.

A BLOT in the 'SCUTCHEON, and other Poetic Dramas. By ROBERT BROWNING. With an Introductory Note by FRANK RINDER.

VOL. III.

DRAMATIC ROMANCES and LYRICS, and SORDELLO. By ROBERT BROWNING. To which is Prefixed an Appreciation of Browning by Miss E. DIXON.

BINDINGS.

The above Volumes are supplied in the following Bindings:
IN GREEN ROAN, Boxed, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s. 6d. net.

IN ART LINEN, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s.

IN WHITE LINEN, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s.

IN BROCADE, 2 vols. in Shell Case to match (each vol. with Frontispiece), 4s. per Set, or 3 vols. 6s. per Set.

And in the ordinary SHILLING BINDINGS, green cloth, cut edges, and blue cloth, uncut edges (without Photogravure).

NEW VOLUME BY ERIC MACKAY.THE LOVER'S MISSAL. By Eric

MACKAY, Author of "Love-Letters of a Violinist."

The "Love-Letters of a Violinist," by Mr. Eric Mackay, already included in the Canterbury Poets, having run into no less than ELEVEN EDITIONS, the appearance of a new volume of verse by Mr. Mackay, in the same Series, will doubtless be appreciated by his very large circle of readers.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

NEW EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. With Numerous Illustrations.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS. Second Edition.

"Mr. Havelock Ellis belongs, in some measure, to the Continental school of anthropologists; but while equally methodical in the collection of facts, he is far more cautious in the invention of theories, and he has the further distinction of being not only able to think, but able to write. His book is a sane and impartial consideration, from a psychological and anthropological point of view, of a subject which is certainly of primary interest."—Athenaeum.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FOURTH EDITION, COMPLETELY REVISED.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. Albert Moll.

"Marks a step of some importance in the study of some difficult physiological and psychological problems which have not yet received much attention in the scientific world of England."—Nature.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

2 vols., 8vo, 24s.

MEMOIRS OF BARON LEJEUNE,

Aide-de-Camp to Marshals Berthier, Davout, and Oudinot.

Translated and Edited from the Original French by Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'ANVERS).

With an Introduction by Major-General MAURICE, O.B.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"There are books of such surpassing interest, which impress the mind so deeply, that one must be careful, in speaking of them, to keep within bounds of a becoming restraint. And to this high class the 'Memoirs of Baron Lejeune' undoubtedly belongs."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"For those whose object is not so much information as the enjoyment which a well-told and stirring narrative affords, these memoirs are amongst the very best things that the eventful period has yet produced."

8vo, 16s.

VITA MEDICA:CHAPTERS OF MEDICAL LIFE AND WORK.

By Sir BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.

"These memoirs are strongly reminiscent of the man who wrote them, and that, perhaps, is their chief charm."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW BOOK BY PROF. MAX MÜLLER. CONTRIBUTIONS to the SCIENCE of MYTHOLOGY.

By the Right Hon. Prof. MAX MÜLLER, K.M., Member of the French Institute.

2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

LEEDS MERCURY.—"This book will nobly help forward the work of progress in relation to the clearer elucidation of the origin and evolution of human myth, cults, superstitions, and highly spiritualised and beautifully humanised religions."

VOLUME FOR 1897.—8vo, 4s.

The ANNUAL CHARITIES REGISTER and DIGEST.

Being a Classified Register of Charities in or available for the Metropolis, together with a Digest of Information respecting the Legal, Voluntary, and other Means for the Prevention and Relief of Distress, and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor. With an Introduction by C. S. LOCH, Secretary to the Council of the Charity Organisation Society, London, and an Elaborate Index.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE WILL to BELIEVE, And other Essays in Popular Philosophy.

By WILLIAM JAMES, LL.D., Professor of Psychology in Harvard University.

Contents:—The Will to Believe—Is Life Worth Living?—The Sentiment of Rationality—Reflex Action and Theism—The Dilemma of Determinism—The Moral Philosopher and the Moral Life—Great Men and their Environment—The Importance of Individuals—On Some Hegelisms—What Psychological Research has Accomplished—Index.

NEW BOOK BY MR. S. LEVETT YEATS.

A GALAHAD of the CREEKS, And Other Stories.

By S. LEVETT YEATS, Author of "The Honour of Savelli."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

PLOUGHED, and Other Stories.

By L. B. WALFORD.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE MATCHMAKER: a Story.

By L. B. WALFORD.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 174. APRIL, 1897. 8vo, 6d.

THE CHEVALIER D'AURIAU. Chapters 9, 10. By S. LEVETT YEATS, Author of "The Honour of Savelli."

EARLY SPRING in SAVERNAKE FOREST. By W. H. HUDSON.

HEIMSUOHT. By WALTER J. PURTON.

A PERVERSE WIDOW. By S. M. CRAWLEY BOWEN.

THE CONQUEST of RADICAL TED. By M. E. FRANCIS.

THE LIVING EARTH. By GRANT ALLEN.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A FLIRTATION WITH TRUTH.

By CURTIS YORKE,

Author of "Once," "A Record of Discords," &c., &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A well-written novel of fashionable life.....The dialogue is essentially 'smart.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A clever, witty, 'Dodo' kind of book... It has grace and strength of style which it is impossible not to admire."—Freeman's Journal.

"Excellent told, and is nearly all in crisp and clever dialogue, which interests and amuses."—Sootsman.

"Curtis Yorke has told the story well, brightly, humorously, and with a sufficiency of pathos."—Daily Chronicle.

WORKS BY MR. J. H. CRAWFORD, F.L.S., in uniform binding.

SUMMER DAYS FOR WINTER

EVENINGS. A Series of Nature Idylls. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The Times.—"With Mr. Crawford's delightful sketches, sometimes telling alone of nature's aspects, sometimes with a thread of story to lend a touch of human interest, a reader must have little imagination if he does not speedily forget the tempest that beats against the casement and fancy himself between green earth and blue sky watching the kaleidoscope of the seasons and the changes of the year and the ways of furred and feathered creatures which are so sympathetically described."

THE WILD LIFE OF SCOTLAND.

Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The Spectator.—"This is a very delightful as well as informing book, which, in respect of style, recalls Thoreau rather than either Jefferies or Burroughs.....Altogether this book, which belongs to the rare order that can be taken up at any moment and easily read in instalments, is by far the best and most convenient hand-book to Scottish Natural History—in the most comprehensive sense of the word—that has ever been published."

"The best book on the subject."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

A NARRATIVE OF THE BOER WAR.

By T. F. CARTER. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Sheffield Telegraph.—"This great work is history, exhaustive, impartial, and realistic."

The African Critic.—"The book is generally recognised as a standard work on the subject."

NEW FICTION.

TWENTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

THE SIGN OF THE CROSS: a Novel.

By WILSON BARRETT. With a Preface by the BISHOP of TRURO. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book, as well as the play, is a phenomenon of our time, the significance of which, we believe, is wholly for good."—Christian World.

DENYS D'AUVRILLAO. By Hannah

LYNCH, Author of "Daughters of Men," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenæum.—"May be honourably distinguished from the rank and file of current fiction."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"It is by intrinsic quality of a superior order that this book excels."

WORKS BY DOROTHEA GERARD.

A QUEEN OF CURDS and CREAM 3/6

(Fourth Edition.)

ETELKA'S VOW. 3/6

(Third Edition.)

ON THE WAY THROUGH. 3/6

(Second Edition.)

ORTHODOX. 3/6

(Fourth Edition.)

The Standard says: "It would be difficult for the author of 'Lady Baby' to write anything but a clever novel." The Morning Post says: "Miss Gerard is a novelist who has made a place for herself, in which she stands alone. An excellent delineator of character, she has a charmingly fresh style, and a knowledge of cosmopolitan life in all its phases which is hardly equalled by any other English writer."

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

FOURTH THOUSAND. NOW READY.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS.

TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.

With 16 Full-Page and numerous Text Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

1897 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK.

A Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World for the Year 1897.

Thirty-fourth annual publication. Revised after Official Returns.

Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE.

With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

TIMES.—"This indispensable publication."

FOREIGN STATESMEN.—NEW VOLUMES.

Edited by Prof. J. B. BURY.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

MARIA THERESA. By Rev. J. Franck Bright, D.D., Master of University College, Oxford.

JOSEPH II. By Rev. J. Franck Bright, D.D.

*. These two volumes supplement one another as a history of the period.

TIMES.—"At once learned, lucid, instructive, and full of genuine historic insight."

NEW NOVEL BY CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

THE PILGRIMAGE OF THE BEN BERIAH.

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

THE QUEEN OF THE MOOR:

A Tale of Dartmoor in the Days of Waterloo.

By FREDERIC ADYE.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"His chapters in praise of the stout hill foxes, and the brilliant runs they give over miles of grass and fern, remind us in their freshness and abundance of life of Whyte Melville at his best.....The novel is an excellent one."

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.—New Volume.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, antique paper, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, gilt sides, back, and edges, 5s.

POOR JACK. By Captain Marryat. Illustrated by Fred. Pegram.

With an Introduction by DAVID HANNAY.

4to, 24s.

THE MYCENAEAN AGE. A Study of the Monuments and Culture of Pre-Homeric Greece. By Dr. CHRESTOS TSOUNTAS, Ephor of Antiquities and Director of Excavations at Mycenae, and Professor J. IRVING MANATT, Ph.D., LL.D. With an Introduction by Dr. DORPFELD.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 450.—APRIL.—Price 1s.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S HOSPITAL FUND. By C. S. LOCK.

A LEAF from the JOURNALS of a LANDSCAPE PAINTER. By EDWARD LEAR.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA. By Colonel TREVOR, C.S.I. (late Agent to the Governor-General in Rajputana).

THE BLACK DOG. A Tale of the Tay.

THE REMAKING OF THE ARMY. By STEVINUS.

UNWRITTEN BOOKS.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE,

For APRIL,

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles:

NEW CONDITIONS in CENTRAL AFRICA. The Dawn of Civilisation between Lake Tanganyika and the Congo. Extracts from the Journals of the late E. J. GLAVE.

THE MIRACLE of the GREEK FIRE. HOLY WEEK in JERUSALEM, 1896. By R. W. GILDER.

THACKERAY in WEIMAR. By WALTER VULPIUS. With Unpublished Drawings by W. M. Thackeray.

THE DAYS of JEANNE D'ARC.—I. By M. H. CATHERWOOD.

Illustrated. Price 1s.

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE,

For APRIL,

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles:

THE LIGHTS that GUIDE in the NIGHT By Lieut. JOHN M. ELLICOTT, U.S.N.

RHYMES about ANIMALS. By FRANK VALENTINE.

SEEING and BELIEVING. By HAROLD WILSON, M.D. Illustrated by Diagrams.

MACMILLAN & CO. (LIMITED), LONDON.

THE CHEAP EDITIONS

OF

Mrs. Henry Wood's Novels.

Each complete in One Volume, crown 8vo. Sold separately, in red cloth, gilt lettered, price 2s. 6d.; or, in green cloth, price 2s.

SALE OVER TWO MILLION COPIES.

East Lynne.	430th Thousand.
The Channings.	160th Thousand.
Mrs. Halliburton's Troubles.	120th Thousand.
The Shadow of Ashlydyat.	90th Thousand.
Lord Oakburn's Daughters.	90th Thousand.
Verner's Pride.	65th Thousand.
Roland Yorke.	115th Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow. First Series.	50th Thousand.
Mildred Arkell.	68th Thousand.
St. Martin's Eve.	68th Thousand.
Trevlyn Hold.	54th Thousand.
George Canterbury's Will.	65th Thousand.
The Red Court Farm.	60th Thousand.
Within the Maze.	85th Thousand.
Elster's Folly.	50th Thousand.
Lady Adelaide.	50th Thousand.
Oswald Cray.	52nd Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow. Second Series.	33rd Thousand.
Anne Hereford.	45th Thousand.
Dene Hollow.	45th Thousand.
Edina.	40th Thousand.
A Life's Secret.	48th Thousand.
The House of Halliwell	15th Thousand.
Pomeroy Abbey.	40th Thousand.
Court Netherleigh.	22nd Thousand.
The Master of Greylands.	30th Thousand.
The Story of Charles Strange.	15th Thousand.
Ashley.	To appear April, 1897.
Bessy Rane.	To appear May, 1897.

THE FOLLOWING STORIES are now issued in red cloth ONLY, price 2s. 6d. each.

Adam Grainger.	Johnny Ludlow.
Johnny Ludlow.	Fifth Series.
Johnny Ludlow.	Third Series.
Johnny Ludlow.	Fourth Series.
	Lady Grace.
	Orville College.
	Parkwater.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS'

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

PERIODS of EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR SAINTSBURY.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED

THE FLOURISHING of ROMANCE
and the RISE of ALLEGORY.

Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A., Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in Edinburgh University. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED

MAN'S PLACE in the COSMOS, and

OTHER ESSAYS. By ANDREW SETH, LL.D., Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in Edinburgh University; Author of "Scottish Philosophy," "Hegelianism and Personality." Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

NEXT WEEK AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

A PRINCE of TYRONE. By Charlotte

FENNELL and J. P. O'CALLAGHAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

COUNTY HISTORIES of SCOTLAND.

NEXT WEEK WILL BE PUBLISHED

MORAY and NAIRN. By Charles

RAMPINI, LL.D., Sheriff-Substitute of these Counties. With 3 Maps and Plan. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

DOROTHEA GERARD'S NEW NOVEL.

A SPOTLESS REPUTATION. By

DOROTHEA GERARD (MADAME LONGARD DE LONGARD), Author of "Lady Baby," "The Wrong Man," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

THE LAND of the DOLLAR. By

G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "Naval Policy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of the smartest books of travel which has appeared for a long time past."—Daily Telegraph.

POPULAR EDITION OF BURTON'S SCOTLAND.

Vols. I. and II. now ready.

In Eight Monthly Vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE HISTORY of SCOTLAND. From

Agricola's Invasion to the Extinction of the last Jacobite Insurrection. By JOHN HILL BURTON, D.C.L., Historiographer-Royal for Scotland.

CHEAP RE-ISSUE IN SHILLING VOLUMES.

ANCIENT CLASSICS for ENGLISH

READERS. Edited by Rev. W. LUCAS COLLINS. Bound in limp cloth.

HOMER.—ILIAD. By the EDITOR. [Ready.]

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. By the SAME. [Ready.]

HERODOTUS. By G. C. SWAYNE. [Ready.]

CÆSAR. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. [Shortly.]

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 978.—APRIL, 1897.—2s. 6d.

RECENT BOOKS—FRENCH AND ENGLISH. A CITY OF MANY WATERS. By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, M.P. THE PRISONS OF SIBERIA.—I. ON THE MARCH. By J. Y. SIMPSON. DABIEL: A ROMANCE OF SURREY. By R. D. BLACKMORE. CHAPS. XXV.—XXX. HOW THE FAMINE CAME TO BURMA. By H. FIELDING. CONCERNING BILLARDS. By MAJOR W. BROADFOOT. THE BLUE JAR. By H. GARTON SARGENT. EVOLUTION AND THE AMATEUR NATURALIST. By LOUIS ROBINSON, M.D. THE NAVY ESTIMATES. RECOLLECTIONS OF AN IRISH HOME. ANOTHER YEAR'S PROGRESS IN EGYPT—LORD OROMER'S REPORT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Olive Schreiner's New Novel.

TROOPER PETER HALKET OF MASHONALAND.

With Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, 6s.

The ATHENÆUM.—"A remarkable literary success."
The PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Is well and impressively written."

The SPECTATOR.—"Remarkable literary merits. . . . Es-quisite skill and delicacy."

The DAILY NEWS.—"Grips the heart and haunts the imagination."

The ACADEMY.—"Extraordinarily powerful."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"We advise our readers to purchase and read Olive Schreiner's new book."

The SCOTSMAN.—"The book is powerfully written."

The BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.—"Is striking and sometimes piercing in its lights."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.—"Is superlatively beautiful and must be read."

The METHODIST TIMES.—"The volume is a masterpiece."

The ECHO.—"A story to be bought, and read and reread."

SOUTH AFRICA AS IT IS. By F. Reginald

STATHAM, Author of "Mr. Magnus," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Carefully written. . . . Mr. Statham has discharged the task of historian in a thoroughly unprejudiced and judicial spirit."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE GENTLE LIFE," &c.

THE BURDEN of LIFE. Essays by the late J. HAIN FRISWELL. Edited, with a Memoir, by his Daughter, LAURA HAIN FRISWELL. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Next week

LE SELVE. By Ouida. Second Edition.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Is admirably written."—Morning Post.

INTRODUCTORY STUDIES in GREEK

ART. By JANE E. HARRISON. New Edition. Maps and Illustrations. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

"The reader will constantly encounter serious and earnest thought, wide knowledge, and a vivid exposition."—A cademy.

MORE ABOUT WILD NATURE. By Mr.

BRIGHTWEN. With Portrait of the Author and many other Full-Page Illustrations. New Edition. Small crown 8vo, bound in leather gilt, gilt edges, in box, 5s.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS. By W. Douglas

MORRISON, M.A. (The New Volume of "The Criminal Series.") Cloth, 6s.

STOPS; or, How to Punctuate. By Paul

ALLARDYCE. Ninth Edition. Parochial cover, 6d.; cloth 1s.

LITTLE NOVELS—New Volumes.

Paper, 6d. each; cloth, 1s. each.

PASSPORTS. By I. J. Armstrong.

ON the GOGMAGOGS. By Alice Dunilla.

IVAN ALEXANDROVITCH. By Andre

HOPE (Mrs. Harvey, of Ickwell-Bury). Dedicated to the Right
Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

WITH INTRODUCTION BY GRANT ALLEN.

IN the GUIANA FOREST. By James

BODWAY. Third Edition. Illustrated. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

VOLUMES in "THE STORY of the NATIONS."

THE BALKANS. By W. Miller, M.A.

TURKEY. By Stanley Lane-Poole.

BRITISH INDIA. By R. W. Fraser, LL.B.

CANADA. By J. G. Bourinot, C.M.G., LL.D.

Each illustrated, and with Maps and Index, cloth, 1s.

THE ROMANCE of a KING'S LIFE. By

J. J. JUSSERAND. Translated from the French by M. E. and Revised and Enlarged by the Author. With Photogravure and other Illustrations. In cloth, 6s.

CLIMBING REMINISCENCES of the DOLOMITES. By LEONE SINIGAGLIA. Translated by MARY ALICE VIALLE. With Introduction by EDMUND

J. GARWOOD, A.C. Profusely illustrated, and with Map. 1s.
cloth, 2s. net.

A CYCLOPEDIA of NAMES: a Pronouncing and Etymological Dictionary of Names in Geography, Biography, Mythology, History, Ethnology, Art, Archaeology,

Fiction, &c. Edited by BENJAMIN E. SMITH, A.M. 1s. 10d.
124 pp. by 10 in. by 3 in. bound in half-cloth extra, 2s. 2s. net; half-morocco, 2s. 10s. net.

"Will be found exceedingly useful."—Daily Chronicle.

CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
Mr. Hardy's New Novel	345
Books about the Navy	346
Greek Fairy Tales	347
In the Year 1540	347
The Struggle of the Nations	348
The Writings of St. Patrick	349
Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century	350
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	350
FICTION:
A Handful of Exotics—A Pinchbeck Goddess— Christine of the Hills—A Man with Black Eye- lashes—The Three Daughters of Night—Passports —The Circle of Earth—Britain or Boer—A Missing Witness—Francesca Halstead—The Water-Finder	352
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	354
New Books Received... ..	355
NOTES AND NEWS	355
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XX., John Milton	357
SYLVESTER'S "SPRING DÉBUT"	358
PARIS LETTER	358
THE BOOK MARKET	359
MUSIC	360
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	351

REVIEWS.

MR. HARDY'S NEW NOVEL.

The Well-Beloved. By Thomas Hardy.
(Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

The Well-Beloved is offered to us as a sketch of a temperament. The temperament is that of Jocelyn Pierston, the descendant of a long line of dwellers on the peninsula known as Portland Bill, described by Mr. Hardy as the Isle of Slingers, where, by reason of its remoteness and independence of the mainland, customs die hard and racial instincts prevail long. The novelist insists upon this point with such emphasis as almost wholly to disarm criticism of his hero's conduct.

"Fancies," he says, "like certain soft-wooded plants which cannot bear the silent inland frosts, but thrive by the sea in the roughest of weather, seem to grow up naturally here, in particular among those natives who have no active concern in the labours of the 'Isle.' Hence it is a spot apt to generate a type of personage like the character imperfectly sketched in these pages."

Mr. Hardy, in laying his stories always in his own Wessex, has, as we have hinted, his critics somewhat at a disadvantage: we are forced to agree, to take it for granted, that Wessex is the home of such fatalistic, impulsive, grave, godless people as the men and women whose interplay of passions makes a great part of the fascination of these wonderful Wessex novels. Particularly, we must take it for granted that in Wessex there are such women. The men are more after the common pattern observable also in other counties: it is the Wessex women whom we have to accept on trust. In the present book, for example, Pierston is more easily apprehended by the reader than any of the three Avices or Marcia.

The father of Jocelyn Pierston, the hero of this story, and the possessor of the temperament, was a wealthy quarry owner;

Jocelyn, having the artistic sense, became a sculptor, and in time an Academician. He is a grave, passionless, self-contained, self-conscious man when we meet him first at twenty, and he has not changed when we take leave of him in his seventh decade. Had he not been distinguished by his peculiar temperament he would have been too dull a character for any novelist to employ. But it was his curious fate to pursue eternally an ideal of womanhood, to find it continually in this living woman and that, and to lose it again at the moment when it should be secure to him. His emotions were neither very deep nor disturbing: he collected them and studied them rather as other men collect bric-à-brac; yet he was entirely at the mercy of this obsession, and, wishing to be honourable in all things, was yet, at the bidding of this enchantment, now and again compelled to meanness and cruelty.

"To his Well-Beloved," says Mr. Hardy, in describing the Pierston of only twenty, "he had always been faithful; but she had had many embodiments. Each individuality known as Lucy, Jane, Flora, Evangeline, or what not, had been merely a transient condition of her. He didn't recognise this as an excuse or as a defence, but as a fact simply. Essentially she was perhaps of no tangible substance: a spirit, a dream, a frenzy, a conception, an aroma, an epitomized sex, a light of the eye, a parting of the lips. God only knew what she really was; Pierston did not. She was indescribable."

Given for material such a temperament (which is by no means rare), no novelist, least of all a writer so profoundly impressed with the irony of fate as Mr. Hardy, could fail to make an interesting story. But among novelists living and dead Mr. Hardy alone, we believe, could have brought to the theme such treatment as we find in The Well-Beloved. He has taken, after his wont in his recent books, the extreme case, and has presented it with the perfection of directness, himself retreating into the dimmest shadow of the background while the events follow each other with the certainty of sunset after sunrise. Extreme though the case is, Mr. Hardy has proved it. We believe unhesitatingly, when we lay down this record, that there was once a sculptor who, at the age of twenty, loved, but did not marry, a girl called Avice; that, at the age of forty, he returned to love, but did not marry, her daughter, Avice the second; that, at the age of sixty, he loved once again, but again did not marry, the daughter of this daughter, Avice the third. It is almost to state that Mr. Hardy has succeeded in his perilous task when we say that never at any moment does the narrative verge on the ludicrous, comic though the scheme of it is in the abstract.

Mr. Hardy works out his problem with his old unflinching mastery. Ibsen alone excels him in the art of dramatic progression—the steady advancement, unwavering and unhalting, to the logical end. To no one can we look with more certainty than to Mr. Hardy for grave and stately periods, in each new novel more and more interpenetrated with the sense of fatality and hopeless wrong. He is gradually becoming our saddest writer. It would be hard to find more fit and beautiful prose than Mr. Hardy's: in describing a melancholy phase of nature he is alone. Here is the description of the funeral of the first Avice, watched by Pierston from a distance (and who does not know the strange influence exerted by such scene?):

"Among the graves moved the form of a man clothed in a white sheet, which the wind blew and flapped sadly every now and then. Near him moved six men bearing a long box, and two or three persons in black followed. The coffin, with its twelve legs, crawled across the isle, while around and beneath it the flashing lights from the sea and the school of mackerel were reflected; a fishing-boat, far out in the Channel, being momentarily discernible under the coffin also. The procession wandered round to a particular corner, and halted, and paused there a long while in the wind, the sea behind them, the surplice of the priest still blowing. Jocelyn stood with his hat off: he was present, though he was a quarter of a mile off; and he seemed to hear the words that were being said, though nothing but the wind was audible."

Could ten times the number of words better give the sadness of the scene? And here is another memorable passage, which, by its place in the book, precisely where such a note is desired, testifies to Mr. Hardy's consummate instinct for "atmosphere":

"The evening and night winds here were, to Pierston's mind, charged with a something that did not burden them elsewhere. They brought it up from that sinister Bay to the west, whose movement she and he were hearing now. It was a presence—an imaginary shape or essence from the human multitude lying below: those who had gone down in vessels of war, East Indianmen, barges, brigs, and ships of the Armada—select people, common, and debased, whose interests and hopes had been as wide asunder as the poles, but who had rolled each other to oneness on that restless sea-bed. There could almost be felt the brush of their huge composite ghost as it ran a shapeless figure over the isle, shrieking for some good god who would disunite it again."

Mr. Hardy loses strength, or, at any rate, convincingness, directly he leaves Wessex. London makes him cruel. He has been always too fine an artist to obtrude his own emotions on the reader—even in Tess his own pity for his heroine is never expressed, although we are able to infer it; but no sooner does he depart from Wessex soil than he relaxes a little this rule of isolation, and permits us to see him angered by quite harmless artificialities of society, which other men are content to take for granted. In the aggregate Mr. Hardy's novels are a sufficiently black indictment of what he deems the frustrating power at the back of things—his profound disbelief, his persistent pessimism, are implicit in all his work—but once in London, among rouge and insincerities, he allows himself to particularise; he shows his hand. We regret exceedingly this tendency. Mr. Hardy may be in as fierce a rage as he will, but he may well leave realistic touches to others. His discretion is not always to be trusted. For example, the minute account of Pierston's endeavours to cross the rooms at the dinner party, described early in the second part, on p. 95, is not needed. It does not help the story, and is done too savagely to be worthy as a discursion.

Again, on p. 111, in describing another social function, at which Pierston is partially stunned by the news of the death of Avice the first and yet has to be more or less agreeable to his fellow guests, Mr. Hardy writes:

"All that was eminent in European surgery addressed him in the person of that harmless and unassuming fogey whose hands had been inside the bodies of hundreds of living men; but the lily-white corpse of an obscure country-girl chilled the interest of discourse with such a king of operators."

The words which we have italicised are unpleasant and unnecessary. One more example: on p. 279, in the passage describing the arrival of Pierston with Avice the second and Avice the third in London, Mr. Hardy writes:

"It was one of those ripe and mellow afternoons that sometimes colour London with their golden light . . . and produce those marvellous sunset effects which, if they were not known to be made up of kitchen coal-smoke and animal exhalations, would be rapturously applauded."

Now this, again, is gratuitously unpleasant, and also it is untrue. Mr. Hardy surely cannot believe that the thought of "animal exhalations" deters anyone from extending admiration to a sunset. The thought does not occur to more than one mind in a thousand. Mr. Hardy's love of ironical contrasts occasionally leads him astray. A writer so capable of the employment of subtle natural irony has no need for mechanical effects.

So much for this new story from the master hand. In saying that it is absorbing in interest and set forth with all the old composure and distinction we have said no more than what is just. We cannot go farther and reach enthusiasm, because we believe Mr. Hardy to be on a wrong road. Thinking of what he has done in the days that are passed; thinking of Far from the Madding Crowd and The Woodlanders, of Tess of the D'Urbervilles and The Mayor of Casterbridge, of their clash of passions and rich humanity, of their almost Shakespearean rustics and subtle sympathy with nature, of their emotional heights and freakish humour; thinking of these books and Mr. Hardy's great qualities generally, we are disposed even to resent The Well-Beloved. Masterpiece though it be, it is not quite worthy of Mr. Hardy's genius; it is a by-way study by a man fitted to keep the broad high road. Mr. Hardy is great enough to leave such material alone, or to touch it merely in a short story. None the less, we do not altogether regret The Well-Beloved, for we are tempted to hope (as we must admit we also were tempted to hope after finishing Jude the Obscure) that Mr. Hardy will now return to elementals and his woodland scenes. Just as Jude and Sue represented the ultimate state of that variety of lovers so dear to Mr. Hardy's mind, so surely must Jocelyn Pierston represent the ultimate development of the "pursuing" temperament. Mr. Hardy, we feel, could not possibly go farther in either direction; he could not provide Jude and Sue with additional disaster; he could not invent a Jocelyn who should love more than three generations of Avices—a great-granddaughter would be too much! The way is now made easy for a return.

BOOKS ABOUT THE NAVY.

The Effect of Maritime Command on Land Campaigns Since Waterloo. By Major C. E. Callwell, R.A. (William Blackwood & Sons.)

MAJOR CALLWELL has undertaken an ambitious task in writing on The Effect of Maritime Command on Land Campaigns Since Waterloo. Not only has he had to deal with the strategical aspects of eighty years of the world's wars, but he has taken up the story of the influence of sea power upon history where Captain Mahan set it down. The latter historian in his brilliant exposition of that subject brought us only to the downfall of Napoleon. Major Callwell carries on the thread of the American writer's argument down to the present day. And let it be said at once that he has fulfilled his task with remarkable success. It is true that his narrative necessarily lacks that completeness of detail and wide comprehensiveness which has made Captain Mahan's treatise a standard work for all time, but he has done what will commend him equally well to the general reader, if not to the leisured student of history. In the work which he has presented to us the advantage of maritime command since the Treaty of Vienna is set forth in a lucid and interesting form without any unnecessary detail, but with the salient points of the argument brought into prominence and treated in such a manner as to leave nothing but absolute conviction in the mind of the reader that the deductions drawn therefrom are incontrovertible. Let it not be supposed that the author bases his theories on unsupported assumptions; on the contrary, his argument is founded on solid fact, for the mere narrative of the wars of the last eighty years is more than sufficient to emphasise the continued soundness of the great doctrine propounded by Captain Mahan.

Needless to say the campaigns seriously treated by Major Callwell do not include all the world's struggles since 1816. Yet there are few wars of any importance which have not felt the influence of maritime command. The campaign of 1822, the Russo-Turkish wars of 1828-29 and 1853, the Crimean campaign, the Franco-German war, the American Civil War, the Russo-Turkish war of 1877, and many others are all examined with a view to showing the advantage derived from the command of the sea. In the Russo-Turkish war of 1828 "the influence of Russian maritime command had been decisive. Thanks to it Wittgenstein had been able to maintain his ill-organised force for months in the barren, inhospitable uplands of the eastern section of Bulgaria, and to compel the surrender of Varna." By its help, too, "a final blow was aimed at the very heart of the Ottoman empire." In the Crimean war "the dread of Allied descents along the coasts of the peninsula broke the Russian army into fragments." The fleet, in short, was the prime factor in governing the course of the struggle; by its means "the Allies established themselves in a remote corner of the Czar's dominions," and by the grip which its support enabled them to hold on the position the Colossus of the North was effectually checked. As the author points out, "the Crimean war was a struggle in which sea-power was pitted against military force, and vanquished it decisively. The lesson is one which the people of this country cannot lay too much to heart." The American Civil War was also essentially one in which the naval forces were bound to play an important part. The enormous length of coast line, the contiguity to the sea of all the strategical points, and the necessity for maintaining the effective blockade of the commercial ports, made it inevitable from the beginning that the struggle would be fought out to a great extent on the sea or rivers; and that the Federals fully recognised this fact at the outset was evidenced by their hasty destruction of the Confederate dockyard at Norfolk. Although Major Callwell refers to it, he perhaps hardly lays sufficient emphasis on the importance of the command of the Mississippi to the belligerents. The great water-way so long as it remained in the hands of the Confederates was a connecting link between East and West, but once it fell into the hands of the enemy it formed an impassable barrier between the forces on its opposite banks. The capture of the river indeed rendered the cause of the Confederates practically hopeless.

It is impossible, with the space at our disposal, more than merely to touch on the numerous and highly instructive illustrations which Major Callwell gives us of the truth of his argument. As has already been pointed out, he confines himself entirely to an analysis of history. He does not enter the dangerous ground of prophecy or deal with campaigns that might have been. Had he done so he would doubtless have referred to the extraordinary proof of the "influence of sea-power upon history" which has been presented to us during the past twelve months. The ambitions of Germany in Africa are well known, and had the British Navy not been so overwhelmingly strong her designs in the Transvaal and elsewhere might long ere this have taken a concrete form. As it is, however, she is powerless to utilise a fraction of her land hosts on the African continent without our permission. The lesson which the commissioning of the flying squadron conveyed to the minds of our countrymen is not likely to be forgotten by us for many a long year to come; but if ever our memory requires refreshing on that all-important point we cannot do better than take a lesson from the book which Major Callwell has so ably written for us.

The Navy and the Nation. By Lieut.-Col. Sir George S. Clarke, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., and James R. Thursfield, M.A. (John Murray.)

DURING the past few years the Navy has received so much attention from the press that many able writers and essayists on the subject have been tempted to place their views in what is far too ephemeral a form. It has often been a matter of profound regret to Naval students that articles which are well worthy of careful thought and study should be given only a fleeting exist-nce with no possibility of recall except by laborious reference to the files of the British Museum. In the volume before us an excellent selection has been made of contributions of this character, which, to say the least, are well worthy of embodiment in book form, as all bear forcibly on the subject of the Navy and the Nation. Sir George Clarke and Mr. Thursfield are both eminently qualified to treat their theme from an expert's point of view, the former officer having had during his career exceptional opportunities of forming an intelligent judgment of the empire's strength and weaknesses, while Mr. Thursfield, though a civilian, has probably spent more time aboard our men-of-war than any landsman living. In the collection of articles which they have presented to us the British Navy is criticised in an attractive and diversified manner, and with an absence of technicality which will be very welcome to the general reader. Of the fourteen articles given in the book, perhaps the most serious and authoritative is that on "The Navy and the Colonies," a subject which Sir George Clarke, as secretary of the Colonial Defence Committee in 1885, is well qualified to treat. His warning to Australians with respect to the advantages and responsibilities which they possess as members of the British empire is particularly well worthy of attention.

"It would not be difficult," he says, "to show that Australians, whether independent or not, might be nearly affected by the results of a campaign in Afghanistan. . . . In the event of difficulties with Japan, the new naval power of the East would be able to dictate terms to independent Australasia. The mere Chinese question would assume an unpleasant aspect for scattered states impotent beyond the little rayon of their harbour defences. In such a case a sorry figure would be presented to the world, and the advantages of the old flag might be realised too late."

Although every article conveys a lesson of its own, not a single one can be voted dry reading by anyone possessing even the most elementary knowledge of naval history or strategy.

GREEK FAIRY TALES.

Greek Folk-Poesy. Annotated Translations by Lucy M. J. Garnett; edited, with Essays, by J. S. Stuart-Glennie, M.A. Vol. II., "Folk-Prose." (London: David Nutt.)

THIS volume consists for the most part of what we call fairy tales, that is to say, stories of the Kinder- und Hausmärchen type, along with some recalling more specifically the "Arabian Nights." To all who enjoy this sort of literature—in other words, to all right-minded persons—they will afford very delightful reading; but to the Hellenist they are disappointing. Beyond the fact of being translated—and, so far as we can judge, very well translated, from the modern Greek—there is hardly anything Greek about them. One story is adapted from the myth of Demeter and Persephone; and the names of Charon, the Moirai, and the Nereids occasionally meet us. For the rest, there is nothing that could not have been, or that probably was not, imported by Slavonic or Turkish invaders. It would have been well if the editor had devoted some part of his learning and research to the elucidation of this interesting question. But Mr. Stuart-Glennie seems to care nothing for the minor facts of history. He flies at higher game. Nothing less will content him than a complete reconstruction of the past as a prelude to what he calls the Modern Revolution. The conceptions of primitive man must join hands with physical science and the theory of evolution in a common assault on supernatural religion. A lady once expressed ingenuous surprise at the fact that such nice things as men could be developed out of such horrid things as boys. Mr. Stuart-Glennie will not allow such a horrid thing as Christianity to be developed out of such a nice thing as folk-poesy. Transposing the adjectives, some Christian theologians will cordially accept his conclusion. But some philosophers, whose rejection of supernatural religion is as complete as his own, will be of a different opinion. Auguste Comte did, indeed, say that the fetishist stood nearer to positivism than any theologian. But that is an opinion characteristic of his later, reactionary period. Our physical science in its supreme developments stands at the furthest possible remove from that view of nature which brings minerals, plants, and animals into active sympathy and conscious co-operation with human wants and wishes. On the other hand, by clearing away a rank undergrowth of superstition that impeded our intellectual progress at every step, Christianity has prepared the ground for scientific rationalism no less effectually than the new monarchy of the Renaissance in its warfare against feudalism prepared society for the modern state.

But what right have we to assume that folk-lore reproduces the mind and morals of primitive man? Very little in any case; in the case of this so-called Greek folk-lore absolutely none. Fairy tales especially are moulded by conditions which forbid their being taken as sincere representations of adult human life and thought at any stage of culture. They are all what the great German collection has been very appropriately entitled, Kinder- und Hausmärchen—that is, tales suitable for children and for repetition in the family circle. Now Prof. Sully has recently reminded us of the immense part played by sheer make-belief in the minds of children, of their intense sympathy with animals, of their passionate longing for justice. It is eminently in accordance with their feelings that the weak things of the world should be chosen to confound the mighty, as so often happens in Märchen. Nor is this all. The tales told to children are generally told to them by women. Thus, by a true process of sexual selection, everything agreeable to the feminine taste in them is preserved and probably exaggerated, everything repugnant to it is excluded. The first thought of a woman who wants something out of her reach is to procure it through the mediation of someone else, through charm and favour, through all that fairy influence represents and personifies. A woman delights in stories of kings and queens, because they embody the idea of personal power, because it is through them that family life becomes a decisive factor in the world's affairs; they represent the supreme glorification and expansion of her home. Of course, also, she demands that pure love and happy marriage shall be an integral element of the fairy tale. Mr. Stuart-Glennie asserts that the sexual purity of Greek folk-poesy is "distinctively Pagan, not Christian" (p. 500). It is, in fact, a domestic purity to which Christianity has proved more favourable than Paganism, whether Paganism is to be illustrated by the experiences of Tahiti or by the pastorals of Theocritus. It will, perhaps, in Gibbon's phrase, draw a smile from the young and a blush from the fair, to hear that the New Woman has been looking for naughty passages in the first volume of Greek Folk-Poesy, and, disappointed at not finding any such, has written angrily to complain of what she assumes to be their intentional omission. She is sure that the originals abounded in such, and that their lamentable absence from the English version is due to the translator's "prudery." To which Mr. Stuart-Glennie replies, that "whatever has been translated has been literally and fully translated" (p. 500). But is it not rather unfair to make the "hypocrisies of Christian morals" responsible for what he calls the "lewd imaginations" of "our emancipated Eves." Those ladies would probably scorn the name of Christians, and would gladly return to what they suppose was Pagan morality.

IN THE YEAR 1540.

Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII. (Record Office.)

THE new volume—the fifteenth—of this publication, which Mr. James Gairdner and Mr. R. H. Brodie are editing for Her Majesty's Government, takes us to 1540, the thirty-first year of Henry's reign. The volume is not perhaps so interesting as some that have preceded it, but it is notable for containing the inner story of the Anne of Cleves marriage and the ruin of Cromwell. For the rest there is not much. Mr. Gairdner prefaces the collection with an entertaining summary of the year, wherein he describes fully the Cleves fiasco. The matter is not, of course, new, but the documents have a fresh interest when presented in their nakedness, as they here are. The bare-bones of history are often of more moment than the flesh added by the historian. Of all of these Anne of Cleves papers, which tell so pitiful yet grimly humorous a story, the most precious is the letter sent by the King to Anne after the nullification of their marriage had been satisfactorily concluded (and, as was rumoured, Katherine Howard had already become his new wife). In this beautiful missive, which was carried to Anne, at Richmond, on July 14, by the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Southampton, and Sir Thomas Wriothesley, Henry promises Anne to be a brother to her "Right dear and right entirely beloved sister," he begins, and, continuing, extols the meekness of her conduct, and offers a handsome allowance:

"We have appointed you two houses—that at Richemont where you now lie, and the other at Blechinghagh, not far from London, that you may be near us and, as you desire, able to repair to our court to see us, as we shall repair to you. When Parliament ends we shall, in passing, see and speak with you, and you shall more largely see what a friend you and your friends have of us."

More largely! Henry then exhorts her to be "quiet and merry," and subscribes himself, "Your loving brother and friend, H. R." A month later—August 15—Marillac, writing to Montmorency, says that Katherine Howard is being prayed for in the churches as the Queen. The same letter also proves that, however we may feel about Henry, there is little need to expend pity upon the lady from Flanders. "As for her who is now called Mme. de Cleves," writes Marillac, "far from pretending to be married, she is joyous as ever, and wears new dresses every day; which argues either prudent dissimulation or stupid forgetfulness of what should so closely touch her heart"; although, meanwhile, "the poor ambassador of Cleves" was thrown into a fever. Anne lived seventeen years after these events.

Anne of Cleves disposed of, the documents are miscellaneous in character and of minor importance. We find, however, a few passages that have human interest. Thus the volume opens with a memorandum of the New Year's presents given to Prince Edward in 1540. His august father gave him a pair of flagons and a pair of salts, which were never, probably, of much use to him; the Lady Mary, a gold brooch, with an image of St. John the Baptist set with a ruby; the Lady Elizabeth, a bracer of needlework of her own making. Among the other gifts were "two oxen and ten muttons" from the Abbot of Waltham. One or two letters from Melancthon offer a rather nice illustration of change of front—certainly with provocation. On February 20 the reformer writes to Henry in favour of the bearer, Michael of Leipsic, a very excellent maker of mirrors, who is proposing to show his work to the King. Melancthon begins by comparing Henry, who alone among the kings of Europe favours letters and true philosophy, to Alexander, Ptolemy Philadelphus, Augustus, and M. Antoninus. Six months pass in which much happens. Then, on August 17, we find Melancthon writing to John Stigelius and saying: "Let us cease to sing the praises of the English Nero. . . . I shall alter the preface in the Commonplaces, and add a recantation of the praises, although they are not very extravagant." Eleven days later, writing to Fr. Myconius, he says: "Must write nothing about the English Nero"; but adds, with pleasant inconsequence, "May God destroy this monster!"

In a letter from Wyatt to Cromwell, on April 12, we get an early glimpse of an old story which seems to have been an old story even then. Certain things, Wyatt remarks, remind him of the tale of the Welshman who, being in danger on the sea, vowed a taper as big as the mast; but when he came on land paid a little candle to our Lady, and "offered her to be hanged if she ever took him on the sea again." It is new to find the hero of this adventure a Welshman. In these days of Methodism he can be so no longer. In another letter Wyatt complains to Cromwell that he has only enough fire to "warm his shirt by." Indeed, not the least interesting thing to be learned from this collection is the variety and multiplicity of Cromwell's duties. Nothing was too considerable and momentous, or too minute and trivial, for his attention. In the main, of course, his business lay with the suppression of the religion of Rome, and a glimpse of his thoroughness is given by a letter, dated January 20, from Sir Roger Touneshend. He writes to Cromwell to say that recently finding a woman of Wellys, beside Walsingham, who had imagined a miracle wrought by the image of Our Lady at Walsingham since it was brought to London, he set her in the stocks at Walsingham on the market day, with a paper about her head styling her "a reporter of false tales," and then sent her round the town in a cart for the young people and boys to cast snowballs at her. "This was her penance," he adds, "for I knew no law otherwise to punish her but by discretion." We like Sir Roger's discretion.

Finally we might quote the tidings despatched on May 22 to Henry from James V. of Scotland, signifying that

"sen it hes liket God of his great gudnes to have send unto ws, yis xxij day of May instant, ane sone and prince fair and lif lik to succeed to ws and yis oure realme, we think it accordis ws weil to mak zou participant with ws of sic joyus gud novellis, and zat we have of oure blude to succeed to yis oure realme quihik may herefter do plesure to zou and zourris."

This little son, the child of James and Mary of Guise, was not however destined to succeed to the realm or do good to Henry and his, for he died only a year after. It was left for Mary Stuart to succeed James V.

FROM 2500 TO 950 B.C.

The Struggle of the Nations. By G. Maspero. Edited by A. H. Sayce, &c. (S.P.C.K.)

THIS book is the continuation of the work by Prof. Maspero, published by the same society in 1895 under the title of The Dawn of Civilisation. It should command an even larger sale than its predecessor, which has already run through two or three editions; for M. Maspero, leaving the dim and somewhat confused origins of the nations of antiquity, here descends to historic times. During the period covered by the present volume (roughly speaking, from 2500 to 950 B.C.) the civilised world saw the rise and fall of two great world-powers, besides the emergence into light of smaller peoples like the Greeks and the Hebrews, whose destiny it was to hand on to us the civilisation of the giant empires which had so long overshadowed them. We read in M. Maspero's book how the first Chaldean empire was founded by Hammurabi, King of Babylon, whose realm extended free the frontiers of Egypt to those of Elam, and how his kingdom in time fell, to be shorn of its most western provinces by the great confederation of Mongols which we call the Hittite, while in the East it was deprived of part of its territory by its own colony of Assyria. But in these matters M. Maspero speaks only as a student, though a student with exceptional advantages, or the works of others, including those of his editor, the professor of Assyriology at Oxford. It is very different with the domain of Egyptology in which he is, since the deaths of Mariette Pacha and our own Mr. Birch, the acknowledged chief. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that the greater part of the book is taken up with the history of Egypt, and that it tells with greater wealth of detail and illustration than has ever before been attempted of the subjugation of Egypt by the mysterious Hyksos (M. Maspero, by the way, thinks that they, too, were Mongols), of the conquest of Asia by the glorious dynasties of the Restoration, and of the fatal grasping at political power by the priesthood of Amon, which brought about the splitting up of the empire and its final subjection to foreign rulers. Nor is our information on these subjects in any way meagre or uncertain. As M. Maspero reminds us, we have not here to deal with a scanty record compiled by some prejudiced historian centuries afterwards. The kindly climate of Egypt has preserved for us the dress, the weapons, and the very persons of the conquerors, while the steles and colossi that they erected to mark the limits of their conquests remain for the most part where they placed them. We really have much better evidence of the events happening under the Pharaohs of the XVIIIth Dynasty than of those which occurred under the Norman kings of our own land.

Probably, however, the chief interest which M. Maspero's book will have for many is the light which it throws on the history of the Hebrew people. It is evidently with this view that its translation has been taken in hand by the Society, and we have no doubt that their confidence is justified. On the whole, M. Maspero supports the accuracy of the Biblical narrative, although he makes some concessions to modern criticism which may not be palatable to the adherents of the stricter rule of interpretation. He considers the Hebrews to have originally come from Chaldea, but thinks the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, and the like, were of the same race, and should be included under the same name. He does not think the fame of the Judges extended beyond their own tribes, and looks upon Gideon rather than Saul as the first king who ruled over a Hebrew people. Like Kuenen, he does not think that the worship of Yahweh was originally any different from that of the Syrian Baal; and he draws a rather Voltairean parallel between the relations of David with Yahweh and those of the Egyptian and Assyrian kings with Amon and Assur. But what he has to say about David's successors is extremely instructive, and he makes it abundantly clear that Solomon's kingdom was made possible only by an extraordinary concatenation of favourable circumstances, and was from the outset doomed to dissolution. He thinks that Rehoboam would, nevertheless, have succeeded in restoring the unity of the kingdom for a time had not the Pharaoh Sheshonq, who, according to M. Maspero, considered himself Solomon's suzerain, broken his power from motives of policy. As to the Ten Tribes, he considers them to have been much inferior in civilisation to the inhabitants of the kingdom of Judah, and to have received the first elements of culture from the much-abused Jezebel.

But we should do M. Maspero great injustice did we treat the present volume merely as a record of historical events. The author has throughout attempted to reproduce for us the daily life of the various peoples of whom he treats, and in this he has succeeded admirably. It is amusing to notice how little human nature has altered since the dawn of history, and how startlingly modern in some respects the ancient Egyptians, for instance, were. Thus we read that the title of the eldest son of the Pharaoh was always Prince of Kush (i.e., Ethiopia), in the same way that the heir-apparent of England is called Prince of Wales; while the same distinction between legitimate andmorganatic marriages in the king's family was in force there as here. We are told, too, of the labourers employed on the buildings at Thebes going on strike, like London cabdrivers; and that at one period the Egyptian scribes took to introducing Semitic words and phrases into their compositions as regularly as the English in the early part of the century did French. It is odd, also, to meet the double-headed eagle as a symbol of empire among the Mesopotamian nations so far back as the third millennium B.C., and to see the story of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves figuring in a hieroglyphic papyrus as an incident in the siege of Joppa. That the kinglets who served as pawns in the great struggle between the Euphratean kingdoms and Egypt imitated their masters for the time being in their modes of living, of making war, and even in the fashion of their luxuries, we knew already from other sources.

The translation of the volume is sufficiently well done, inasmuch as it fairly represents the meaning of the author. An attempt has been made elsewhere to show that alterations had been made by the Society to bring M. Maspero's theories into as much accord as possible with conservative views of inspiration, but this has been promptly knocked on the head by the secretary's assertion that the proofs of the translation have been approved by the author himself. Even without this, few persons would have considered the accusation serious, in view of the many instances quoted above in which the conclusions of the higher criticism have been adopted. Yet the translation is not free from faults, and phrases like "but who," "but of whose," without any preceding relative occur with irritating frequency. A more serious fault is the disappearance of the very complete Table des Gravures to be found in the French edition, which is very inadequately replaced here by an index as meagre as a German Wortregister. Hence it is impossible to discover without a prolonged search the excellent maps with which the volume is adorned, and which are often necessary for the proper understanding of the text. This mistake should certainly be rectified in a later edition. It is to be hoped, too, that the Society will see their way in subsequent volumes to restore M. Maspero's title of Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient classique, the absence of any reference to which might easily mislead anyone unacquainted with the French edition. The Dawn of Civilisation has already become a ludicrously inappropriate title for the first volume, since the American Expedition has brought back proofs of the early existence in Babylonia of a high civilisation some 4000 years earlier than the earliest date treated of by M. Maspero.

A SAINT'S REMAINS.

The Writings of St. Patrick, the Apostle of Ireland: a Revised Translation, with Notes Critical and Historical. By the Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D.D. (Religious Tract Society.)

THE late Archbishop of Canterbury, upon what proved to be his last appearance in public, claimed, amid the outcries of an astonished island, St. Patrick as the founder of the Irish Protestant Church; and in the spirit of such a conviction Dr. Wright has undertaken to edit certain of the Saint's remains on behalf of the Religious Tract Society. The works most confidently attributed to Patrick are the "Hymn," of which the editor gives two Irish and four English versions, the "Confession," and the "Epistle to Coroticus." Of more doubtful authenticity are the "Dicta" found in the Book of Armagh, the "Proverbs," the "Daughters of Loegaire," and Patrick's "Vision of Ireland's Future." These, together with the probably spurious "Confession" found at Angers, are also included in this volume. Of the English versions of the hymn, or "breastplate," the most spirited is one by the unfortunate poet Clarence Mangan, and we venture to quote two stanzas. After an invocation of the Trinity and of the Incarnate Word, the poet sings:

"At Tara to-day I put and I place
The virtue that dwells in the Seraphim's love,
And the virtue and grace
That are in obedience
And unshaken allegiance
Of all the archangels and angels above,
And in the hope of the resurrection
To everlasting reward and election,
And in the progress of the fathers of old,
And in the truths the prophets foretold,
And in the apostles' manifold preaching,
And in the confessors' faith and teaching,
And in the purity ever-dwelling
Within the Immaculate Virgin's breast,
And in the actions bright and exolling
Of all good men the just and best."

All these, together with the radiance and strength of the elements, he places between himself and the powers of darkness. Then he makes an appeal to the Deity, upon the model of which one might conceive St. Ignatius' Anima Christi to have been shaped, and continues:

"In this hour of hours
I place all those powers
Between myself and every foe
Who threatens my body and soul
With danger or dole;
To protect me against the evils that flow
From lying soothsayers' incantations,
From the gloomy laws of the Gentile nations,
From heresy's hateful innovations,
From idolatry's rites and invocations:
By [? Be] these my defenders,
My guards against every ban—
And spells of smiths and Druids and women;
In fine, against every knowledge that renders
The light Heaven sends us dim in
The spirit and soul of man!"

"The Daughters of Loegaire" is a charming idyll, bearing at least internal evidence of great antiquity. Ethne the fair and Fedelm the ruddy came to the spring to wash, and there they found a holy synod of bishops. "Whence are ye?" asked the daughters. And Patrick answered them: "It were better that you should confess our true God than to inquire about our race." So the damsels overwhelm the saint with a tumult of questions: "Has your God sons and daughters?" "Is he ever living?" "Is he beautiful?" "Have many fostered his son?" "Is he in youth or age?" and the like. The saint explains the doctrine of the One God and of the Trinity. So they were instructed in the several dogmas of faith.

"And they were baptized, and [Patrick placed] a white garment on their heads.

"And they begged to see the face of Christ.

"And the saint said to them: 'Unless you shall have tasted death, you cannot see the face of Christ, and unless you shall receive the sacrifice.'

"And they replied: 'Give to us the sacrifice, that we may see the Son, our spouse.'

"And they received the Eucharist of God, and they slept in death. . . ."

The "Sayings" and the "Proverbs" are of no very profound significance. "Judges of the Church ought not to be voluble" may seem to have in it seeds of immortality, and of the saying, "Thanks be to God," which is numbered among the "Dicta," a pleasant anecdote is told:

"Daire, the Irish chieftain, . . . sent to the saint as a present a caldron of brass, which had been imported from across the sea. Patrick, on receiving the gift, said simply, 'Grazacham' (gratius agamus). Daire went back to his home muttering, 'The man is a fool who said nothing but "Grazacham" for a brazen caldron of such size!' He then ordered his servants to go and bring him back the caldron. . . . Patrick said again, 'Grazacham, take it away.' . . . When they returned Daire asked them, 'What did the Christian say when you took it away?' They answered that he said, 'Grazacham.' Daire exclaimed, '"Grazacham" when it was given, "Grazacham" when it was taken away! His saying is so good with those "grazachams" that his caldron shall be brought back to him again."

As to the "Confession," it is very uncouth in its language and incoherent in its narrative, and the editor has scrupulously refrained from emendation. The Brief Sketch prefixed will give good help to readers unfamiliar with the traditional account of the saint's career.

In its work of presenting in a cheap and handy form a series of Christian Classics, the Religious Tract Society is worthy of all praise; and while it succeeds in inducing men so capable as Dr. Wright to undertake the task of editing them, it has every title to prosper in its venture. One can look with indulgence upon the notes which apologise for St. Patrick's objectionable phrases—those which are “not in accordance with the principles of the Society”—so long as the critical notes are so scholarly and so clear, and the spirit of sectarian vigilance so restrained and soft-spoken.

SOME SCOTTISH POETS.

Scottish Poetry of the Eighteenth Century (Abbotsford Series). Edited by George Eyre Todd. (Hodge & Co.)

THE “Abbotsford Series of Scottish Poets” devotes its second volume to the poets of the eighteenth century. Burns, of course, dominates the collection; but apart from him it cannot be called inspiring. In the times of the old ballad writers, Scotland was facile princeps. None of the English ballads can equal the magic, the tenderness, the imagination of those which hail from Scotland. But though a large proportion of the lyrics included in this volume are inseparably wedded to Scotch airs which are immortal, it must be confessed that, apart from the music in which they are embalmed, these songs of the eighteenth century make but a feeble impression, and do little to maintain the old tradition of Scottish excellence in song. One naturally turns first to Robert Fergusson. To be praised by Burns and Robert Louis Stevenson is almost an immortality in itself. And Burns not only praised Fergusson, he imitated Fergusson; while Stevenson regarded himself as a kind of reincarnation of Fergusson. Certainly the pieces of this poet here given are greatly superior to the rest. They embody, with picturesqueness and vigour, the Edinburgh life of his day; and it is easy to see that Burns borrowed much from them in form and manner. Nevertheless they scarcely fulfil the expectations aroused by the praise of two such men. They seem to us much inferior in pithy humour, we do not say to Burns, but to one or two poems of Stevenson in this kind. “Leith Races,” by its form, deliberately invites comparison with King James's “Christ's Kirk on the Green,” and is worsted in the comparison it invites. The best of his poems in this book is, we think, the “Ode to the Gowdspink.” The gowdspink, we may add, for the information of the unknowing Saxon, is the Scottish name for the goldfinch. It has a poetic spirit not common in the eighteenth century; and such happy imagery as “Ere the sun can clear his e'en.” Stevenson represented Fergusson as a martyr to the gloomy and Calvinistic spirit of the Scottish Kirk; but the actual facts of his life, related here, show that he was given to drink and dissipation, and finally died by a fall down some steps—possibly, though no information is given on that point, not unconnected with whiskey. Of the other poems by far the finest is the “Cavalier's Song” of Graham of Gartmore, which catches a happy echo from the days of Montrose. Witness the last two stanzas:

“If gay attire delight thine eye,
I'll dight me in array;
I'll tend thy chamber-door all night,
And squire thee all the day.
If sweetest sounds can win thine ear,
These sounds I'll strive to catch;
Thy voice I'll steal to woo thyself,
That voice which none can match.
Then tell me how to woo thee, love;
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake nae care I'll take,
Though ne'er another throw me.”

“But if fond love thy heart can gain,
I never broke a vow;
Nae maiden lays her skaith to me;
I never loved but you.
For you alone I ride the ring,
For you I wear the blue;
For you alone I strive to sing;
O tell me how to woo!
Then tell me how to woo thee, love,
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake nae care I'll take,
Though ne'er another throw me.”

Among the remainder, Lady Nairne, with her Jacobite songs and The Land o' the Leal, takes a really distinguished place, and must be pronounced an exception to the general level of commonplace.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

The Book of Parliament. By Michael Macdonagh. (Isbister.)

MR. MACDONAGH is almost uncannily conversant with Parliamentary matters, and this book, into which he has gathered some of the lore he has acquired during many years in the reporters' gallery, tells the reader everything about the matter that is worth knowing. Parliamentary methods, manners, fictions, superstitions, and dodges are laid ruthlessly bare and illustrated by stories both of living statesmen and of dead. It is a series of descriptive essays, of which these are some of the titles: “Making a Government,” “Black Rod's Knock,” “The Commons at Work,” “A Night in the House of Lords,” and “Out of the Lobby of the House of Commons.” From the last of these we take a pleasant little story of Mrs. Norton, the prototype of Diana of the Crossways:

“At the great divorce trial of Norton v. Lord Melbourne . . . a letter from the Hon. Mrs. Norton was read, for the purpose of proving that Lord Melbourne's presence in Mrs. Norton's house made the children familiar with the phrases of public life. Mrs. Norton stated that after luncheon her little boy . . . asked her, ‘May I resign?’ She asked him what he meant, and received this answer: ‘I want, of course, to go out. Is not to “resign” the same as to “go out?”’”

The author is a fervent admirer of Mr. Gladstone, but that does not prevent him from telling this story at his expense:

“ . . . Mr. Gladstone came to the meetings of the Cabinet of the Palmerston Administration at the end of each recess, charged to them with all sorts of schemes of reform, which were absolutely necessary, in his opinion, to be immediately undertaken. Lord Palmerston used to look fixedly at the paper before saying nothing, until Mr. Gladstone had said to an end. He then rapped the table cheerfully, ‘Now, my lords and gentlemen, let us go to business.’”

These passages are a fair specimen of the author's style. The architectural details of the Houses are described, even to the in Big Ben and the impressions upon despatch boxes of Mr. Gladstone's ring. The whole volume was quite a pleasure to read, and is worth reading, and there is particularly good chapter on the process in “another place.” There is “no folk” about Mr. Macdonagh, but he seems to have a certain tenderness for the Upper Chamber.

Transcaucasia and Ararat; being Notes on a Vacation Tour in the Autumn of 1890. By James Bryce. Fourth Edition. (Millan & Co.)

THE republication of Mr. Bryce's account of his journey in Transcaucasia twenty years ago is welcome and opportune. The book has been brought up to date by a series of footnotes, which mention the new railways and recent developments of industry. It contains a supplementary chapter Mr. Bryce gives an account of what has taken place in Armenia during the last few years, and, in an easy transition, then considers the measure of responsibility attaches to the country. By the treaty of San Stefano the Porte pledged itself to Russia “to effect without delay the improvements and reforms demanded by local requirements in the provinces inhabited by Armenians, and to guarantee their security against Kurds and Circassians.” When, partly owing to the pressure of Great Britain, the treaty of San Stefano gave place to that of Berlin, the Porte made the same promises, no longer to Russia alone, but to all the signatory Powers. That change represents the special responsibility of Great Britain. The Cyprus Convention is irrelevant. By that instrument England became pledged to defend the Asiatic possessions of Turkey against Russia, and the Sultan undertook to introduce certain reforms. These were never introduced, and the obligations of this country ceased. Mr. Bryce indeed contends that by her action in the case both of the Treaty of San Stefano and of the Cyprus Convention, England was understood at the time to have undertaken the protection of the Armenian Christians against the misgovernment of the Turks. It is enough to point out that by an annex to the Cyprus Convention it was agreed that if Russia restored Kars the whole Convention, including the clause about Armenian reforms, was to come to an end. In his excellent account of the recent massacres Mr. Bryce does not stay to note the distinction which must be drawn between the Gregorians and the Catholic or United Armenians. The latter doubtless suffered severely, but that was generally because they made common cause with their Gregorian brethren. The letters of Mr. Azarian, Patriarch of Silicia, and of Arch-hop Allmayer, published in Paris, made clear that the fury of the Turks was directed primarily against the Gregorians, and that the Uniates suffered chiefly because they sheltered and assisted their fellow-Christians. The point is of some importance, because it shows that the motive of the massacres was political rather than religious, the Gregorians always being suspected of a leaning towards Russia.

* * *

An Enquiry into the Life and Legend of Michael Scot. By Rev. J. Wood Brown. (Douglas.)

THE name of Michael Scot has sunk to the reputation of a sorcerer. Born somewhere in the Scottish Lowlands late in the twelfth century, Michael became a student, it would appear, by turns in Oxford, Paris, and Bologna, and was made tutor to the King of Sicily, afterwards the mighty Emperor and suspected heretic, Frederick the Second. High in honour at the Imperial court, he spent there a lifetime of what his contemporaries regarded as marvellous learning. As was generally the case with a mediæval scholar, his range was encyclopædic. He achieved fame in mathematics, astronomy, medicine and alchemy, but his substantial service to knowledge was in introducing the writings of Averroës of Cordova, and through Averroës the Aristotelian philosophy, to Christian Europe. Like all the dependents of the Emperor Frederick, he has suffered from the broils of Ghibelline and Guelph. To him, as to his master, was ascribed the authorship of that mysterious and probably unwritten tract, the De Tribus Impostoribus, and the tales of magic that clustered round his name won him a corner in the Inferno of Dante. It is, indeed, chiefly by the commentators on Dante that these stories are preserved to us. Mr. Brown, in the exhaustive work before us, points out that to Frederick and Michael Scot has been transferred in Southern legend the familiar relation of our own Arthur and Merlin. The treatment of this point is one of the best features of a book which throughout deserves the highest praise. Mr. Brown has thoroughly sifted the somewhat obscure sources of information, both upon the life and the legend of Scot, and though he apologises for being unable to get at the MS. life written by Bernardino Baldi in the sixteenth century, he is pretty sure from the epitome of that life which he has consulted that it can contain little, if anything, of value. He has written a creditable book.

* * *

The Sacred Tree. By Mrs. J. H. Philpot. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE best modern work on folk-lore seems to take the shape of unravelling the single thread from a tangled skein, of isolating and tracing into its most distant manifestations some particular type or tendency of primitive consciousness. The day of the key to all mythologies is over: we realise that religions, like geological formations, lie in strata. The fruitfulness of this method is demonstrated by such striking books as Mr. Frazer's Golden Bough and Mr. Hartland's careful studies of the Perseus legend. Mrs. Philpot follows upon the same lines in her volume on tree-worship. She naturally suffers to some extent from having to traverse ground already covered by Mr. Frazer and by the elaborate treatises of Bötticher and Mannhardt upon the Baumkultus respectively of the Greeks and the Germans. Nevertheless, without laying any claim to originality of treatment, she has given a very lucid and convenient summary of the subject. Starting with the conception of the tree as informed by a spiritual life of its own, divine, demonic, or human, she has added chapters on the Yggdrasil or world-tree, and on the part played by the tree in the myth of an earthly paradise. The concluding section of the book deals with the observances of May-pole and Christmas-tree. Mrs. Philpot points out that the Christmas-tree in England is quite a modern importation, due, like the Crystal Palace and so many other things of beauty, to the Prince Consort, and that even in Germany it is not of immemorial antiquity. Following Dr. Tille, she traces it to the importance attached at an earlier date to such Christmas-flowering trees as the Glastonbury thorn. Mrs. Philpot's choice of illustrations is happy, and she presents a most fascinating subject in an attractive manner.

* * *

A History of Greek Art. By F. B. Tarbell. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. TARBELL has written this book

"in the conviction that the greatest of all motives for studying Art, the motive which is and ought to be, strongest in most people, is the desire to become acquainted with beautiful and noble things, the things that 'soothe the cares and lift the thoughts of man.'"

His narrative (aided by a couple of hundred illustrations) is well suited to the needs of the general reader, but it is also a sound introduction to the subject for students. The essential excellence, the inspiration of Greek Art is kept to the front, yet matters of technique, upon which the schools necessarily lay stress, are explained without pedantry. The chapter, for instance, on the building, the plan, and the ornamentation of a temple, and on the orders of Greek architecture, is a model of clear and helpful exposition. Architecture and sculpture—the two cannot be dissociated in Greece—naturally occupy the largest space in Mr. Tarbell's survey. After some general considerations, he carefully traces the growth and decay of sculpture through the four periods—the Archaic, the Transitional, the Great or Periclean, and the Hellenistic—into which it is convenient to divide its history. While treating fully of these, he finds room also for two chapters on "Art in Egypt and Mesopotamia" and on "Greek Painting," each of which would bear expansion into a treatise. Mr. Tarbell lays stress on a point which hardly occupies the same place in the popular imagination that it has come to do in archæological study, namely, the use of colour upon statues and buildings. A Greek temple, he tells us, was polychromatic, and we must have faith to believe that its "pomp of colour was not only sumptuous, but harmonious and appropriate." We are apt to think of marble purity as being of the essence of Greek statuary, and it is to many a shock to learn that this notion rests on nothing but the devouring work of time. Classical archæology is one of the most progressive of studies, and to it Mr. Tarbell's handbook affords a stimulating introduction.

* * *

Seventeenth Century Studies. By Edmund Gosse. (Heinemann.)

THESE critical essays were originally published in 1883, and this is a third, and to some extent, revised edition. Little is added except an index, and an interesting note upon some hitherto unknown poems by Crashaw, printed for the first time by Dr. Grosart, in 1888. Mr. Gosse quotes a charming lyric, which certainly the world having discovered will not willingly let die. In re-introducing this book of his youth, Mr. Gosse, whose pose is now that of middle age, speaks deprecatingly of the exuberance of taste and the positiveness of judgment by which he thinks it is characterised. To a less partial critic it seems to be the one work of Mr. Gosse's which can be heartily and unreservedly praised. It is a charming collection of essays in the fascinating realm which stands upon the borders of criticism and biography; doing for some, at least, of the salient figures of the seventeenth century what Mr. Austin Dobson has since attempted with equal success for the eighteenth.

* * *

Cecil Rhodes: A Biography and Appreciation. By "Imperialist." With Personal Reminiscences by Dr. Jameson. (Chapman & Hall.)

THIS biography opens on a portrait of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, and it shuts on a map of South Africa. To look at the one and at the other, and to let the imagination play between them, is perhaps the best way of learning what may here be learned of our greatest colonist. The map of South Africa is on the scale of a hundred miles to the inch, and in one corner space is found for a tiny outline of the old country drawn on the same scale, and filled with the same wash of Imperial red. One glance gives fresh meaning to the phrase, "the expansion of England," which we all use in a hackneyed way. "Imperialist's" biography and Dr. Jameson's two chapters of recollections are sandwiched between the portrait and the map. These make interesting and stirring reading; but, after all, the biography of any man who is in his heyday must be classed among the books which are not books. Mr. Cecil Rhodes is too actual and daily for literature. The time may come when he will be the central figure of an epic. And then even the epic poet will be glad of the story which "Imperialist" tells of General Gordon's asking Cecil Rhodes to go with him to Khartoum. The comment on Rhodes's refusal is adequate: "If the future of the Soudan was upon Gordon's camel as he rode to Khartoum, the future of British empire in South Africa hung upon this decision of Mr. Rhodes." We may rejoice that England still produces such situations and such men.

FICTION.

A Handful of Exotics. By Samuel Gordon. (Methuen & Co.)

IT is not often that a volume of short stories can be called a work of information. But the light which in these few sketches Mr. Gordon contrives to throw on that sordid and unpopular character, the Russian Jew, is so striking that the book may be considered a valuable addition to the literature of the alien immigrant question. We have heard so much of the objectionable side of the Russian Jew that it is well to learn something also of his more amiable traits. Not only is the subject of the book new, but its manner is admirable. Perhaps the most illuminating of all the sketches is the letter of Rabbi Elchanan, who came to London to find a dowry for his daughter, and learned the lesson of disappointment which most of his compatriots learn. The letter curiously recalls that in which one of Rudyard Kipling's Indians recounts his views of England. One of the things which seriously perplexed the Rabbi was the railway :

"I beheld a monster with fiery eyes issuing from the bowels of the earth, and flying towards me on wings of smoke and flame, uttering hoarse screeches from outspread jaws. And in these jaws, wherefrom upleapt long tongues of fire, I saw three men writhing like Chananya, Meshual, and Azariah in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace; yet, like them, they were not consumed. And then the prodigy stood still, panting and snorting, and I repeated the blessing which is incumbent upon us at beholding an untoward spectacle; but though I looked narrowly I saw nothing of the twosome demons which Moshki swore were harnessed to the contrivance to set it in motion."

It is a book well worth reading, whether as fiction or as a contribution to ethnology.

A Pinchbeck Goddess. By Mrs. J. M. Fleming. (Alice M. Kipling.) (Heinemann.)

A PORTION of Mr. Kipling's spirit is upon his sister. She has something of his talent for brisk, pointed dialogue, and of his power of selective description. But there is nothing grim about Mrs. Fleming: her book is a dainty comedy, full of gaiety, which it is mere joy to read. For the men the services, civil and military, provide types; but the women are individual studies, and Lilian Miles particularly, wife to a man who adores her and whom she loves, but miserably unhappy, is painted in convincing colours. Of the plot it will not perhaps be unfair to betray so much as this. The "Pinchbeck Goddess" is a fascinating but flashy widow, globe-trotting, who takes up her residence at Simla, and by her social success avenges the humiliation of Madeline Norton, a penniless sensitive girl who, two years before, had been hawked around by coarse-fibred friends. It sounds extravagant, perhaps, but it is the best tribute we can pay to Mrs. Fleming's art to say that Winnie's intentional extravagancies never for a moment go beneath the surface, that her true self remains quite unsullied, and that she melts so prettily at the finish and casts away the wig and rouge pot with such sincere contrition that she is forgiven.

Christine of the Hills. By Max Pemberton. (A. D. Innes & Co.)

UNFORTUNATELY it is given to few holiday-making novelists to chance on so ideal a guide as the "Barbarossa" who told Mr. Pemberton this sweet and sad idyll. Perhaps Barbarossa himself is a myth; and one would prefer to believe so and put so romantic a tale one degree further from the gross boundaries of reality. That it is, as the preface states, "in part a true story," does not affect our belief that the best part of it—the completeness, the atmosphere, and the art of it—are Mr. Pemberton's own. Life makes humours and tragedies in plenty, but it has no sense of display or proportion. But the story of Christine, as one reads it, recalls nothing so much as the hand of a skilled worker polishing a rough gem. Christine herself is something of a scapegrace to begin with. She marries in haste Ugo Klun, the woodlander's son, who is a deserter and is arrested on his wedding night. Christine, a mere child, hears that he is dead and becomes an inmate of the house of Count Paul Zaloski, whose wife she is about to become when the undesired and undesirable Ugo turns up. With him she goes to Vienna, where most of her earnings on the stage go to the maintenance of the son she has married. The Count is alienated by baseless rumours, and Ugo meets a tragic death, too late for the reconciliation which would have set all right. A powerful story as plots of novels go; but it is in the delicacy and adroitness with which it is told that the reader will find the greatest pleasure. Good stories are many; but good stories well told are few.

A Man with Black Eyelashes. By H. A. Kennedy. (Methuen & Co.)

WHAT is an author to do who wishes to depict the perfect villain? He cannot go to real life, for the most historical scoundrels have had their redeeming points. He may, if he likes, draw upon the stage villain, but that is an obligation which no self-respecting novelist would care to incur. Mr. Kennedy has tried a new plan. Recognising that conscience doth make saints, more or less, of us all, he arranges that his Stephen Carless shall have no conscience. In an inn coffee-room Stephen reflects on the state of his morals. "To the devil with conscience," he exclaims; and the devil, in the guise of the waiter, promptly appears and offers to warehouse the encumbrance till further notice. Per contra, he confers on Mr. Carless a sense of humour. The development of that gift is indicated by various episodes, matrimonial and otherwise. In the end, the conscience comes back on his hands while he is ascending Vesuvius; and, overwhelmed with remorse, he leaps into the crater. It is impossible not to feel that Mr. Kennedy has not made the most of his whimsical motive. For one thing, he is inconsistent. The bargain with the devil is conducted in a vein of burlesque which assorts ill with the elopements and tragedies to follow. Moreover, the crimes of Mr. Carless, if you divest them of the infernal glamour, are no such terrible ones: Sir Francis Jeune hears of worse every day. But, as Satan has become a popular figure on the stage, it is interesting to read on the title-page that "this story has been dramatised by the author."

The Three Daughters of Night. By Derek Vane. (Hutchinson.)

THERE is nothing in Mr. Vane's book to explain his choice of a title. It is true that Irma Fawcett was a lady with a past; it is also true that she and Valentine Luttrell, the artist who married her, have a somewhat dingy outlook at the end of the book; but this, so far from being a consequence of her youthful escapades, results from the extraneous fact that Valentine's eyes are growing dim. Indeed, with all the virtues she shows none of the recklessness of a Mrs. Tanqueray; she rather lays hold of us as a tender bright soul perfectly unsoiled. John MacGregor, a sort of Torpenhow, thought so, for when asked point blank by her husband whether he loved her he hesitated not to reply: "Call it love if you like; perhaps worship would be a better word—the worship of a star." MacGregor is an excellent Scot who, for friendship of the pair of them, had fraudulently added to the sums paid for Val's pictures, which he negotiated for him—those pictures which, owing to the failing sight of the artist, had fallen so far below the standard that even a dealer could distinguish that there was in them something amiss. Pauline, the artist's sister, in love with MacGregor, brings about the little emute to which allusion has been made—but we do not quite believe in Pauline. Molly Gordon, Irma's sister, a pretty doll, contrives, in spite of the Fates, to wed the man she wants, and thus performs her little part in demonstrating the inappropriateness of the title to which we have taken exception. It is a well-constructed story and reasonably brief.

Passports. By I. Julian Armstrong. Little Novels Series. (Fisher Unwin.)

It is not easy to assess the quality of the four stories presented to us in this slim brown volume. The workmanship is sometimes painfully raw and tawdry, the phrasing constantly borders upon vulgarity, the grammar is inexcusably slipshod. So much dispraise should be enough to condemn any book; nevertheless, we have not the will utterly to condemn Mr. Armstrong's. For, in spite of his faults, he has a certain aptitude for drawing together the salient features of a situation and presenting them with a snap and point that go nigh to convince. The first story is to our mind the nearest to excellence. It is the tale of a solitary child who lives her little life alone in the house of a drunken and disreputable father. She explains the impossibility of a certain double fence to a straggling member of the hunt (the Ego of the story), and between the grown man and the precocious, solitary child a pleasant liking springs. She shows him her treasures and her wrongs; introduces him to her summer-house dug out beneath an overturned boat, and takes advantage of the occasion to revel in whist with no more than two dummies. His sister is persuaded to ask the child to her

Christmas-tree; from this function, for her father's sins, the child had in former years been excluded. A year afterwards the Ego was staying once more at his sister's for the Christmas festival. The child had not been asked. He hurried away, followed her steps into a wood, and this is what he saw:

"In the centre of a little natural hollow, clear of all brushwood, stood the top half of a dead fir tree, banked up with snow to keep it upright. . . . The tree was decorated with strings of French beans, coloured fragments of old crackers, and a wonderful collection of home-invented flags. . . . Conspicuous among the branches were the three boxes of sweetmeats which she had drawn in the lottery at Clitheroe last year; and the candles consisted of irregular pieces cut from an old-fashioned waxlight coil."

This is pathetic; but the child's death and the pious lie which was to pass her into heaven are, at least, superfluous. There is no masterpiece among the tales, but it may be conceded that not anyone could have written them.

The Circle of Earth. By George Knight. (Ward, Lock.)

"HAPPINESS," writes Mr. Knight in his "Foreword," "is an insidious weakener of . . . life. . . . Howbeit, not seldom the souls of the desolate cannot loose themselves when they would"; and upon this uncomfortable view of things he weaves his grave fantasy. A mystic Russian, Lossenko by name, living in the "House 100," is waiting for the time when death shall restore him to the woman he loves. He amuses himself meanwhile with the study of microbes and by practising the art of Orpheus upon hares and bees. To him enters Miss Harper, a rollicking young heiress, and his devotion to the dead falls in deadly peril. A young German socialist turns up at the opportune moment and diverts Miss Harper's perilous attentions; so when the emissary of the Russian secret police blows the sage's brains out, with that philosopher's full approval, the sage's soul shoots meteor-like "beyond the circle," and its cry is answered by "a little soundless throb." It would not be difficult to ridicule all this, but, in fact, it is not ridiculous. For the writer of fiction may fairly claim a large liberty in the selection of his matter, and no man may call upon him to verify his hypothesis. Mr. Knight has pitched his theme in an unfamiliar key; his characters are an oddly consorted group; but so long as the puppets foot it pat with music, and while his instruments keep in tune, we shall not complain. And, in fact, Mr. Knight's literary style is conscientious, though it would be the better for pruning, and his persons are sufficiently well realised. Lossenko is an interesting study, and Miss Harper has a certain sprightly charm. She is the occasion of some touches of a pleasant comedy. But that German young man we do not believe in.

Briton or Boer? By George Griffith. (F. V. White & Co.)

It was the late General Sir George Chesney, we believe, who invented what one may call the fictional method of calling attention to our national blunders. His Battle of Dorking has been followed by much similar criticism of the possibilities both of our navy and army, but Mr. Griffith is, we think, the first to transfer the scene of action to the colonies. Briton or Boer is a powerfully worked out suggestion of what is likely to happen in South Africa if Great Britain pursues much longer its present policy of self-abasement before the Boers—a policy which dates from the surrender at Majuba.

Mr. Kruger in this story has at last appeared to yield to the mild pressure put upon him, and knowing his armaments and plans to be complete, he promises the long-desired franchise to the Outlanders. But the rejoicing of the latter is turned to dismay when on the actual day of proclamation they learn that they will be expected to denaturalise themselves and bear arms against the enemies of the South African Republic. The Boers forthwith entirely throw off the mask, and you have as exciting a situation as can be imagined. Owing to a European war being imminent, England can do little to help with either men or arms, though a British fleet succeeds in establishing itself in Delagoa Bay, and lending its support along the coast. In the interior, however, the British forces are much inferior in numbers to those which the Boers, who are joined by the disaffected Dutch of Cape Colony, are able to put into the field. Mr. Griffith, who seems to know his South Africa very well, has done this part of his work brilliantly, with abundance of local colour. He hurries his readers from north to south and east to west as he pictures the varying fortunes of the different centres of the great struggle for supremacy. It was only to be expected that the Britons should perform prodigies of valour; but it is necessary to read the book before the full details of their prowess can be at all realised. Mr. Griffith, to tell the truth, has decidedly injured the verisimilitude of his story by his excesses in this respect.

A Missing Witness. By Frank Barrett. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE formula of this story is a familiar one. A man is falsely accused of a crime; at the crisis of the plot his innocence is triumphantly made clear by the hero, and the real villain is unmasked. In Mr. Barrett's version of things, Jim Redmond has murdered his master, and the blame falls upon George Heatherley. Secure in the knowledge that the only witness of the deed has become a gibbering idiot from a blow, Redmond puts a bold face upon it, and persecutes Heatherley's daughter Elsie with unpleasant attentions. The deus ex machina is a young surgeon, Philip Fairfield, Elsie Heatherley's lover, who suspects what has occurred, trephines the idiot in a somewhat improbable fashion in the presence of the Home Secretary, and secures his evidence, the pardon of his own father-in-law that is to be, and the conviction of Redmond. The story begins in the middle of the volume; the first half is chiefly padding. There is just so much mild sensation as the circulating library reader likes—enough, that is to say, to keep him awake and not enough to prevent him from putting down the book at bedtime; and there is just enough mystery to entice him to keep a page ahead of the plot all through and to finish up at the death with a victorious "I told you so." The characterisation, namby-pamby but harmless, may be taken for granted, and the illustrations might, perhaps, have been dispensed with.

Francesca Halstead: a Tale of San Remo. By Reginald St. Barbe. (Digby, Long & Co.)

THE best thing we can say for this novel is that it is perfectly harmless. The plot is devoid of originality and though we feel the author has lavished a considerable amount of care on his heroine, we are forced to admit that she remains wooden and mechanical. The only person in whom we can evince the least interest is Pietro, the Italian boatman. His tremendous loquacity is entertaining—sometimes. The various soliloquies which the author indulges in at every possible occasion are overwhelmingly tedious but sometimes unconsciously humorous. The general tendency of these may be gathered from the following quotation:

"You fond mothers! who plot and plan in secret careers for your sons and daughters, but give them no voice—for they exist only deep down in your own hearts, where none may know of them—yet your imaginings, if they be but the reflection of your longing, and have no voice, are not lost, are not unheard, but registered as a lasting inheritance for good in your children."

The Water-Finder. By Lucas Cleeve. (Hutchinson & Co.)

WHETHER "water-finding," or, as it is called in some parts of the country, "dowsing," is a superstition or a science it is happily no part of a reviewer's business to decide. Mr. Cleeve is manifestly a firm believer in the virtues of the hazel twig. He even interrupts the course of his story to devote a large part of a chapter to the history and variations of the phenomenon. The "water-finder" of the tale is Mike Openshaw, who comes of a weird family. It happens that the eldest son of a local magnate has been sent to Australia for a youthful misdemeanour, and while he is there a friend bequeaths him a gold mine, of which the only disadvantage is that there is no water within a thousand miles. So, when the exiled Gerard hears of the fame of Mike, he pays a stealthy visit home and despatches him to the Antipodes with instructions to find water in the vicinity of the goldfields. The feat is accomplished, and Mike returns home to find that his employer has requited his service by an ungenerous interference in his love affairs. Apart from the aqueous interest, there is little of novelty in the book; but it contains much curious and entertaining information on the art of water-finding by one who has evidently studied the subject with some care.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1897.

No. 1299, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

SOME distinction and fair variety mark our list of new books this week. A biography of the first importance, a book on English art, three books of history, several of minor verse, two of travel, and two of philosophy, a new edition of Shakespeare, several reprints of standard novels, a couple of dozen works of new fiction, and two or three books of reference, make up the total.

BENJAMIN JOWETT. The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett, by Mr. Evelyn Abbott and the Rev. Lewis Campbell, comes from Mr. Murray. There is a pleasing air of workmanship about the two volumes, for they are of equal thickness, and each contains twelve chapters, a frontispiece, and six illustrations in the text. Three portraits of Jowett are given, of which the first, representing him in middle life, is from a crayon drawing by George Richmond, R.A. Would it not have been well if Jowett's age had been printed beneath it? Two other portraits give us the familiar Jowett of later years, these being the one painted by Lady Abercromby and a well-known photograph by Mr. Cameron.

Mr. Evelyn Abbott thus explains the origin and scope of the work:

"Prof. Jowett's life naturally falls into two sections—the period before the Mastership, and the Mastership. The first of these volumes contains the first period, and is the work of Prof. Campbell; in the second, I have written the story of the Mastership; and I am responsible for the whole. The plan followed in both volumes is, of course, the same. A few letters have been worked into the narrative; others, far too numerous to be used in such a manner, but of a personal character, have been appended to the chapters according to their dates, and thus form, as it were, illustrations of the text, giving in Jowett's own words his thoughts and feelings at the time. In the second period the material was to some extent different from that in the first, for Jowett's personal memoranda became far more numerous as he grew older, and from these, as in some respects the truest record of his life, it was necessary to draw largely. The second volume is also somewhat more annalistic than the first; after 1870 the course of Jowett's life was more equable; the years are distinguished by the incidents which occur in them, but with the exception of the years 1882-1886, when he was Vice-Chancellor, they do not fall into well-defined sections."

The authors regret that owing to the death of Lord Bowen they were not able to submit their work to his critical judgment.

MR. CROCKETT'S NEW STORY.

IN Lad's Love Mr. Crockett has brought himself into closest touch with his readers by presenting them with a portrait of himself, sketched by Mr. Frank Richards, and by addressing a letter to his "unanswered correspondents." In this he touches humorously on the petitions and suggestions regarding his stories which have reached him from all parts of the globe, at last protesting:

"It is not given me always to write what you would—only what I can. To write that which is in one's heart at the moment is the only rule. And the seasons change with me, and my wayward likings with them. In summer I can write with anyone of lasses and lads, and the long courtships between the gloaming and the mirk; but as soon as winter bites snell and grim I must needs buckle on steel-cap and leathern jack and ride forth a-foraying on the English border."

Lad's Love is a romance of moorland life in Scotland, and the title is taken "from the old name for the scented wormwood, or Southernwood, a sprig of which woovers used to wear when they went courting, and our grandmothers to carry with them in their Bibles to church." The book is illustrated by Mr. Warwick Goble.

OTHER BOOKS. WAGNER the man is too much neglected for Wagner the musician. Therefore a translation of the Letters which he addressed to his friend August Roeckel is to be welcomed. They are accompanied by an introductory essay by Mr. Houston Stewart Chamberlain, who writes: "They show us the man; he seems to step out of them bodily before our eyes." The contents of the letters are very varied, and we may remark that no close student of Schopenhauer should neglect to read the fifth, sixth, and seventh. For it seems that Wagner was profoundly influenced by the author of The World as Will and Idea. Mr. Gleeson White's English Illustration, "The Sixties," 1857-70, which is published at two guineas, is handsome to a degree, though its white and gold covers are, perhaps, more splendid than expressive. Mr. Gleeson White traces the work of the illustrators of the "Sixties" through Once a Week, Cornhill, and other magazines and publications of the time, as he gives reproductions of a great number of the engravings which were made from the drawings. He also names and describes a large number of illustrations which the student and the collector may seek in the native pages. The Sikhs and the Sikh War, by General Sir Charles Gough, V.C., the latest contribution to modern military history. The second volume of Mr. Frederic Boase's Modern English Biography, a dictionary of lives which have ended since 1850—the first volume of which is one of the minor Meccas of British Museum readers—is just ready for subscribers. It extends from I to Q. The Statesman's Year-Book reincarnates itself, and is embellished with a series of maps showing the political changes which have occurred in Her Majesty's reign. Part 2 of The Encyclopædia of Sport is to hand, and contains the continuation of the article on Athletics, and articles on Base-Ball, Bear Shooting, Big Game, &c.

WE suppose that the case of no English poet is so hopeless as Thomson's.

But the Aldine edition of "British Poets" is above poetic fashions, and it has duly gathered Thomson's poems into its two latest volumes. These are heroically annotated by the Rev. D. C. Tovey, who, in a dedicatory letter to Mr. Aldis Wright, expresses his belief that "there are signs in Continental criticism of a reviving interest in Thomson." Truly a prophet, &c. We have seen no better cheap editions of the plays and poems of Shakespeare than the "Avon," just issued in post octavo by Messrs. Kegan Paul. It is printed very clearly in double columns, the Comedies, Historical Plays, and Tragedies succeeding each other. Our only quarrel is with the title-page, on which is printed a rather paltry view of the Avon and Stratford church. The unerased words, "Bird's-eye View," in the foreground suggest that it is taken from a local guide-book. An Index and an Appendix showing the dates of publication and composition, and also the sources of the plays, are useful additions to the volume.

WE are never permitted to forget the Celtic movement. Messrs. Patrick Geddes & Colleagues have just re-issued, in three volumes, enclosed in paper covers of a quiet green, the shorter stories of Miss Fiona Macleod. The stories have been re-arranged under the titles of Spiritual Tales, Barbaric Tales, and Tragic Romances. Of the Spiritual Tales, two, "The Melancholy of Ulad" and "The Hills of Ruel," appear in print for the first time. Another, "The Awakening of Angus Ogue," has only been read in The Evergreen. The other eight stories are gathered in from Miss Macleod's books, The Sin-Eater and The Washer of the Ford. The second volume is compiled from the same sources, and contains one hitherto unpublished story called "Ahèz the Pale." The third contains a new story, "The Archer." The Episode of Alethea, by Isabel Clarke, is, we think, its author's first story. It is evidently very up-to-date; of one of the female characters it is written that she had "a statuesque little face, reminding him insistently of one of Paul Hellen's delicate dry-points." Miss Clarke is fond of quotations, and there is no lack of variety in those with which she heads her chapters—Browning, Paul Verlaine, Matthew Arnold, Mrs. Meynell and many others being laid under contribution. A Writer of Fiction is a study of the tragic side of literary life. Its author, Mr. Clive Holland, is known by his previous story, A Japanese Wife. Miss Arabella Kenealy, whose cleverness was proclaimed in her Some Men are Such Gentlemen and in several other books, is the author of some short stories to which the title Belinda's Beaux is given. This, however, is putting a great strain on what is really the title of only the first of the fourteen stories which compose the volume. These are divided into four sections—entitled "Frivolities," "Sentimentalities," "Curiosities" and "Probabilities." In the latter section we have a gruesome realisation of a human vivisection. The Adventures of John Johns is a story of London life by Mr. Frederic Carrel. Mr. Carrel's earlier book, The City, was a vivid and powerful treatment of Stock Exchange life, and was compared by one critic to Zola's L'Argent. It will be found that the adventures of John Johns are located in a Fleet-street newspaper office and in the glittering West End. The author writes: "I desire to say, by way of preface, that my sole endeavour in writing this story has been to mirror and not to preach."

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

HISTORY.

- HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPT COMMISSION: THE MANUSCRIPTS OF J. ELIOT HODGKIN, Esq., F.S.A., OF RICHMOND, SURREY. Eyre & Spottiswoode. 1s. 8d.
BY-WAYS OF HISTORY. By James Colville. David Douglas (Edinburgh).
THE SIKHS AND THE SIKH WARS. By Gen. Sir Charles Gough, V.C., and Arthur D. Innes, M.A. A. D. Innes & Co. 16s.

BIOGRAPHY.

- THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF BENJAMIN JOWETT. By Evelyn Abbott and Lewis Campbell. John Murray. 32s.
MODERN ENGLISH BIOGRAPHY. VOL. II.: I—Q. By Frederic Boase. Netherton & Worth (Truro).
HEROES OF THE NATIONS: ROBERT THE BRUCE AND THE STRUGGLE FOR SCOTTISH INDEPENDENCE. By Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 6s.
THE HEROES OF THE ARCTIC. By Frederick Wympster. Ninth edition. S.P.C.K. 3s.

PHILOSOPHY.

- PSEUDO-PHILOSOPHY AT THE END OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By Hugh Mortimer Cecil. I. AN IRRATIONALIST TRIO: KIDD, DRUMMOND, BALFOUR. The University Press, Ltd. 10s.
MAN'S PLACE IN THE COSMOS, AND OTHER ESSAYS. By Andrew Seth. William Blackwood & Sons. 7s. 6d.

POETRY.

- THE ALDINE POETS: THE POETICAL WORKS OF JAMES THOMSON. Edited by Rev. D. C. Tovey. 2 vols. George Bell & Son.
JENNIFER, AND OTHER VERSES. By Septimus Green. Elliot Stock. 5s.
THE HUIA'S HOMELAND, AND OTHER VERSES. By Roslyn. Elliot Stock. 5s.
FABLES AND FANCIES. By J. Wimsatt Boulding. Jarrold & Sons.
VERSES. By J. M. K. Schumacher. Indian Daily News Press (Calcutta). 1 rupee.
DRAMATIC ROMANCES AND LYRICS; AND SORDELLO. By Robert Browning. Walter Scott. 2s.
GATHER'D FRAGMENTS. By Elwin Vyne. New edition. Bertram Dobell. 6s.

FICTION.

- NEW COPYRIGHT EDITION OF CHARLES LEVER'S NOVELS: THE CONFESSIONS OF HARRY LORREQUER. By Charles Lever. Downey & Co. 10s. 6d.
THE ADVENTURES OF JOHN JOHNS. By Frederic Carrel. Bliss, Sands & Co. 6s.
CHEAP EDITION OF CHARLES DICKENS' WORKS: DOMREY AND SON AND NICHOLAS NICKLEBY. 1s. each. Chapman & Hall.
LITTLE NOVELS: ON THE GOSMAGOGS. By Alice Dumillo. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s.
LIFE AGAIN, LOVE AGAIN. By V. Munro Ferguson. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN. By Eastwood Kidson. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
THE EPISODE OF ALETHEA. By Isabel Clarke. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.
BELINDA'S BEAUX, AND OTHER STORIES. By Arabella Kenealy. Bliss, Sands & Co. 6s.
IVAN ALEXANDROVITCH. By Andrée Hope. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
SINBAD, SMITH & CO. By Albert Stearns. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
LAD'S LOVE. By S. R. Crockett. Bliss, Sands & Co. 6s.
RE-ISSUE OF THE SHORTER STORIES OF FIONA MACLEOD: VOL. I.—SPIRITUAL TALES. VOL. II.—BARBARIC TALES. VOL. III.—TRAGIC ROMANCES. Patrick Geddes & Colleagues.
UNDER SHADOW OF THE MISSION. By L. Studdeford McChesney. Methuen & Co. 6s.
NEEL AND THE ACTOR. By Lillian Street. Skeffington & Son. 3s. 6d.
MY YARNS OF SEA-FOAM AND GOLD-DUST. By Capt. Charles Clark. Digby, Long & Co. 6s.
A WRITER OF FICTION. By Olive Holland. Archibald Constable & Co. 2s. 6d.
IVANHOE. By Sir Walter Scott. Service & Paton. 2s. 6d.
THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII. By Lord Lytton. Service & Paton. 2s. 6d.
MOSES. By Ouida. Chatto & Windus. 6d.
GOD, MAN, AND THE DEVIL. By Ernest C. Henham. Skeffington & Son. 3s. 6d.
THE FAITHFUL CITY. By Herbert Morrah. Methuen & Co. 6s.
THE PILGRIMAGE OF THE BEN BENIAH. By Charlotte M. Yonge. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
THE MASTER-BEGGARS. By L. Cope Cornford. J. M. Dent & Co.
A MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT. By T. S. Millington. 1s.
AND THE MARTYR CROWN. By Rev. R. H. Pigott. 2s.
"Home Words" Publishing Office.
A DEVOTEE. By Mary Cholmondeley. Edward Arnold. 3s. 6d.
THAT AFFAIR NEXT DOOR. By Anna Katherine Green. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 6s.

ART.

- ENGLISH ILLUSTRATION: "THE SIXTIES," 1855-70. By Gleeson White. Archibald Constable & Co. 42s.

BELLES LETTRES.

- THE MOUNT. By P. G. Hamerton. Seeley & Co. 3s. 6d.

TRAVEL.

- THE LAKES AND RIVERS OF AUSTRIA, BAVARIA, AND HUNGARY. By Colonel G. B. Malleon. Chapman & Hall.
THROUGH UNKNOWN AFRICAN COUNTRIES. By A. Donaldson Smith, M.D. Edward Arnold.

GEOGRAPHY.

- WITH THE DUTCH IN THE EAST. By Capt. W. Cool. Luzac & Co. 21s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- ALGEBRA FOR BEGINNERS. By I. Todhunter, Sc.D. Revised by S. L. Loney, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d.
NOTES ON ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By A. Allen Brookington, B.A. Second edition. Relfe Bros. 1s.
COLLINS' COMPLETE ATLAS. William Collins, Sons, & Co. 6s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- THE BOOK OF HUMBUG. By C. J. Willday. Skeffington & Son. 3s. 6d.
THE WHEEL OF LIFE. By Clement Scott. 2s.
THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK: 1897. Edited by J. Scott Keltie and I. P. A. Renwick. Macmillan & Co. 10s. 6d.
WHO'S WHO, 1897. Edited by Douglas Sladen. A. & C. Black.
LADY CYCLING. By Miss F. J. Erskine. Walter Scott, Ltd. 2s. 6d.
ON THE THRESHOLD OF THREE CLOSED LANDS. By Rev. J. A. Graham. R. & R. Clark (Edinburgh).
A MAN'S VALUE TO SOCIETY. By Newell Dwight Hills. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 6s.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE annual festival of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution will be held on April 28 at the Holborn Restaurant. The Earl of Crewe, who will preside, intimates that it is the desire of the Committee of Management specially to commemorate the sixtieth year of the Queen's reign by placing all donations received in 1897 to the credit of the Royal Victoria Pension Fund, inaugurated by Her Majesty in 1887, for the benefit of the widows of newsvendors. The Committee is anxious to obtain a large support for the Charity on this occasion. Under ordinary circumstances it may fairly claim the sympathy due to a class who minister to the convenience of the public under arduous conditions, employed at irregular hours, and exposed to all severities of weather. Many of these hardworking people altogether break down under the stress of such a life; and it is for those left behind, their widows and orphans, that the appeal is made.

MR. WILFRID WARD is busy over the proofs of his Life of Cardinal Wiseman. The book may therefore be expected soon. Father Morris, Cardinal Wiseman's secretary, who was to have become also his biographer, but died before he had done little more than plan out the work, left notes which Mr. Ward has found of the highest service.

LORD ROBERTS has accepted the dedication of the new illustrated edition (the ninth altogether) of Mr. Kipling's Departmental Ditties. The book will be published on April 19.

THE National Portrait Gallery has lately been enriched by several interesting works, some acquired by presentation and some by purchase. The gifts comprise a portrait of William Morris, by Mr. Watts; a portrait of Coventry Patmore, by Mr. Sargent; a portrait of Bishop Colenso, and medallions of Mrs. Opie and Sir John Bowring. The purchases comprise portraits of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex (Holbein School); Adam, First Viscount Duncan; Harriet Martineau; John Tradescant the younger, who with his father owned the physic garden and museum known as Tradescant's Ark, which enshrined the curiosities collected by Ashmole, and afterwards became the nucleus of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford; Thomas Cartwright, Bishop of Chester; William Chiffinch, the servant of Charles II.; Sir Henry Sydney, father of Sir Philip Sydney; and casts of sculptures, portraits of Henry Fawcett, Sir Francis Grant, P.R.A., and Charles Stewart Parnell.

SHORTLY after Easter Mr. Nutt will publish a page-for-page reprint of Wordsworth's Poems in Two Volumes of 1807, similar to that of the Lyrical Ballads of 1798 which Prof. Dowden edited in 1890. Copies of the Poems of 1807 are exceedingly scarce—much more so than those of the Lyrical Ballads; one in good condition fetching from 50s. to 80s. Without the aid of a text of 1807 it is impossible thoroughly to examine the merits of the case: Jeffrey and Others v. Wordsworth. Along with a brief introduction, the editor, Mr. Thomas Hutchinson, furnishes notes (chiefly textual) tending to show that the poet, far from contemptuously ignoring his critics, as he is popularly supposed to have done, was in truth careful to profit by their strictures by altering or omitting such passages as offered fair occasion for fault-finding.

Is the American a better and more assiduous print collector than the English? If so—notwithstanding all the Méryons and Whistlers at Mr. Avery's and Mr. Howard Mansfield's—he has not yet got his full share of the fine prints with which the world is endowed. But that he is alive to their excellence and interest, to a greater extent, perhaps, than his English brother, is evidenced, in part, by the continually occurring print shows at Mr. Frederick Keppel's in New York. The ball there is, at all events, kept rolling. Vandyke has lately succeeded to Piranesi—a change for the better, though Piranesi himself n'est pas à dédaigner, for so great an artist as Cotman used to borrow his works whenever he could, and very carefully to study them. Vandyke, of course, is quite another matter. In him you have to deal with a personality as potent as engaging. The economy of means and grip of character in those few original portrait plates of his—of which the best of all is the “De Wael”—are quite astounding. Only Rembrandt has ever surpassed or, to tell truth, ever equalled them.

A CORRESPONDENT, who regrets that it is not customary to add the prices of books to their titles when under review, sends us an ingenious explanation of the matter: “In the old days of taxed newspapers the Government held that the addition of the price of a book to its title made the review an advertisement, and, as such, liable to taxation. This view was supported in the Law Courts, and from that moment prices were withheld. When newspapers were freed this minor evil had become stereotyped, hence its persistence to our own day.”

THE present editor of the Morning Post, Mr. W. A. Locker, who has just resigned his position owing to the physical strain which the duties put upon him, was appointed in the spring of 1895, succeeding the late Mr. A. K. Moore. It is interesting to recall that almost at the same time Mr. H. W. Massingham assumed control of the Daily Chronicle, a paper which more readily takes colour from those in direction. Mr. Locker proceeded to the Morning Post from the Globe. Previous to that he had assisted his father, the late Mr. Arthur Locker, on the Graphic. Mr. Locker is only a little over thirty-three years old, an age at which few journalists can look back and point to such achievements as the control of a London evening and a London morning paper.

MR. LOCKER's successor at the Morning Post, Mr. James Nicol Dunn, is the present editor of Black and White. Mr. Dunn, who is forty years of age, was for some time on the staff of the Scotsman. He then joined the Scots Observer and remained until, as the National Observer, it changed hands. His next move was to the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. Dunn will begin his duties at the Morning Post on May 1.

COLONEL JOHN HAY was, of course, “discovered” in America, but the honour of introducing him to this country belongs, it seems, to Mr. Walter Wren. Nearly thirty years ago, when “Little Breeches, a Pike County View of Special Providence,” and “Jim Bludso (of the Prairie Belle),” both by “J. H.” appeared in the New York Tribune, Mr. Wren had a hundred copies of each struck off for distribution among his friends and pupils. At Oxford, he says, “they went round the common rooms like fire.”

MR. H. G. WELLS, in his clever speech at the dinner given to him by the New Vagabonds' Club, incidentally brought a fresh method of grouping to bear upon reviewers. After describing authors as “seedlings,” Mr. Wells divided reviewers into various families: slug-reviewers, who prey on the first tender leaves of authors; bird-reviewers, who peck here and there and possibly do damage; heavy reviewers, who crush with their feet whole beds of shoots. Mr. Wells went on to complain of their methods of irrigation. Some reviewers, he said, so copiously drench the plants with the water of flattery as to rot them at the roots; others withhold water until the plants are dried up. In addition, there is, of course, the wise, far-seeing horticulturist, but he is not very common.

AN interesting photographic competition, the second of its kind, was organised a few months ago by the Graphic, and the awards have just been made. The prints submitted came from all parts of the world, and the prize-winning photographs, as well as others of special merit, were reproduced last week in a special Graphic Supplement. The first prize, of £20, has been won by Mr. Henry Stevens for a photograph of an old countrywoman seated sleepily in her donkey cart. The picture is entitled “Worn Out.” Mr. Stevens has long been acknowledged to be one of the most successful of amateur photographers, and his work recently formed a “one man show” at the Camera Club.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: “Your review of Sir G. O. Morgan's translation in last issue states that it is probably the first hexameter version of Virgil's Eclogues in English. The first complete one it may be; but hexameter versions of separate eclogues were made by Webbe and Fraunce in the sixteenth century; by the author of the anonymous Introduction of Greek and Latin Measures in British Poetry (1737); by Dr. James Blundell in his Hexametrical Experiments (Pickering, 1838); and by Longfellow, in whose poems will be found a version of the first Eclogue.”

To the new edition of certain of his stories which Messrs. Scribners are to publish—entitled generally In the Sixties—Mr. Harold Frederic puts an interesting preface. Writing of the short tales, Mr. Frederic says they are “by far closer to my heart than any other work of mine, partly because they seem to me to contain the best thing I have done or ever shall do, partly because they are so closely interwoven with personal memories and experiences of my own childhood—and a little also, no doubt for the reason that they have not had quite the treatment outside that paternal affection had desired for them. Of all the writers whose books affected my younger years, I think that MM. Erckmann-Chatrian exerted upon me the deepest and most vital influence.”

OF the scenes of the novels, Mr. Frederic says: “The locality which furnishes the scenes of the two contemporary novels and all the war stories may be identified in a general way with central New York, but in no case is it possible to connect any specific village or town with one actually in existence.” The books which make up the set are The Copperhead, Marsena and Other Stories, Seth's Brother's Wife, In the Valley, and The Lawton Girl.

THE ONLOOKER.

AMONG the articles in Blackwood's Magazine for April will be “A City of Many Waters,” a descriptive and historical account of Winchester, by Sir Herbert Maxwell; “How the Famine Came to Burma”; and “On the March,” another of the series of papers on Siberia, by Mr. J. Y. Simpson.

A NEW translation of the Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius, by Mr. H. R. James with the metres of the originals rendered into English verse, is in the press, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock very shortly. It will contain brief notes, a careful analysis of each book, and a short introduction.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish shortly The Burden of Life, which Mr. Hain Friswell contributed to The Family Herald when he conducted that publication. The book has been edited by Mr. Friswell's daughter.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT will shortly issue a volume of short sketches by Mr. Finch Mason, to be entitled The Tame Fox. Mr. Finch Mason will be his own illustrator, having supplied half-a-dozen very spirited drawings of life on the racecourse and in the hunting-field, which will be reproduced in colours.

THE joint Hymnal Committee of the Presbyterian Churches has unanimously appointed Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, to publish the new Hymnal.

AT the end of this month Mr. John Macqueen will publish Mr. Brayley Hodgetts' story, A Russian Wild Flower. Mr. Macqueen is also publishing a translation of Ludovic Halévy's novel, L'Abbé Constantin.

JOHN MILTON

From the Picture by Pieter Van der Plaas in the National Portrait Gallery

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XX.—JOHN MILTON.

THE most apocalyptic of English poets was appropriately a "John"; more inappropriately, one of the richest of all poets as a Puritan. The facts of his life are common history. He is almost the sole great poet we recollect who was a Londoner; being born in that city of a scrivener, on December 9, 1608. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge—the beauty of the reserved and haughty student procuring him the name of "the lady of Christ's." All things considered, he was one of the most truly precocious of English poets; for in his twenty-first year he wrote the "Hymn on the Nativity"—in spite of some too ingenious and "conceited" stanzas, as grand a lyric as was ever penned. Perhaps Rossetti, with his "Blessed Damozel" at nineteen, is the nearest parallel; for a fine stanza or two at an early age cannot be paralleled with this sustainedly consummate achievement. In 1637 was published the "Comus," and in the same year the "Lycidas," which from its subject should seem to belong to his college years. These, with "L'Allegro," "Il Penseroso," and the "Arcades," marked him in his youth for one of the most perfect lyrical geniuses ever born. How, after a tour in Italy, where he won golden opinions from the Italian literati, he thenceforward devoted himself to the defence, in prose, of the Puritan cause, holding a position as Latin secretary to the Council of State, is well known; nor was it until the Restoration that he gave himself again wholly to poetry. Twenty-four years of prose drudgery, immortalised only through a genius which turned to gold whatever it touched, is a record of self-command not matched in the history of poets, or matched only partially by Goethe. In 1658, when the Latin secretaryship was divided with Marvel, he began "Paradise Lost." It is the custom to think of this as a work carried on steadily at intervals throughout the bulk of Milton's later life; but, as a matter of fact, it was the work of seven years—a brief enough time for the magnitude of the task. Published in 1665, it met with a decided success. Thirteen hundred copies were sold in two years—would as many be sold now if a new Milton published an epic in a formidable number of books? Practically, his contemporaries—let it be recorded to their credit—pronounced the verdict of posterity. Six years later he closed his record with "Paradise Regained" and "Samson Agonistes." In 1674 he died; having been blind for the last twenty-two years of his life.

Of his three wives, and his relations with them, enough has been written. It was a hard thing to be Milton's wife or Milton's daughter. He was stern, he was austere, he was self-centred; his impeccable strength was purchased by a sublime and monotonous egoism—which is the name they give to selfishness in poets. Very chill must have been the life of his girls in that Puritan house, reading to the inwrapped Puritan father from languages they did not understand, and taking down from his lips poetry they understood still less. Milton found them undutiful. Poor little "undutiful" daughters! Fathers had terrible conceptions of duty in those days. Did anyone ever want to know Milton? Did anyone ever want to know Shakespeare? Doubtless there are readers of the Exeter Hall class who would have yearned for the godly company of the "great Christian poet." But, on the whole, how thankful one should be that Shakespeare was not a "Christian poet"! "Les vrais artistes sont toujours un peu païens," said poor Stephen Heller to Sir Charles Hallé; in no invidious sense, for was he not a Catholic writing to a Catholic?

But, in truth, this Sunday-school tradition apart, Milton was more than "un peu païen." An extraordinary mélange of Hebrew and heathen, this Milton—something of Job, something of Æschylus, not a little of Plato, with an infusion of the Ancient Fathers to "make the gruel thick and slab." That "Dorique delicacy" which ravished Sir Henry Wotton in the lyrics of "Comus" was indeed a gift from the Greeks; yet even in "Il Penseroso" one comes across a fragment from St. Athanasius. All learning was fuel to this fire; and what fire it was that could fuse all learning into such poetry! A like burthen of knowledge clogged even Goethe; but, with occasional exceptions, Milton moves under it freely as in festal garlands. As he borrowed from all learning, so he took from all poets. In particular, to an extent not fully realised, the style of "Comus" is based on Shakespeare. In structure, "Comus" is obviously indebted to Fletcher and the Elizabethan masque-writers. But its diction, and the very music of its blank verse, follow Shakespeare with a superb and unique felicity, which excludes no jot of Milton's own genius. Shakespeare's magic here, at least, is copied. Such a passage as this has the very ring of Shakespeare's softer style in versification:

"Some say, no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog or fire, by lake or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost
That breaks his magic chains at curfew-time;
No goblin, or swart faery of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity."

Compare Titania's speech:

"Never, since the middle summer's spring,
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain or by rushy brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturbed our sport."

And one expression, "the porch and inlet of each sense," is suggested by "the porches of my ears" in "Hamlet." But not in Shakespeare's self is there such a distillation of sheer beauty, combined with perfect form and stately philosophy, as is this wonderful masque. With the monumental "Lycidas" and the other minor poems, it makes an achievement which Milton has not surpassed in kind. The "bowery loneliness" of "Paradise Lost" is less lovelily beautiful. The special greatness of that epic is, first and last, sublimity—unmatched outside the Scriptures. It widened the known bounds of the sublime. De Quincey has described how, in his opium-dreams, the sense of space was portentously enlarged. Such a tyrannous extension of the spatial sense presides over "Paradise Lost." But the source of sublimity is not in mere vastness. Henry Vaughan has at once expounded and exemplified it in two lines:

"There is in God, some say,
A deep, but dazzling, darkness."

That is not only sublime—it is sublimity. Mystery impelling awe is the fountain of this quality. Accordingly, Milton's imagery is not simply spacious, but undefined. The immediate suggestion of the image we grasp; but the associations stirred by it ascend and descend through interminable reverberations.

Mr. Coventry Patmore considered Milton even a greater thaumaturge in words than Shakespeare. It is disputable; but to those who, like Mr. Patmore, lean rather towards the classic and Greek than towards the romantic and Gothic school, it may be conceded that Milton is unapproached for his union of Gothic richness with the sculpturesqueness of classic form. Mr. Patmore, who was himself a reconciler of yet more impossible opposites, might well incline a little to Milton. It is impossible to question another opinion of his, that the three chief fountains of wonderful diction are Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton. "What a mine he is of words!" he once exclaimed, regarding Spenser; and Milton himself "mined for words" in both his predecessors, most of all, we think, in Spenser. Mr. Patmore remarks truly that from Spenser he derived even some of the metres thought to be peculiarly his own—for example, the metre of "Lycidas." To a minor extent he used more primitive sources, as in "the swinked hedger" of "Comus." Like all great poets, no soil came amiss to him in prospecting for diction; in spite of his ruling tendency towards the exotic, the polysyllabic, the grandiose, he could use "homespun Saxon" with an enchantment not surpassed by Shakespeare. This needs the more insistence, because his contributions to (as apart from what he drew out of) the treasury of English are notoriously Latinised and stately. The successful, the wonderful Latinisms of Shakespeare have been grossly overlooked. "All the abhorred births below crisp heaven"; "The replication of your sounds made in his concave shores"; "The intertissued robe of gold and pearl"; "Not all these, laid in bed majestical"; here is but a random handful of the supreme Latinities, some become current, others unimitated in poetry, which are first found in Shakespeare. But it is Milton who has been the great lapidary of Latin splendours in the English tongue; solemnities of diction, indeed, so exotic that for the most part they remain among the unprofaned insignia of poetry when she goes forth in state; words never journalised by the "base mechanical hand" of prose. In "Comus" alone can we justly compare him with his great dramatic predecessor, and there we find this essential contrast in the matter of diction; the words of Shakespeare seem to flower from the line, while the Miltonic line is inlaid with rich and chosen words. The distinction may seem, but we think is not, fanciful.

Of his blank verse two men alone could have written with full perception; both have left but slight and casual utterances. One was De Quincey, the other Coventry Patmore. Were the critic fool enough to rush in where the most gifted have feared to tread, not in a journalistic summary could one analyse its colossal harmonies. "Paradise Lost" is the treasury and supreme display of metrical counterpoint. It is to metre what the choruses of Handel are to music.

A poet (to conclude, where we have ventured little more than a prelude) for sheer accomplishment not equalled in our language; in youth capable of luxuriant beauty, in age of "severe magnificence," yet in youth or age without humaneness or heart-blood in his greatness; of over-awing sublimity, yet not ethereal; of concrete solidity, yet not earthly; a poet to whom all must bow the knee, few or none the heart; "the second name of men" in English song, who had gone near to being the first, if his grandeurs, his majesties, his splendours, his august solemnities, had been humid with a tear or a smile. The most inspired artificer in poetry, he lacked, perhaps (or was it a perfecting fault?), a little poetic poverty of soul, a little detachment from his artistic riches. He could not forget, nor can we forget, that he was Milton. And after all—one must confess it was worth remembering. An art so conscious and consummate was never before joined with such plenitude of the spirit.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

SYLVESTER'S "SPRING'S DÉBUT."

(From a Correspondent.)

IN addition to the translations given in his quaint and little-known Laws of Verse, which has long been out of print and is hardly likely to be printed again, the late Prof. Sylvester was the author, when at the Johns Hopkins University, of a rhyming tour de force called Spring's Début, privately issued in 1880. In itself the effort is interesting for the astounding variety of knowledge postulated by its abstruse rhymes, but there also are interesting notes. Spring's Début, which is a fantastic poem in praise of one Mary Winn, of Baltimore, consists of two hundred and thirteen seven-syllabled lines, all ending in rhymes or assonances to this lady's name. Here, for example, is a passage of parallels to the accomplished lady:

"Fine as point-lace or Mechlin,
Circe—but more feminine,
Pamela, artless genuine,
Like loved child of Cymbelin—
Sainted, sweet-souled Imogen,
Not more lively, dear Nell Gwynne,
Dreamier nocturne of Chopin,
Swan-song of weird Lohengrin,
Calmer aureoled Capuchin
Nighed beneath stoue baldaquin,
Loved of the Dryads Evelyn,
Daintier touch of Maturin,
Purer rill of tears, Undine,
Shedde to undoe each staine of sinne,
Prouder, self-ruled Catherine
Ere rose might of Mazarin,
Or who broke to rein Berlin
High autocrat Tzarine,
Pious as Evangeline."

It will be seen that explanatory notes are likely to be needed before the verses are done. As they proceed they become more and more far-fetched.

"He has never consulted, or even had in possession or held in his hand, a rhyming dictionary," says the author proudly, "which it is preposterous," he adds, "to suppose could be of any use in the invention of rhymes running over centuries of (let no ungente reader be tempted to interpolate 'damnable') iteration." The reader, one feels, must be rather disposed to. Prof. Sylvester, it seems, began his feat after hearing the lady whom he praises and a friend of his own exchanging badinage as they passed down Charles-street; whereupon he set to work "intoxicated with the bright sun shining overhead, the balmy air, the song of the birds and the new-come-out Virgin Spring just beginning to peep over Old Father Winter's revered shoulder." History and geography are ransacked to supply the rhymes. Ledru-Rollin, Santorin, Guatemozin, Noor-ed-Din, Custrin, Szegedin, Debreczin, Lin, Apraxin, Golovin, Hamelin, Trissotin—these are a few of the words, all introduced relevantly and with pertinent epithets, which, had the author omitted notes, might puzzle the reader. An examination paper in Spring's Début would floor most candidates.

The notes are entertaining. In explaining who de Cormenin was Prof. Sylvester wrote, "By the causticity of his pen he sealed himself against the door of the Academy"; adding, slyly, "Not more indispensable is snuff to a Highlander than incense to the assembly of the Immortals." In another place he justifies a clipped final "g" in "wainscotin" by telling the reader to see "The Courtin'" by the accomplished United States Minister at the Court of St. James passim. That was, of course, the late Mr. Lowell. Finally, Prof. Sylvester puts on record a very neat pun:

"The author of this expression," he says, "having been called upon to acknowledge a toast to the Universities of the Old World [at a students' reunion in Baltimore], excused himself for being unprepared with a set speech on the ground that he had been busy all the morning, and on the previous evening, when about to arrange the order of his ideas to meet the emergency, had received an invitation (too agreeable to decline) to join some ladies in their box at the Opera . . . to which Mr. Teackle Wallis responded from the chair that he accepted with pleasure the explanation of his honourable friend who had just sat down, and hoped that he would always continue to act in accordance with the maxim 'Opera non verba.'"

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

IN Ramuntcho, M. Pierre Loti's new book, that exquisite writer has surpassed himself. It is, perhaps, not so striking, not so impassioned a book as the older masterpiece, Pêcheur d'Islande, but it has a supreme delicacy of touch, an impersonality, a largeness of design, a softness of colouring, a pervasive sadness more captivating than anything to be found elsewhere in his strange work. This is a Loti purified, ennobled, and no less an artist than the lovely transcriber of personal eroticism. Ramuntcho is full of the vagueness, the beyond, the unanalysable enchantment of distant wheres, the foreign quaintnesses, the unseizable, which form the elusive quality of Loti's unapproachable charm. Is there not a note of the writer's individuality in his characterisation of the Basque young smuggler?

"Through his mind had passed the intuitive inquietude of elsewhere, the thousand other things that may be done and seen in this world and which one may enjoy—a chaos of troubles, half thoughts, hereditary remembrances, and phantoms stole by, furtive indications up from the subsoil of his wild child's soul. . . ."

And, again, the hint repeated:

"In him, the chaos of other things, luminous elsewheres, splendours and terrors foreign to his own life, stirred confusedly, seeking to disentangle themselves."

In the ignorant boy-smuggler these unseizable fluctuations of untutored thought, these vague yearnings after the unknown, the dimly apprehended, remain in a state of permanent confusion, of unsettled aspiration; but one feels that just because Loti himself passed through such a phase of troublous passion for the unknown, the exotic, the outlandish, that he has been able to catch on the wing with such absolute precision this indefinable crisis of yearning youth.

To qualify by hard and fast lines such a prose, an art, as Loti's is a task beyond the trained critic. It is, like his own personality, unquiet, vague, morbid, of an incomparable exquisiteness, with all the subtle simplicity of music calculated to enervate, intoxicate, captivate the senses, drug moral and intellectual feeling. It is a prose instinct with sensation, colour, and melody. In this Basque novel, no less than in his Japanese and African tales, he has seized with surprising deftness and surety the note, the full character of Spanish landscape. Surely no other writer before has so vividly reproduced its aspect of luminous morosity, the marvellous limpidity of the air, the translucence of the heaven, the broad monotonous brilliance of its sunshine, and the massive gloom of its shadow. Loti's word-painting has all the effect of moonlight. Part of its precision, and all of its magic, lie in its very vagueness and the masterly way in which detail is limned and blurred, the weight given to a single line, and in the grand effacement of detail in mass. He speaks of Ramuntcho's complex soul as full of "infinite vibrations, sweetly mournful." So with his own style: sweet mournfulness and infinite vibration sum up its delicate charm.

Ramuntcho should be particularly acceptable in England, for it is a tale of lad and maid. The heroine is actually a young girl, a singularly sweet, dainty little figure of Basque girl, passionate, pure, simple and sincere. Loti has put the best of himself into the portraiture of this gracious little creature, and created an image of superlative freshness. It goes without saying that he does not draw young girls as English novelists do. Race, steps in and gives us something more disturbing, more suggestive—an image of headier perfume, of more essential poetry, something, if I may so express it, more of the fruit than the flower in bud. Gracieuse, blonde-headed, in her peasant's pink bodice, is a figure of pure and delicate witchery, and only French Loti could tell us in adequate prose the poetry of her love-tale. Just as it needed his magic pen to paint us the environment, the quaint village scenes, mass, funerals, the great game of pelota, smuggling expeditions: the smuggler who knifed his man at ease as well as defrauded the Queen-Regent's treasury, and lustily sang in church and attended all the sacred ceremonies; the fine and steadfast figure of Ramuntcho's mother, betrayed in youth by a capricious foreigner, and living bitterly ever afterwards in reserve and solitude; and the young hero, with his pure and beautiful boy's passion for Gracieuse, his inexplicable, agonising oppression under the confused desire for elsewhere, and the unrest of the unexplored, the remote, the unknown.

After the erotic, the sexual, what strikes us in Loti's consciousness in envisaging the problem of existence is the deep sentiment of pity with which he is saturated. Gracieuse's worthless brother tells Ramuntcho, the bastard, that he has his approbation in his suit; and Loti adds: "Poor little forsaken one, so conscious of the humility of his position, that the support of another child, a little better established in life, suffices to give him courage and confidence." Throughout all his work we have evidence of this intuitive penetration of silent and humble suffering, and a redeeming commiseration of it. He has an exquisite perception of inarticulate misery. "With the people," he writes, "the little profound and intimate dramas are played without words, with misunderstandings never cleared up, with words only guessed and obstinate silences." It is these obstinate silences he voices by the means of a sympathy so delicate and inexhaustible as to give the semblance of virtue to what is merely art.

The love of these innocent children, kept unmarried by the hatred of their mothers, is an idyll to compete in national admiration with the old sentimental tale of Paul et Virginie. Around it Loti has gathered some of his most delicious pages.

"They talked together a moment, so low, so low, rather with silence than with words, as if they feared to awaken the birds in their nests. They hardly recognised the sound of their own voices, so changed were they, they trembled so, as if they had committed some delightful and damnable crime only in staying thus close together in the great caressing mystery of that April night."

And, then, when the convent doors close upon Gracieuse, for Ramuntcho

"it is the last of his land, forever, the last of the sweet and delicious dreams of his youth. He is a plant torn up from the dear Basque soil, and which a breath of adventure carries elsewhere."

But who, alas! can hope to analyse the mournful beauty of this enchanting book?

H. L.

NEW BOOKS.

Recommencements. Paul Bourget.
Vie à Paris. Jules Claretie.

THE BOOK MARKET.

BOOKSELLING AS A FINE ART.

BY A BOOKSELLER.

THE bookseller is too frequently regarded as a mere machine, while all the time he is a man of culture who gives laborious days and wakeful nights to his calling in order to anticipate all the wants and necessities of the book-buyer. This work is rendered all the more laborious when it is borne in mind that the reward the bookseller receives is not always in proportion to the care and attention which he devotes to his business. The modest profits which fall to his share in these degenerate days of excessive discounts and keen competition afford him but a poor pittance at the close of his day's labours when compared with the profits of other more lucrative businesses. For this state of affairs I am not disposed to blame the public. It is only natural that a book-buyer should seek to purchase in the cheapest market, and not raise any question as to the present anomalous condition of the bookselling trade.

I must at once discriminate between the bookseller and the publisher, as it is the former with whom I have to do on the present occasion. There was not always a distinction between the one and the other, as the Lintots, the Curlls, and the Tonsons, though they designated themselves booksellers, were at the same time publishers, and it was only in the early years of the present century that booksellers who published books ceased to style themselves booksellers. The bookseller of to-day is to be regarded as a book distributor, and not as a book producer. It has become a fashion in some quarters to belittle his occupation, and not accord him the place which he should occupy in the commonwealth of letters. That he has an important place to fill, and that he seeks to fill it with all his faculties, will be my endeavour to show in this article. That there are booksellers and booksellers I will at once freely admit, and to those who have entered a profession for which they have neither ability nor qualifications I give but scant courtesy.

In many Dissenting churches ministers are selected because they can preach and pray, and if they cannot do either they are quietly told that they should seek some other vocation where these faculties do not come into play. So I say that when a man seeks to enter the bookselling profession, if he has not a sincere love of books and literature, and a prodigious memory, the sooner he quits bookselling the better it will be for himself and the profession into which he seeks to enter. It is impossible to ignore that there are men in "the trade" whose qualifications are of the very slenderest nature, and I should very much like to see them eliminated and applying themselves to some meaner occupation.

On the present occasion I will only deal with those who have some claims to an honourable place in an honourable calling. It is a truism that no business exists which occupies a more conspicuous position or carries with it a more onerous responsibility than that of bookselling in its various branches. The equipment necessary is not to be acquired in a day, nor is it a business to be entered on lightly with a gay heart without thought or consideration.

It is a long, laborious work of years. It requires a long apprenticeship to master the details, and even those who have toiled for thirty or forty years are ever ready to acknowledge that they are learning something new every day. To be able to sell a book intelligently implies that a man must have some idea of its contents, and this is not to be acquired by a mere reading of the title-page. He must possess some knowledge of the author, have some notion of the subject of which the book treats, and an intuitive acquaintance with his customers' requirements. He must have a genius for anticipating the very purpose for which the buyer requires it, and, beyond all this, he must have the book in stock and know that some day or other such a book would be in demand.

The mere knowledge of what books a bookseller should keep in stock, and what he should reject, is in itself a requirement. When one thinks for a moment of the enormous output of new books month by month, it is sufficient to paralyse his efforts in making a selection; but how unerring his judgment is the publisher frequently knows to his cost, when he produces a book which no bookseller will purchase, because he knows that no one will want it. In what is known in the trade as "subscribing" a new book, a bookseller has to form his resolution very quickly as to how many copies he will buy.

He has to bring all his faculties into requisition as to the author's reputation, his knowledge of the subject on which he has written, and the probable number of purchasers he can reckon upon. When a book is "subscribed" the terms before publication are frequently considerably better than can be had later on, and an additional profit of 5, 6, or 7 per cent. is not to be lightly passed over.

Even when making up stock a bookseller is compelled to look ahead and calculate to a nicety as to the continued popularity of a book or its author. The surprising way in which a book drops out of demand is one of the things which a bookseller is also compelled to take into consideration.

If he is not careful in this respect he finds himself weighted with stock which he can neither sell nor utilise in any way, and the prospect of the sale of his overstock in Chancery-lane is neither invigorating nor satisfactory. When it is borne in mind that nearly four thousand new books and new editions are produced every year and brought under the bookseller's notice, it will at once be apparent that some judgment is necessary in making his purchases, and that he must possess some other than ordinary mercantile ideas as to their literary value. It is no use speaking of books to his customer if he cannot at the same time lay his hands on them and say to the beginner in literature—"This is the book that will suit your purpose, or guide you in your present course of study." The bookseller who can do this is really a bleeding to any community, and exercises an ameliorating influence which not even the custodian of a public library can effect.

When the present generation of booksellers passes away it is becoming exceedingly doubtful if there is a class of booksellers' assistants coming forward to take their places, and to test this point I formulated about four or five years ago a scheme for holding examinations of those assistants who would submit themselves to have their knowledge of books tested, and on various other matters necessary for a bookseller to know.

At the first, and only, examination sixteen young men and one young lady presented themselves before the examiners appointed by the London Booksellers' Society, who had previously prepared a series of written questions, and these questions, I am bound to acknowledge, were answered very intelligently by many of the candidates; and I have good reason for believing that the certificates granted on that occasion have been of considerable service to those who received them.

There has been, I regret to say, no other examination held, owing, I fear, to the supineness of some of the officials of the Booksellers' Society.

I am, however, hopeful of seeing these examinations revived in another quarter. That there is a demand for superior assistants is evident from the following advertisement which has just appeared in a leading trade journal: "First-class Booksellers' Assistant wanted for a City house. Must be of gentlemanly address; good salesman; have a thorough knowledge of modern books, standard editions, current literature, &c.; a reader and lover of books preferred. —Apply, &c., &c."

He must indeed be "an Admirable Crichton" who would have the courage to become a claimant for this post; and the emoluments, one would think, would be at least £400 a year, as he would be cheap at that price if he possessed all these qualifications. Given such a man, the stock would fly from the booksellers' shelves to the libraries of the purchasers in less than no time; for no bookbuyer could resist a salesman of such encyclopædic knowledge.

MUSIC.

"FERVAAL."

SUCH is the title of a drame lyrique by M. Vincent d'Indy, recently produced at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels. The composer belongs to the small band of those whose aims are lofty and whose gifts are great, and whose devotion to their art is so genuine that neither the prospect of present fame nor possibly fortune tempts them to swerve from the path which seems to them to lead to Parnassus. "Who can do anything after Beethoven?" once asked Schubert; and now in like manner, no doubt, many musicians feel that after Wagner, writing for the stage is well-nigh hopeless. The mighty genius of Beethoven, although it exercised strong influence over him, did not, however, deter Schubert from attempting; and his two symphonies in B minor and C, to say nothing of other instrumental music, have won for him a distinct and high place in the temple of fame. Mozart assiduously studied Haydn, and Beethoven drew deeply from both sources. And so now the coming composer for the stage, the chef élu, will spring from among those who are seriously meditating over Wagner's art theories, and seeking, through the letter of his music, to discover the spirit which makes it so strong, so irresistible. They run the risk of being called imitators of Wagner, and yet, like the early Christians, they are probably not unwilling to accept a name given to them by their enemies somewhat in contempt. Imitation is inevitable: the more artistic the nature the more susceptible is it to influences from without; and, within certain limits, it is no actual sign of weakness. Coming events cast their shadows before them, and readers will already guess that M. d'Indy's "Fervaal" shows Wagnerian tendencies. There is no mistake about it. Yet M. d'Indy is not so much imitating as passing through a process of assimilation. And the same remark will apply to the music: it constantly reminds one of Wagner, though, for the most part, in the abstract rather than the concrete.

The Celt Fervaal, the last descendant of a divine race of chiefs, has been attacked by Saracens and wounded; Guilhen, daughter of the victorious Saracen emir, happening to pass by, takes pity on him and wishes to remove him. Arfagard, a high-priest of the Druids, who is guarding Fervaal, protests loudly, while Fervaal himself, in accordance with a vow taken, curses the love of woman; the arguments of the fair maiden at length soften the priest's opposition, while her soft, sympathetic manner overcomes all resistance on the part of the wounded hero, who is taken away to the emir's castle to be tended by the lady herself. Thus ends the prologue. In act i. Arfagard visits Fervaal, who, now recovered, is reposing in the garden of the palace. Enemies threaten the country of Cravann, and the priest bids him put on his armour and fight for home and for the ancient divinities. An oracle, it seems, has proclaimed the decline of Esus, and the advent of a new god, Yésus; of a new era in which love will prove the conquering force. Guilhen afterwards appears, and, as Armida Roland, so she tries to persuade Fervaal to remain. He, however, summons up courage and departs; Guilhen's ardent love changes to fierce hatred, and she vows vengeance on her lover and also on Cravann. In act ii. Fervaal is unanimously elected chief of the army, but he has broken his oath to renounce love, and considers himself unworthy of the honour conferred upon him. The gods fail him in the hour of battle, and in the last act Fervaal, wandering among the mountains, meets Arfagard, and offers himself as a sacrifice to appease the offended deities. At that moment the voice of Guilhen is heard, and the youth wishes to rush off and find her. Arfagard bars the way, but falls by the sword of the impetuous lover. Fervaal is soon in the arms of Guilhen; the cold air of the mountains has proved, however, too much for her, and she falls lifeless to the ground. Fervaal lifts her up, ascends the mountain proclaiming all the while, and with prophetic fire, the triumph of love.

The employment throughout of representative themes, and the general style of the music, of course, make everything seem very Wagnerian. The composer, however, has worked in no formal manner; the themes are not added, as it were, to the music: they are its very essence and life. It is open to anyone to object to the system, but the skill and earnestness of M. d'Indy are beyond question. Whatever the public verdict with regard to "Fervaal" it will, as regards the composer, prove, I believe, a stepping-stone to a still higher achievement; though the work of a master it is not a masterwork.

THE notice of "Fervaal" leaves but little room to speak of London concerts. M. Paderewski, however, is so rare a visitor that I must refer to his refined, poetical rendering of Chopin's Concerto in F minor at the Crystal Palace last Saturday. Rubinstein's interpretation of the lovely slow movement was a thing not easily forgotten, and on Paderewski — so far, at least, as Chopin is concerned — seem to have fallen the velvety touch and the rich tone of the great Russian pianist. After Chopin came Liszt. His Concerto in E flat is brilliant, clever, and here and there romantic, yet with less pretension and less noise the Polish achieves more than the Hungarian composer. Paderewski in his reading of Liszt challenges direct comparison with d'Albert. The latter shows greater power and brilliancy, but the former excels in all that concerns heart and soul.

M. LAMOUREUX is now paying us a third visit. At his first concert at the Queen's Hall, on Monday evening, he, or rather he and his orchestra displayed all the precision, finesse and charm which have already won for them so much and such well-deserved praise. The rendering of Mozart's Symphony in C, although perhaps the sadness and longing of the slow movement were not fully expressed, was admirable.

THE music from "Parsifal" proved another success, but not so the rendering of "Meistersinger" Vorspiel; breadth, tenderness, humour, dignity, everything was meant, and yet somehow manqué. The novelty of the evening was a Fantaisie for organ and orchestra by M. Boëllmann. It is a fairly clever work, but not one of any marked importance; and the noise of the concluding section was insufferable. The composer was at the organ, on which instrument he is evidently an able performer. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor on Tuesday evening was good, though not convincing. One felt neither the titanic power of the opening Allegro nor the weirdness or irony of what Beethoven was content to call a Scherzo. Saint-Saën's "Rouet d'Omphale" on Monday evening was the perfection of delicacy.

J. S. S.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE too insistent note of eulogy which has been generally remarked in this book is thus bitterly noted by the Hostile Spectator: "The fervent, nay, breathless anxiety which the writer displays to check away a complimentary or adoring epithet . . . is so naive, so artless, that it is impossible not to be amused." Then follows a severe criticism of Mr. Rhodes's African career, and the notice concludes: "To our mind it is a foolish and injudicious attempt to defend Mr. Rhodes by using the language of adoration and indiscriminate eulogy. But . . . we must also express our firm belief in the complete sincerity and genuineness of conviction shown by the writer." The Pall Mall, after noting the signs of haste, observes: "But when all that is said, this book contains much which ought to shake the convictions of the stern, uncompromising enemy considerably. Dr. Jameson certifies that 'Imperialist' knows his subject, and internal evidence bears him out. And, with all Mr. Rhodes's errors and 'Imperialist's' haste, the latter leaves us with a greatly heightened admiration of the maker of Rhodesia." To the Daily News "what is newest and most interesting in the book is its anecdotic and biographical matter." "The book," writes the Telegraph, "is, of course, the product of reaction. It is the antidote to Olive Schreiner's romantic attacks upon Mr. Rhodes, and to the malignant virulence with which a really great man has been assailed by very little men in this country. It has never been very easy to trace the real motives of this relentless persecution, though it is more than hinted in the pages of this work that the enormous Secret Service Fund at the disposal of President Kruger—it amounted last year to £190,000—may be accountable for it. This appreciation . . . is avowedly partisan. . . . At the same time . . . the brief for Mr. Rhodes should be read by everyone who wishes to know the true inwardness of the South African problem."

"The Little Regiment," By Stephen Crane. (Heinemann.)

THE Pall Mall's "Irresponsible Reader" is delighted to find that Mr. Crane "has, after his rather unsatisfactory excursion to the slums . . . returned to his true métier as a painter of war scenes." This change, according to the Chronicle, is "enormously for the better"—for, "with the exception of Tolstoy, no one we know writes as well of war as Mr. Crane . . . He makes us realise both aspects of it, the noble and the hateful. On the other hand, hear the Telegraph: "We have no clue to whether these tales were written prior or subsequent to The Red Badge of Courage, but assuredly they are vastly inferior to that memorable book." The National Observer is sceptical as to the accuracy of that inspiration which in Mr. Crane's war pictures has to take the place of experience. "A Study in Noise" is the heading of the article in which the book is criticised. "Mr. Crane," writes the Observer, "shows to better advantage where his imagination is not lurid with the blaze of battle."

JOHN C. NIMMO'S DOWNEY & CO'S
NEW BOOKS.

The First Volume of the New Illustrated Edition.
In extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 5s.
per volume net.

THE REV. S. BARING-GOULD'S LIVES OF THE SAINTS.

With a Calendar for every Day in the Year.

New Edition, Revised, with Introduction and Additional Lives of English Martyrs, Cornish and Welsh Saints, and a full Index to the entire Work. Illustrated by over 400 Engravings.

To be published in monthly volumes.

In demy 8vo, about 400 pp., cloth, price 12s. net.

THE OLD ENGLISH BIBLE, AND OTHER ESSAYS.

By the Rev. FRANCIS A. GASQUET, D.D., O.S.B.,

Author of "Henry VIII. and the English Monasteries," &c.

CONTENTS.—I. Notes on Mediæval Monastic Libraries. II. The Monastic Scriptorium. III. A Forgotten English Preacher. IV. The Pre-Reformation English Bible (1). V. The Pre-Reformation English Bible (2). VI. Religious Instruction in England during the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries. VII. A Royal Christmas in the Fifteenth Century. VIII. The Canterbury Clausal School in the Fifteenth Century. IX. The Note Books of William Worcester—a Fifteenth Century Antiquary. X. Hampshire Recusants. With a Complete Index.

In 2 vols., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 21s. net; or in 8 parts, 2s. 6d. net.

PART I. NOW READY.

THE FLORA OF THE ALPS.

Being a Description of all the Species of Flowering Plants indigenous to Switzerland; and of the Alpine Species of the adjacent Mountain Districts of France, Italy, and Austria, including the Pyrenees.

By ALFRED W. BENNETT, M.A., B.Sc., F.L.S., Lecturer on Botany at St. Thomas's Hospital.

With 120 Coloured Plates.

"The whole book forms a valuable contribution to the intelligent enjoyment of a holiday in Switzerland."

"These very beautifully illustrated volumes will be welcomed by the numberless people whose summer holiday is spent in Switzerland or the Alpine districts."

"The illustrations are numerous and accurate."—Times.
"Mr. Bennett gives an adequate description, and one which is both clear and exact, of all the species of flowering plants common to Switzerland."—Standard.

In 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth, £1 10s. net; or in 12 parts, 2s. 6d. net.

PART I. NOW READY.

BRITISH GAMEBIRDS
and WILD FOWL.

By BEVERLEY R. MORRIS, M.D.

Revised and Corrected by W. B. TEGETMEIER,
F.Z.S., M.B.O.U.

With 60 large Plates Coloured by hand.

"The work is handsomely got up, and well printed."

"Has held a unique position among works of its class. The sixty hand-coloured plates are splendidly executed."

"A new and revised edition of this well-known and sumptuous work, issued under the skilful supervision of Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier."—Times.

NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK ON HAMPTON COURT PALACE.

In 1 vol., small 4to, illustrated with 43 Drawings by Herbert Railton, bound in cloth gilt, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

HAMPTON COURT.

By WILLIAM HOLDEN HUTTON, B.D.,

Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford.

"Pen and pencil have worked in harmony, and the whole is imbued with the spirit of the numerous refined and beautiful drawings which the draughtsman, revelling in a thoroughly congenial task, has contributed to the volume."

"Mr. Hutton's description of the art collections is admirable."—Public Opinion.

"Mr. Railton's drawings are picturesque and intensely appreciative."—Magazine of Art.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

LIMITED EDITION OF THE NOVELS OF

CHARLES LEVER.

EDITED BY HIS DAUGHTER.

With all the Original Illustrations on Steel and Wood by PHIZ, CRUIKSHANK, LUKE FILDES, and other Artists.

THE FIRST COMPLETE UNIFORM ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF
CHARLES LEVER'S NOVELS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE SERIES.

THE CONFESSIONS OF HARRY LORREQUER.

With 23 Etchings by PHIZ, is Now Ready.

Full prospectuses on application.

MISS EMILY SOLDENE'S RECOLLECTIONS.

MY THEATRICAL AND MUSICAL RECOLLECTIONS.

Demy 8vo, with Seven Portraits, 10s. 6d.

"I hear everybody is buying the book."

Illustrated London News.

"A veritable mine of anecdote."—Newcastle Leader.

"One of the most diverting and readable autobiographies of recent years."—World.

MR. JOHN O'LEARY'S RECOLLECTIONS.

FENIANS and FENIANISM. By JOHN O'LEARY. 2 vols., with Portraits, 21s.

"I do not remember to have read a more honest book."

The Sketch.

"Not only of exceptional interest, but also of historical value."—New York Herald.

NEW NOVELS.

DID HE DESERVE IT? By Mrs.
RIDDELL. 6s. [Next week.]

A ROGUE'S CONSCIENCE. By David
CHRISTIE MURRAY. 3s. 6d. [1st April.]

A JUSTIFIED SINNER. By Fitz-GERALD MOLLOY. 6s.

"Thoroughly interesting."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Here, in a story of intense interest, is traced the life of a man who makes a mistake in essaying matrimony . . . The story holds the reader's closest attention."—Lloyd's.

"Mr. Molloy has treated his theme with his usual ability."—Glasgow Herald.

DINAH FLEET. By John Hill and
G. F. BACON. 6s.

"We must congratulate the collaborators on 'Dinah Fleet.' . . . There are nearly a dozen characters, and not one of them ever says a dull or stupid thing. Their dialogue is all as smart as smart can be. . . . The book is very lively reading."—Daily Chronicle.

THE DUNTHORPES of WESTLEIGH.

By CHRISTIAN LYS. 6s.

"Even a jaded reviewer found 'The Dunthorpes' kept him awake until long after midnight."—The New Saturday.

A BIT of a FOOL. By Sir Robert
PEEL. 6s.

"A delightful volume. . . . 'A Bit of a Fool' indeed, though it wears the form of a novel, may safely be said, from the moralist's point of view, to have no equal in literature more recent than 'The Confessions of St. Augustine.'"—British Review.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

CONSTANCE. By F. C. Phillips.
1s. 6d., fancy wrapper; 2s., cloth.

THE ADVENTURES of a SHIP'S
DOCTOR. By MORLEY ROBERTS. 2s.

A HOUSE of TEARS. 21st Thousand.
2s.

LONDON:
DOWNEY & CO., LTD., 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL,

ENTITLED

THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

Translated by Mrs. WAUGH (ELLIS WRIGHT).

With Engraved Portrait of Dr. JÓKAI. (Authorised Edition.)

Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

FIFTH EDITION now ready.

"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle.
 Mr. Courtenay says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigal variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."
 "Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pull Mail Gazette.

Other Popular Works by Dr. Maurus Jókai.

AUTHORISED EDITIONS.

BLACK DIAMONDS.

[Third Edition.]

Translated by FRANCES GERARD.

Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s.

Translated by R. NISBET BAIN.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. each.

'MIDST the WILD CARPATHIANS.

[Second Edition.]

PRETTY MICHAL.

[Second Edition.]

NEW "GREENBACK" NOVELS

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN.

By MARGARET MOULE,

Author of "Wingrove's Ways," "Dick's Wife,"
"Miss Maidment," &c.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
 At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

NOW READY.

PRICE 3s. 6d. NET.

WHO'S WHO,
1897.

FORTY-NINTH YEAR OF ISSUE

(Entirely re-modelled).

EDITED BY

DOUGLAS SLADEN.

Contains nearly 6,000 Biographies—mostly autobiographies—of the leading men and women of the day, besides being a complete Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, &c.

CONTENTS IN BRIEF:

PART I.—Tables of Peers, Baronets, Knights, Members of Parliament, and many other tables of a similarly useful nature.

PART II.—Nearly 6,000 Biographies—mostly autobiographies—of the eminent men and women of the day.

PART III.—Lords, Ladies, and Honourables.

COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME.

In crown 8vo, 832 pp., bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners.

Price 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
 SOHO SQUARE.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

APRIL.

OLGA NOVIKOFF (O. K.). "Russia and the Re-discovery of Europe."
 LAURIE MANNUS. "A German Poet of Revolt."
 H. D. TRAILL. "Our Learned Philhellene."
 MAJOR A. GRIFFITHS. "After Khartoum."
 VIRGINIA M. CRAWFORD. "Feminism in France."
 REV. CANON MALCOLM MACOULL. "Crete, an Object Lesson."
 WILLIAM E. BEAR. "Market Wrecking."
 EDWARD SALMON. "1871-1877: East and West."
 NICHOLAS STYNNOTT. "Dangers to British Sea-Power under the Present Rules of Naval Warfare."
 JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS. "The Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland."
 REV. R. F. HORTON, D.D. "The Free Church in England."
 SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, K.C.M.G., LL.D., M.P. "Candia Rediviva."
 REV. W. GRESWELL. "Federalism in South Africa."
 C. D. BAYNES, Editor of The Standard and Diggers' News. "Cecil Rhodes."

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE

EDITED BY OSWALD CRAWFURD,

APRIL.

PRICE SIXPENCE. Contains:

VIOLET HUNT'S NEW NOVEL, entitled

UNKIST, UNKIND! (Serial), and

EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES by

ROGER POOCK, MRS. ERNEST LEVERSON, WINIFRED GRAHAM, BULKLEY CRESWELL, FRED E. WYNN, ELLA MERVILLE, BEATRICE HIRON-MAXWELL, and W. L. ALDEN.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., LONDON.

ANDREW MELROSE'S NEW LIST

TOLD from the RANKS. Recollections of Service during the Queen's Reign. By Privates and Non-Commissioned Officers of the British Army. With Illustrations by W. B. Wollen, R.I. Large imperial 16mo, cloth boards, price 3s. 6d.

NEW WORK ON BIRD LIFE.

BIRDS OF OUR ISLAND. By F. A. Fuleher. Profusely Illustrated. Large imperial 16mo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

BOOKS FOR THE HEART.

Edited by the Rev. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, printed on antique laid paper, cloth boards, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

QUIET HOURS. By John Pulsford, D.D.

With an Introduction by the EDITOR.

THE CONFESSIONS of ST. AUGUSTINE.

With an Introduction by the EDITOR.

Other Volumes in preparation.

16, PILGRIM STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE BEGINNING OF A GREAT LIGHT IN SCIENCE,
 PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION, ULTIMATE TRUTH.

POTENTIE CREATORIS. Med. 8vo, 2s. net.

The Powers (Elohim) by which God creates all things.

"From a literary point of view remarkable."—Scotsman.
 London: J. RUTHERFORD & Co., 428, Strand, W.C.; or Booksellers.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
 AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
 from ONE GUINEA
 per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the
 houses of Subscribers) from TWO
 GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY
 SUBSCRIPTIONS from
 TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
 UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,
 and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and
 post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL,
 SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
 FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
 GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
 at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE PROGRESSIVE REVIEW.

No. 7.—APRIL.—Now Ready. Vol. III.

FAMINE-MAKERS in INDIA.

WALT WHITMAN in 1884.

IS DEMOCRACY a REALITY?

COMBINATION in SHOP-KEEPING.

LAWLESSNESS of the LAW

BABEL REVERSED. HAVLOCK ELLIS, Editor Contemporary

Science Series.

MR. RHODES as CAPITALIST CONSPIRATOR. FORD ASH

GREAT BRITAIN and the EUROPEAN CONCERT. P. J.

CLAYDEN.

THE PROGRESSIVE MOVEMENT ABROAD. Reviews, &

Causative of the Month.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HORACE MARSHALL & Son, Temple House E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REPRODUCTIONS in PERMANENT

PHOTOGRAPHY (the Carbon process) of the chief treasures
 of the Great Continental Galleries, including

THE PUBLIC and PRIVATE GALLERIES of ROME.

THE UFFIZI and PITTI GALLERIES, FLORENCE.

THE ROYAL MUSEUMS of BERLIN and DRESDEN.

THE MUSEUM of the LOUVRE, PARIS.

THE PICTURE GALLERIES of HOLLAND and BELGIUM.

THE MUSEO del PRADO, MADRID.

Etc. Etc. Etc.

This almost exhaustive series of Autotypes includes nearly every work of Art of interest to the Artist, to the Historical Student, and to the Lover of Pictures. The selection of Works to be reproduced has in every instance been made under the advice of eminent Authorities and of the Official Directors of the respective Collections. By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 12 by 18 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of Twelve Shillings each.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

SIR EDW. BURNE-JONES.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

A large series of the Chief Works of these Masters reproduced in various sizes, at prices ranging from 3s. 6d. to Three Guineas.

Full particulars of the Collection of Autotype Reproductions of the Works of Old and Modern Masters will be sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERE HANFSTAENGL of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the

leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Process

in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of

Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,

Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book

Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c.,

&c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS

repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum

monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposit and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

E P P S'S
 GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
 C O C O A

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY.

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

THE WESTMINSTER BUDGET.

A USEFUL COMPANION FOR THE WRITING DESK.

"Everybody agrees with Lord Lytton's king-cardinal that 'the pen is mightier than the sword.' As in other matters in this our day, it goes without saying that there are pens and pens. We are not confined to the reed, the stick, or the goose-quill for writing purposes. The Americans have changed all that. To-day the greatest dunce in facts knows that our cousins across the sea have their almost perpetual ink-well pen within itself, known as the Fountain pen, and also that smaller arrangement for the pocket, the Stylograph. Both are progressive inventions. When these items for writers first came into service there were little faults in their construction that made the user cry out, 'Bother this pen!' But those little irregularities are almost, if not quite, past history. And in many points the Caw Pen Company has been the magician. Caw's Safety Fountain and Stylograph pens have, because of their special points, a repute beyond most of their neighbours on the market. One of the little benefits of the Caw pens is that the pen is always in a well of ink, so that it never gets dry, and from this it follows that there is always a supply of the necessary fluid when the pen is in use, and further the pen never gets choked up; but the great feature of these Caw Safety Pens is the hitherto non-existent advantage that the pen need not be carried in a horizontal position, but can lie in the waistcoat pocket, or be held upside down, without possibility of leakage of ink. Then the 'Hexagon' stylo-pen, as its name infers, is not made as round as a rolling-pin, but is a bevelled plinth, and from this cause it has the happy quality of keeping on the spot where you put it down; hence the pen does not skate off your desk as if it were marble. The cost of the pens varies, of course, according to size and finish. You can invest in Caw's pens in any amount from 5s. up to 30s., and any one of them is a boon in writing. But they will give you all details in regard to each and every one at your stationer's, at the stores, or at the village chemist's shop. The British depôt is 46, Holborn Viaduct. M.P.'s and busy business men, make a note of Caw's pens. There may be a mine of wealth buried in the suggestion."

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

TRUTH.

"The latest Yankee notion in lead pencils: the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

THE EVENING NEWS AND POST (London).

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the 'Blaisdell Paper Pencil.' Penknives, blackened thumbs, and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

BLACK AND WHITE.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

THE LADY.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the 'Blaisdell' variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

"Has the death-day of the cedar pencil arrived? It may be so. At any rate, the 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is an innovation. Your pencil is never pointless—surely a boon to all busy people, be they writers, printers' readers, or warehouse folks; or others, a part of whose business it is to set their mark on this or that item or article."

MORNING LEADER (London).

"The ordinary blacklead pencil in its wooden case if of good quality does not promise much scope to the inventive genius thirsting to discover a real improvement, but a clever American firm have a design in lead pencils that deserves popularity for its ingenuity. The lead is as usual, but round it is wound a thin strip of paper to the ordinary pencil thickness, and slightly notched at intervals, so that a small portion can be removed at a time as the lead wears down, producing an ever-sharpened pencil, always in working order. The new device is known as the 'Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Paper Pencil.'"

THE QUEEN.

"In these hurrying days any invention that tends to economise time and labour is a universal boon, and such a one is the 'Blaisdell' paper pencil, which is winning golden opinions in America, and is now coming into use on this side the Atlantic. What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening! and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated. The 'Blaisdell' pencils are made in various colours."

The BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is

Manufactured in 5 degrees of Graphite, viz.: HB, H, B, HH, BB, price 2d. each.

5 varieties of Colours: Blue, Red, Green, Yellow, Soft Black 3d. ..

Shape, size, and use exactly the same as a cedar pencil;

BUT,

It is covered with paper—not wood! Its point is always perfect—no chips, no dust. It does not waste in re-sharpening—the only wear is the wear of the lead in writing.

☛ SAVES TIME, TROUBLE, AND MONEY.

☛ If not found at any Stationers, a Set of 3 Black and 2 Coloured Pencils will be sent Post Free to any address in the United Kingdom for 1s., by THE BLAISDELL PENCIL COMPANY, Limited, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

EDITED BY GLEESON WHITE AND E. F. STRANGE.

Fully Illustrated, in specially designed green cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. each.

This Series of Monographs in small compass, which has been for some time in preparation, is planned to supply visitors to the great English Cathedrals with accurate Guide-books, and also to present a complete record at a lower price, and more fully illustrated, than any yet published.

CANTERBURY. 127 pages, with 27 Illustrations. | SALISBURY. 115 pages, with 35 Illustrations. | CHESTER. 96 pages, with 23 Illustrations. [Now ready.]ROCHESTER.

[Ready immediately.]

OXFORD.

[Ready immediately.]

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have so frequently in these columns urged the want of cheap, well-illustrated, and well-written handbooks to our cathedrals, to take the place of the out-of-date publications of local booksellers, that we are glad to hear that they have been taken in hand by Messrs. George Bell & Sons."—St. James's Gazette.

"Visitors to the cathedral cities of England must often have felt the need of some work dealing with the history and antiquities of the city itself, and the architecture and associations of the cathedral, more portable than the elaborate monographs which have been devoted to some of them, more scholarly and satisfying than the average local guide-book, and more copious than the section devoted to them in the general guide-book of the county or district. Such a legitimate need the 'Cathedral Series,' now being issued by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, under the editorship of Mr. Gleeson White and Mr. E. F. Strange, seems well calculated to supply. The volumes, two of which, relating to Canterbury and Salisbury, have already been issued, are handy in size, moderate in price, well illustrated, and written in a scholarly spirit. The history of cathedral and city is intelligently set forth, and accompanied by a descriptive survey of the building in all its detail. The illustrations are copious and well selected, and the series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

ACHIEVEMENTS of CAVALRY. By General Sir EVELYN WOOD, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Quartermaster-General. With 20 Maps."This brilliant and fascinating little book."—Daily Chronicle.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GOLF in THEORY and PRACTICE. Some Hints to Beginners. By H. S. C. EVERARD. A Practical Manual. With 23 Illustrations from Life.

"We have read the book 'right off,' as the saying goes, and this because, as in the case of a witching tale, it was difficult to stop. The book is enjoyable and instructive, it is attractive in appearance, clear in its printing, valuable in its contents, and we hope it will have a wide circulation in the world of golf."—Golf.

New and Revised Edition, post 8vo, 2 vols., 15s.

SLANG, JARGON, and CANT. A Dictionary of Unconventional Phraseology, comprising English, American, Colonial, Tinkers', Yiddish, Pidgin, and Anglo-Indian Slang. With Philological Notes and Illustrative Quotations. Compiled and Edited by Professor ALBERT BARRETT, B.A., Woolwich, and CHARLES G. LELAND, M.A., Hon. F.R.S.L., Author of "The English Gypsies and their Language," "Hans Breitman," &c.

ALDINE POETS.—New Volumes.

JAMES THOMSON. Revised Edition, with a New Memoir and Critical Appendix, by the Rev. T. C. TOVEY, M.A., Author of "Gray and his Friends," &c. 2 vols., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net each.KIRKE WHITE. With Memoir by Sir Harris NICOLAS. 2s. 6d. net.

HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

NEW VOLUMES.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR HALES, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE AGE of WORDSWORTH. By Prof. C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D., Professor of English Literature in the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth.THE AGE of MILTON. By J. Bass Mullinger, M.A., University Lecturer in History, and the Rev. J. H. B. MASTERMAN, B.A., late Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge. [Immediately.]THE AGE of TENNYSON. By Professor Hugh Walker. [Immediately.]

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

RECENT AND FORTHCOMING VOLUMES.

Mr. FREDERIC HARRISON, in the DAILY CHRONICLE, April 7th, 1896, says: "Messrs. Bell & Sons are still energetically pursuing their task of adding to and improving the famous series of Bohn's Libraries, which Thomas Carlyle pronounced to be 'the usefulest thing I know,' and are . . . constantly adding to the Libraries, in the new and certainly pleasanter form, reprints of Standard Works, which no gentleman's library should be without."

THE PROSE WORKS of JONATHAN SWIFT.

A New Edition, with an Introduction by W. E. H. LECKY, M.P. In about Eight Volumes, 3s. 6d. each.

Vol. I. "A Tale of a Tub," "The Battle of the Books," and other Early Works. Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT, with Biographical Introduction by W. E. H. LECKY, M.P. With Portrait and Facsimile.

Vol. II. "The Journal to Stella." Edited by F. RYLAND, M.A. With 2 Portraits and Facsimile Letter.

[In the press.]

WORKS of BERKELEY. Edited by George SAMPSON. With Biographical Introduction by the Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P. 3 vols. [Shortly.]LELAND'S ITINERARY. Edited by Laurence GOMME, F.S.A. [In the press.]HORACE. A New Literal Prose Translation. By A. HAMILTON BRYCE, LL.D., Translator and Editor of "Virgil," &c. 3s. 6d.

Also issued in Four Parts, sewed, 1s. each.—Part I., Odes, Books I. and II.—Part II., Odes, Books III. and IV., Carmen Seculare, and Epodes.—Part III., Satires.—Part IV., Epistles and Ars Poetica.

MOTLEY'S HISTORY of the RISE of the DUTCH

REPUBLIC. With a Biographical Introduction by MONCURE D. CONWAY, and Portrait. 3 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

COMTE'S POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY. Translated and Condensed by HARRIET MARTINEAU. With Introduction by FREDERIC HARRISON. 3 vols., 5s. each.

BURTON'S ANATOMY of MELANCHOLY.

Edited by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. With an Introduction by A. H. BULLEN. Portrait of Burton, a reproduction of old engraved Title, and a full Index by W. F. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 3 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

EARLY ESSAYS. By John Stuart Mill. Collected and Edited by J. M. GIBBS. 3s. 6d.

TEN BRINK'S EARLY ENGLISH LITERA-

TURE. Vol. III. (From the Fourteenth Century to the Death of Surrey.) Edited by Dr. ALOIS BRANDL. Translated by L. DORA SCHMITZ. 3s. 6d.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 48, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1300.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1897.

PRICE 3d.

[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES :—
No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1442 lots.)
" 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (782, 732 lots.)
" 53, PHILOSOPHY. (940 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE
LIBRARIES.—THE APRIL CATALOGUE of valuable New and Second-hand Works, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH &
Son, Library Department, 188, Strand, London, W.C.

J. M. WATKINS, 26, Charing Cross, London, S.W.
—Large stock of SECOND-HAND BOOKS on Ancient Religions and Philosophies, Mystical and Occult Works. CATA-LOGUE of Books on Occult Subjects now ready, and sent free on application.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden. 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 3s. 6d. net, eighth
edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction
Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Volumes for prompt consideration.—
Address 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
46, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY for AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TION and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELBY & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

G. R. F. V. E. L. & C. O.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

W. T. HACKER & C. O.,
PUBLISHERS and EXPORTERS,
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co.
Telegrams: MOPUSIL, London. (Established 1819.)

EDITORS in SEARCH of good FICTION should
write for J. F. SPRIGGS'S LIST of OVER ONE HUNDRED
WORKS offered for SERIAL PUBLICATION. The Authors include the most Popular Novelists of the Day.—J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER
SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

CARRIAGES INSURED against ACCIDENTS,
whether caused by collision, the falling, bolting, or kicking of horses, or by being run into by other vehicles. Policies issued for the year or season only. Prospectuses post free.—CARRIAGE INSUR- ANCE COMPANY, Limited, 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.
Agents wanted.

THE DÜRER SOCIETY.

This Society is being formed for the purpose of issuing
Facsimile Reproductions of the Works of ALBERT DÜRER
and his Contemporaries. The Annual Subscription is One Guinea, and the number of members will be limited to 250.

PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.

WALTER CRANE.
CAMPBELL DODGSON.
GEORGE J. FRAMPTON, A.R.A.
G. PERCIVAL GASKELL.
SELWYN IMAGE.
H. C. MARILLIER.
MISS BERTHA NEWCOMBE.
J. BERNARD PARTRIDGE.
FRANK SHORT.
EDWARD F. STRANGE.
GLEESON WHITE.
MISS ALICE B. WOODWARD.
FREDERICK WHELEN, Hon. Treasurer.

Full particulars can be obtained on application to SID M. PEARTREE, Hon. Secretary,
12, Chaloot Gardens,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

TO LITERARY MEN and others. Experienced
M.D. OFFERS HOME to RESIDENT PATIENT or
BOARDER. Good house in sheltered part of Harrogate. Hunting,
Golf, Fishing, &c. Special advantages for Photography, and exceptionally good Library. No children. Close to Baths and Wells.
References given and required.—Apply M.D., Literary Club, Prospect Hotel, Harrogate.

EDUCATIONAL.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE

Cooper's Hill, Staines.

The Course of Study is arranged to fit an Engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1897. The Secretary of State will offer them for Competition Twelve Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and Three Appointments as Assistant
Superintendents in the Telegraph Department.—For particulars
apply to the SECRETARY at the College.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HESS, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.
1897.—EXAMINATION, July 6th, 7th. One of £80, two of £60, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the HEAD
MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MEMORY.—Prof. A. LOISETTE'S ASSIMI-
LATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM.
The last, most complete and perfect edition. Arranged for Self-
Instruction.
Mind-Wandering cured. Speaking without notes. Indispensable in preparing for examinations. Any book learned in one reading.
Cloth bound, with portrait and autograph. Price net 2 dols. 50 cents.
American, 10s. 6d. English. Post free.
Prospectus with opinions of EDUCATORS, SCIENTIFIC, PROFESSIONAL,
and BUSINESS MEN all over the world free.
Address, A. LOISETTE, 227, Fifth Avenue, New York; or
NOT SOLD ELSEWHERE. 200, REGENT STREET, LONDON.

TYPE-WRITING.—MANUSCRIPTS, PLAYS,
&c., COPIED. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words), or 5,000 words and over, 10d. per thousand; if in Two Colours, 1s. per thousand.
Paper included.—Miss NIGHTINGALL, "Springfield," Walkern Road, Stevenage.

TYPE-WRITING neatly, accurately, and exceptionally executed. Scientific MSS. a speciality.—Miss MARTY, 19, Beaumont Street, Portland Place, W.

TYPE-WRITING (Remington Machine).—Author's
MSS. COPIED with care and returned promptly, 10d. per 1,000 words. No charge for paper.—Address "CYPRUS," care of Willings's Advertisement Offices, 162, Piccadilly, London, W.

TYPE-WRITERS and CYCLES.
The Standard makes at half the usual prices.
MACHINES LENT on HIRE, also BOUGHT and EXCHANGED.
Sundries and Repairs to all Machines.
Terms, cash or instalments.
MSS. COPIED from 10d. per 1,000 words.
N. TAYLOR, 74, Chancery Lane, London.
Established 1864.
Telephone 6960. Telegrams "Glossator, London."

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

£40 OFFERED for BURTON'S ARABIAN
NIGHTS, 16 vols.—Z., ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery
Lane, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN, 11, Paternoster Buildings,
London.—Balsac's La Fille aux Yeux d'Or, trans. by Ernest
Dowson, illus. by Chas. Conder. 1896.

WELLHAUSEN'S History of Israel.—Drummond's
Jewish Messiah, Ginsburg's Kabbalah, Cohleth, Massoreth—
Palestine Exploration Fund, 13 vols. Yule's Marco Polo—Behmen's Works, by Law, 4 vols.—Rawlinson's Seven Great Monarchies.—
DICKINSON, 80, Farringdon Street, London.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bozman, Walker,
Giles, Reverley, Cabot, Pace; also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—MORAN, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

ALMANACKS and KALENDARS.—To Booksellers and others.—WANTED, RIDER'S BRITISH MERLIN, bound with the Court Kalendar, or Court and City Register, Lists of Parliament, &c. Any editions before 1750, or a long set.—ARTHUR DASKIN, Windham Club, St. James's Square, London.

LOWE BROTHERS, 23, Cannon Street, Birmingham.
—Zoological Journal, 5 vols., 1828, &c.—Hakewill's Tour in Italy—Percy Anecdotes, vol. 5—Owre's Painting in North Italy, 2 vols.—Skeat's Chaucer, 6 vols.—Alice in Wonderland, early issue—
Brewer's Henry VIII., 2 vols.

B. H. BLACKWELL, 50 and 51, Broad Street, Oxford.—Burns's Works, 4 vols., 8vo, Jack's Edit., without Schilling—Curious Hist. of Greece, Travels, vols. 3, 4, and 5—
Dixon's Hist. of the Ch. of England, 4 vols.—Origines's Hæpale, Ed.
Field, 2 vols., 4to, Oxford.—Ramskin's Memoir of Himself, 12mo, 1718—
Von Sybel's French Revolution, 4 vols.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES.—Any good Plates, or
parcels, purchased for cash.—HENRY HIGHAM, Second-hand
Bookseller, 16, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

THE BEGINNING OF A GREAT LIGHT IN SCIENCE,
PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION, ULTIMATE TRUTH.
POTENTIAL CREATORIS. Med. 8vo, 2s. net.
The Powers (Elohim) by which God creates all things.
"From a literary point of view remarkable."—Scotsman.
London: J. RUTHERFORD & Co., 428, Strand, W.C.; or Booksellers.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERB HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the
leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c.,
&c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY.

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

THE WESTMINSTER BUDGET.

A USEFUL COMPANION FOR THE WRITING DESK.

"Everybody agrees with Lord Lytton's king-cardinal that 'the pen is mightier than the sword.' As in other matters in this our day, it goes without saying that there are pens and pens. We are not confined to the reed, the stick, or the goose-quill for writing purposes. The Americans have changed all that. To-day the greatest dunce in facts knows that our cousins across the sea have their almost perpetual ink-well pen within itself, known as the Fountain pen, and also that smaller arrangement for the pocket, the Stylograph. Both are progressive inventions. When these items for writers first came into service there were little faults in their construction that made the user cry out, 'Bother this pen!' But those little irregularities are almost, if not quite, past history. And in many points the Caw Pen Company has been the magician. Caw's Safety Fountain and Stylograph pens have, because of their special points, a repute beyond most of their neighbours on the market. One of the little benefits of the Caw pens is that the pen is always in a well of ink, so that it never gets dry, and from this it follows that there is always a supply of the necessary fluid when the pen is in use, and further the pen never gets choked up; but the great feature of these Caw Safety Pens is the hitherto non-existent advantage that the pen need not be carried in a horizontal position, but can lie in the waistcoat pocket, or be held upside down, without possibility of leakage of ink. Then the 'Hexagon' stylo-pen, as its name infers, is not made as round as a rolling-pin, but is a bevelled plinth, and from this cause it has the happy quality of keeping on the spot where you put it down; hence the pen does not skate off your desk as if it were marble. The cost of the pens varies, of course, according to size and finish. You can invest in Caw's pens in any amount from 5s. up to 30s., and any one of them is a boon in writing. But they will give you all details in regard to each and every one at your stationer's, at the stores, or at the village chemist's shop. The British depôt is 46, Holborn Viaduct. M.P.'s and busy business men, make a note of Caw's pens. There may be a mine of wealth buried in the suggestion."

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

TRUTH.

"The latest Yankee notion in lead pencils: the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

THE EVENING NEWS AND POST (London).

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the 'Blaisdell Paper Pencil.' Penknives, blackened thumbs, and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

BLACK AND WHITE.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

THE LADY.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the 'Blaisdell' variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

"Has the death-day of the cedar pencil arrived? It may be so. At any rate, the 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is an innovation. Your pencil is never pointless—surely a boon to all busy people, be they writers, printers' readers, or warehouse folks; or others, a part of whose business it is to set their mark on this or that item or article."

MORNING LEADER (London).

"The ordinary blacklead pencil in its wooden case if of good quality does not promise much scope to the inventive genius thirsting to discover a real improvement, but a clever American firm have a design in lead pencils that deserves popularity for its ingenuity. The lead is as usual, but round it is wound a thin strip of paper to the ordinary pencil thickness, and slightly notched at intervals, so that a small portion can be removed at a time as the lead wears down, producing an ever-sharpened pencil, always in working order. The new device is known as the 'Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Paper Pencil.'"

THE QUEEN.

"In these hurrying days any invention that tends to economise time and labour is a universal boon, and such a one is the 'Blaisdell' paper pencil, which is winning golden opinions in America, and is now coming into use on this side the Atlantic. What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening! and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated. The 'Blaisdell' pencils are made in various colours."

The BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is

Manufactured in 5 degrees of Graphite, viz.: HB, H, B, HH, BB, price 2d. each.
5 varieties of Colours: Blue, Red, Green, Yellow, Soft Black 3d. ..

Shape, size, and use exactly the same as a cedar pencil;

BUT,

It is covered with paper—not wood! Its point is always perfect—no chips, no dust. It does not waste in re-sharpening—the only wear is the wear of the lead in writing.

☛ SAVES TIME, TROUBLE, AND MONEY.

☛ If not found at any Stationers, a Set of 3 Black and 2 Coloured Pencils will be sent Post Free to any address in the United Kingdom for 1s., by THE BLAISDELL PENCIL COMPANY, Limited, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

GARDNER, DARTON, & CO.

MONASTICISM, ANCIENT AND MODERN: its Principles, Origin, Development, Triumphs, Decline, and Suppression. With an Inquiry as to the Possibility of its Revival. By the Rev. F. C. WOODHOUSE, M.A. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d. net.

"A useful book of reference for those who have little time for extended reading."—Guardian.

PASTOR in PAROCHIA By the Right Rev. W. WALSHAM HOW, D.D. Twenty-fourth Edition, with Additions, fcap. 8vo, cloth circuit, 2s. 6d.; morocco or calf, 10s. 6d.

THE XXXIX. ARTICLES and the AGE of the REFORMATION: an Historical and Doctrinal Exposition in the Light of Contemporary Documents. By E. TYRRELL GREEN, Lecturer in Theology and Hebrew, St. David's College, Lampeter; sometime Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

"Excellent as they are from various standpoints, the [other] works on the XXXIX. Articles of the Church of England by no means preclude the necessity for such a work as this, which supplies new information from new sources.... The Text of the Articles is given in Latin and in English, with valuable explanatory and historical notes.... In dealing with the wording of the Articles Mr. Green is eminently successful.... The work, moreover, occasionally introduces medieval customs and ceremonies not generally known.... The student of Anglican divinity will find in this volume much valuable information not to be found in similar treatises."—Morning Post.

LOOKING UPWARD: Papers Introductory to the Study of Social Questions from a Religious Point of View. By the Rev. the Hon. JAMES ADDERLEY, M.A., Author of "The New Forest." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"A vigorous treatment of what may be termed Christian Sociology, from on-ward certainly has a moral right, derived from hard experience and self-denial second to none, to speak on this theme."—Daily Chronicle.

THE LIFE of the WAITING SOUL in the INTERMEDIATE STATE. By the Rev. Canon E. E. SANDERSON, D.D., Author of "What is the Church?" Large fcap. 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, red edges, 3s. 6d.

"Dr. Sanderson's nine brief addresses have pleased us very much. They are plain, thoughtful, earnest, and catholic, declaring all that is known, or that may reasonably be held.... and the plain man who wants to know what he may safely believe on the state of the waiting souls and our relation to them has here all that he needs."—Church Times.

WORK in GREAT CITIES. Lectures on Pastoral Theology delivered in the Divinity School, Cambridge. By the Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON INGRAM, M.A., Head of the Oxford House, and Rector of Bethnal Green. With Introductions by the Rev. HERBERT E. RYLE, D.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"We unhesitatingly tell all young workers, lay and clerical, that they are doing themselves and the work great injustice so long as they remain unacquainted with Mr. Ingram's epigrammatic sensible, experienced talk."—Church Times.

"It is most earnestly to be desired that these lectures should be obtained and read through by all candidates for Holy Orders."—Spectator.

SINTRAM and his COMPANIONS and UNDIS. An Illustrated Edition of the Masterpieces by DELA MOTTE FOUQUE. With Introduction by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, and numerous Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

"A better present for a thoughtful lad or lass could hardly be."—Church Times.

THREE GIRLS in a FLAT. By Ethel F. HEDDLE. Illustrated by Gordon Browne, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"One of the brightest bits of recent fiction.... Her adventurous maids are delightful company.... The book is one to be read again and again."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE NATIONAL CHURCHES SERIES.

Edited by P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.

"The general idea of the series is excellent."—Guardian.

"The scheme excites our interest."—Saturday Review.

1. GERMANY. By the Rev. S. Baring-GOULD, M.A. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's contribution is excellent.... one of the best accounts in English of the German Reformation, its real meaning and real effects, that we have ever come across."—Guardian.

2. SPAIN. By the Rev. Frederick Meyrick, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln. With Map. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"It is a really valuable work."—Manchester Examiner.

3. IRELAND. By the Rev. Thomas Olden, M.A. Vicar of Ballylough. With Maps. Cr. 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Seldom has the student of Irish history the good fortune to encounter work so learned and so simple, so instructive and so entertaining, as this brilliant epitome of the history of the early Irish Church."—Albion.

4. THE NETHERLANDS. By the Rev. P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A. With 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

5. SCOTLAND. By the Very Rev. H. M. LUCKOCK, D.D., Dean of Lichfield. With 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"His pages are pecked with facts from which you are at liberty to draw your conclusions, and which he never garbles or distorts with a view to bolstering up his own. He displays a really surprising comprehension of affairs peculiarly Scottish."—National Observer.

6. ITALY. By the Rev. A. B. Pennington, M.A., Canon of Lincoln. With Map. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

7. FRANCE. By the Rev. Richard Travers Smith, D.D., Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, and Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

8. AMERICA. By the Right Rev. Leighton COLEMAN, S.T.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Delaware, U.S.A. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Tells its story in a simple and unassuming way, which is pleasant and instructive, and puts together in a handy form just the information that the general reader most wants to have."—Guardian.

LONDON: GARDNER, DARTON, & CO.,
3, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

APRIL.

OLGA NOVIKOFF (O. K.). "Russia and the Re-discovery of Europe."
LAURIE MAGNUS. "A German Poet of Revolt."
H. D. TRAILL. "Our Learned Philhellene."
MAJOR A. GRIFFITHS. "After Khartoum."
VIRGINIA M. CRAWFORD. "Feminism in France."
REV. CANON MALCOLM MACCOLL. "Crete, an Object Lesson."
WILLIAM E. BEAR. "Market Wrecking."
EDWARD SALMON. "1867—1897: East and West."
NICHOLAS SYNNOTT. "Dangers to British Sea-Power under the Present Rules of Naval Warfare."
JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS. "The Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland."
REV. R. F. HORTON, D.D. "The Free Church in England."
SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, K.C.M.G., LL.D., M.P. "Candia Revivida."
REV. W. GRESWELL. "Federalism in South Africa."
C. D. BAYNES, Editor of The Standard and Diggers News. "Cecil Rhodes."

CECIL RHODES:

A BIOGRAPHY AND APPRECIATION.

By IMPERIALIST.

With PERSONAL REMINISCENCES by Dr. JAMESON.

2 Portraits of Mr. Rhodes and a Map of South Africa.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The TIMES says: "For the first time the theory and practice of Mr. Rhodes's career have been brought together, compared, and put before the public in a readable narrative which covers the whole of his active life.... Few readers, we fancy, will come to the end of the book without feeling that they have gained an insight into the causes of the extraordinary influence exercised by Mr. Rhodes."

NEW BOOK BY W. S. LILLY.

ESSAYS and SPEECHES. By W. S. LILLY, Author of "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought," "A Century of Revolution," &c. Demy 8vo, 12s.

The Contents of the Volume is: Alexander Pope—Professor Green—John Henry Newman: a Memoir—The Temporal Power of the Pope, with a Rejoinder to Signor Crispi—The Making of Germany—Literature and Natural Life—The New Spirit in History.

A NEW WORK ON THE SULTAN AND THE TURKS.

THE SULTAN and his SUBJECTS

By RICHARD DAVEY. With Portraits, Maps, and Plans. 3 vols, demy 8vo.

This work embodies the results of an earnest attempt to set forth the chief characteristics of those heterogeneous nationalities which have, in process of time and by virtue of conquest, fallen under the dominion of the Sultans. It deals with the Turkish people generally, but chiefly with the Turks of Constantinople.

NEW WORK BY COL. G. B. MALLESON.

THE RIVERS and LAKES of AUSTRIA, BAVARIA, and HUNGARY. With a Sketch of the Ambleve and Lignevine in Rhenish Prussia.

By COL. G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This book is, above all things, a handbook to the rivers, lakes, and places indicated in the title. It is especially a guide for anglers, but useful for travellers of all classes. An efficient guide has long been needed to these districts, and Col. Malleison's book aims at supplying the want.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD."

WHITE MAGIC: a Novel. By M. McD.

BODKIN, Q.C., Author of "Lord Edward Fitzgerald: an Historical Romance." Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

A NEW BOOK ON MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

FIRST PRINCIPLES of MECHANICAL and ENGINEERING DRAWING. A Course of Study adapted to the Self-Instruction of Students and Apprentices in Mechanical Engineering in all its Branches, and for the Use of Teachers in Technical and Manual Instruction Schools. By H. HOLT BUTTERFILL, M.E., formerly a Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers and Institution of Naval Architects. With upwards of 350 Diagrams in Illustration of the Principles of the Subject. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A NEW TREATISE ON PRACTICAL GEOMETRY.

PRACTICAL PLANE and SOLID

GEOMETRY: a Treatise containing Solutions to the Honours Questions set at the Examinations of the Science and Art Department (1867-1896 inclusive). By T. J. EVANS and W. F. PULLEN (S.W. London Polytechnic Institute). Demy 8vo, 9s. [Ready.]

A NEW TREATISE ON PRACTICAL GEOMETRY.

PRACTICAL PLANE and SOLID

GEOMETRY: a Treatise containing Solutions to the Honours Questions set at the Examinations of the Science and Art Department (1867-1896 inclusive). By T. J. EVANS and W. F. PULLEN (S.W. London Polytechnic Institute). Demy 8vo, 9s. [Ready.]

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE

EDITED BY OSWALD CRAWFORD,

APRIL.

PRICE SIXPENCE. Contains:

VIOLET HUNT'S NEW NOVEL, entitled

UNKIST, UNKIND! (Serial), and

EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES by

ROGER POOCK, Mrs. ERNEST LEVERSON, WINIFRED GRAHAM, BULKLEY GRESWELL, FRED E. WYNN, ELIA MERVILLE, BEATRICE HERON-MAXWELL, and W. L. ALDEN.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

ACADEMY NOTES, 1897, with Illustrations of the Principal Pictures at Burlington House, will be published as usual on the OPENING DAY of the ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION. Price ONE SHILLING.

The following NEW and CHEAPER EDITIONS will be ready on April 8:—

GHETTO TRAGEDIES. By I. Zangwill. With 3 Illustrations by A. S. Boyd. Large fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

A POINT of CONSCIENCE. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE WHITE VIRGIN. By G. Manville FENN. Post 8vo, boards, 2s.

THE HARDING SCANDAL. By Frank BARRETT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LOVIE. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD, Author of "Molly Bawn." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"In 'Dolly' and the rest we recognise the old, light, humorous touch which is distinctly Mrs. Hungerford's own.... 'Lovie' will not fail of widening the popularity of its author, and deepen the regret of her numerous admirers that it can have no successor."—Glasgow Herald.

DULCIE EVERTON. By E. Lynn Linton. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

"A strong and impressive story."—Daily Telegraph.

CAVALRY LIFE and REGIMENTAL LEGENDS. By JOHN STRANGE WINTER. A New Edition. The Two Series in One Volume. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE GOOD SHIP "MOHOOK." By W. CLARK RUSSELL. Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

BEYOND the PALE: an Irish Romance. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington." Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"Mrs. Croker's knowledge of Irish life and character is revealed in its strength and fulness in this capital story. It is the Ireland of to-day.... The minor characters are as well and truly drawn as the important, and the story overbears with life, and is the best told of Irish stories we have read for many a day."—Daily Chronicle.

WITH the RED EAGLE: a Romance of the Tyrol. By WILLIAM WESTALL. THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"Like Mrs. Croker and Mr. Anthony Hope, Mr. William Westall must be counted of the tribe of benefactors whose aim is to cheer, to amuse, and to entertain, rather than to harass, to browbeat, and to horrify their readers.... Mr. Westall is in love with his subject, he knows the ground right well, and the result is a rattling tale of military adventure, with a pleasant undercurrent of romance.... A tall, brim-full of exciting incident, and told with that buoyant geniality and straightforward simplicity which long ago earned Mr. Westall his honourable place among the story-tellers of his generation."—Spectator.

SEBASTIAN'S SECRET. By S. E. Waller. Illustrated by the author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"...A novelist who failed to make an exciting tale out of such weird material would be lacking in the first principles of his craft."—Daily Telegraph.

A MISSING WITNESS. By Frank Barrett, Author of "The Sin of Olga Zassoulou." With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Barrett has a happy knack of putting his readers in a good humour with himself, his book and life.... A wrong righted, a villain brought to justice, and two happy love stories should suffice to fill an idle hour very pleasantly."—Bookman.

THE QUEEN'S REIGN.

FIFTY YEARS AGO. By Sir Walter Besant. With 144 Plates and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

NEW TWO-SHILLING NOVELS

MOUNT DESPAIR. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.

BEYOND the DREAMS of AVARICE. By Sir Walter BESANT.

AT MARKET VALUE. By GRANT ALLEN.

THE PRINCE of BALKISTAN. By ALLEN UPWARD.

LADY PATTY. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

THE OUTSIDER. By HAWLEY SMART.

BY WOMAN'S WIT. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE MASTER of TRENBANE. By T. W. SPEIGHT.

AN ANXIOUS MOMENT. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD.

APRIL'S LADY. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD.

NEW POPULAR EDITION OF

MARK TWAIN'S WORKS.

The following are now ready, crown 8vo, blue cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

THE PRINCE and the PAUPER. With 190 Illustrations.

ROUGHING IT; and The INNOCENTS at HOME. With 200 Illustrations.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMANT. With 81 Illustrations.

TOM SAWYER ABROAD. With 26 Illustrations.

TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE. With Photogravure.

PUD'NHEAD WILSON. With Portrait and 6 Illustrations.

MARK TWAIN'S LIBRARY of HUMOUR. With 197 Illustrations.

THE £1,000,000 BANK-NOTE.

A TRAMP ABROAD. With 314 Illustrations.

THE STOLEN WHITE ELEPHANT.

MADAME SANS-GENE. Founded on BARDOU and MOREAU'S Play. By EDMOND LEPELLE-TIER. Translated from the French by JOHN DE VILLIERS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1897.

1. DEAR FAUSTINA. Chaps. 10-12.
2. THE PARSON'S DAUGHTER at DEAL.
3. PLAIN LIVING and HIGH THINKING.
4. THE BIRDS of TENNYSON.
5. THE RUSTIC'S GOAL.
6. AN IDEAL LADY LETTER-WRITER.
7. IN the GATEWAY.
8. PROSPECTS of LITERATURE.
9. A DISCIPLE of an OLD CREED.
10. MONSIEUR DUVAL.
11. THE CAREER of CLAUDIA. Conclusion.

SIXTEENTH EDITION NOW READY.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Forty-one Years in India:

FROM SUBALTERN TO COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

By FIELD-MARSHAL

LORD ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR, V.C.

Besides Maps and Plans, the Volumes contain Portraits on Steel and Copper.

"Lord Roberts's narrative traverses all the critical periods of Indian war and politics during the last forty years. He writes of them as an eye-witness, as an expert, and latterly as the chief actor in the closing scenes of an eventful drama; his story produces the vivid impression which comes out of accurate knowledge and strange personal experiences."—Spectator.

"A book which is at once intensely interesting and exciting, and at the same time supplies a vast quantity of first-hand knowledge, invaluable alike to the statesman and the political student. And, last of all, it is a remarkable revelation of the type of character rare in all ages—that of a man at once great and fortunate who has remained simple, modest, and unspoiled by success."—World.

NOW READY.

THE JERNINGHAM LETTERS.

Edited, with Notes, by EGERTON CASTLE, M.A., F.S.A. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

NOW READY.

ON SOUTHERN ENGLISH ROADS.

By J. J. HISSEY. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

NOW READY.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN:

a Biography. By W. FRASER RAE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 26s.

NOW READY.

AUSTRALIAN WRITERS. By J. F.

DESMOND BYRNE. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THREE NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

THE CAREER of CLAUDIA. By

F. M. PEARD, Author of "The Rose Garden," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE BACKSLIDER. By Constance

SMITH, Author of "The Repentance of Paul Wentworth." In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE MISTRESS of BRAE FARM.

By ROSA N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW ISSUE OF THE NOVELS of Mrs. HENRY WOOD

THE STORY OF CHARLES STRANGE
(Fifteenth Thousand)

IS NOW READY.

In red cloth, gold lettered on side, similar to the 3s. 6d. Edition, 2s. 6d.

In green cloth, gold lettered on back, but with a plainer binding, 2s.

To be followed at regular intervals by the other Stories in the Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. FRANK STOCK-
TON'S new Work,
A STORYTELLER'S
PACK, will be published shortly, price 6s.

A New Story, by W. G.
TARBET, entitled
ILL-GOTTEN GOLD: a Story of a Great Wrong and a Great Revenge, will be ready in a few days, price 6s.

Mr. S. WALKER'S new Romance, ROGUES of the "FIERY CROSS," will be published shortly,
price 5s.

NOTICE.—The Sixth and concluding Volume of SOCIAL ENGLAND,
embracing the Period from the Battle of Waterloo to the General Election of 1885, will be published shortly,
price 18s.

THE NEW IMPORTANT ILLUSTRATED
WORK on the CHURCH of ENGLAND

Vol. I. ready shortly, price 6s.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A History for the People.

By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D.,
Dean of Gloucester.

Beautifully illustrated throughout.

To be completed in 4 vols.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LONDON, PARIS, AND MELBOURNE.MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

BY THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

CYPRIAN:

HIS LIFE, HIS TIMES, HIS WORK.

BY

EDWARD WHITE BENSON, D.D., D.C.L., SOMETIME ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

8vo, 21s. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Full of rare and recondite learning, and written in a concise and engaging style. No person certainly can read it, or, indeed, any chapter of it, without edification."

FIFTH THOUSAND NOW READY.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.

With 10 Full-page and numerous Text Illustrations.
Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

BY THE LATE EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

SKETCHES of TRAVELS in NORMANDY and MAINE. By EDWARD A. FREE-
MAN. With Illustrations from Drawings by the Author, and a Preface by W. H. HUTCHINSON, B.D.
Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

GUESSES at the RIDDLE of EXISTENCE, and other ESSAYS on KINDRED SUBJECTS. By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L., Author of "Canada and the Canadian Question," Essays on Questions of the Day," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
ATHENÆUM.—"Deserves to be widely read."

1897 ISSUE, NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR

BOOK. A Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilized World for the Year 1897. Thirty-fourth Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns. Edited by J. SCOTT-KELTIE. With Maps.
Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"It is, as usual, the most important of all the books of reference for the politician and the statistician."

NEW NOVEL BY CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

The PILGRIMAGE of the BEN

BERIAH. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.
SCOTSMAN.—"The hand of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge has not lost its cunning with the burden of years. It is a book one feels glad to have read."

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE QUEEN of the MOOR.

A Tale of Dartmoor in the Days of Waterloo. By FREDERICK ADYE.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A very pretty little plot of adventure and love is woven out of this material. In-terpersed, but not too frequently, are some hunting scenes drawn with great spirit."

VOLUME VI, NOW READY.

EMINENT PERSONS. Bio-

ographies Reprinted from The Times, Vol. VI, 1893-94.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Containing, amongst others,
Professor Jowett, Sir Samuel Baker, Lord Coleridge,
The Tsar Alexander III.

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

New Volumes.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, antique paper, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock"

Edition, gilt sides, back, and edges, 5s.

POOR JACK. By Captain

MARRYAT. Illustrated by Fred. Pagam. With an Introduction by DAVID HANNAY.

3to, 21s.

THE MYCENÆAN AGE. A

Study of the Monuments and Culture of Pre-Homeric Greece. By Dr. CHRESTOS TSOUNTAS, Ephor of Antiquities and Director of Excavations at Mycenæ, and Professor J. IRVING MANATT, Ph.D., LL.D.
With an Introduction by Dr. DORPFELD.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
The Master	369
Landscape in Poetry	370
The Comic Spirit	371
Belles of Primeval Life	372
Greek Writers	373
Mr. Oman's History	373
Vita Medica	374
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	375
FICTION:
Flames—Guavas the Tinner—Saint Eva—Glamour
—A Spotless Reputation—Kakemonos—Colour
Sergeant, No. 1 Company—Charaka Puja—The Fields of Fair Renown—Ring o' Rushes	376
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	378
New Books Received	379
NOTES AND NEWS	379
"THE WELL-BELOVED"	381
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XXL, William Cowper	381
THE RECREATIONS OF LITERARY MEN	381
THE CARE OF BOOKS	382
THE BOOK MARKET	382
More Windows	383
DRAMA	383
MUSIC	384
SCIENCE	385
ART	386
CORRESPONDENCE	386
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	386

REVIEWS.

THE MASTER.

The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford. By Evelyn Abbott and Lewis Campbell. (John Murray.)

THIS is the authoritative record of him who for several generations, not by Balliol only, but by all Oxford, was spoken of fondly and familiarly as "The Master." To the outer world, knowing Jowett hitherto but by the rhapsody of Mr. Swinburne or the presentment of the Boswellian Mr. Tollemache, it should come as a revelation of one of the most fascinating, and probably one of the most potent, personalities of the century. All praise is due to Prof. Campbell and Dr. Evelyn Abbott, old pupils and friends of Jowett, for the way in which they have accomplished their difficult task. Dr. Abbott, in particular, whom we knew to be learned, displays considerable literary gifts in that volume, the second, which falls to his share. Terse, pungent, not wholly discreet, he has produced, both by narrative and selection, a most salient and sympathetic portrait of the man he would honour. The real Jowett probably eludes description; so far as an impalpable influence can be formulated, it is done in these pages.

Prof. Jowett came of a Yorkshire family who from yeomen had become for the most part clergymen of the Evangelical type. His father, though not in orders, was the friend and devoted fellow-worker of Lord Shaftesbury. The youthful Benjamin was sent to St. Paul's, where he is described as "a pretty looking boy-youth who wore a perpetual sort of green sateen which never got, in my time, to the dignity of a coat tail, but stuck to the less dignified one of a jacket." Just as Milton was known as "The Lady of Christ's," so was Jowett to his school-fellows "Miss Jowett." It was still in a round jacket and a turned-down collar that Jowett came as a scholar to Balliol in 1835, and won from Mrs. Grote the nickname of "The Cherub." As an undergraduate he was something of a recluse, and so obviously poor that his friends hesitated to accept his invitations to tea. His tutors were Tait, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, and Robert Scott, part author of the great lexicon. In 1839 he had the almost unprecedented success of being chosen Fellow of Balliol while still a scholar. "We have elected," said Dr. Jenkyns, the Master, "a little child." At this time Jowett's chief friends were W. G. Ward, of "Ideal" fame, and A. P. Stanley, who became his lifelong ally. Under the influence of Ward he nearly threw in his lot with the followers of Newman:

"I sometimes think," he said about 1856, "that but for some divine providence I might have become a Roman Catholic. I had resolved to read through the Fathers, and if I found Puseyism there I was to become a Puseyite. It is not unlikely that I might have found it, but before I had gone through my task the vacation ended, and on returning to Oxford we found that Ward was going to be married! After that the Tractarian impulse subsided, and while some of us took to German Philosophy, others turned to lobster suppers and champagne. They called that 'being unworldly.'"

Jowett was one of those who took to German Philosophy. He came under the influence of Hegel, and with Stanley and such converts from Newmanism as Froude and Pattison, formed the little group of Oxford Liberals. While remaining firm against the official persecution of the Tractarians by the Evangelicals, they devoted themselves to the rational study of theology, and to the practical question of University reform. These two subjects occupied much of Jowett's energies for many years, but they were always subordinate to the work of the college tutorship which he accepted in 1842.

"In this," says Prof. Campbell, "he laboured as if it were the sole purpose of his life; turning all other interests to account in ennobling and enriching this. It might without exaggeration be said of him in relation to his pupils that 'all things were for their sakes.'"

Under his care Balliol rapidly came to the front; a cult of him grew up among his pupils and ex-pupils, and through them he became a persona grata in the larger world. In 1854 he fell upon evil days of disappointment and persecution. He failed to be elected Master of his college, and though he was made Regius Professor of Greek, that professorship was practically without emoluments, and neither the University nor Christ Church could be persuaded for many years to endow it. This was largely due to the High Church dislike of Jowett's heterodox theology. The essay on the Atonement in his Epistles of St. Paul (1855) and the essay on the Interpretation of Scripture in Essays and Reviews (1860) brought the hornets about his ears. He never forgot the blow to his position as a teacher which followed the reception of these essays. Moreover, he was still a poor man, and had to devote much of his income to the support of his parents. He now put aside the design of marrying, and this loss also he felt to the end. In the meantime his hold upon his pupils and his college was growing. He became Master of Balliol at last, in 1870. In the same year was published his great translation of Plato. Until his death, in 1893, he presided over the destinies of his college, and to a large extent, especially during his Vice-Chancellorship of 1882-1886, over those of the University. He continued, by reading-parties and otherwise, the habit of intimate personal intercourse with as many of the undergraduates as possible. His "young men" filled Church and State. He was the friend and counsellor of many of the great, wise, and eminent of the nation, and at his death seven Heads of Houses who had been his pupils bore the pall.

It is difficult for those who did not come directly under the influence of this great man to fully understand the "secret of Jowett." In the Oxford of his last ten years he still loomed large. Those who did not willingly attend divine service elsewhere crowded the Balliol chapel to hear him preach. But with admiration was mingled criticism. He was said to domineer the Hebdomadal Council, and to be a past master in the art of obstruction; he was said to doze before the fire under the cover of abstract thought; he was said to be a tuft-hunter; he was said—quite untruly, we are sure—to take pleasure in making young men uncomfortable by inconvenient questions or studied rudeness. The fact is, that during this period, for all his reputation, he was isolated in Oxford. He could not cast in his lot with the reactionaries, for that would have meant an alliance with the clergy who distrusted him, and whom he despised; and with the later Oxford Liberalism he was hardly in sympathy. It was markedly political, and Jowett was neither a democrat nor a Home Ruler. To women's education he gave a half-hearted support, thinking it a somewhat hazardous and doubtful experiment. University Extension, though he worked for it, was a subject for irony. Of the younger generation of dons he had but a small opinion:

"They want to marry," he said, "and they have no money. They want to write, and have no originality. They want to be scholars and have no industry. They want to be fine gentlemen and are deficient in manners. When they have families they will be at their wits' end to know how to provide for them. Many of them have the fretfulness of parvenus, and will always have this unfortunate temper of mind."

This was the Jowett of the Vice-Chancellorship; the Jowett of the forty years from 1840 to 1880, and the Jowett to the last of those with whom he was in touch, we may find in the pages of the Life and Letters. What, then, was it that Jowett did for Oxford? Much of a tangible kind, in actual reform, in the humanising of her studies, in the methodising of her examinations: much, also, in the widening of her borders and the liberalising of her theology; most of all, perhaps, in the Platonising of her philosophy. Between the Aristotelian and the Platonic mode of thought there is all the world; and it is not going too far to say that Jowett found Oxford Aristotelian, and left her Platonic. He insisted on the Republic, and the Republic, not the Ethics or the Analogy, is now the leading text-book of the schools. Jowett did much, but it is clear from what Prof. Campbell and Dr. Abbott have to tell us, and from the testimonies of others which they have collected, that it is not by what he did, but by what he was, that he will be remembered. His real greatness was in the intimate influence over the plastic minds of the young, which is the prerogative of the heaven-sent teacher. Whatever else Jowett was, he was a teacher first, and witness after witness comes to acknowledge the infinite pains, the unexampled tact, the unflinching sympathy, the unconquerable idealism which he brought to bear in his relations with his pupils. He founded no philosophical school; he had not, like his friend Thomas Hill Green, a system; but he had the power, less intellectual than moral, of stimulus, which is at the heart of all education; he had the genius for bestowing and inspiring affection, and, shy scholar as he was, he was able to bring men face to face with their best selves, to spur them on by encouragement and warning to the utmost efforts of which they were capable. The influence of a Jowett, as of a Socrates, eludes definition; something of it breathes through his letters, especially through the series addressed to Dean Stanley, of whose brilliant, but less stable, disposition he was always the Mentor, and through those written towards the close of his life to two girl friends, Miss C. M. Symonds and Miss Margot Tennant, now Mrs. Asquith. Jowett's letters are admirable, alike for their ethical fervour, for their delicate and gracious humanity, and for the Attic salt of their composition. Two specimens may serve to illustrate the last of these characteristics. Of Bishop Samuel Wilberforce he writes that he is an excellent man "if you do not mind being semi-humbugged by a semi-humbug"; and again:

"I am always sorry when an eminent man dies, even when I think the continuance of his life rather an evil than a good; yet I do not think that he was worse than about half the bishops, but he was more versatile and able."

And of Archbishop Tait:

"The Archbishop was always a very kind friend to me, though in the book he says that he thought I had a curious mind because I took absolutely no interest in these ritual controversies. He was quite right, and I wonder how he or anybody else could take an interest in them. He was an excellent man and a gentleman, very good and very Scotch; but I miss in the book, as I used to miss in his conversation, any interest about truth in the higher sense. He did not seem to think that it was of the least importance compared with 'keeping the Church together.' If he had possessed this element he would have been a great man."

It will probably be a surprise to many to find how far Jowett diverged in later life from the position of theological orthodoxy. The Essays and Reviews were a starting rather than a terminal point. Miracles, for instance, which he accepted in 1846, appeared to him a superstition in 1876. In the same year he writes:

"Were the writers of the New Testament inspired when they wrote in any other sense than they were during the rest of their lives? . . . Is there any difference between St. Bernard and Plato except that they were men of genius of a different kind—the one a religious genius, the other a philosophical and poetical genius? . . . If so, every great and good man is inspired, or none at all, and all the great thoughts of mankind are to be treated as part of the sacred inheritance."

Yet with growing unorthodoxy we may trace a growing spirituality. In a private note-book he writes:

"Morning and evening prayers are almost impossible to me. Church is difficult; but I desire more and more never to let a day pass without some idea or aspiration arising in my mind; and this appears to be retained. I am always thinking of death and of God, and of the improvement of human nature, though sometimes interrupted by false and petty conceits of self."

Among Jowett's minor services to Oxford we may note the encouragement of the theatre during his Vice-Chancellorship, and the introduction of Sunday concerts into Balliol. He was generous in money matters, and gave the college a great organ and, though he was no athlete, a cricket-ground. His taste in English letters was fine, if not catholic. Shakespeare's Comedies, Boswell's Johnson, and Selden's Table-Talk were his favourite books. He greatly admired Tennyson and George Eliot, who were among his personal friends. Shelley he did not appreciate either as man or poet. "They had better have left him where the late Mrs. Shelley left him, for it is impossible to convert him into a decent or honourable man." About Browning, though he made him an Honorary Fellow of Balliol, he was doubtful. "Porphyria's Lover" he thought "poor, sad stuff." Of "Christmas Eve and Easter Day" he wrote:

"It is Browning's noblest work, written in his highest, though a fluctuating mood of mind. . . . He deepens many things, unveils and unfolds human nature, but he deepens them into greater scepticism; there is no rest in him. He is also very extravagant, perverse, topsyturvy, obscure; he has art without beauty, and a grim humour hardly intelligible. Nowhere is he really affected by the great themes of poets—love, or ambition, or enthusiasm. Isolated in the world, μυρίστους ἀνὴρ, neither epic nor dramatic, but semi-dramatic."

The criticism seems to throw light rather upon Jowett's limitations than upon Browning's.

Two literary schemes Jowett never lived to realise. He intended a Life of Christ and an Essay on Morals. The Greek professorship came first, and the translations of Plato, Aristotle, and Thucydides, even with the help of younger scholars, were a laborious achievement. Yet the vanishing of those dreams the world will not fail to regret.

LANDSCAPE IN POETRY.

Landscape in Poetry from Homer to Tennyson.
By Francis T. Palgrave, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford.
(Macmillan & Co.)

A REVIEW of poetry in antiquity—Hebrew, Greek, Latin; in the "dark" ages; in the thirteenth-century dawn of a second long European day; in even the measurable best of Italy; nay, in England herself before Elizabeth or between Charles the Second and the end of the eighteenth century—this might have yielded a landscape well within the range of an historian's eyes. But it was hardly possible to see, to describe, to name, the landscape of the Shakesperian poetry, or that of the poetry of the century just closing, as the poets of England and of France have sung its beauty, its days and nights, its seasons, its mystery, its manifold inspirations. The only approximately just way would have been to take the most beautiful, the most representative of the modern landscape-passages. Let us say at once, then, that the first part of Mr. Palgrave's book is the best. And his best is, needless to say, most excellent. He is enthusiastic without excitement—a last century writer would have said zealous without enthusiasm; that is, he never loses the sense of relation, never lets the critic's memory, which has to check present and pressing experiences, grow used or dull. He makes, moreover, no vertical divisions among the poets, excluding these on the plea that theirs are alien heights, fencing in the heights he loves; for him there are no alien heights, and he makes no division, except the horizontal line that divides the highest from the lower, and the lower into degrees. Or this is his intention, and that intention forms his credentials, and gave authority to the Golden Treasury. But in the present work there is an inevitable arbitrariness. There is too much of fine landscape in modern poetry to be treated in the latter part of a rather small volume. It is rather to be regretted that such a book as Landscape in Poetry must have the appearance of an anthology. For it is only against an anthology, challenging the judgment of readers whether all the gathered poems are not conspicuously the best of their kind, that a complaint will lie. In a word, Mr. Francis Turner Palgrave has taken the opportunity of his book on landscape to distinguish one or two minor modern poets by citation, where there was not room enough for passages from the greater poems of the greatest poets. He was perfectly free to do this. It may, perhaps, be even the most interesting partial manner of doing what there was not space to do completely. It is, perhaps, because of the Golden Treasury that we expected from Mr. T. Palgrave an unwinking responsibility.

It seems to us that from this unrelaxed attitude of authority he has dispensed himself in the latter part of the present valuable work. In the first part he takes the judicial position of a historian who is also a ruling critic, and whose signals are watched by students. But the historian's special part is the more important and the foremost in the work of surveying the landscape of older literature. It is one of the happiest tasks in all literature to gather the passages of landscape poetry from the Greek epic—they are so few, so lonely, and so fine. They stand, as it were, with the atmosphere around them and the light upon them. They have the respect of ages, without which their simplicity would go uncrowned, and the attention of ages, without which their singleness would be indistinct. In Greek lyrical, idyllic, and epigrammatic poetry the rareness, the solitariness is less majestic, the unconsciousness is less; there is not merely an image or similitude of human things, as when the flowing of Penelope's tears is epically likened to the filling of mountain rivers by the zephyr-melted snows; there is the quicker and more conscious cry, "O would I were the Kingfisher, as he flies with his mates . . . the sea-bright bird of spring." Egoism seems to us to be the almost universal inspiration of this growing commerce with nature. As the modern rhymers of the North loves the storm at night because he has the shelter of his home at command, and makes haste to embourgeoiser himself, the winds, his hearth, and his wife, in the sense of comfort, so the Greek, so the Roman, was apt to honour the tree for its shade. And so, with a finer, but similar, desire, does the Psalmist watch the flight of a dove into the distance. He feels the counter stroke of self, the relapse, and the failure; the leap towards peace has fallen short, and the poet knows he has not wings; nor does his soul follow the innocent flight generously, taking wing in thought with the dove on the dove's own errand; his is the negative—the impossibility, the denial, and the sigh—no more.

The sacred writer's landscape and nature are a part of English as well as of Hebrew literature. Englishmen read the Greek and Latin landscape in the original, the Hebrew in the English of the eve of Elizabethan poetry. Biblical English is not—the reader may need to be reminded, by the way—Elizabethan, it is not the English that was so soon to break into the chorus and concert in praise of May and meadows; it is the English of the grave fast and vigil of that festival. It was the English of Henry VIII.; a generation and three reigns altered it afterwards into the tongue that sang English seasons, the changes and the lights and shadows of the temperate North; it had, in a younger form, sung those seasons and that climate in the time of Chaucer. By the peculiar unity of language, the alien Semitic antiquity is far more intimately familiar to us than the kindred Aryan antiquity of the "classics." That is, of course, too well known a truth to pause upon. But the influence of the Hebrew spirit upon the earlier English contemplation of nature might be a matter to study.

It ought not to have been necessary to explain the absence from Mr. Palgrave's book of such elaborate and important landscape as that of modern French poetry, for example. It is obvious that he had no purpose to make a book of translations. The snatches—they are no more—from the Greek do not—by courtesy—need translating, and yet are—by courtesy—translated. Thus the way is made twice plain. The originals are given, and Mr. Palgrave's admirable versions are given with them. And their brevity makes the whole process manageable; but it would be far otherwise in the case of the Chants des Rues et des Bois. No single volume would contain even so much as a representative selection from the French, and the translation would be a special, separate, and expert work, not to be undertaken as an incident. True, there is something quoted—and very finely treated—from Dante; but here again the fewness and the brevity of the landscape passages make their introduction and their translation possible. It is England, then, or rather Britain, that makes the greater part of Mr. Palgrave's book—even though it would not have been at all the book it is had there been nothing except English within it; and the limitations are inevitable. The chapter on Celtic and Gaelic poetry gives us, among other beautiful things, a passage from "the last and greatest of the mediæval bards," Dafydd ap Gwilym, born probably about 1340, which is rendered by the English of Mr. Vaughan Jones; it celebrates the marriage of the bard, and is a rapturous, spiritual, natural, and mystical ecstasy. "Under the mantles of the splendid green hazels," the thrush is as a priest, who wears a cassock of "the flapping wind," prophesies without ceasing, and "reads to the parish the Gospel without stammering; and the bells of the Mass continually did ring." This is a note of exquisite delirium which is assuredly not to be heard from Chaucer. Equally unlike the Welsh, albeit with a masculine wildness of their own, are the Anglo-Saxon fragments left to us of our first national literature after the library-burning savages of the sixteenth century had destroyed the greater part of what had escaped the Norman and the Dane.

No reader could desire a stronger or more sensitive guide than Mr. Palgrave, through Elizabethan meadows or the gardens of poets under the Stuart kings, or a gentler one through the walks of the eighteenth century. A reader here and there, however, may grudge the precious space given to Byron's "horrid crags, by toppling convent crowned," than which nothing could be sillier (without simplicity) or more artificial (without grace). It is a humiliation to come upon this ready-made phrase after the hearty past. By the way, are our critics aware that Byron is the father of their split infinitive? "To slowly trace," says the noble poet, "the forest's shady scene." Although Mr. Palgrave quotes poets who outlived Tennyson (we could have wished to see more than a single ode of Coventry Patmore, whose landscape was in the highest sense classic) he closes his book with Tennyson, and with a tender and serious profession of faith in that great poet's "immortality." The word is used with misgiving; "those few hundred years of life which man pleases himself with naming immortality"—these he claims for the poet of "Cenone."

THE COMIC SPIRIT.

An Essay on Comedy. By George Meredith. (A. Constable & Co.)

It is patent that no living writer more fittingly could expound the theory of Comedy and the Comic Spirit than Mr. Meredith. Many of his novels lack only the dramatic form to fulfil every requirement of high Comedy, and no one is more richly stored with the Comic Spirit. In the narrow compass of the volume before us, which has but a hundred pages, Mr. Meredith analyses this spirit with a brilliancy possible only to himself. It is a little work of extreme suggestiveness, and no one at all seriously interested in the subject can afford not to read it. Mr. Meredith has never written more flexibly than in this essay, which was originally prepared for oral delivery at the London Institution, twenty years ago.

The finest Comedy, Mr. Meredith considers, is that of Molière. The English school, he says, "has not clearly imagined society; and of the mind hovering above congregated men and women it has imagined nothing." The comic writer (using comic in the sense in which it is employed by Mr. Meredith) must see society steadily and see it whole. Molière did so. Hence, as John Stuart Mill said, the French know men and women more accurately than we do; they can continually revert to their standards—the characters in the Molière comedies—for corroboration and refreshment. Shakespeare's characters, says Mr. Meredith, are often saturated with the comic spirit, but they are over-proof; "creatures of the woods and wilds, not in walled towns, not grouped and toned to pursue a comic exhibition of the narrower world of society." Shakespeare, moreover, favours literary or poetical Comedy rather than that Comedy which, like Molière's, is a mirror of life. Mr. Meredith singles out Millamant and Mirabel in "The Way of the World" as the two finest figures in English Comedy; he places, however, Congreve low in comparison with Molière. To Congreve's style he gives the highest praise, so succinct and forcible is it. "In this he is a classic, and is worthy of treading a measure with Molière." Contrasting the art of the two men, Mr. Meredith describes Congreve's as "a Toledo blade sharp and wonderfully supple for steel; cast for duelling, restless in the scabbard, being so pretty when out of it. To shine it must have an adversary."

Molière's, on the other hand, is like

"a running brook, with innumerable fresh lights on it at every turn of the wood through which its business is to find a way. It does not run in search of obstructions, to be noisy over them; but when dead leaves and viler substances are heaped along the course, its natural song is heightened. Without effort, and with no dazzling flashes of achievement, it is full of healing, the wit of good breeding, the wit of wisdom."

This, too, is wit, and wit of a high order.

Passing from pure Comedy, the critic enters upon his study of the Comic Spirit. The following fine passage sets forth his conception of what the office of that watchful spirit is:

"If you believe that our civilisation is founded in common-sense (and it is the first condition of sanity to believe it), you will, when contemplating men, discern a Spirit overhead: not more heavenly than the light flashed upward from glassy surfaces, but luminous and watchful, never shooting beyond them, nor lagging in the rear; so closely attached to them that it may be taken for a slavish reflex, until its features are studied. It has the sage's brows, and the sunny malice of a faun lurks at the corners of the half-closed lips drawn in an idle wariness of half tension. That slim feasting smile, shaped like the long-bow, was once a big round satyr's laugh, that flung up the brows like a fortress lifted by gunpowder. The laugh will come again, but it will be of the order of the smile, finely tempered, showing sunlight of the mind, mental richness rather than noisy enormity. Its common aspect is one of unsolicitous observation, as if surveying a full field and having leisure to dart on its chosen morsels, without any fluttering eagerness. Men's future upon earth does not attract it; their honesty and shapeliness in the present does; and whenever they wax out of proportion, overblown, affected, pretentious, bombastical, hypocritical, pedantic, fantastically delicate; whenever it sees them self-deceived or hoodwinked, given to run riot in idolatries, drifting into vanities, congregating in absurdities, planning short-sightedly, plotting dementedly; whenever they are at variance with their professions, and violate the unwritten but perceptible laws binding them in consideration one to another; whenever they offend sound reason, fair justice; are false in humility or mixed with conceit, individually, or in the bulk—the Spirit overhead will look humanely malign and cast an oblique light on them, followed by volleys of silvery laughter. That is the Comic Spirit."

Aristophanes is cited as the ideal possessor of the Comic Spirit. Mr. Meredith writes of the laughing bald-pate, as Aristophanes called himself with joy. He flings himself into the appreciation—enthusiastic, eloquent. Aristophanes, he says in one place, is "an aggregate of many men, all of a certain greatness. We may build up a conception of his powers if we mount Rabelais upon Hudibras, lift him with the songfulness of Shelley, give him a vein of Heinrich Heine, and cover him with the mantle of the Anti-Jacobin, adding (that there may be some Irish in him) a dash of Grattan, before he is in motion."

This is an ingenious recipe. Embrace both Aristophanes and Molière, Mr. Meredith says elsewhere—that is, embrace both Comedy and the Comic Spirit—and you have the whole scale of laughter in your breast. Aristophanes," he concludes mournfully, "is not to be revived; but if his method were studied some of the fire in him would come to us, and we might be revived." Taking them generally, says Mr. Meredith, the English public are most in sympathy with the primitive Aristophanic comedy, "where the comic is capped by the grotesque, irony tips the wit, and satire is a naked sword." He makes it clear that pure comedy cannot thrive in this country. We are too composite a people. For one thing, we are too sentimental; for another, too Puritanic; for a third, too Bacchanalian. Also we have not yet spiritually comprehended the significance of living in society.

The Comic Spirit does not often inhabit our writers. Fielding, Chaucer, Shakespeare, Pope, and Cowper had it to perfection; Byron had "splendid powers of humour, and the most poetic satire that we have had example of, fusing at times to hard irony. He had no strong comic sense, or he would not have taken an anti-social position." The English genius prefers satire. On the other hand, "no one," remarks Mr. Meredith, "would presume to say that we are deficient in jokers." A test for home application may not be inappropriate to close with:

"You may estimate," says Mr. Meredith,

"your capacity for comic perception by being able to detect the ridicule of them you love, without loving them less, and more by being able to see yourself somewhat ridiculous in dear eyes, and accepting the correction their image of you proposes."

We do not want Mr. Meredith to divert any energy from novel-writing, and yet we wish he could find it in his power to dip more often into criticism. He does it superbly.

EOOZON AND EVOLUTION.

Relics of Primeval Life. By Sir J. William Dawson. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

In this compact little volume the "doyen of Canadian geologists" gives permanent form to a course of lectures delivered in 1895 to a Boston audience on the problematical Eozoon Canadense, and its bearing on the origin of life and biological evolution generally. Naturalists will certainly be glad to have this comprehensive treatment of the subject by one who, if not the actual discoverer, has been intimately associated with the find ever since it was first submitted to the consideration of palæontologists by Sir W. E. Logan, some thirty-five years ago. The story need not here be repeated of the angry discussions which broke out at the time, and which have not yet been settled, regarding the true character of the substance: some, with Prof. King and others, maintaining its mineral origin, others, with the author and the late Dr. Carpenter, risking their reputation on its organic nature. This latter view Sir William still loyally adheres to, and supports his contention with some fresh evidence, and with further arguments of a more abstract character, which may at least claim the serious attention of the "sceptics." He holds that we have here an organism of a low type, whose position may even be determined in the sub-kingdom Protozoa, as one of the foraminifera, which form a separate order in the class Rhizopoda (Huxley's Myropoda).

The difficulty biologists feel in accepting such a conclusion lies in the fact that the known beginnings of life would thereby be shifted as far back from the Cambrian as this system is remote from the present time—that is to say, right through the Huronian, and even the Upper Laurentian, which, apart from its plumbago deposits of doubtful organic origin, is usually regarded as absolutely azoic. But so far from shirking this inference, which would increase the duration of life on the globe by many millions of years, our author contends that such an increase must be allowed, and that, in point of fact, the shallow Laurentian waters swarmed with a protozoan fauna which was one of the chief factors in building up the crust of the earth. The term azoic he would restrict to the true Archæan or Lower Laurentian, substituting eozoic, a word of his own invention, for the fossil-bearing Grenvillian (Upper Laurentian) and Etcheminian series, leading up to the palæozoic Cambrian rocks.

Besides Eozoon, reference is made to several other contemporary Protozoa, such as Archæozoon, Archæospherinae, Archæophyton—some discovered by the author, some first described or named by Matthew, Billings, and others in America, and in Europe by Gümbel. Much weight is laid on the testimony of Gümbel, in whom Eozoon has certainly found an able champion on the Continent, and whose researches are stated to have established "the existence of Eozoon fossils in all the Laurentian limestones of the middle and north of Europe." Altogether, it will readily be allowed that the hypothesis has received much support from recent observations in both hemispheres, while Sir William's arguments lose none of their force by the temperate language with which they are urged, and by his generally courteous bearing towards his opponents. Thus, at p. 222:

"I confess that I feel disposed to treat very tenderly the position of objectors. The facts I have stated make large demands on the faith of the greater part even of naturalists. Very few geologists or naturalists have much knowledge of the structure of foraminiferal shells, or would be able under the microscope to recognise them with certainty. Nor have they any distinct ideas of the appearances of such structures under different kinds of preservation and mineralisation. Further, they have long been accustomed to regard the so-called Azoic or Archæan rocks as not only destitute of organic remains, but as being in such a state of metamorphism that these could not have been preserved had they existed. . . . In these circumstances it is rather wonderful that the researches made with reference to Eozoon have met with so general acceptance, and that the resurrection of this ancient inhabitant of the earth has not aroused more of the sceptical tendency of our age."

But in connexion with the Eozoon controversy Sir William revives his somewhat peculiar views on the broader question of biological development, and here he not only becomes aggressive, but even unfair towards the leading exponents of evolution as now understood. "Hæckel, one of the prophets of the new philosophy, waves his magic wand, and simple masses of sarcodæ spring from inorganic matter," &c. Others are "enthusiastic speculators and caterers of sensational popular science"; their suggestion of missing links in the organic series, which links must be allowed under any theory, are spoken of as filling up gaps "by plausible conjectures," while a "Darwinian biologist" is described as "an insatiable enthusiast who feels himself aggrieved if not supplied with infinity itself wherein to carry on the processes of his science."

It may seem surprising that such determined opposition to the modern theory of organic evolution should be displayed by a naturalist, who on the other hand contends so vigorously for an extension of life on the globe far longer than is claimed by any of these "insatiable enthusiasts," and presumably far beyond the limits allowable by the most liberal orthodoxy. But such apparent inconsistencies are not rare among conservative leaders of thought, and the names of Agassiz, the Abbé Bourgeois, and many others might be mentioned as cases in point. Nor is it very easy to determine Sir William Dawson's attitude towards "the new philosophy." In one place he speaks the language of an advanced Spencerian, agreeing with those "who hold the modern theories of gradual evolution," who "repudiate the idea that the Lower Cambrian fauna can be primitive," and who "demand a vast series of changes in previous time to prepare the way for it." Then he essays to explore the dim and mysterious past, and "to ascertain what forms, if any, are visible amid its fogs and mists."

But elsewhere the solution of biological problems is sought, not in observation, but in creation, and even in multi-creation after the manner of Cuvier. The plan of creation is certainly allowed to be progressive, but not continuous; that is to say, the lower forms of life do not pass by gradual change into the higher, but either persist unchanged, or with but slight varietal change, or else die out, and are then succeeded by more specialised forms "successively introduced." Change is allowed, but only within narrow limits, and the study of evolution is the study, not of one or more archetypes with endless modifications and ramifications, but the study of a large number of types, which make their appearance independently in successive geological ages, and which either become extinct from time to time, or live on without developing any greatly divergent later forms. Thus the various animal series are graphically represented not by branches springing from a common stem, but by a corresponding series of parallel lines converging at neither end. "It seems that each leading line, as we trace it back, ends in a blind alley, just where we might suppose that it was about to pass into another path" (p. 287). Hence even man himself "is still man in all the deposits in which we can find his remains, and as remote from the apes of his time, in so far as we know, as he is from those now his contemporaries" (p. 288). The inference is that the most highly specialised of living beings has followed an independent line of development, which in past time never converges on a common anthropoid stem. It is difficult to understand how this view can still be upheld after the interval between the Neanderthal race and a generalised Simian stock going far back into the Miocene age has been half bridged over by Dr. Dubois' Pithecanthropus erectus.

GREEK WRITERS.

Ancient Greek Literature. By Prof. Gilbert Murray. (William Heinemann.)

It is a large tribute to the vitality and enduring attractiveness of Greek literature and Greek history that, in spite of all that has been already written on either subject, year by year new books are still produced that suggest new points of view, or disinter qualities that have hitherto escaped unnoticed. Only the other day we had Mr. Dickinson's admirable little book on the Greek View of Life—so fresh and suggestive in its treatment of a well-worn theme—and now we welcome a history of Greek literature from Prof. Murray which, whatever may be its faults, cannot be denied the merit of originality. The title of the book is to some extent a misnomer. This is not a history of Greek literature in the best sense of the word. It is, indeed, rather chaotic in its plan—a series of brilliant studies of the Greek writers, with little attempt to elucidate the historical continuity of Greek literature, or the interdependence of one writer on another. It is full of paradox, of startling judgments and judgments meant to startle, of unproved theories disguised as familiar facts, and of fresh, courageous, and suggestive criticism. The studies are not all of equal merit. The writer has his predilections and his limits. He loves and admirably appreciates Herodotus; we doubt his affection for Thucydides, for whom, at any rate, he says nothing that has not been said before. He defends the Sophists against the Socratics, but on insufficient grounds, and values Isocrates surely above his merits. He illuminates with new light the genius of Euripides, disclosing points that have escaped almost all previous critics, but he is dull to the real greatness of Sophocles, whom he considers conventional, and more artist than poet. To Euripides, indeed, is devoted the best study in the series. It is evident that Prof. Murray is attracted by the modern note, we had almost said the note of decadence, in this poet. He writes of his neglect of art for thought, of his "extraordinary brain-power, his dramatic craft, subtlety, sympathy, courage, and imagination," qualities which he contrasts, more by implication than direct statement, with the "calm and successful" poetic art of Sophocles. He marks his sympathetic insight into the heart of woman, "whom, like Ibsen, he idealises, refusing to idealise any man," and on the poet's attitude to religion he has much to say that is new and suggestive.

The chapter on Homer is devoted almost exclusively to the Homeric question, and here Prof. Murray will be found abreast of the latest and most destructive criticism of the time. He supports the view that the Iliad and Odyssey are only parts of an immense body of early lays, and have been cast into their present form, partly by natural or accidental causes, partly by the conscious arrangement of Athenian rhapsodists; but the presentment of the case is not too clear, and it is difficult for the reader to distinguish, unless he knows already, where the writer is dealing with discovered facts, and where with unproved theories. Much of the chapter on Thucydides is taken up with an examination of the received text. The question is of great importance, for on it depends our estimate of the historian's style. Prof. Murray leans to the view of Cobet and Mr. Rutherford (though he is not prepared to go as far as either of these critics) that the style of Thucydides was simple and pellucid, that where he is difficult or obscure it is the copyist who has made him so. According to the ancients, who presumably had access to better MSS. than we possess the style of Thucydides was involved and hard. Where lies the criterion? The evidence is in the main internal, but that is prejudiced by the presumed unsoundness of the text. The external evidence which Prof. Murray adduces, and by which he lays much store, seems to us worth little.

Prof. Murray's own style is unequal. In the earlier portion of the book it is apt to be abrupt and conversational, sometimes undignified. He writes of Stesimbrotus as "a sort of intransigent ultramontane journalist, wearing rather a modern look among his contemporaries, but not quite equal to what we now produce at our worst." He is fond of derivations, of plays on words, which often seem to occur in otherwise tasteless passages. "Phokos, who, although he was knocked on the head by the seashore, and had a mother called Seasand, was perhaps originally as much a Phokian as a seal (φωκή)." And again:

"When we hear that Agido among the rest of the chorus is like a 'racehorse among cows' . . . this does not mean that the 'boorish' poet is expressing his own intemperate and vacillating admiration. Would the cows of the chorus ever have consented to sing such lines?"

(Vacillari means to "walk like a cow.") This love of derivation has led Prof. Murray into accepting the Disease-of-language theory of mythology, if we are right in so understanding his words "that the original battle for Helen was doubtless a strife of light and darkness in the sky, just as the Niblungs were cloud-men and Sigurd a sun-god before they were brought down to Worms and Burgundy"—a theory which, we imagined, was held in these days by no one but its inventor. But as the work progresses the style rises in tone and dignity. The smartness, the striving after effect disappears, and the exuberance, of which this was a symptom, expresses itself only in rapidity and nervous power. The note of sincerity rings more often and more plainly, and lends to the phrase the force always conveyed by truth. Nothing could be more admirable, alike for its form and matter, than the final appreciation of Demosthenes, which is not only a fine example of Prof. Murray's style at his best, but an illustration of his method and critical quality.

"Demosthenes can never be judged apart from his circumstances. He is no saint and no correct mediocrity. He is a man of genius, and something of a hero; a fanatic too, no doubt, and always a politician. He represents his country in that combination of intellectual subtlety and practical driving power with fervid idealism, that union of passion with art, and that invariable insistence on the moral side of actions, on the just and the noble, that characterises most of the great spirits of Greek literature. To say with Quintilian that Demosthenes was a 'bad man' is like saying the same of Burke or even of Isaiah. It implies either that noble words and thoughts are not nobility, or else, what is hardly more plausible, that the greatest expressions of soul in literature can be produced artificially by a dodge."

MR. OMAN'S HISTORY.

A History of England. By C. Oman. Third Edition. (Arnold.)

An ideal school History of England would be produced by a combination of the peculiar excellences of Mr. S. R. Gardiner's Student's History of England and Prof. York Powell's History of England for Middle Forms; and where considerations of expense are not prohibitive, these two admirable text-books, each of which constitutes the complement of the other, might well be used side by side. After them, the next place could fairly be given to a revised fourth edition of Mr. Oman's manual. His History of England resembles his Greek History in its lucidity of treatment and its brightness of style, but surpasses it in being comparatively free from the flavour of newspaper English, though here and there we still come across irritating tricks of unclassic phrase. The writer possesses the sense of historical proportion and perspective; and save that the constitutional reforms of Henry II. are dismissed in a curiously brief and summary manner, in the matter of selection and rejection there is little with which to find fault.

To pass to details, it is satisfactory to see the misleading form Aquæ Solis and the erroneous rendering "Æthelred the Unready" respectively replaced by Aquæ Sulis and "Æthelred the Redeless, or Ill-counselled." On the other hand, we observe that in these pages Freeman's palisades in undiminished entirety still adorn the hill at Senlac, and that King John still "signs" Magna Carta instead of sealing it. The former is, of course, an open question, the latter a comparative trifle; but a mistake of the first magnitude occurs on p. 40, where the Peace of Wedmore of 878 is confused with Alfred's and Guthrum's Frith of 886. Again, on p. 151, obligatory knighthood is assumed to be an invention of Edward I. in 1278. The writs of November 16, 1224 (Rot. Cl. 9th Hen. III.), and November 7, 1235 (Rot. Cl. 19th Hen. III.) show that this was not so. The £20 census, too, was certainly fixed as early as the reign of Edward's predecessor: witness the writs of 25th, 26th, 37th, 39th Henry III. (Hale and Lansdowne MSS.); while in 1256 (Rot. Cl. 40th Henry III., and M. Paris sub anno) not only was there a general compulsory summons to knighthood, but the knightly rating was apparently lowered for the nonce to £15. These are isolated instances of inaccuracy, but the book throughout is by no means free from errors. As an example we may take the reign of Richard III. We may eliminate from it all controversial points. We may abstain from saying that, so far as Mr. Oman is concerned, Buck, Walpole, Halsted, Legge, Sir Clements Markham, and, to a certain extent, Nichols and Mr. Gairdner, appear to have written in vain, and that the old Tudor tales, with their jumble of improbabilities and contradictions, are once more served up to tax our intellectual digestion. We may suppress any manifestation of surprise that in his presentment of the last Plantagenet king he has hardly advanced beyond Shakespeare and Mrs. Markham. Nevertheless there will remain much that is reasonably open to complaint. Rivers was not executed on "the very day of Richard's accession," but on the day before (June 25). From the Act of Attainder of 1st Henry VII. it is clear that William Catesby was not a knight. As Richard was born on October 2 (or, to take Rous' later date, October 21), 1452, and fell at Bosworth on August 22, 1485, his age at his death was not thirty-three, but thirty-two. To say that Colyngbourne was hanged "for no more than a copy of verses" is a statement that would have made even the Lancastrian Fabian stare; as also would the multiplication by Mr. Oman of his "wele vpon iiii. m. men in rusty salettes," till they are represented by such expressions as: "Gloucester commenced to pack London with great bodies of armed men"; "masses of armed men"; "thousands of men-at-arms packed every street." The vague rumours set down by the monk who wrote far away at Croyland will not justify this in the face of the definite evidence of the local chronicler Fabian; nor will Stallworth's letter, which spoke only of an expectation that was exaggerated by the natural excitement of the time.

With regard to the story of the immediate execution of Hastings, Sir Clements Markham's analysis of the dates (Eng. Hist. Rev., April, 1891) has surely cast upon that view doubts sufficiently grave to demand some attention. On p. 268 we are presented with the legend of the murder of the princes in all its orthodoxy; the manner, the time, the place, the burial, the discovery of the bones (real human bones that time, not those of an ape)—everything is there. Yet in the next sentence we are told with prompt repentance that "its manner and details were never certainly known." It is with sincere regret that we find the work of so interesting a writer and so accomplished an antiquary and historian as Mr. Oman defaced by blemishes of this character; the more so because his book is full of good things, and his general handling of the course of events is scholarly and scientific.

VITA MEDICA.

Vita Medica: Chapters of Medical Life and Work. By Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson. (Longmans.)

HERE was a man who belonged intimately to the Victorian era, whose life grew full with its fulness, and bright with its brightness of expectation. It is touching to read Dr. Richardson's account of the blessing his dying mother gave him on the day after Coronation Day, 1838:

"She said she would not much longer be my companion, but I must remember her, and must try to be a good boy; must follow my lessons carefully; and, above all things, must learn to be a good doctor, the profession of medicine being in her opinion the noblest in the world. I was born to it, and must do my very best."

His medical destiny took hold of the boy's mind, and even at his earlier schools it was allowed to dictate some of his studies. Once only did he waver in his fidelity to his prospects. Southey's Life of Nelson was the disturbing factor, and Jack Lambert, a hot-headed schoolfellow, the advocatus diaboli. The two actually ran away from school, and were on the way to Portsmouth to take ship when sunset and discretion turned them back to the schoolhouse.

Richardson began his formal study of medicine as an apprentice to a practising doctor. In those days only young men who were favoured by friends and fortune walked the hospitals or travelled to European medical centres. The majority were bound to private practitioners, and this was a feature of his profession which Dr. Richardson—who discarded so much—would fain have kept. He writes:

"I have often said, and again say it, that this method of introduction to our profession, now practically abandoned, was the best that could be, and ought to have remained untouched. It was a fruitful source of income to every respectable practitioner; it kept such practitioners well up to the mark; it made good openings for introductions and practices; it was warmly appreciated by the public at large; it cultivated well a common field, and effected a sound and general good."

Richardson's own experience of the system was certainly happy. In 1845 he went to Glasgow, to the college then called Anderson's University. His lifelong memories of those days, and of the fine men who flitted across his path, fill a pleasant chapter. After short spells of work as an assistant at Saffron Walden and Narborough, in Leicestershire, and a final course of study at Glasgow, which won him his Faculties of Physician and Surgeon, Richardson came to London and settled in practice with Dr. Robert Willis at Mortlake. Here he worked hard out of doors and in, at the bedside and in the laboratory, and was successful in an attempt to win the Fothergillian gold medal for a paper on "Diseases of the Fetus." In recalling this effort Dr. Richardson makes the sadly striking remark: "It is certain that I never once saw birth without some remote indications of death through some particular signal of disease." His career was now fairly begun, and from this point the chapters of his book become less directly autobiographical, being concerned rather with the great medical movements in which he played his part. These may be enumerated as follows—the organisation and application of sanitary science; the elimination of pain from disease and operations; the banishment of alcohol from the bedside; and the development of germ theories.

In none of them did Richardson lead the way. Modern sanitary science had already been promoted by the appointment of a Registrar-General, and Doctors Farr and Chadwick had done much to make that office a bulwark of the nation's health. As a student he had seen anaesthetics brought to the aid of tortured patients. Even in his opposition to alcohol, Richardson had been forestalled by Higginbottom, of Nottingham. In each department something had been done. The machine in each case moved, but Richardson's shoulder on the wheel helped it forward with speed and éclat. His industry was prodigious. His enthusiasm never waned, nor his courage. In 1869, when he made his first "sortie" against alcohol, his lecture-room was deserted, and in a city where he had once been given a grand supper "I was marked, like Higginbottom, with the sin of disbelief in the ancient faith, and was known by only one friend." This was no light ordeal for a man well advanced in years, with a great stake in his calling. But Richardson was ever a winner, and he lived to see a non-alcoholic hospital and a non-alcoholic league of doctors. His worst enemies could not call him a crank with conviction, for they knew his soundness as a physician. Richardson was a great doctor judged by ordinary professional standards; he was greater still in that he widened and lifted those standards. He had the makings of an administrator of public health, such as has never yet held office, for whom, indeed, no office has yet been created.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Elements of Theoretical Physics. By Dr. C. Christiansen. Translated by W. F. Magie. Ph.D. Pp. 339. (Macmillan & Co.)

Magnetic Fields of Force. By Prof. H. Ebert. Translated by C. V. Burton, D.Sc. Part I. Pp. 297. (Longmans.)

THE continual appearance of scientific text-books translated from the German is becoming a trifle vexatious. For some time past the commercial world has been informed that British trade has suffered from German competition because of the neglect of scientific principles underlying our industries. This is probably true to some extent, but manufacturers may very well retort by asking what British men of science are doing that it should be necessary to import so many advanced text-books written abroad. The best, or worst, of it is that most of these books are better than any produced at home; so that while our professors are claiming to be able to show the way to improve industry they are pushed out of their own field by works "made in Germany."

Prof. Christiansen's treatise, which has been put into English by Prof. Magie, of Princeton University, presents a comprehensive and informing view of the fundamental principles of theoretical physics. In scope the book is similar to Clerk Maxwell's stimulating little primer entitled Matter and Motion; but the treatment is much more detailed, and new work in the various branches of the subject is taken into account. Teachers and students familiar with higher mathematics will be glad to possess a volume in which the theory of modern physics is expressed in a uniform notation; but ordinary investigators of natural phenomena would soon lose themselves in the maze of differential equations and integrals which runs through the pages.

The manner in which iron filings arrange themselves when scattered over a sheet of cardboard lying upon a magnet was made by Faraday the starting-point of a series of brilliant conceptions of the nature of magnetic, electric, and optical phenomena—conceptions which now dominate physical theory. Prof. Ebert's work, which is presented in a pleasing English dress by Dr. Burton, is an experiment in expounding the phenomena of magnetism and electro-magnetism upon a basis formed by the lines of force, of which Faraday first saw the significance. The book is practical and thorough, and it will furnish students with solid food for study and experiment. The second part, dealing with the phenomena of induction, has not yet appeared.

* * *

The Apocalypse of Baruch. Translated by R. H. Charles. (A. & C. Black.)

THERE is at present, and has been for the last sixty years, a tendency in England to popularise criticism. Lawrence's translation of the Book of Enoch, Cotton's translation of the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Books of Maccabees, T. W. Clark's "Ante-Nicene Library," Ryle and James's translation of the Psalms of Solomon—these and similar publications have placed the ordinary intelligent English layman, desirous of investigating the origins of Christianity, but unacquainted with ancient languages, in a far more advantageous position than his brother on the Continent. Mr. Charles, who has already earned considerable gratitude in the above connexion by his English version of The Book of Jubilees, now presents us with an English version of The Apocalypse of Baruch, one of the most interesting of the "Pseudepigrapha" that have come down to us. Pseudo-Baruch, writing almost certainly in Trajan's reign—whether a little earlier or a little later than the author of II. Esdras is one of the problems which the book raises—represents the purely Jewish ideal of the Messiah, distinguished from and possibly sketched in antagonism to that established from Nazareth. Perhaps the most striking picture in the Apocalypse is that in which the Roman Empire is depicted as a mighty forest, and the Messiah as a tiny spring, waxing in volume till it becomes an overwhelming torrent and sweeps away the forest—all save one lofty cedar. And then that cedar is swept away too, and one hears an explanation that the cedar is the last Roman emperor (Trajan?), who shall be brought in chains to Mount Zion and there slain by Messiah! "Baruch" represents for us that fierce zealot, patriotic fanaticism, with which, except in the one great instance, the Messianic idea was inseparably connected in the first and second centuries—the spirit which occasioned the mournful "Day of Trajan," and finally brought about the great catastrophe under Bar-Cocheba. Irresistibly "Baruch" brings to mind that verse in the Gospel, "If thou hadst known in this thy day the things that belong to thy peace."

* * *

The Ruined Cities of Ceylon. By Henry W. Cave. With Photographs by the Author. (Sampson Low.)

MR. CAVE photographs well and to some purpose. Last year he photographed a number of the ruined temples, dagabas, and palaces which are found in the interior of Ceylon, and which date from the introduction of Buddhism into the island. Even without an explanatory text these illustrations would suggest splendid episodes in man's history. At Mihintale what seems to be the bare crown of a hill is a huge dagaba, or relic shrine, built in the third century B.C. with millions of bricks. You climb to it by a broken granite staircase that makes itself an awful pathway through the thickets and the gleaming trunks of trees. Near to this wonder is another dagaba, the Maha Seya, from whose top the traveller sees "the ruined shrines of Anuradhapura rising above a sea of foliage and the glistening waters of the ancient artificial lakes relieving the immense stretches of forest." In Mr. Cave's photograph the top of this dagaba seems covered with a hair of vegetation, yet the effect is due to a mass of forest trees that have sprung from seeds dropped there by birds. In some parts clearings have left the ruins standing on open ground. It is so with the sixteen hundred monolithic columns which mark the site of the Brazen Palace built by King Dutthagamani to house the monks of the new faith. The splendours of their abode are recorded in the Mahavamsa, the national chronicle. We read of a hall supported on golden pillars, of festoons of pearl, of an ivory throne inestimably draped, of canopies and emblems, and lavers of pure gold. Nor is it hard to believe in the gold since the temple which sanctified it remains. Certain it is that these glorious buildings were raised by a people who drew untold inspiration from a creed which teaches that existence is sorrow, and that to combat sorrow man must reduce his desire to live. Mr. Cave's photographs are of considerable value, quite outweighing his text, which, however, is clear and from its nature interesting.

* * *

On Human Nature. By Arthur Schopenhauer. Selected and Translated by T. Bailey Saunders. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

THIS is the seventh volume of translations which Mr. Saunders has made from the more popular writings of Schopenhauer, and it is certainly not the least interesting of the series. The title of the book covers six essays taken from Schopenhauer's Parerga and from his posthumous writings. These are concerned with Human Nature, Government, Free Will and Fatalism, Character, and Moral Instinct, and there is a final chapter of Moral Reflections. In all these essays Schopenhauer is found talking at large on matters of human experience and conduct, and talking with that unanswerable sanity and originality which make his teachings as stimulating to the mind as rough towelling is to the body. We remember no passage in the early volumes which more clearly and simply conveys Schopenhauer's practical teaching than the following:

"The readers of my Ethics know that with me the ultimate foundation of morality is the truth which in the Vedas and the Vedanta receives its expression in the established, mystical formula, Tat twam asi (This is thyself), which is spoken with reference to every living thing, be it man or beast, and is called the Maharukya, the great word. . . . We are possessed of two different, nay, absolutely contradictory ways of regarding the world: one according to the principle of individuation, which exhibits all creatures as entire strangers to us, as definitely not ourselves. We can have no feelings for them but those of indifference, envy, hatred, and delight that they suffer. The other way of regarding the world is in accordance with the Tat-tvam-asi—this is thyself—principle. All creatures are exhibited as identical with ourselves; and so it is pity and love which the sight of them arouse. The one method separates individuals by impassable barriers; the other removes the barrier and brings the individuals together."

It should not be forgotten that Schopenhauer was at one with the Buddhist and the Christian in the belief that evil is radical and renunciation best. This understood, neither his metaphysics nor his temperament need offend.

* * *

A Study of the Sky. By Herbert A. Howe. With Illustrations. (Macmillan & Co.)

At a time when all the world has learnt to read, any book which opens the way to a wholesome and fascinating study deserves a cordial welcome. Prof. Howe, of Denver University, has written such a work. It demands no previous knowledge of the subject, nor any knowledge of mathematics. The romance is opened up in a fashion which may well discover in the reader an enthusiasm for the fascinating and limitless science of the heavens. In a popular way he describes the constitution of the firmament, the nature of the constellations, the movements of the planets, the manufacture of lenses, the spectroscope, sun-spots, meteors; in fact, he runs over the whole ground. His style is, perhaps, a trifle florid for British taste, and the portraits of American astronomers and professors of astronomy are of secondary interest in this country, but the sort of book he set out to write he has written very well. The practical instructions for identifying the heavenly bodies by means of the diagrams are very clear, and the illustrations in general will be found interesting and helpful.

* * *

Hero-Worship. By Thomas Carlyle. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE lectures on Hero-Worship form the fifth volume of Messrs. Chapman & Hall's centenary edition of Thomas Carlyle's works. These volumes leave nothing to desire in the matters of binding, print, and paper. But we do not understand why, if Hero-Worship needed portraits, only three—those of Shakespeare, Rousseau, and Napoleon (a curious trio)—should be given. One would not exact a portrait of Odin, the hero as divinity, for obvious reasons; but it would have been easy and fitting to have supplied those of Dante, Luther, Knox, Johnson, and Burns. This is surely a case in which thoroughness or nothing was the best policy. Mr. Traill's introduction is acute and interesting.

* * *

Spanish Self-taught. By C. A. Thimm, F.R.G.S. (E. Marlborough.)

THE present edition of Mr. Thimm's Spanish Self-taught will be of service to the large class of persons who for purposes of business or pleasure desire a practical knowledge of the language. The contents of this little book, with the aid of a few weeks' diligence, will carry them through the land with comfort, and will lay the foundation of a more intimate knowledge of the language and its literature if the study is to be further pursued. The difficulties of pronunciation are simply and ingeniously turned.

FICTION.

Flames: a London Phantasy. By Robert Hichens. (Heinemann.)

MR. HICHENS' new novel may be regarded from either of two points of view: as a story of mere imagination, or as a solemn treatise upon the transcendental Ego. As an imaginative story it has certain merits in the telling that are by no means to be denied. Mr. Hichens is, to a large extent, capable of suggesting situations of obscure and dubious horror; he has a sentiment of place, and he can realise a scene here and a scene there with an instant and liberal completeness. His story turns upon the notion of the exclusion of a personality from a body and the usurpation of a second personality in the same body. The somewhat ghostly situations whereby the exchange is accomplished, are touched in with skill and effectiveness; but the tale loses interest as it progresses, and the final scenes are lamentably disappointing. This is, without doubt, due to the gradual intrusion of Mr. Hichens's somewhat solemn philosophy into the fantastic imaginativeness of the earlier part of his scheme; and we are bound to add that as a philosopher he passes poor muster. It would be absurd to ask him for a genuine and fully developed philosophical system in what is openly called a "phantasy"; but at all events for purposes of fiction "the binding theory" should be consistent throughout; whereas Mr. Hichens's theory is quite unconvincing. To take one brief example. In the exchange of souls everything depends upon the author's insistence on Will as—to use his own words—the "Ego, the man himself." And yet, after the intrusion of the alien Will into the new body, it is apparent that the new man thus formed has the double memory of the personality that he both was and is; whereas, if the first memory were only a power of the former will, and not a separate part of the soul, it would vanish with the will. Therefore, by Mr. Hichens's own showing, memory and will are separable portions of the soul; and yet, as we have said, his whole theory depends upon the identification of will, and will alone, with the soul. The contradiction vitiates from beginning to end what may be called the circumstantial credibility of the book. If an example of how the thing can be done were wanted, take "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"; as a relation of facts Stevenson's fable is, of course, utterly incredible; but its circumstantial credibility is never for a moment in danger. As a last word, the style of Flames is too thoughtlessly exuberant. To speak after the author's own manner, his fruit is often over-ripe, and his hyacinths are not seldom past the fragrance of their freshness; also, to judge by a certain frequency of repetition, polished boots haunt Mr. Hichens like a passion.

Guavas the Tinner. By S. Baring-Gould. (Methuen.)

MR. BARING-GOULD's new story is all about the tin-workers of Dartmoor in Queen Elizabeth's time. Concerning the production of tin in England, and the ancient customs of the Duchy of Cornwall, and the jurisdiction of the Stannary Court, it is itself a mine of information. Perhaps the hand of the antiquarian is a little prominent, still Mr. Baring-Gould is here opening new ground in fiction, and he has combined with all his tin a golden story, full of the gleam and brilliancy of romance. The semi-crucifixion of Guavas, his rescue by the fierce Isolt Rodda, who loves him, his oath to be hers and do her bidding always, his wolf, the last in Britain, and its fight with the traitor, Dickon Rawle, in the Staldon Ring, the contrast between Isolt Rodda and the gentle Lemonday, whose sweetness has an unknown attraction for Guavas, their finding of the Keenly Lode, and the bitter struggle of Guavas and Lemonday against the jealous and revengeful Isolt and Dickon Rawle—here are dramatic elements enough, and powerfully are they combined by Mr. Baring-Gould's experienced hand. This is a book of adventure, for boys in particular, which may be cordially recommended. It will teach them something, for one thing, about their own country. But it is also full of the straightforward human passions, and not of the so-called "modern" substitutes, which it may be hoped do not delude the adult subscribers to libraries. Mr. Frank Dadd illustrates the volume, and contributes three drawings thoroughly in the spirit of the story.

Saint Eva. By Amelia Pain. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

THIS is a well-written story, of a somewhat sentimental order, and is concerned with the life history of Eva Corona, of whom an imaginary portrait, by Sir E. Burne-Jones, forms the frontispiece to the book. Eva, whose sanctity consisted in a virginal, almost nun-like, purity, was kissed unexpectedly by Clayton Leaford, who possibly loved and certainly rode away. But Eva took the kisses too seriously, and thus supplied the tragic motif to the story. The authoress has a quite happy knack of character-drawing, and gives convincing portraits of the sort of people one meets in society in London, on the river, and along the beaten track of tourists in Italy; indeed, she is so evidently familiar with river-ways that we can scarcely excuse her spelling of "Marlowe." Lord Rotherhithe, the peer with the soul of an ostler; Linley Wygall, the unappreciated but faithful lover; Miss Wellingham, the Bond-street Juno, hyper-English, aristocratic and classic, all at once, who "moved with the lazy, thoroughbred deliberation of the swan"; Mrs. Rowe, who organised delightful house parties on the river—are all people one might run up against at any moment. And those who have no tears for the tragedy of the leading lady will find many a smile in the play of the minor characters.

Glamour. By Meta Orred. (John Lane.)

THE reader new to this author's style will find some difficulty in deciding where the ghosts begin and where they end. She is fond of speaking about Evil and Influence and Sorrow and other things in bewildering capitals, and there is a Figure which converses with the hero on ethical topics and which seems to be the cause of a really frightful conglomeration of nightmares at the end of the book. For more conventional horrors we have the Ghost in the Gallery, which frightens a boy into fits; there is a haunted picture which changes its dress in a surprising way; and there is a ring to which some curse is attached—which, at all events, personifies something. Some other people speak to seeing a ghost at a window, but that detail need not be insisted on. Much allowance is to be made for a hero brought up among such surroundings, and when, being deeply in love with two ladies, he marries a third, one can only hope that he does it out of a sense of duty to the Experience, or the Unknown, or the Destiny which he went to Italy to seek.

A Spotless Reputation. By Dorothea Gerard. (W. Blackwood & Sons.)

MR. ANTHONY HOPE'S Princess Osra had, at any rate, a heart. But Geraldine Nolebrooke, in spite of her transcendent beauty and "spotless reputation," has none, and very properly comes to a bad end. Her story, as told in Miss Gerard's (or rather Mme. Longard de Longgarde's) new novel, opens in a manner somewhat at variance with its development. One of the greatest beauties of the century, she is unconscious of her power and untouched by passion when she marries; but the earlier sketch of her apparently innocent and tranquil character hardly prepared us for the results of her awakening under the influence of London and Vienna society, as the wife of the wealthy and brilliant diplomatist, Walter Nolebrooke. While physical coldness deprives her of full womanhood, her personal beauty and her pride in it make her first unwittingly attract, and then actively lure, some half-dozen men to their ruin. The course of the story thus becomes somewhat conventional, and were it not for skilful handling would be distinctly disappointing. There is something psychologically crude in this picture of a beautiful witch with practically no affections; and the repetition of the same process in the undoing of her several admirers is clumsy, and shows some lack of resource in incident. As the deterioration in character progresses, we get thoroughly sick of the pure Geraldine, and her death in consequence of taking arsenic to remove the ravages of accidental burns on her face—a device not unknown before in fiction—opportunistically enables her husband to marry the other more human woman who has always loved him, and brings the story to an end which satisfies a reader's ideas of poetical justice. This is a well-written novel, but it is rather elementary in its drawing of character.

Kakemonos. By W. Carlton Dawe. (John Lane.)

MR. CARLTON DAWE has already made his mark with Yellow and White, and the present volume establishes his claim to write with authority concerning the byways of that region of the world "where there ain't no ten commandments." A Kakemono is a Japanese scroll-painting of the kind that Europeans have lately taken to collecting, and the title covers appropriately a group of nine tales, of which the scenes range from Japan to Siam. The author knows the ways of the tramp steamer which ploughs the China seas, as you may learn from "Chief Officer Grover," a vivid story of attempted scuttling; he knows what adventures may be found within the flower-boats at Canton, or in the women's quarters of a Siamese prince's palace; he knows, too, the manners and the morals of the British colonies at Hong Kong and Yokohama, and in "His Japanese Life" you may learn what becomes of the Englishman who marries a Japanese woman. In another and extremely pathetic little sketch—"Sayonara"—the picture is reversed, and you see what becomes of the Japanese woman when the Englishman she loves does not marry her. The stories are all short and bright, and the few lingering traces of amateurism in the style serve to convince us that the author is writing of what he has seen, and not what he has imagined.

Colour-Sergeant, No. 1 Company. By Mrs. Leith Adams. (Jarrold & Sons.)

HAVING already achieved some popularity in two-volume form, this story appeals for a second hearing in Messrs. Jarrold's six-shilling series. As a single volume it strikes us as a little too long; but that may be merely the impression of a reviewer who has not the leisure to linger over the scattered irrelevancies which adorn, but delay, the development of the plot. Soldier stories have been the vogue since Mr. Kipling found his public; and Mrs. Leith Adams has evidently knowledge of the ways they had in the army in the times while yet soldiers were flogged for selling a blacking-brush with the broad arrow upon it, and the punishment-drill with which the story opens is a very impressive piece of writing. Alison Drew should help to make Mrs. Leith Adams's book popular.

Charaka Puja, and Other Stories. By Chola. (The Roxburghe Press.)

HOOK-SWINGING is supposed to have died out in India. But the first of "Chola's" well-told little stories, published in the shilling "Roxburghe Library," professes to describe a case of it, where British rule had been successfully evaded.

"To either end of a horizontal pole are fastened ropes. The victim is prostrate before the upright post, and is doing puja to it as an emblem of the god Siva. His only clothing is the most diminutive of cloths. He now crouches before the attendants, one of whom marks on his back with sacred ashes the places through which the hooks should pass. Here—upon another attendant pinches up the flesh, while a third person drives a hook through the quivering flesh. The second hook is passed through in a similar manner, and they are both speedily attached to the rope which hangs from one end of the horizontal bamboo. Several men next seize the rope attached to the other end of the bamboo, and by pulling it down raise the poor devotee high in the air. Then, rope in hand, they run round, and cause the victim, whose whole weight is borne by his two great wounds, to swing round at the other extremity. The devotee, rising and falling as he whirls round, describes a circle of some thirty feet in diameter."

That is charaka puja, a religious rite, none of the brutality of which appeals in the least to the old-fashioned Hindu, though the milder Hindu of these days is gradually adopting a more humane interpretation of his sacrificial ceremonies. It is such stories as these of "Chola's" that help to bring home to English readers the nature of our work in India, and the necessity of going carefully about to accustom the natives to more civilised ways. It was only in 1894 that the Madras Government actually forbade "hook-swinging." Another of these stories gives a pathetic instance of sati or suttee, which is now almost extinct; while "A Missionary's Crime" shows the difficulty of asserting Western notions in a land where native opinion is hostile. Altogether, these half-dozen stories are well worth reading. They are told without pretence, and put forward modestly; but they are pictures of life in India which it behoves us all to realise.

The Fields of Fair Renown. By Joseph Hocking. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

INTO these fields strayed a Cornish youth; and there, after producing a successful novel in three weeks upon a diet of bread and water, he quickly made himself at home. So he released himself from the bonds of engagement with Helen Granville, whom he had rescued from a mining accident, referring her at large for reasons to his new novel "to appear in March," and married a literary woman. The jilted young lady revenged herself by writing a much better novel than any of his, though he made them more and more improper. So he went from bad to worse, and she from good to better. The story is readable, and some of the minor characters, notably the landlady (who also writes a novel) are rather funny; but we should like to know which literary paper it was that wrote of the hero: "He seems to have had a past rather than a future."

Ring o' Rushes. By Shan F. Bullock. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

MR. BULLOCK is one of those lucky souls who have a little corner of the earth for their special literary heritage. His is Irish; Bunn is its name; and its inhabitants are Tim Kerin and Shan Grogan and Old Mother Burke and others whom you will not find in the Strand or in the S.E. postal district. There is true humour and feeling in these little sketches. Rural Ireland has not had a more sympathetic interpreter than Mr. Bullock, who will never be without an audience when he writes of the simple little tragedies and comedies of Bunn and Lismahee.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1897.

No. 1300, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

LAST week we did not receive a single theological book. This week five come to hand, including the late Archbishop Benson's Cyprian. Two new volumes of the Oxford English Dictionary cover the ground between "Distrustfully" and "Doom," and between "Flexuosity" and "Foister." Fourteen works of Fiction form by far the largest class, the rest of our list being constituted of a little of everything.

THE late Archbishop Benson's work, Cyprian: His Life, His Times, His Work, will be received with reverent interest in the Church of England, and by many outside it. Mr. Arthur Christopher Benson tells, in an interesting prefatory note, how long and lovingly his father laboured on his book. When it was finished, and he was asked whether he was not glad it was done, he replied: "I ought to be; but I am not really glad—my only amusement will be gone." In his own preface to this monumental work the late Archbishop writes of Cyprian:

"He was tempted into the noble and, alas! too fruitful error of arraying the Visible Church in attributes of the Church Invisible. But he said and showed how men might gravely dissent without one wound to peace. He spoke a watchword of comprehension which, for lack of the charity which possessed him, we do not receive in the Churches, although it must needs precede the unity we dream of. I hope that in this study I have not ever been unmindful of the present, and yet have not committed what I hold to be a grievous fault in a historian, the reading of the present into the past. I have tried to sketch what I saw. It is only thus that the past can be read into the present—the 'lesson of history' learnt. That we have some need of the lesson of the Cyprianic times I feel sure; sure that it might have saved us some of our losses."

THE WILL TO BELIEVE.

In his new book, The Will to Believe, Prof. William James, who holds the chair of Psychology at Harvard University, has reprinted some remarkable addresses which he has delivered from time to time before students' clubs in the States. The title of the book applies mainly to the first four essays, which are a defence of "the legitimacy of religious faith." In his preface, Prof. James meets some of the more obvious objections to his position:

"To some rationalising readers such advocacy will seem a sad misuse of one's professional position. Mankind, they will say, is only too prone to follow faith unreasoningly, and needs no preaching nor encouragement in that direction. I quite agree that what mankind at large most lacks is criticism and caution, not faith. Its cardinal weakness is to let belief follow recklessly upon lively conception, especially when the conception has instinctive liking at its back. I admit, then, that were I addressing the Salvation Army or a miscellaneous popular crowd it would be a misuse of opportunity to preach the liberty of believing as I have in these pages preached it. What such audiences most need is that their faiths should be broken up and ventilated, that the north-west wind of science should get into them and blow their sickliness and barbarism away. But academic audiences, fed already on science, have a very different need. Paralysis of their native capacity for faith and timorous abulia in the religious field are their special forms of mental weakness, brought about by the notion, carefully instilled, that there is something called scientific evidence by waiting upon which they shall escape all danger of shipwreck in regard to truth. But there is really no scientific or other method by which men can steer safely between the opposite dangers of believing too little or of believing too much. To face such dangers is apparently our duty, and to hit the right channel between them is the measure of our wisdom as men. . . . I do not think that any one can accuse me of preaching reckless faith. I have preached the right of the individual to indulge his personal faith at his personal risk. I have discussed the kinds of risk; I have contended that none of us escape all of them; and I have only pleaded that it is better to face them open-eyed than to act as if we did not know them to be there."

IN NORMANDY AND MAINE. THE late Edward A. Freeman was a traveller by conviction.

"Beyond doubt," he wrote, "the finished historian must be a traveller: he must see with his own eyes the true look of a wide land; he must see, too, with his eyes the very spots where great events happened; he must mark the lie of a city, and take in, as far as a non-technical mind can, all that is special about a battlefield."

These words are quoted by Mr. W. H. Hutton in an interesting preface to a posthumous collection of papers which were contributed by Mr. Freeman to the Guardian and the Saturday Review. These sketches were written at different times from 1861 to 1891, and they are the records of journeys undertaken in connexion with the author's great work on the Norman Conquest. The book is illustrated from Freeman's own sketches. He did not draw well, but he drew intelligently, and his sketches preserve to the book an individuality which photographic reproductions would only interrupt.

OTHER BOOKS. MR. W. S. LILLY has reprinted, under the simple title Essays and Speeches, various contributions to Catholic thought. The papers include studies of Alexander Pope, Prof. Green, John Henry Newman, and essays on The Temporal Power of the Pope, The Making of Germany, and The New Spirit in History. The last-named subject is treated in connexion with the appointment of Lord Acton to the chair of Modern History at Cambridge. A book to which the present state of Eastern Europe lends special interest is The Outgoing Turk, by Mr. H. C. Thomson. Mr. Thomson describes in detail the manners and customs of Bosnia and Herzegovina, provinces which are now administered entirely by Austrian officials. The book is well illustrated with photographs taken by the author, or obtained by him from special sources. The second volume of Messrs. Chapman & Hall's "Diamond Library" contains a selection of English Sonnets made by Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch, who supplies an introduction on the laws and forms of the Sonnet. This series promises extremely well, but the binding chosen does not strike us as happy. Its blue-slate ground is not enlivening, and we shall get very tired of the girl in the scarlet robe with her wreath, her halo of gold, and her pointing arm. She suggests the nursery rather than the library.

THE SECRET ROSE. IN The Secret Rose Mr. W. B. Yeats makes another contribution to the new "Celtic" literature. The book is a series of episodes, the character of which is partly explained by Mr. Yeats in an interesting dedicatory letter to "A. E." We may be allowed to guess that "A. E." is the "A. E." who wrote Homeward Songs by the Way, and whose two essays on The Remnant caused some controversy about two years ago. The letter is as follows:

"MY DEAR A. E.—I dedicate this book to you because, whether you think it well or ill written, you will sympathise with the sorrows and the ecstasies of its personages, perhaps even more than I do myself. Although I wrote these stories at different times and in different manners, and without any definite plan, they have but one subject, the war of spiritual with natural order; and how can I dedicate such a book to any one but to you, the one poet of modern Ireland who has moulded a spiritual ecstasy into verse? My friends in Ireland sometimes ask me when I am going to write a really national poem or romance, and by a national poem or romance I understand them to mean a poem or romance founded upon some moment of famous Irish history, and built up out of the thoughts and feelings which move the greater number of patriotic Irishmen. I, on the other hand, believe that poetry and romance cannot be made by the most conscientious study of famous moments and of the thoughts and feelings of others, but only by looking into that little, infinite, faltering, eternal flame that one calls one's self. If a writer wishes to interest a certain people among whom he has grown up, or fancies he has a duty towards them, he may choose for the symbols of his art their legends, their history, their beliefs, their opinions, because he has a right to choose among things less than himself, but he cannot choose among the substances of art. So far, however, as this book is visionary it is Irish; for Ireland, which is still predominantly Celtic, has preserved with some less excellent things a gift of vision, which has died out among more hurried and more successful nations: no shining candelabra have prevented us from looking into the darkness, and when one looks into the darkness there is always something there."

THE "Pioneer" series of novels is continued in Love for a Key, by G. Colmore, who places on his title-page the lines:

"Your soul's locked fast; but, love for a key,
You might let it loose, till I grew the same
In your eyes, as in mine you stand."

Mr. Colmore's dedication is curious: "To Five, And to the Memory of a Sixth, This Book is Dedicated by the Seventh." The opening of the racing season should favour the success of a sporting novel like Mr. Blake of Newmarket, by Edward H. Cooper. The covers of this novel bear a continuous design, best seen by laying the open book face down, when Mr. Blake of Newmarket is disclosed watching the exercising of three racehorses. Such chapter headings as "The Red Rose of Ascot" and "The First July Meeting" indicate the flavour of the story. Another book which hits the time is The Fall of Constantinople, which the author, Mr. A. Wall, describes as "an historical romance," in which is reviewed "the various interesting events which preceded and finally culminated in the overthrow of the Roman Empire of the East, and the establishment of a Mahomedan power in Christian Europe." An appendix is added, in which the story is elucidated by short statements of historical fact. False Dawn is a novel by Francis Prevost, whose collection of short stories, entitled Rust of Gold, we remember to have been distinctly clever. Captain Marryat's Poor Jack is issued by Messrs. Macmillan in their series of three-and-sixpenny standard novels. It is illustrated by Mr. Fred Pegram, and Mr. David Hannay supplies an introduction in which he puts this story in Marryat's middle period, between the time in which he wrote for the general reader and his later years when he wrote for children.

"It was not expressly written for children, and yet it decidedly leans to being a boy's book. It has not, I think, been among the most popular of his works, and yet it is difficult to understand why it has not been better liked than Jacob Faithful, for instance. It is a better story, it contains a greater variety of personages whose characters and doings have the true Marryat savour."

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGY.

- CYPRIAN. By Edward White Benson, D.D. Macmillan & Co.
QUIET HOURS. By John Palsford, D.D. Andrew Melrose. 2s. 6d.
THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Andrew Melrose. 2s. 6d.
BIBLIA INNOCENTIUM. By J. W. Mackail. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
THE BOOK OF AYUR. Translated by R. Sadler. Sheppard & St. John.

HISTORY.

- RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. By John Addington Symonds. New Edition. Smith, Elder & Co. 7s. 6d.

BIOGRAPHY.

- EMINENT PERSONS. Vol. VI.: 1893-1894. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.

PHILOSOPHY.

- THE WILL TO BELIEVE. By William James. Longmans, Green & Co. 7s. 6d.

POETRY.

- A LIGHT LOAD. By Dollie Radford. Elkin Mathews. 5s.
FANCY'S GUERDON. By Anodos. Elkin Mathews. 1s.
ENGLISH SONNETS. Edited by A. T. Quiller-Couch. Chapman & Hall. 2s.

FICTION.

- CAPTAIN CASTLE. By Carlton Dawa. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN. By Margaret Moule. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
THE OUTSPAN. By J. Percy Fitzpatrick. William Heinemann. 3s. 6d.
FATE'S FETTERS. By Jean de la Brète. Translated by Mrs. F. Hoper-Dixon. Digby, Long & Co. 6s.
MR. BLAKE, OF NEWMARKET. By Edward H. Cooper. William Heinemann. 6s.
LOVE FOR A KEY. By G. Colmore. William Heinemann. 2s. 6d.
THE FAITHFUL CITY. By Herbert Morrah. Methuen & Co. 6s.
POOR JACK. By Captain Marryat. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
A SHORT INSING. By Tivoli. Digby Long & Co. 3s. 6d.
BRADFORD SKETCHES. By J. Mackinnon. Alexander Gardner.
THE SECRET ROSE. By W. B. Yeats. Illustrated by J. B. Yeats. Laurence & Bullen.
FALSE DAWN. By Francis Prevost. Ward, Lock & Co. 6s.
THE FALL OF CONSTANTINOPLE. By A. Wall. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
MRS. KNITH HAMILTON. By Annie S. Swan. Hutchinson & Co. 3s. 6d.
ESSENTIALLY HUMAN. By Annie Thomas. F. V. White & Co.
INTO AN UNKNOWN WORLD. By John Strange Winter. Second edition. F. V. White & Co.
THE COACHEMAN'S CLUB. By Geo. R. Sims. F. V. White & Co.

BELLES LETTRES.

- FROM GRAVE TO GAY. By J. St. Loë Strachey. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
HUGO OF AVENDON. In Four Acts. By E. L. M. Elliot Stock.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

- FACSIMILES FROM EARLY PRINTED BOOKS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM. Printed by order of the Trustees.

PHILOLOGY.

- THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY. In Two Parts: DISTRIBUTED—DOOM. FLEXUOSITY—FOISTER. Clarendon Press.

TRAVEL.

- IN THE GUIANA FOREST. By James Rodway, F.L.S. T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.
SKETCHES OF TRAVEL IN NORMANDY AND MAINS. By Edward A. Freeman. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.

ANTIQUITIES.

- BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES: THE CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF CHESTER. By Charles H. H. George Bell & Sons. 1s. 6d.

FOREIGN.

- WATERLOO. PAR LOUIS NAVEZ. J. Lehnéne & Co. (Bruxelles).

MISCELLANEOUS.

- ESSAYS AND SPEECHES. By W. S. Lilly. Chapman & Hall.
FIRST PRINCIPLES OF MECHANICAL AND ENGINEERING DRAWING. By H. Holt. Butterfill, M.E. Chapman & Hall. 7s. 6d.
IMPERIAL DEFENCE. By the Right Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke and Spencer Wilkinson. Archibald Constable & Co. 2s. 6d.
WAR FAMINE AND OUR FOOD SUPPLY. By R. B. Marston. Sampson Low.
NATURAL HISTORY IN SHAKESPEARE'S TIME. Edited by H. W. Seager. Elliot Stock.
STORIES OF AUSTRALIA IN THE EARLY DAYS. By Marcus Clarke. Hutchinson & Co. 3s. 6d.
THE COMING COMMONWEALTH. By Robert Randolph Gaitan, B.A. Simpkin Marshall & Co.
AN EMIGRANT'S HOME LETTERS. By Sir Henry Parkes. Simpkin Marshall & Co.

NOTES AND NEWS.

SOME of the American papers seem vexed that Col. John Hay should be spoken of in this country so much as the author of the Pike County Ballads and so little as the author of Castilian Days and the biography of Lincoln. "Apparently," says the Tribune, "American literature must be grotesque in humour and fantastic in form, or it will not be accepted in England as having the racy virtues of the soil." This is perfectly true. American literature when it lacks these qualities often reads like nothing but imitation English literature, and we can hardly be expected to grow enthusiastic over that. No one denies the value of Col. Hay's monumental work of Lincoln, but weighed against "Little Breeches" and "Jim Bludso" and "Tilmon Joy" and "The Mystery of Gilgal" it kicks the beam.

In an article on Col. John Hay, the Critic as good as states that the anonymous novel The Bread-Winners was from his pen. The authorship of this remarkable story, which appeared first in the Century, and then in volume form (1883), and was read by everyone, was never avowed; but, on the other hand, Col. Hay has never denied it.

It may be of some interest to state that a model of a portion of one of the Borgia rooms in the Vatican which have just been thrown open by the Pope is among the treasures of the South Kensington Museum. Pinturicchio's frescoes form, of course, the principal beauty of these apartments, and the three represented in the South Kensington model are "St. Catherine before the Emperor Maximin," the "Escape of St. Barbara," and the "Visit of St. Paul the Hermit to St. Anthony." The subject of the ceiling paintings is the story of Osiris.

MR. GLADSTONE has addressed the following letter to Miss E. R. Chapman, the author of a book of Essays entitled Marriage Questions in Modern Fiction, published by Mr. John Lane:

"Cannes: March 15, 1897.

"DEAR MADAM,—Your work reached me yesterday, and I have been reading it alike with pleasure and profit. I hope it may become the nucleus of a distinct defensive action from your point of view.

"If you had leisure to acquaint yourself with the view of marriage as it stands in Homer, you would, I think, find it useful and interesting.

"I remain, with many thanks,
"Faithfully yours,
"W. E. GLADSTONE."

THE suggestion of a correspondent of the Times that Governor Bradford's MS. shall be exhibited at the British Museum for a short time before it is handed over to America is one which we hope will be acted upon. To those who have read Dr. Arber's recent work on the Pilgrim Fathers it will have peculiar interest.

THE Burrows Brothers Company, of Cleveland, have just secured for their issue of The Jesuit Relations and Allied Documents, which is being edited for them by Mr. Reuben Gold Thwaites, the original MS. of Father Claude Dablon's famous "Relation of the French-Canadian Mission for the years 1676-77. The MS. came to the surface on March 10 last, at Sotheby's. The publishing of the annual volume of Jesuit Relations at Paris was prohibited by Richelieu after 1672, and few thereafter found their way into print. In 1854 James Lenox for the first time issued Dablon's Relation, edited by Dr. O'Callaghan; but the printer followed an abbreviated and modernised MS. copy at Laval University, Quebec. In 1861 it was again printed, at Paris, in Douniol's Mission du Canada, but still in an imperfect form. The lucky finding of the original MS. enables Mr. Thwaites to now present this interesting document just as it was written.

In the Contemporary Review Mr. Gosse has a critical article upon the Polish novelist Sienkiewicz, which should draw attention to that author's voluminous romances. Beginning with a few biographical notes, Mr. Gosse tells us that Sienkiewicz, who is now just over fifty years of age, has seen many countries and varieties of life. After leaving the University of Warsaw he became a gipsy, actually joining some nomadic tribe, then a gold miner in California, and an African explorer. Meanwhile he wrote continually sketches, stories, and novels. At last, in 1880, he returned to Warsaw to edit a paper or magazine called Slowo, and signalled his control by running therein a serial which lasted for eight years. Productivity is indeed the badge of Polish novelists—Kraszewski, who preceded Sienkiewicz as novelist-in-chief to Poland, was the author of more than 450 volumes.

SIENKIEWICZ's principal novels are: Children of the Soil, Quo Vadis, Without Dogma, and a tremendous historical trilogy—With Fire and Sword, The Deluge, and Pan Michael. All these are now to be read in English, which is the tongue, in fact, in which Mr. Gosse knows them. "If Sienkiewicz," he says, "is true to his curious virile gift for rendering the movements and phenomena of savage warfare, he ought to secure a place only just below Scott and Dumas among the active and creative writers of masculine romance." Mr. Gosse incidentally remarks that De Quincey's Revolt of the Tartars is more like Sienkiewicz's trilogy than any other work in English literature.

Quo Vadis, which has recently taken America between wind and water, Mr. Gosse declines to read, partly, he says, because life is short and Sienkiewicz's art is so very long; and partly because he has an invincible dislike to stories that "contrast the corrupt brilliance of Paganism with the austere and self-reliant teaching of Christianity," which is what Quo Vadis purports to do; and partly because an American reviewer has stated that it "tells the story of the Crucifixion with artistic lifelikeness." These are reasons enough.

In choosing for illustration in the series of "Scenes from Great Novels" in Scribner's the transformation of Dr. Jekyll into Mr. Hyde in Lanyon's office, Mr. William Hole has attempted the impossible. If there is one incident in fiction which absolutely could not be pictured, it is this. The transformation was a matter of time: plastic art can represent only a single moment. Mr. Hole ought to have known how hopeless was his task; for unless preceded by a picture showing Dr. Jekyll as the bland practitioner, the view of him as Hyde is of no value. But no number of drawings could convey the scene with a tithe of the effect of Stevenson's words.

THE new edition of Letters to A. P. Watt, consisting of grateful epistles to the literary agent of that well-known name from many of the most popular of living writers, cannot be very exhilarating reading for the publishers. It is uncontroversial testimony that their lawful prey, the author, is passing for ever from their grasp. From the point of view of the author, who receives more money and has less anxiety, and from the point of view of the agent, who pockets his commission, the new system is, of course, desirable. But from the point of view of the publisher, who has to pay a larger sum (to include the agent's fees), the new system must seem very unnecessary. On the other hand, a letter from Messrs. Chatto & Windus is testimony that in arranging for the serial publication of books the agent can be of the greatest assistance.

MR. WATT numbers the most distinguished clients, and they all write with enthusiasm of his judgment and dispatch. Among the writers of letters in this little book are Mr. Balfour, Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Weyman, Mr. Conan Doyle, Sir Walter Besant, Mr. Louis Becke, Mr. Grant Allen, Mr. James Payn, Mr. Kipling, Mr. Crockett, the late Wilkie Collins, and Mr. Blackmore. But none of the writers permit themselves to be very characteristic.

MR. JOHN MILNE announces the early publication of a work upon the modern English stage from the pen of a distinguished French critic and man of letters, long resident in this country, M. Augustin Filon. It appeared originally in the form of consecutive chapters in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and was published in volume form in Paris last year. The translation, which is by Mr. Frederick Whyte, will be enhanced by a lengthy introductory essay by Mr. Henry Arthur Jones.

A few days ago, a week or so after the appearance in the ACADEMY of the portrait supplement of Walter Savage Landor, a letter was received at this office addressed to "Walter Savage Landor, Esq." We considered we had the right to open this letter. It was from an enterprising firm of photographers in Baker-street, and its contents, which follow, turned out to be even better than we anticipated: "Sir [the letter ran],—We are very anxious to include your portrait in our 'Series of Celebrities,' and should be very pleased if you could kindly grant us a sitting for the purpose at your convenience, especially as only a few minutes will be required. We shall be happy to take you any time that you may be able to appoint, and we will, of course, send copies of the portraits for your inspection before making use of them in any way.—We are, Sir, yours faithfully, —."

In response to a critic, Mr. Harold Frederic has written to the Brooklyn Times to point out that the social dialogues which are contained in his volume, Observations in Philistia, were printed in the National Observer long before the appearance of Anthony Hope's Dolly Dialogues, with which they have been compared. This statement, however, although it clears Mr. Frederic from a charge of imitation (which no acute reviewer would have brought), does not quite prove Mr. Frederic to be the reviver of the dialogue form. Mr. Kipling's Story of the Gadsbys preceded both, and has not yet been excelled.

MR. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS has been sent to this country to describe the Diamond Jubilee for Harper's Magazine. Mr. Davis's description of the Coronation of the Czar was a most capable piece of work. It is a little surprising that English novelists are not employed more often by English editors for similar duties. Mr. Rudyard Kipling, it is well known, has announced his readiness to serve as war correspondent.

WEBSTER's definition of pseudonym—"a fictitious name assumed for the time, as by an author; a pen name"—does not appear to be shared by Mr. Douglas Sladen. In Who's Who, of which he is the new editor, we find a list of "Newspaper Pseudonyms," which includes "L. F. Austin," "J. K. Jerome," "G. Bernard Shaw," "Clement Scott," "James Payn," and "Mrs. Norman." These surely are signatures, not pseudonyms. The same list mentions "H. P. Trail" as the author of the "World of Letters" in the Graphic.

AGAIN, in a list of pseudonyms more generally used, which is interesting but a little out of date here and there, we find Alice M. Kipling given as the pseudonym of Mrs. J. M. Fleming, Mme. Norman Neruda as that of Lady Hallé, and Mémie Muriel Dowie as that of Mrs. Norman. A maiden name continued into married life is not exactly a pseudonym. To "The Yellow Dwarf" no real name is assigned.

MISS MARY WILKINS, collaborating with a Boston journalist, has written a play.

THE Rev. J. E. Auden, of Tong, Shifnal, is compiling a Register of Shrewsbury School from 1798 to 1897, which will be published by Messrs. Woodall, Minshall & Co., of Oswestry and Shrewsbury.

A NEW story by Mr. Francis Gribble is about to appear under the title Only an Angel. The effect of mountain scenery upon individual character is incidentally illustrated.

THE ONLOOKER.

WILLIAM COWPER

From the Picture by Romney in the National Portrait Gallery

"THE WELL-BELOVED."

WE have received the following letter from Mr. Thomas Hardy, in which he explains, a little more fully than in his preface, the evolution and purport of The Well-Beloved:

Dorchester: March 29.

After reading your review of The Well-Beloved (more appreciative in feeling and generous towards its faults than such a slight story deserves), I think it would not be amiss to account for the ultra-romantic notion of the tale, which seems to come slightly as a surprise to readers. Not only was it published serially five years ago, but it was sketched many years before that date, when I was comparatively a young man, and interested in the Platonic Idea, which, considering its charm and its poetry, one could well wish to be interested in always.

Later on, in answer to a request from Mr. Tillotson, of Bolton, for "something light" for his syndicate, the tale was taken in hand and adapted, the idea of perfection in woman being made to grow upon the hero, an innocent and moral man throughout, as described, till it became a trouble to him rather than a delight.

In lately correcting and revising the chapters I saw that the visionary character of the conception, and, so to speak, the youthfulness of the plot, was what I should certainly not have been able to enter into at this time of my life, if it had not been shaped already. There is, of course, underlying the fantasy followed by the visionary artist the truth that all men are pursuing a shadow, the Unattainable, and I venture to hope that this may redeem the tragic-comedy from the charge of frivolity, or of being built upon a baseless conceit, that may otherwise have been brought against it.

I may, perhaps, be allowed to state in addition, that "Avic" is an old name common in the county, and that "Caro" (like all the other surnames) is an imitation of a local name which will occur to everybody who knows the place—this particular modification having been adopted because of its resemblance to the Italian for "dear."

THOMAS HARDY.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XXI.—WILLIAM COWPER.

IT is agreed that no one has had the familiar epistolary manner in such perfection as Cowper. Lamb's envelopes contained more fun, more wit, more artifice; but Cowper's were the better letters. Cowper's letters, like certain of his poems, are not to be excelled for ease, for flexibility, for grace, for smiling wisdom, for sweet reasonableness. By reason of his lines written on the receipt of his mother's picture, certain passages in "The Task," the ballad of "John Gilpin," a handful of extracts from the longer poems, and a few short occasional pieces, serious and humorous, Cowper occupies among poets a place apart. His letters give him a position among prose writers that is not less exalted.

Cowper, we expect, would be astonished to know of either achievement, but his surprise to find that his letters are esteemed so highly would probably far exceed his joy that his poetry is so beloved. To his verses he gave the utmost pains, admitting that therein he found "pleasure," and no man has written more sanely of the art of poetry. He brought the carefulest consideration to every epithet. "I never," he wrote to Newton, "suffer a line to pass till I have made it as good as I can." Hence nothing occurs in his poems that was not deliberately intentional. When his printer had permitted a line to be tampered with, Cowper wrote:

"There is a roughness on a plum which nobody that understands fruit would rub off, though the plum would be much more polished without it. . . . I will only add that I wish you to guard me from all such meddling; assuring you that I always write as smoothly as I can, but that I never did, never will, sacrifice the spirit or sense of a passage to the sound of it."

We see, therefore, that Cowper's poetry was subjected to minutest examination before he let it fare forth into the world.

On the other hand, his letters, written without an erasure, have a not less distinguished technique. They flowed from his pen like water along an aqueduct, and they have the same steady fluidity. The selection and arrangement of words are alike perfect: it is the best pen-and-ink conversation that we have. What could exceed the limpidity and supple movement of the following passage, describing the call of the candidate, with its undercurrent of gentle drollery?

"We were sitting yesterday after dinner—the two ladies and myself—very composedly, and without the least apprehension of any such intrusion, in our snug parlour, one lady knitting, the other netting, and the gentleman winding worsted, when, to our unspeakable surprise, a mob appeared before the window, a smart rap was heard at the door, the boys hallooed, and the maid announced Mr. Grenville. Puss [the tame hare] was unfortunately let out of her box, so that the candidate, with all his good friends at his heels, was refused admittance at the grand entry, and referred to the back door, as the only possible way of approach. Candidates are creatures not very susceptible of affronts, and would rather, I suppose, climb in at the window than be absolutely excluded. In a minute the yard, the kitchen, and the parlour were filled. Mr. Grenville, advancing towards me, shook me by the hand with a degree of cordiality that was extremely seducing. As soon as he and as many more as could find chairs were seated, he began to open the intent of his visit. I told him I had no vote, for which he readily gave me credit. I assured him I had no influence, which he was not equally inclined to believe, and the less, no doubt, because Mr. Ashburner, the drapier, addressing himself to me at that moment, informed me that I had a great deal. Supposing that I could not be possessed of such a treasure without knowing it, I ventured to confirm my first assertion by saying that if I had any I was utterly at a loss to imagine where it could be or wherein it consisted. Thus ended the conference. Mr. Grenville squeezed me by the hand again, kissed the ladies, and withdrew. He likewise kissed the maid in the kitchen, and seemed, upon the whole, a most loving, kissing, kind-hearted gentleman. He is very young, genteel, and handsome. He has a pair of very good eyes in his head, which not being sufficient, as it should seem, for the many nice and difficult purposes of a senator, he has a third also, which he wore suspended by a ribbon from his buttonhole. The boys hallooed, the dogs barked, puss scampered; the hero, with his long train of obsequious followers, withdrew. We made ourselves very merry with the adventure, and in a short time settled into our former tranquillity, never, probably, to be thus interrupted more."

Reading the foregoing passage one understands what Mr. Meredith means by saying that the comic spirit is the daylight side of the night half obscuring Cowper. Remembering that woful night, and Cowper's bitter struggles therein, his gaiety is the more wonderful. Through his loophole of retreat at Olney he saw the world with very shrewd eyes. His letters abound in wisdom as in fun. They are a liberal education.

Of Romney's portrait of Cowper, which we reproduce, the poet wrote that in the opinion of all who were then staying with him at Hayley's house at Earsham, where it was painted, it was "the most exact resemblance possible." Cowper was then sixty-one.

THE RECREATIONS OF LITERARY MEN.

IN engaging the services of Mr. Douglas Sladen as editor of their biographical annual, Who's Who, Messrs. A. & C. Black have added not a little to the gaiety of the nation and a great deal to its knowledge. Thanks to Mr. Sladen's enterprise, we know now a thousand things that we did not know before the new Who's Who was published. But what one chiefly prizes in this sudden acquisition of information is the bundle of facts concerning the recreations of public persons, particularly of authors, which is laid before us. For in his desire to make Who's Who complete, Mr. Sladen has invited all the men and women who find a place in its pages to furnish him with their favourite pastimes, and in this way has made his book somewhat of a confession album, from which we have taken the liberty of extracting a few of the intimate things confided to it.

Place aux dames!—We find that Miss Marie Corelli seeks recreation in music and reading and playgoing; Miss Braddon in riding, gardening, music, and literature; Sarah Grand in music, country life, and sociology. That sociology looks suspicious. The adorable Gyp delights in le cheval (surtout), canoter, patiner, peindre, lire nager—an excellent selection. John Oliver Hobbes plays music and chess; Mrs. Clifford travels and reads; Mrs. Meynell finds recreation in music; Mrs. Kennard in hunting, fishing, reading, and cycling, which she sagaciously calls an industry; Mrs. Molesworth in flowers, in the country, and in little children; Mrs. Ritchie in reading, fresh air, pictures, and good company; Mrs. Steel in music, singing, painting, cooking, and acting; and Mrs. Norman in riding, farming, and spinning. Miss Agnes Giberne tells us so much concerning her recreations that we are in danger of knowing more about them than her books. On the other hand, Mrs. Oliphant, Miss Broughton, and Mrs. Humphry Ward say nothing.

Taking the literary men in alphabetical order, we find that Dr. Abbott trifles with lawn tennis and is a beginner in cycling. Next year, we trust, he will confess to proficiency. Mr. Arthur à Beckett is an amateur soldier, and Sir Edwin Arnold yachts, travels, and cycles. Indeed, most of the authors seem to cycle. The Poet Laureate, as might be expected, gardens; he also rides and fishes. Mr. Robert Barr finds recreation in cycling, photography, and eucere (which is spelt without an "h"); Mr. Barrie in cricket; Mr. E. F. Benson in golf, Rugby, tennis, lawn tennis, and Greek antiquities, which surely can leave little time for work; Mr. Birrell in walking (which he calls pedestrianism), golf, and book-hunting; Mr. Oscar Browning in swimming, cycling, and mountaineering; Mr. Buchanan in shooting, fishing, yachting, and horse-racing; Mr. Hall Caine in mountaineering and riding; Mr. Sidney Colvin in novels, travel, and cycling; Mr. Crockett in mountaineering, cycling, and golf; Mr. Hardy in forestry, architecture, and cycling; Mr. Haggard, like the Poet Laureate, in gardening, and also in shooting, fishing, and cycling. Mr. Frank Harris pursues big game; Mr. Frederic Harrison travels and walks in mountains, which suggests the Pied Piper of Hamelin; Mr. Silas K. Hocking plays tennis (? lawn tennis) and golf; Mr. Coulson Kernahan plays cricket and football; Mr. Kipling cycles and fishes; Mr. Lang fishes and plays cricket (there ought to be a Who's Who eleven) and golf; Mr. Le Gallienne cycles; Mr. Lilly rides, cycles, and plays racquets; Sir Theodore Martin, among other pursuits, collects autographs; Mr. Meredith reads French; Sir Lewis Morris names poetry as his recreation; Mr. Arthur Morrison, the author of A Child of the Jago, collects Japanese prints; Mr. Lloyd Osbourne rides, cycles, drives, plays tennis, and takes photographs; Mr. Palgrave is a violinist; Mr. Quiller-Couch yachts and rows; Mr. James Payn plays whist; Mr. Sladen, the editor of the book, shoots with the rifle, plays Rugby and golf, travels, collects curios, and is interested in architecture; Mr. Traill plays lawn tennis and racquets, and cycles; Ian Maclaren plays golf; Mr. Wells cycles.

The humorists do not shine. Mr. Burnand confesses meekly to music and yachting. Once, it seems, he rode, but he states, and states it without a pun, that he has now given that up. Mr. Anstey-Guthrie cycles and occasionally boats. Mr. Jerome rides, cycles, drives, and (of course) boats. Mr. Max Beerbohm, who would probably have been funny, apparently was not asked. Dr. Parker is reserved and serious. It is left for Dr. Jessopp, Mr. George Bernard Shaw, and Sir Walter Besant to supply the light relief. Mr. Shaw finds recreation in cycling and showing-off; Sir Walter Besant in looking on, and Dr. Jessopp in visiting his parishioners, growing apples and potatoes, grumbling at the weather, and driving an old horse as far as he will go, which suggests the need for attention from the R.S.P.C.A. Dr. Martineau, who is nearly ninety-two, gives rowing and walking; but, on the other hand, Dr. Smiles, although only a mere child of eighty-five, claims to be too old for recreation at all. Another doctor also rows, Dr. Furnivall; and still another doctor—namely, Dr. Stubbs, Dean of Ely—plays golf, cycles, and makes and patents all by himself the sleepy hollow chair. If we recollect rightly, this is not the chair supplied in Ely Cathedral: that, though certainly hollow, is anything but sleepy.

The authors who do not confess to any recreation whatever are numerous. But it must not be deduced, we take it, that they are superior to exercise. We could believe, perhaps, that Mr. Grant Allen and Mr. William Archer, Mr. Gosse and Dr. Garnett, Mr. Henley and Mr. George Moore, never recreate, but surely (although he does not mention it) Mr. R. D. Blackmore does, and Mr. John Davidson, and Lewis Carroll, and Anthony Hope, and Mr. Henry James. Mr. Sladen must see to it next year that a truthful answer to his inquiries is extracted from everyone, or how are we to know Who's Who, and What's What? This dodging of questions is unpardonable. And more, we consider that we are entitled to be told where and when the recreation takes place. We want to know where we can see our public men disporting themselves. We want to know where we can see Mr. Sladen himself playing Rugby, and Dr. Abbott beginning cycling, and Mr. Robert Buchanan shooting, and Mr. Frederic Harrison walking in mountains, and Ian Maclaren at golf.

THE CARE OF BOOKS.

In The Private Library—which has for subtitle: "What we do know, What we don't know, What we ought to know, about our books,"—Mr. Arthur L. Humphreys buttonholes his readers and proffers them counsel of perfection. Brushing aside all sentiment, he instructs them in the whole duty of the book-owner. The time, he says in effect, has come for the recognition of the library; no longer must it be a spot sacred to surreptitious and unlettered naps, no longer must it occupy a place secondary to the billiard-room. The library must dominate the family. The ideal house is a mere brick and mortar accretion upon a library nucleus. Such, in effect is Mr. Humphreys' contention. Proceeding, with this theory firmly fixed in our minds, we perceive at once that Mr. Humphreys is an aristocrat. He is intent upon fair appearances. He is the friend of limited editions and fine copies. He favours good paper and generous margins. He admires above all editions the Edinburgh Stevenson. There are critics who cannot endure a book which contains other books, as the Edinburgh volumes often do, but Mr. Humphreys is not of them. Yet he discriminates: "Large paper copies," he insists, "are not necessarily fine copies," and "the man who collects large paper books as large paper books is a vulgarian and a fool." After the publisher's cloth Mr. Humphreys deems morocco the desirable wear; but if morocco is not practicable, then pig-skin, calf, vellum, roan, or buckram, in this order of merit. Bookshelves, he says, should never be more than eight feet high, and ladders are abomination. In this pontifical manner he lays down his pleasant laws. The Private Library is probably the most practical work on books that has ever been published. It is as practical as Mrs. Beeton. Here is a little sheaf of maxims which Mr. Humphreys offers to be "learned by heart" or "bought by experience," whichever course the reader prefers:

"Do not bite your paper-knife until it has the edge of a saw.

"Do not cut books except with a proper ivory paper-knife.

"It is ruination to a good book not to cut it right through into the corners.

"Do not turn the leaves of books down. Particularly, do not turn down the leaves of books printed on plate paper.

"If you are in the habit of lending books do not mark them. These two habits together constitute an act of indiscretion.

"It is better to give a book than to lend it.

"Never write upon a title-page or half-title. The blank fly-leaf is the right place.

"Books are neither card-racks, crumb-baskets, nor receptacles for dead leaves.

"Books were not meant as cushions, nor were they meant to be toasted before a fire."

Yet one may obey all these commandments and still be no true book lover. Mr. Humphreys may teach decorum; he cannot compel enthusiasm. The Private Library, whether or not one wholly agrees with it, is always entertaining. But we have an idea that Mr. Humphreys, had he relaxed his hold upon himself, might have made it more so. There are frequent hints of an epigram nipped in the bud, a flippancy discouraged, a smile suppressed. Against one of his statements a stern protest should be raised. Mr. Humphreys somewhere writes that "the prices of all good books are going up, and anyone who lays out money with care within the next ten years will have the enjoyment of his library and a good investment as well." This is a jarring note. It may be true, but it is not consonant with book loving.

THE BOOK MARKET.

ARCHITECTURAL BOOKSELLING.

A CHAT WITH MR. B. T. BATSFORD.

THERE is a shop in High Holborn which must have roused the curiosity of many a Londoner. It is that shop near the opening of Dean-street, which displays architectural books—many of them folios—illustrated sumptuously with photographs of churches and mansions; books of Design, of Wood-carving, of Cabinet-making; books of Japanese Art; books on Building Construction, on Dilapidations, on Dry-rot in Timber, on Bungalows—books that one sees nowhere else. These ten years I had wondered how Mr. Batsford could prosper by producing and selling these books in the wildest part of Holborn. But I found Mr. Batsford ready to condescend to my ignorance when I introduced myself to him this week.

"Who are your customers, Mr. Batsford?" I asked, only I asked it less bluntly.

"Well," he replied, "architects and architectural people generally. No; the cultured amateur does not count for much. There is a little public, of which the architectural profession is the nucleus, and more than the nucleus, on which we are very satisfied to depend. We are in the closest touch with that public, having been here—my father and myself—for over fifty years."

"I see. Now let us take one of your costly publications, say Mr. Birch's London Churches of the XVIIth and XVIIIth Centuries. Will you tell me how you produce and make profitable a work of this kind?"

"Certainly. I will tell you at once that Mr. Birch's work, which we publish at three guineas, cost us £1,500 to produce, and it has been a financial success. Its history is very simple. I had for years been having photographs taken of the finest City churches in the belief that I could use them. These, I may fairly say, were perfect in their way. Look at this photograph of St. Paul's which forms the frontispiece to the volume. It is unique. In no other existing photograph is the dome seen to such advantage, because here neither of the campanile towers interferes with it, while the utmost range is obtained as regards other parts of the building. That photograph was taken from the spire of St. Martin's, Ludgate, when it was scaffolded for repairs some time ago. At last I had got all the photographs I needed; the book had shaped itself in my mind; and all I wanted was a good editor. Him I found in Mr. George H. Birch, who is a thorough antiquarian. You may remember that he designed the 'Old London Street,' which was a feature of the 'Healtheries' Exhibition. He had already given a great deal of study to the City churches."

"Do you regard Mr. Birch's book as an exceptional undertaking?"

"Oh, no! A much costlier work was Mr. J. A. Gotch's Architecture of the Renaissance in England—and Mr. Batsford put a huge folio before me. "On that book we laid out three thousand pounds. Moreover, in a few days we shall begin to issue a sequel to it on Later Renaissance Architecture in England, by Mr. John Belcher and Mr. Mervyn E. Macartney, both unimpeachable authorities on the subject. These are some of the collotype plates. Then in mere cost even these books fall far below Mr. Edwin Sach's Modern Operahouses and Theatres, which we are issuing in three volumes at fifteen guineas. In this case, however, the risk is not our own."

"And what is your very newest book, Mr. Batsford?"

"This one, entitled Plastering: Plain and Decorative. Now, you wouldn't think we could do much with a book like that. But it is the first comprehensive work on its subject; its author, Mr. William Millar, is a master of his craft, having been a plasterer all his life, and being actually descended through a long line of plasterers. All the mysteries of the art are here, and already we have orders for 1,200 copies."

I had heard very little about Mr. Batsford's operations, but I had heard enough to show me that technical book-selling may spell prosperity. W. W.

BOOKSELLERS' WINDOWS.

LEICESTER SQUARE.

It would be sad if there were no bookshops in Leicester-square. The associations of the place demand it. Where Reynolds and Johnson and Goldsmith talked books, their posterity ought to be able to buy them. Where Shakespeare stands pointing with his forefinger to his own words—"There is no darkness but ignorance"—good literature should be for sale. And such fitness has been preserved. Sir Joshua's house is now the book mart of Messrs. Puttick & Simpson. Within half a stone's throw, at the north-west corner of the square, is the large bookshop of Messrs. Bickers & Son. Here, appropriately enough, art books are always well to the fore. Meissonier, Lord Leighton, Millet, the old Dutch and Flemish Masters, Turner, Caldecott, and Phil May are here in their best folio dress. The shop, too, is a stronghold of the late Mr. P. G. Hamerton's sumptuous art books. His Etching and Etchers, Man in Art, and Landscape in Art are still obtainable here. Messrs. Bickers & Son do not classify books in their windows. "A sweet disorder" is more to their liking, a style of window-dressing that has its charms. Here theology and novels, science and belles-lettres, are mingled by the operation of the laws of chance. Sir Evelyn Wood's Achievements of Cavalry rubs shoulders with Ouida's The Massarenes; Harry Lorrequer stands next to Wiedemann's Religion of the Ancient Egyptians; Haydn's Book of Dignities is wholesomely paired with Tom Hood; Fiona Macleod's Celtic mysticism is tempered with the Statesman's Year-Book; and the Memoirs of Baron Omplada are associated with Dean Farrar's Life of St. Paul.

COVENTRY STREET.

With all Leicester-square's English associations, it is the centre of the foreign quarter of London. The foreign bookshop, therefore, is not far to seek. Everyone knows the "Librairie Parisienne" of Mr. Charles Hirsch in Coventry-street. Its window is gay and appetising to a degree: it is a reflection of literary Paris. The yellow and white covers and chic designs are a perpetual invitation to cross the street. Here Ramuntcho and Recommencements and L'Orme du Mail and Le Jardin Secret just now invite your custom. Here the beautiful little volumes of the Petite Collection Guillaume look like delicate literary sweetmeats; among them Shakespeare's Le Songe d'un Nuit d'été, and Byron's Le Corsaire et Lara, and Dickens's Le Grillon du Foyer. Another excellent foreign bookshop is the "Librairie Française" in Wardour-street. This is the best shop in London to go to for French newspapers and periodicals. Every evening nearly forty French daily papers arrive from Paris, and are busily sorted and distributed, while Saturday brings the illustrated weeklies, the caricatures, and fresh supplies of Albums Divers, Albums Humoristiques, Albums de la Vie Parisienne. The stock of French books of all kinds is large, and a classified catalogue is published by the management. But we have not done yet with Coventry-street.

Messrs. Robson & Co.'s shop on the left-side, approaching Piccadilly-circus, is always worth your delay. Old English sports and sportsmen, humours and humorists, reign here. Scrope on Salmon Fishing, Scrope, again, on Deer-Stalking, books on Horsemanship, Dr. Syntax's Tour, Cruikshankiana, the Poetical Magazine, Pierce Egan's books of London life; these, and books like these, renew themselves perpetually here. The other day we noticed a fine copy of the life of the great John Mytton of Halstead, Shropshire, by "Nimrod," who promises much information concerning Mytton's "Extravagant and Eccentric Exploits." The title-page is engraved with a picture of Mytton's funeral, to which the quotation is attached: "Here after Life's fitful fever he sleeps well."

DRAMA.

AT the risk, or rather with the certainty, of being called a pedant and a prig, I have insisted that many plays, described by their authors and accepted by other people as comedies, were not, in fact, comedies at all. An effusion of simple feeling, streaked here and there by irrelevant farcical effects, does not amount to a comedy. I have deplored what has seemed to me to be the total absence of comedy from our contemporary stage, and have been called a prig and a pedant. In future I shall not be so called, since Mr. Meredith's essay on comedy has been republished and reviewed. As is right and proper, indeed, Mr. Meredith is more exclusive than I, for he denies, by implication, the presence of the comic spirit in certain plays (of the Restoration) where I find it written large. But I think he would agree with me that Mr. Pinero's "The Princess and the Butterfly," though not a completely finished comedy, is in conception and on the broad lines of its execution a comedy in truth. There is a point in middle life, before the tragedy of it sets in, where comedy is quite at home, and on this Mr. Pinero has seized. The half-serious, but exaggerated laments of their declining years on the part of a healthy man of forty-five and a still beautiful woman of forty are an excellent starting-point for comedy of character. "I must sit with my back to the light," the lady says, and "Piccadilly is full of tombstones," says the man. "Let us," they say in unison, "make a humdrum marriage of convenience, with no pretence of the illusions that are dead for ever." Whereon they go and fall in love with a boy and a girl. I confess that I think at this point the comic spirit takes on too pronounced a tinge of sentiment: the love affairs are successful, and the marriage of convenience is humorously broken off. I should have preferred the other solution, a period of passion growing tedious by degrees, a humorous weariness of emotion, and then a haven of content in the marriage of convenience after all. It would be called "cynical," but I think the comic spirit would have approved. However, one is grateful for what is given. Neither the Scylla of too pronounced feeling nor the Charybdis of farce is quite avoided, to be sure. The love affairs seemed to me to be on too lofty a plane of emotion. The fourth act, though admirably acted, and the great success of the play, was not on the comic plane. On the other hand, Mr. Pinero's idea of pointing the situation by two contrasted types of middle-aged couples, the couple which was bored and naughty, and the couple which was devoted and virtuous, was carried out—certainly in the latter case—in a vein of farce. It gave him, however, a most effective ending for his second act, in which the wife goes upstairs, and the husband, by another door, to bed. This second act, by the way, contained two points for remark. The first was a little satire on London society—the young man with his new toys who was asked out because the toys made another young man give his funny laugh—that was extremely funny. The other point was the irony of the secretly naughty wife condemning the openly naughty cocotte: that has been done too often, by Ouida especially. If, to resume, the faults of sentiment and farce were not absent, yet the virtue of comedy was present, and the play is a very notable one. But even so rare a play as an English comedy should not go on for four hours. The third act, though the best in comedy of the play, was the great sinner in unnecessary length; it contained an irrelevant crowd of diplomatists, an irrelevant violin solo, and irrelevant manoeuvres of servants; such things are concessions to a taste that is not dramatic, and should be cut out of the play. The drawing of characters was good, the types being neither hackneyed nor too eccentric. Some of the dialogue was witty, but its general level might have been wittier. But, on the whole, we can pay Mr. Pinero the best compliment we can think of—that Mr. Meredith ought to see his play.

THE acting was good. It contained, what is always so delightful, an unexpected excellence, which met with its reward of enthusiasm. Miss Fay Davis's playing of an Italian girl was strong and finished. It began, I thought, a little on wrong lines; she suggested rather a clever, ratiocinative young woman than a hot-blooded girl. But in the fourth act, where she was first detected playing pranks by her guardian friend and was sulky and defiant, and then, learning that he was going to fight a duel, broke down in gratitude and devotion, she accomplished a very fine piece of acting indeed. I was not quite convinced by her accent, but to sustain it with such consistency as she exhibited was extremely clever. Mr. Alexander was a master of his part of a bachelor lamenting his middle-age, though he hardly suggested the "butterfly." It did not afford him so much scope for his gift of light humour as might have been, but it was a good part well played. Miss Julia Neilson played carefully, and never dropped below a creditable level. I did not admire her so much as in "As You Like It," but her acting then was a great surprise to me. In "The Princess" it was far above what was once her form.

Mr. Esmond, as the middle-aged and indifferent husband, kept the lighter scene of comedy well together, and did his share of the clever "curtain" of that act with excellent discretion. Mr. H. B. Irving has never altogether pleased me; he was nearer it than usual. He seems to me to be a clever actor with a radically bad style, who needs a course of heavy work and light parts. Miss Rose Leclercq's part, on the other hand, was far too small; she has a gift of comedy which a writer of comedy should have employed.

PET aversions are agreeable things for a man, but inconvenient things for a critic. It is some years since I conceived a strong prejudice against the plays of Mr. H. A. Jones. To me they always had (I speak, of course, of his later plays) an air of pretentious half-culture, a stagey use of superficial philosophy, which was extremely disagreeable. Moreover, the life in them seemed to be aggressively second-hand, a clever and unsatisfactory deduction of books and newspapers. To avoid misconception, let me add at once that I am not insulting Mr. Jones, of whose culture or knowledge of the world I know nothing: I speak merely of the plays as they impressed me. But against this prejudice I have to be very much on my guard when I go a-criticising, and perhaps it is a wise precaution to have admitted it beforehand. "The Physician" did not dispel it. A clever play theatrically, no doubt, at one point of it very cleverly effective; but the picture of life in it—not an irrelevant consideration, since it is described as "A New Play of Modern Life"—is too improbable, too eccentric altogether. The central idea of it, that of a doctor being called in to reform a secret drunkard whose fiancée the doctor himself loves, and who would be discarded by her if the truth were known, is dramatic and by no means impossible. But, then, this celebrated physician is made an amorist who falls in love with the first woman he sees after being thrown over by a married flirt; and the drunkard in secret is in public a temperance reformer, though any doctor can detect his vice. It is a fault, even theatrically, that the married lady, who is an extremely prominent character, has no integral share in the plot: she is simply a fly on the wheel of the doctor's fate. Otherwise the play is cleverly constructed, in the first act in particular, which begins in a most interesting manner; and in the third, which has an excellent situation. Mr. Wyndham, as the doctor, has one of those parts of middle-aged men, with good sense, charming manners, and a sense of humour, which he affects nowadays, and plays with a fine finish. I think I have never seen him to better advantage, both in the lighter and in the more serious vein. Miss Marion Terry is not one of those cooing and colourless women whom her critics have delighted to honour. She has a part—that of the reprehensible married woman—which gives her an opportunity of acting, and she acts delightfully, with a light touch and a witty manner. Miss Mary Moore has a depressing part of a disappointed girl, and seemed to be even unduly depressed by it; but though her key was minor it was not uncertain. Mr. Alfred Bishop was a dear old clergyman, but (to me) not very dear—a little too boneless in manner. He had the misfortune to be mixed up in some very inferior fooling. Mr. Thalberg was far too jerky and sepulchral, but played carefully. Of the rest, Mr. Kenyon, as another doctor, played rather cleverly, but not attractively, and Mr. Tyler was good as the doctor's servant. G. S. S.

MUSIC.

"LES TROYENS."

THE Trojans have made their way to Liverpool, but not via London. The late Sir A. Harris must have heard of the production of Berlioz' great work at Carlsruhe in 1890, and of the enthusiasm with which it was then received, and yet he never announced it. Quite apart from its merits as a music drama, "Les Troyens" is of interest in that Berlioz considered it his greatest work; further, in that it was from the pen of a composer who had heard "Rienzi" and "The Flying Dutchman," who was acquainted with the score of "Lohengrin," and who possibly may have seen the scores of still later works by Wagner—and all this before he commenced "Les Troyens." The strong individuality of Berlioz prevented him, however, from becoming an imitator of Wagner. In their aim after dramatic truthfulness, and in their horror of the commonplace, the two masters were akin; yet not because either copied from the other, but because each for himself had given heed to the teachings of Gluck; both also had profited by the romantic style of Weber's operas. In spirit they were alike, but in letter altogether different. There are no Wagner reminiscences in "Les Troyens." Wagner's enthusiasm for Gluck was great, but that of Berlioz still greater. The latter literally worshipped him, whereas the former mingled criticism with his admiration. In Berlioz the simplicity of the early master is strongly reflected, whereas the special function of the orchestra as conceived by Wagner led the latter to complex polyphonic writing after the manner of Bach. Then, again, although in the "Prise de Troie" Berlioz, overcome by the sad fate of Cassandra and the dire events of that night in which Troy fell, wrote in so thoroughly dramatic a style, that apart from the stage his music would prove most unsatisfactory, yet in the rest of the work form often makes itself felt; while there are certain numbers, such, for instance, as the air of Iopas, the poet laureate at Queen Dido's court, which cause the action to flag. Gluck tried to remove certain abuses which had crept into music for the stage, but did not—as later on Wagner—wage war against traditional forms. And, in like manner, Berlioz, although strongly in touch with modern ideas, and in some matters by no means conservative, still clung more or less to the old style of opera; and in "Les Troyens" the struggle between the past and the present of the composer's day is strangely felt. In spite, however, of occasional weaknesses, concessions to custom, or effects bizarre rather than beautiful, Berlioz' music drama is nobly conceived and nobly carried out; it claims respect, and compels admiration.

For the moment, however, I am not concerned with the complete work, but with the last three acts given on Tuesday evening at Liverpool by the Philharmonic Society under the able direction of Mr. F. H. Cowen. Berlioz himself sanctioned this division of his score into two parts; though, of course, it was a matter of necessity, not choice. M. Cavallho in 1863 proposed to give these acts under the title "Les Troyens à Carthage," and did actually give them, though in sadly mutilated form. Better part than none, must have thought the composer, who was then in his sixty-first year. And so now I say, better perform these acts on the concert platform than not at all; for at present there is no prospect whatever of hearing the work on the stage in London. The Philharmonic Society and Mr. Cowen, at whose suggestion the work was given, deserve praise for their bold, and I am happy to add successful, undertaking. Several judicious cuts were made. The stately "Gloire à Didon" chorus, the clever Quintet in Act iv., the wonderful Septet with its mournful harmonies and soft and sombre orchestration, the delicious love duet between Dido and Æneas (the words of which Berlioz borrowed from Shakespeare, although, as Mr. Corder remarks in a footnote to his English version used by the Liverpool Society, without acknowledgment), the quaint song of the sailor Hylas, and the pathetic Dido scena at the close, produced a deep impression. The "Chasse Royale" is a wonderful piece of programme music, perhaps the finest of Berlioz' many tone-pictures. With exception of a few wild cries of nymphs and fawns, the movement is purely instrumental. The stage, with its storm effects, movements of nymphs and huntsmen, of course gives special point and meaning to the music; yet so bewitching is the theme which accompanies the swimming of the nymphs, so mysterious is the hunting phrase, and so interesting is the working up of the storm to a climax, and then the dying away, the thunder muttering in the distance, and the return of fine weather, with nymph and huntsman music, that the music per se arrests and holds attention. A storm in tones after Beethoven's "Pastoral" seems a bold venture; but Berlioz achieved something possessing an individuality all its own.

It would be possible to point out certain shortcomings in the Liverpool performance. There were signs here and there of insufficient rehearsal, and the lady solo vocalists were not always satisfactory. With regard to rehearsals it must be said that they were limited; and it is really surprising what Mr. Cowen was able to effect in the short time allotted to him. The vocalists were Mme. Marie Duma (Dido), Mrs. K. Fisk (Anna), Miss G. Izard (Ascanio), and Messrs. Lloyd (Æneas), D. Powell (Narbal and Panthus), and H. Jones (Iopas and Hylas). Mr.

Lloyd, whose part naturally is an important one, carried off chief honours. The chorus sang admirably, and the orchestra deserves high praise. There was a good attendance, and the music evidently gave very great pleasure. The work is sure to be repeated at Liverpool, and perhaps some day Londoners may have a chance of hearing it.

Two new pianoforte Concertos were performed in London last week. The first by Sir A. Mackenzie, entitled "Scottish," given at the opening concert of the Philharmonic Society at the Queen's Hall, is clever, and at times effective; and yet the impression which it creates is scarcely satisfactory. The slow, middle movement has grace and charm, and forms a welcome contrast to the somewhat spasmodic opening section of the work, also to the lively Finale; but, speaking generally, there seems nothing deep, strong, and lasting in the music. The Concerto was written at the request of Paderewski, and the knowledge that it would be interpreted by him accounts for many passages in which virtuosity seems the prime factor. I doubt whether Mackenzie, under ordinary circumstances, would have written for the pianoforte in the same style. M. Paderewski did not play with his usual charm and refinement, but pounded away at most of the music as if he were trying to annihilate it.

To M. Saint-Saëns' clever, though peculiar, Concerto, founded on Egyptian melodies, artistically interpreted by M. Diémer at M. Lamoureux's fifth concert, I must return on some future occasion.

J. S. S.

SCIENCE.

AMERICAN munificence has shown itself very strongly of late in the endowment of universities and expeditions. The most recent instance of the kind is the anthropological expedition fitted out at the expense of Mr. Morris J. Jesup, the president of the U.S. Museum of Natural History, which is to undertake a seven years' tour in the north-west of America, British Columbia, Alaska, Siberia, China, and as far down as Egypt. Prof. Putnam, formerly curator of the Peabody Anthropological Museum at Harvard, is in command of the expedition, and will be accompanied by Mr. F. Boas, well known for his researches into the manners and language of the Indians. This is by no means the first expedition of the kind which owes its inception to Mr. Jesup. That gentleman fitted out a relief party to search for Lieut. Peary in the Arctic regions, and he also found the money for the purpose of making the great Jesup collection of American woods, which forms a valuable exhibit in the museum under his direction.

THERE are certain problems of stellar composition which have lately formed the subject of discussion, and which from the difficulty of amassing true data are likely to do so for some time. A contribution towards the solution of one of these was put forward at the Royal Society meeting on March 25, by Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, in a paper entitled "The Chemistry of the Hottest Stars." This was a continuation of the work which Mr. Norman Lockyer enunciated several years ago in the shape of a "celestial dissociation" theory, and which he has been following up since in the laboratory by means of exhaustive spectroscopic experiments. It is known that the spectra of various stars differ from each other and from that of the sun, and whereas many regard this difference as due to variations in composition, Mr. Lockyer considers that they are attributable to molecular variations simply, depending upon the state of heat of the particular star. On the dissociation hypothesis, with every considerable increase of temperature there would be a corresponding tendency for complex molecules of matter to be broken up into simpler ones, and for new lines to appear in the spectrum corresponding to the rate of vibration of these new molecules. As evidences that such action was actually taking place, Mr. Lockyer pointed out that the temperature of the reversing layers of a Cygni was higher than that of the reversing layers of the sun, and that consequently in the spectrum of the former we missed certain lines of iron, magnesium, calcium, &c., representing complex molecules, and had in place of them certain enhanced lines of iron, lines of hydrogen, and other lines representing substances with which we are not familiar. We might say that in passing from the lower temperature of the sun to the higher temperature of a Cygni that the complicated line spectrum of iron was replaced by a more simple one consisting of enhanced lines. The Orion stars were supposed to be hotter still than those like a Cygni, and in their case the quantity of iron and calcium appeared to be reduced, that of hydrogen increased, and the new gases known as the cleveite gases (e.g., helium) made their appearance. These steps seem to show that dissociation is an actual fact taking place in the hotter stars, and that iron is a compound into the composition of which hydrogen entered, as well as the cleveite gases. Mr. Lockyer's theory is warmly contested by many people, who differ even as to the observed facts; but it cannot be denied that it has a fascination as well as a strong claim to acceptance, for the notion involved of an immense evolutionary progression from simple to complex structure as the stars cool down is as fine as any of the grand ideas in which astronomy is so fruitful.

In the American journal Science, one of the soundest and most ably conducted of all the scientific papers, there appear two interesting notes on protective colouration by Mr. A. E. Verrill, dealing with creatures of nocturnal habits and appearance. Most of these, as he points out, are either black, dark brown, or grey, and so adapted for concealment in shadows. Others have white and yellowish-white patches, which render them indistinguishable by moonlight. Butterflies with bright silvery spots on the under sides of their wings blend well at night with the flowers on which they roost, and glisten like the dewdrops round them. Even the stupid animal becomes at night a living portion of the cane brake in which he sleeps or wanders. In the case of fishes Mr. Verrill has observed that many take on different colours when they are asleep from those which they have when awake, the general change being in the direction of a darkening of the markings. The most curious instance mentioned is that of the common "scup," or porgy (Stenotomus chrysops), which in the daytime is of a beautiful silvery colour with bright iridescent hues, but when asleep changes to a dull leaden colour, crossed by six black bands well adapted to conceal it amid the eel-grass in which it lies. On being awakened, the silvery colour at once reappears.

H. C. M.

ART.

THE studies of wild beasts by Mr. John M. Swan, A.R.A., exhibited by the Fine Art Society, are among the finest of their kind done by any contemporary artist. They are in a most unusual sense work from the life, for the life is life with an emphasis. Life-studies from half-hearted peasants, from pre-occupied models, from languid people generally; life-studies from semi-civilised cows; life-studies from sheep—these are one thing, and studies of a lioness's walk and of the closed down-fling of a panther's four legs, suddenly resting with a wild completeness and, as it were, a little eternity of motionlessness—these are another thing. The life of movement in these wild beasts has its equivalent in the life of immobility. Mr. Swan matches it all by the extraordinary vitality of his drawing. The first study of all is that of a "Hyderabad Tigress Walking"; she is passant, and you have the subtle profile of every motion. Another—a lioness—walks, too, with her limbs strongly knotted and loose. Mr. Swan has a completely artistic sense of the anatomy of these felide; he searches out the attachment of an elastic sinew because its whole action has visible effect. A wild beast has the leanness that makes him wear his skin like a living cloak, with the distinct life of muscle and with the distinct life of bone beneath. Stealth, hunting, hunger, fasting, and the perpetual labour and war of living—the wild beast's occupation—have long kept this angry physical life burning; and even in captivity it has not burnt out. Mr. Swan has studied many a jaguar and panther from the rear, with the intense action of their crouching as they drink or watch. Again, there is the bunch of powerful-paw'd young leopards as they sleep or drink together; a polar bear keeps guard upon a sea-hole; another climbs ice with her claws, and looks back at her hurrying cubs. Everywhere there is the weight as well as the force of life, and everywhere a dignity that is an alien dignity. Mr. Swan's exquisite drawing of parts reminds one somewhat of Holbein's, though the modern master has the more infallible hand. Both use a simplicity for the less articulate, and an exquisite explicitness for the more articulate, passages of the figure they have to draw. In coming to fine articulations the pencil takes an extraordinary delicacy, definition, and power; it then draws intensely; about the broader forms it works loosely, though never weakly. For mere quality of drawing, apart from the beauty of the intelligence that has presented the different and separate life of wild beasts with human skill, the studies are fine examples of pure art. Where there is any intention of colour-effect, the colour is that of a colourist, and not merely that of an eye pleased with easy harmonies, contrasts, or complements.

A. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNIVERSITY SLANG.

Nutfield, Surrey: March 27.

I am aware that vigorous efforts have been made of late to trace slang expressions to their fountain-head. I have not seen, however, attention drawn to the fact that "keep," so generally used in Cambridge for "reside," was employed in precisely this sense in the sixteenth century, and consequently is good Old English, not modern slang. Shakespeare twice makes use of the expression: in "Titus Andronicus," act v., sc. 2; and again in "Henry IV.," pt. i., act i., sc. 3. It would be interesting to know if it can be found in the pages of other Elizabethan poets.

C. L. PIRKIS.

JOHN MILTON.

Dulwich: March 30.

It is a little curious that, in the most luminous and informing appreciation of Milton which Mr. Francis Thompson contributes to this week's ACADEMY, he should not have quoted the passage in Shakespeare which Milton evidently had in mind when he wrote

"Some say, no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog or fire, by lake or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaidd ghost
That breaks his magic chains at curfew-time;
No goblin, or swart faery of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity."

It is hardly possible to doubt that Milton is here intentionally recalling those seven lines in Hamlet i., i. which are so exactly the lines to take the fancy, and linger in the capacious memory of him who wrote the hymn on the Nativity:

"Some say, that even 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long;
And then, they say, no spirit can walk abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallowed and so gracious is the time."

This delightful trick of delicate, suggestive allusion is frequent in Milton: "never before" (says Macaulay) "were such marked originality and such exquisite mimicry found together."

T. BARON RUSSELL.

Norwood: March 29.

In his interesting article on Milton in the ACADEMY of last week Mr. Francis Thompson says: "He is almost the sole great poet we recollect who was a Londoner, being born in that city of a scrivener, on December 9, 1608."

But surely nothing is more striking in the personal history of the great English poets than their partiality for being born in London, and, as Mr. Birrell has shown us, being educated at Cambridge! Chaucer's father and grandfather were both citizens and vintners of London, and he was himself, as far as all our evidence goes, born at the house in Thames-street. Spenser speaks in his "Prothalamium" of

"Merry London, my most kindly nurse
That to me gave this life's first native source."

Ben Jonson, too, was almost certainly a Londoner. Pope was born in Lombard-street. Keats and Byron also within the sound of Bow Bells, and the fashion was not abandoned by Robert Browning, who was born at Camberwell and gloried in being a Londoner. "Ashamed of having been born in the greatest city of the world?" he said, "What an extraordinary thing to say! It suggests a wavelet in a muddy shallow grimly contorting itself because it had its birth out in the great ocean." London has indeed been a "kindly nurse" of the poets!

H. W. W. McANALLY.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

Mr. Hardy's "Well-Beloved." (Osgood.)

"THE Tragi-comedy of a Nympholept," the Saturday suggests as an appropriate title for Mr. Hardy's book:

"it is permeated with the instinctive passion of beauty. . . . Mr. Hardy, therefore, has come back to his own province of the imagination"; but "whether the moyen homme sensuel will find this strange picture of erotic mirage credible or interesting we are not prepared to say." "A sketch of temperament so peculiar and abnormal," writes the Speaker, "that it only escapes being ridiculous by the real genius which is shown both in the conception and the execution of the work. . . . It says much for Mr. Hardy's genius that he has made this remarkable story really attractive, and that he himself seems to have taken as serious an interest in his hero as if that gentleman had been a reasonable human being instead of a crank with a monomania." "What can such a story mean?" asks Mr. W. L. Courtney in the Telegraph. ". . . It is a criticism of a phase of the artistic nature. You cannot for ever pursue the impalpable and abstract beauty without failing to secure the concrete and loving woman. . . . But with what real bitterness does Mr. Hardy envisage his moral! How ridiculous he makes his hero, with his ageing frame and his perennially juvenile heart! . . . The true Platonist ought to know that . . . the love of the beautiful body is but the lowest step in a progress towards an idea not of beauty alone, but also of the good. Perhaps this, too, Mr. Hardy designed as part of his lesson." As to the workmanship, the author "is not quite himself, except in the first section." The Manchester Guardian deplors "a paradoxical trend and the inadequacy of the central figure." If the writer of The Return of the Native be still with us, "we should suspect him," writes the Pall Mall Gazette, "of laughing at us out of these pages. . . . The solemn air of this narrative is enough to sink an ironclad. . . . But . . . we can easily recognise the hand of Mr. Hardy in the colour of his women. . . . As for Pierston, his close was quite consistent, since his business was, among kindred undertakings which followed the extinction of the Well-Beloved and other ideals, to advance a scheme for the closing of the old natural fountains in the Street of Wells, because of their possible contamination, and supplying the townlet with water from pipes, a scheme that was carried out at his own expense. Don't you hear now that note of irony?"

"Flames." By Robert Hitchins. (Heinemann.)

"In his last book," writes the Pall Mall, "Mr. Hitchins has entirely proved himself. His talent does not lie so much in the conventional novel, but more in this strange and fantastic medium. . . . The story . . . grows in interest to the last." But "why Cuckoo? The Lady of the Feathers is unnecessary, and is merely a note of realism in the pages of a fantasy. . . . Mr. Hitchins's narrative is somewhat heavily laced with descriptions and conversations. . . . And yet a reader will forgive and forget all the faults for the value of the definite emotions which it conveys. The air is charged with horror." "Mr. Hitchins's . . . admirable qualities," writes the National Observer, "are those displayed in the telling of his story; his ridiculous qualities are those displayed in its construction; while his disgusting qualities arise from the diseased temperament which he cultivates in approaching life and dealing with its moral problems." He "possesses one of those incorrigibly morbid natures which sentimentalise over men as if they were women, and criticise women very much as if they were men. We regret this extremely; for his literary talents are brilliant. We can, however, pay them no higher compliment than by saying that they are sufficient to render Flames an entertaining and delightful volume." A writer in the Telegraph bids the reader notice "how strangely the man who wants us to believe in spirits insists on the most materialised images." He points out that the theory that "evil is not expelled by good, but by an evil that has repented of its sin, is opposed to all the teachings of science": "nature never forgives." The novel is finally labelled "a rhapsody of mysticism, a pean to the shameful Eros, a hymn of passionate sentimentality."

"Lying Prophets." By Eden Phillpotts. (Innes.)

"Mr. EDEN PHILLPOTTS," writes the Pall Mall, "has concentrated all his energies, made a brave effort, and accomplished a serious and admirable work. According to a critic in the Telegraph it is built upon the Faust-Marguerite theme. John Barron, artist and villain, is pronounced to be too far removed from our sympathy; though, according to the Pall Mall, he is drawn "with careful severity and with a great deal of understanding of what the artistic nature may become." Of Barron, the Chronicle writes: "The real man is kept before us all through, and from first to last he says and does nothing inconsistent with the character-sketch with which the author introduces him." "With his departure," says the Standard, ". . . the interest flags."

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

AUTHORISED EDITIONS OF

MAURUS JÓKAI'S POPULAR NOVELS.

THE GREEN BOOK; or, Freedom

Under the Snow. By MAURUS JÓKAI. With Engraved Portrait of Author. 6s. [Fifth Edition.]

"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.
Mr. Courtney says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigious variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."

BLACK DIAMONDS. By Maurus JÓKAI. 6s. [Third Edition.]

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. . . . Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS. By MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s. [Second Edition.]

"One of the best of his historical romances. Who can resist reading the book? We can promise that the most rapacious and exacting reader shall not be disappointed."—Black and White.

PRETTY MICHAŁ. By Maurus JÓKAI. 6s. [Second Edition.]

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read."—Saturday Review.

NEW "GREENBACK" NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN.

By MARGARET MOULE.
Author of "Wingrove's Ways," "Dick's Wife," "Miss Malmont," &c.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C. At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

NOW READY, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF BENJAMIN JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford.

By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., and LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D.

With Portraits and other Illustrations.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE FORUM.

1s. 6d.—APRIL, 1897.—1s. 6d.

HAS THE SENATE DEGENERATED?.. Senator GEORGE F. HOAR.
RETRENCHMENT—OR RUIN? Hon. J. STERLING MORTON, ex-Secretary of Agriculture.

THE UNITED STATES AND CUBA. HENRI ROCHFORD, Editor of L'Indépendant.

THE FUTILITY OF THE SPELLING GRIND. . . . Dr. J. M. RICE.

SUCCESS OF WOMAN'S ENFRANCHISEMENT in NEW ZEALAND. . . . Hon. HUGH H. LUSH.

SOME OPENED TOMBS and their OCCUPANTS.
The Very Rev. F. W. FAARAH, Dean of Canterbury.

THE PUR SEAL as an ANIMAL. . . . DAVID STARR JORDAN, Chief of the Behring Sea Commission for 1896.

ARBITRATION the only SOLUTION of the FINANCIAL PROBLEM. . . . GEORGE ARTHUR CLARK, Secretary of the Commission.

EMERSON and THOREAU. . . . F. B. SANBORN.

SHALL NEVADA be DEPRIVED of her STATEHOOD? . . . WILLIAM E. SMYTH.

The DRAMATIC CRITIC: his Work and Influence. E. A. DITHMAR.

THE IMPERIALISATION OF GERMANY. Prof. THOMAS DAVIDSON.

London: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 24, Bedford Street, Strand.

Price 2d., by post 3d.; yearly subscription (including Supplements), 2s. 6d.

THE LITERARY GUIDE:

A Rationalist Review.

Devoted mainly to Books and Publications which deal with Religion, Philosophy, Science, and Ethics from a Rationalist standpoint.

No. 10, APRIL, 1897, CONTAINS:

CHRISTIAN ORIGINS.

AN INDICTMENT OF LATTER-DAY IRRATIONALISM.

MARTIN LUTHER.

ARISTOTLE'S PSYCHOLOGY.

VARIED ESSAYS on an EVOLUTIONIST.

THE NEW "ANTE-NIOENE" VOLUME.

MR. LAING CRITICISED.

A SKETCH-BOOK from CARLYLE.

RANDOM JOTTINGS.

OUR LIBRARY SHELVES: Saltor's "First Steps in Philosophy."

IN MEMORIAM: Dr. E. Cobham Brewer.

MORALITY on STILTS.

SIGNS and WARNINGS (Gleaned from the Religious Press).

RATIONALISM in the MAGAZINES.

Also 4-page Supplement, containing Summary of HERBERT SPENCER'S "Data of Ethics."

* Nos. 9 to 9 still in stock.
London: WATTS & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;

48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and

at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REPRODUCTIONS in PERMANENT

PHOTOGRAPHY (the Carbon process) of the chief treasures of the Great Continental Galleries, including

THE PUBLIC and PRIVATE GALLERIES of ROME.

THE UFFIZI and PITTI GALLERIES, FLORENCE.

THE ROYAL MUSEUMS of BERLIN and DRESDEN.

THE MUSEUM of the LOUVRE, PARIS.

THE PICTURE GALLERIES of HOLLAND and BELGIUM.

THE MUSEO del PRADO, MADRID.

Etc. Etc. Etc.

This almost exhaustive series of Autotypes includes nearly every work of Art of interest to the Artist, to the Historical Student, and to the Lover of Pictures. The selection of Works to be reproduced has in every instance been made under the advice of eminent Authorities and of the Official Directors of the respective Collections.

By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 18 by 15 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of Twelve Shillings each.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

SIR EDW. BURNE-JONES.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

A large series of the Chief Works of these Masters reproduced in various sizes, at prices ranging from 3s. 6d. to Three Guineas.

Full particulars of the Collection of Autotype Reproductions of the Works of Old and Modern Masters will be sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

THE ROMANCE of ISABEL LADY BURTON: the Story of her Life. Told in part by Herself and in part by W. H. WILKINS. In 2 vols., large demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with many Portraits and Illustrations, £1 16s. [Immediately.]

THE CONCLUDING VOLUME, BEING VOL. X. OF

THE POETS and POETRY of the CENTURY. Edited by Alfred H. Miles. Sacred, Moral, and Religious Verse. Containing Selections from the Poetry of John Keble, J. H. Newman, Stopford Brooke, E. H. Plumptre, S. Baring-Gould, S. J. Stone, W. H. How, Richard Wilton, Dr. Alexander, and others. With Biographical and Critical Notices. In cloth, gilt top, 4s.; in buckram gilt, gilt top, 6s. [Immediately.]

AN IMPORTANT WORK.

HUMAN SACRIFICE amongst the EASTERN JEWS. By the late Sir Richard Burton, Author of "The Thousand and One Nights," "Catullus," "Il Pentamerone," "The Lusads," &c. Edited, with an Introduction, by W. H. WILKINS. In large demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author, from the Picture by the late Lord Leighton, 21s. net. [In the press.]

THE CONCISE KNOWLEDGE LIBRARY.

Price 5s. per Volume, each in large crown 8vo, containing from 500 to 788 pages, half-bound leather and gilt, or in cloth, richly gilt, gilt edges, as a Gift-Book, 6s.

The First Volume—NATURAL HISTORY.

[Immediately.]

MAMMALIA (Mammals). By R. LYDEKKER, F.R.S., F.L.S.

AVES (Birds). By R. BOWDLER SHARPE, LL.D., F.L.S.

REPTILIA (Reptiles). By R. LYDEKKER, F.R.S., F.L.S., &c.

AMPHIBIA (Frogs, Toads, &c.) By the Same.

PISCES (Fishes). By the Same.

ANTHROPODA (Insects). By W. F. KIRBY, F.L.S., &c.

MOLLUSCA (Snails, &c.). By R. B. WOODWARD, F.G.S., F.R.M.S., F.L.S.

CEPHALOCORDATA (Lancelet, Sea)

UROCHORDATA (Squirt, &c.)

HERMICHORDATA (Star Fish, &c.)

ESCHINODERMATA (Star Fish, &c.)

VERMES (Worms). By R. J. FOCOCK.

CELENTERATA (Corals, &c.)

PROTOZOA (Animalcules)

BRYOZOA (Moss Animalcules). By R. KIRKPATRICK.

788 pages, with 530 Illustrations, specially drawn for this work.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE BY F. FRANKFORT MOORE.

THE JESSAMY BRIDE. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by A. Forestier. [Second Edition.]

"The Jessamy Bride" is so fine a conception that it seems cold criticism to describe it as Mr. Frankfort Moore's best literary feat, although this story claims such acknowledgment.—World.

A NEW NOVEL BY RICHARD PRYCE.

ELEMENTARY JANE. By the Author of "Miss Maxwell's Affections." [This day.]

A NEW NOVEL BY FLORENCE MARRYAT.

A PASSING MADNESS. By the Author of "The Dream that Stayed," "Love's Conflict," &c.

"The plot is cleverly managed, and the story will find many readers." Western Morning News.

A NEW STORY BY E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT.

SCARLET and STEEL. By the Author of "The Apotheosis of Mr. Tyrawley," &c. [On Thursday next.]

A NEW NOVEL BY JOHN MACKIE.

THEY that SIT in DARKNESS. By the Author of "Sinners Twain," &c.

"The tale is highly successful. The narrative is most entertaining. The resources of the writer are excellent. His descriptions of wild scenery are also good, and in the depiction of such strange and varied characters he has great skill."—Manchester Courier.

"'Perfection City' is a novel to be read."

PERFECTION CITY. By Mrs. Orpen.

"'Perfection City' is an extremely well-written and interesting story, and we should have been sorry to have missed reading it."—Daily Chronicle.

"In Olive Weston Mrs. Orpen has realised a personality which is fresh and charming, and the manner in which she has made this girl instrumental in the downfall of the Utopian dream is original and convincing. The young husband is also cleverly conceived, and Uncle David is a delightful character. The story, moreover, is full of incident, which is graphically described, the accounts of the prairie fire and the trial by jury in the little backwood town being exceptionally good. Altogether 'Perfection City' is a novel to be read."—New Saturday.

A NEW STORY BY ANNIE S. SWAN.

MRS KEITH HAMILTON, M.B., the Experiences of a Lady Doctor. With 13 Full-Page Illustrations by D. Murray Smith. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FOR THE TERM OF HIS NATURAL LIFE."

STORIES of AUSTRALIA. By Marcus Clarke, Author of "Heavy Odds," &c. In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

A NEW NOVEL BY JOSEPH HATTON.

THE DAGGER and the CROSS. By the Author of "By Order of the Czar," &c. [On Monday next.]

A NEW NOVEL BY MORLEY ROBERTS.

MAURICE QUAIN. By the Author of "The Adventures of a Ship's Doctor," &c. [Immediately.]

A NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE BY A. WALL.

THE FALL of CONSTANTINOPLE. By the Author of "A Princess of Chalco," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY ELLA MACMAHON.

THE TOUCHSTONE of LIFE. By the Author of "A New Note." [Second Edition.]

"Mr. Rhodes in 'The Touchstone of Life' appears as the great pioneer of new countries, the creator of novel empires, the man on whose nod depends the fate of territory three or four times the size of France. The story is vigorous and well told, the incidents are exciting in themselves and prophetic of the issue. 'The Touchstone of Life' is an eminently readable story; the final dénouement is characteristically clever and true." Daily Telegraph.

"The story is worthy of the strongest recommendation."—Scotsman.

"We linger over it as we do over very few of the books that pass before us." Bookman.

TATTERLEY. By Tom Gallon. [Second Edition.]

"A touching and charming story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"An idyll such as Dickens himself might not have been ashamed to conceive. Once taken up, there is little likelihood that it will be laid down until the last page has been turned."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Gallon has accomplished a work which many experienced writers would be only too glad to acknowledge."—New Saturday.

"We believe in 'Tatterley' through thick and thin; we could not recommend a better story."—Academy.

NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE BY A. L. GLYN.

A PEARL of the REALM.

"A clever and original book. The story is remarkably interesting from start to finish. Majorie is a very pearl of womanhood in her sweetness, courage, and loyalty, and her hairbreadth escapes are really thrilling. The style is at once bright and controlled, and the characters are subordinated to the events. A fresh and delightful novel." Pall Mall Gazette.

A NEW VOLUME OF THE LEISURE LIBRARY.

THE EARTH CHILDREN. By Mrs. Stephen Batson, Author of "Dark," &c. With Illustrations by G. H. Edwards. In narrow crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; paper, 2s.

TENTH EDITION.

INTO the HIGHWAYS and HEDGES. By F. F. Montresor. In cloth gilt, 6s.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1301.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.

New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.

Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.

LATEST CATALOGUES.

No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1448 lots.)
" 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (733, 739 lots.)
" 53, PHILOSOPHY. (240 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

BOOKS, a CATALOGUE of SECOND-HAND.
(1) Pertaining to Annals, Finance, and Political Economy in general, post free; (2) General Literature, two Shillings.
C. HANZAR, 333, Goswell Road, London, E.C.
Libraries Purchased.

COLLARD, Bookseller, Bath. Short CLEARANCE
LIST, 32 pp., MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, free on application.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 2s. 6d. net, eighth
edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction
Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Volumes for prompt consideration.—
Address 15, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
23, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and EXPORTERS,
3, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPIKE & Co.
Telegrams: MORTUILL, LONDON. [Established 1819.]

AUTHORS OF NOVELS and SHORT STORIES
adapted for Serial Publication are invited to communicate with Mr. J. F. SPENCE'S NEWSPAPER SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster
Square, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

TYPE-WRITING.—MANUSCRIPTS, PLAYS,
&c., COPIED. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words), or 5,000 words and over 10d. per thousand; if in Two Columns, 1s. per thousand.
Paper included.—Miss NIENTHALL, "Springfield," Walkers Road, Stonington.

TYPE-WRITING neatly, accurately, and ex-
pediently executed. Scientific MSS. a speciality.—Miss
MARTIN, 19, Beaumont Street, Portland Place, W.

THE DÜRER SOCIETY.

This Society is being formed for the purpose of issuing
Facsimile Reproductions of the Works of ALBERT DÜRER
and his Contemporaries. The Annual Subscription is One Guinea, and the number of members will be limited to 250.

PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.

WALTER ORANE.
CAMPBELL DODGSON.
GEORGE J. FRAMPTON, A.R.A.
G. PERCIVAL GASKELL.
SELWYN IMAGE.
H. C. MARILLIER.
MISS BERTHA NEWCOMBE.
J. BERNARD PARTRIDGE.
FRANK SHORT.
EDWARD F. STRANGE.
GLEESON WHITE.
MISS ALICE B. WOODWARD.
FREDERICK WHELEN, Hon. Treasurer.

Full particulars can be obtained on application to SID M. PRARTREE, Hon. Secretary,
12, Chalcut Gardens,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

LORD LISTER, Pres. R.S., will preside at the 107th ANNIVER-SARY DINNER of the ROYAL LITERARY FUND, on WEDNESDAY, May 6th, at the WHITEHALL ROOMS, HOTEL
METROPOLE, S.W., at 7 for 7.30 p.m. precisely.

FIRST LIST OF STEWARDS.

JOHN ANDERSON, ESQ., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
ROBERT BARNES, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.
R. S. FANOURT BARNES, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S.E.
RICHARD BENTLEY, ESQ.
SIR HENRY BESSEMER, F.R.S.
WILLIAM BLACKWOOD, ESQ.
B. EDWARD BRODTHURST, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
HENRY W. CAVE, ESQ.
PROFESSOR JOHN CLELAND, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.
THE REV. THE PRESIDENT OF CORPUS
GEORGE COWELL, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
THE LORD DAVEY, F.R.S.
OLIVION T. DENT, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
FRANCIS ELGAR, ESQ., LL.D., F.R.S.
HON. ARTHUR D. ELLIOTT.
SIR JOHN EVANS, K.O.B., F.R.S.
WICKHAM FLOWER, ESQ.
J. P. GASSIOT, ESQ.
F. W. GIBBS, ESQ., C.B., Q.C.
SIR ROBERT GIFFEN, K.O.B., LL.D., F.R.S.
I. GOLLANZ, ESQ.
A. PHARCE GOULD, ESQ., F.R.C.S., M.B.
JONATHAN HUTCHINSON, ESQ., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.S.
DR. HENRY JACKSON, LL.D.
THE LORD KELVIN, F.R.S.
JOHN LEIGHTON, ESQ., F.S.A.
J. NORMAN LOCKER, ESQ., C.B., F.R.S.
T. NORTON LONGMAN, ESQ.
FRANK MCGLENN, ESQ., LL.D., F.R.S.
GEORGE W. MACKENZIE, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
FREDERICK MACMILLAN, ESQ.
SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.O.B., K.C.V.O.
N. STORY MASKELYNE, ESQ., F.R.S.
PROFESSOR HENRY A. MILES, F.R.S.
C. LLOYD MORGAN, ESQ.
JOHN MURRAY, ESQ., F.S.A.
DR. JOHN MURRAY, Sc.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
EDWARD NETTLESHIP, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
JOHN W. OGLE, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S.
PROFESSOR THOMAS OLIVER, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S.E.
HERBERT W. PAGE, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
J. O. PARKINSON, ESQ.
SIR RICHARD QUAIN, BART., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
THOMAS RALEIGH, ESQ.
BARON FERDINAND DE ROTHSCHILD, M.P.
SIR WILLIAM ROBERTS, M.D., F.R.S.
THE REV. THE MASTER OF ST. JOHN'S, CAMBRIDGE.
HON. W. F. D. SMITH, M.P.
W. DORRIS STONE, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.S.
J. WILSON SWAN, ESQ., F.R.S.
THE LORD WALSHINGHAM, F.R.S.
THE REV. DR. WADE.
C. KNIGHT WATSON, ESQ., F.S.A.
HERMANN WEBER, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P.
H. WILDE, ESQ., F.R.S.
C. THEODORE WILLIAMS, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P.
E. PERCEVAL WRIGHT, ESQ., M.D.
PROFESSOR SYDNEY YOUNG, D.Sc., F.R.S.

Gentlemen invited to be Stewards are requested to be so kind as to reply as soon as possible to the Secretary,

A. LEWELYN ROBERTS.

7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

TO LITERARY MEN and others.—Experienced
M. OFFERS HOME to RESIDENT PATENT or
BOARDER. Good house in sheltered part of Harrogate. Hunting,
Golf, Fishing, &c. Special advantages for Photography, and exceptionally good Library. No children. Close to Baths and Wells.
References given and required.—Apply M.D., Literary Club, Prospect Hotel, Harrogate.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HARR, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS,
1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £50, two of
£30, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT, FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the Head
MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MEMORY.—Prof. A. LOISETTE'S ASSIMI-
LATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM.

The last, most complete and perfect edition. Arranged for Self-
Instruction.
Mind-Wandering cured. Speaking without notes. Indispensable in preparing for examinations. Any book learned in one reading.
Cloth bound, with portrait and autograph. Price net 2 shillings. 50 cents.
American, 10s. 6d. English. Post free.
Prospectus with opinions of Educators, Scientific, Professional,
and Business Men all over the world free.
Address, A. LOISETTE, 127, Fifth Avenue, New York; or
Not sold elsewhere. 300, REGENT STREET, LONDON

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

£40 OFFERED for BURTON'S ARABIAN
NIGHTS, 16 vols.—Z., Academy Office, 43, Chancery
Lane, W.C.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bozman, Walker, Pace, Cabot, Reyerley, Gilman, also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—MOORE, 4, Trillick Road, Leyton, Essex.

W. MULLER, 1, Star Yard, Carey Street, London,
W.C.—Evans's Welsh Dictionary, 1857.—O'Reilly's Irish-
English Dictionary, 1877.—Monro's Grammar of Hibernic Dialect, 1801.
Byrne's Gothic Economy, 1836.—Economic Review, 1881 Dec., 1884, 1886
all.—Muss-Arnott's Semitic Glosses.—Collier's Eng. Dram. Poetry, 1879.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

REPRODUCTIONS in PERMANENT PHOTO-GRAPHY (the Carbon process) of the chief treasures of the Great Continental Galleries, including

THE PUBLIC and PRIVATE GALLERIES of ROME.

THE UFFIZI and PITTI GALLERIES, FLORENCE.

THE ROYAL MUSEUMS of BERLIN and DRESDEN.

THE MUSEUM of the LOUVRE, PARIS.

THE PICTURE GALLERIES of HOLLAND and BELGIUM.

THE MUSEO del PRADO, MADRID.

Etc. Etc. Etc.

This almost exhaustive series of Autotypes includes nearly every work of Art of interest to the Artist, to the Historical Student, and to the Lover of Pictures. The selection of Works to be reproduced has in every instance been made under the advice of eminent
Authorities and of the Official Directors of the respective Collections.
By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 18 by 15 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of Twelve Shillings each.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.

SIR EDW. BURNE-JONES.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

A large series of the Chief Works of these Masters reproduced in various sizes, at prices ranging from 3s. 6d. to Three Guineas.

Full particulars of the Collection of Autotype Reproductions of the Works of Old and Modern Masters will be sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

GARDNER, DARTON & CO.

MONASTICISM, ANCIENT AND MODERN: its Principles, Origin, Development, Triumphs, Decline, and Suppression. With an Inquiry as to the Possibility of its Revival. By the Rev. F. C. WOODHOUSE, M.A. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d. net.
"A useful book of reference for those who have little time for extended reading."—Guardian.

PASTOR IN PAROCHIA. By the Right Rev. W. WALSHAM HOW, D.D. Twenty-fourth Edition, with Additions, fcap. 8vo, cloth circuit, 3s. 6d.; morocco or calf, 10s. 6d.

THE XXXIX. ARTICLES and the AGE of the REFORMATION: an Historical and Doctrinal Exposition in the Light of Contemporary Documents. By E. TYRELL GREEN, Lecturer in Theology and Hebrew, St. David's College, Lampeter; sometime Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 10s. 6d.
"Excellent as they are from various standpoints, the [other] works on the XXXIX. Articles of the Church of England by no means preclude the necessity for such a work as this, which supplies new information from new sources.... The Text of the Articles is given in Latin and in English, with valuable explanatory and historical notes.... In dealing with the wording of the Articles Mr. Green is eminently successful.... The work, moreover, occasionally introduces medieval customs and ceremonies not generally known.... The student of Anglican divinity will find in this volume much valuable information not to be found in similar treatises."—Morning Post.

LOOKING UPWARD: Papers Introductory to the Study of Social Questions from a Religious Point of View. By the Rev. the Hon. JAMES ADDERLEY, M.A., Author of 'The New Forest.' Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.
[Second edition.]

"A vigorous treatment of what may be termed Christian Sociology, from one who certainly has a moral right, derived from hard experience and self-denial second to none, to speak on this theme."—Daily Chronicle.

THE LIFE of the WAITING SOUL in the INTERMEDIATE STATE. By the Rev. Canon R. E. SANDERSON, D.D., Author of 'What is the Church?' Large fcap. 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, red edges, 2s. 6d. [Third edition.]
"Dr. Sanderson's nine brief addresses have pleased us very much. They are plain, thoughtful, earnest, and catholic, declaring all that is known, or that may reasonably be held.... and the plain man who wants to know what he may safely believe on the state of the waiting souls and our relation to them has here all that he needs."—Church Times.

WORK in GREAT CITIES. Lectures on Pastoral Theology delivered in the Divinity School, Cambridge. By the Rev. A. F. WINSTON INGRAM, M.A., Head of the Oxford House, and Rector of Bethnal Green. With Introductions by the Rev. HERBERT E. RYLE, D.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.
[Third edition.]

"We unhesitatingly tell all young workers, lay and clerical, that they are doing themselves and the work great injustice so long as they remain unacquainted with Mr. Ingram's epigrammatic sensible, experienced talk."—Church Times.
"It is most earnestly to be desired that these lectures should be obtained and read through by all candidates for Holy Orders."—Spectator.

SINTRAM and his COMPANIONS and UNDISCOVERED. An Illustrated Edition of the Masterpieces by DE LA MOTTE FOUQUE. With Introduction by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, and numerous Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

"A better present for a thoughtful lad or lass could hardly be."—Church Times.

THREE GIRLS in a FLAT. By Ethel F. HEDDLE. Illustrated by Gordon Browne, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
[SECOND EDITION.]
"One of the brightest bits of recent fiction.... Her adventurous maidens are delightful company.... The book is one to be read again and again."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE NATIONAL CHURCHES SERIES.

Edited by P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.
"The general idea of the series is excellent."—Guardian.
"The scheme excites our interest."—Saturday Review.

1. GERMANY. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M.A. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"Mr. Baring-Gould's contribution is excellent.... one of the best accounts in English of the German Reformation, its real meaning and real effects, that we have ever come across."—Guardian.

2. SPAIN. By the Rev. Frederick Meyrick, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln. With Map. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"It is a really valuable work."—Manchester Examiner.

3. IRELAND. By the Rev. Thomas Olden, M.A., Vicar of Ballylough. With Maps. Cr. 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"Baldon has the student of Irish history the good fortune to encounter work so learned and so simple, so instructive and so entertaining, as this brilliant epitome of the history of the early Irish Church."—Athenaeum.

4. THE NETHERLANDS. By the Rev. P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A. With 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

5. SCOTLAND. By the Very Rev. H. M. LUCKOCK, D.D., Dean of Lichfield. With 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"His pages are packed with facts from which you are at liberty to draw your conclusions, and which he never garbles or distorts with a view to bolstering up his own. He displays a really surprising comprehension of affairs peculiarly Scottish."—National Observer.

6. ITALY. By the Rev. A. R. Pennington, M.A., Canon of Lincoln. With Map. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

7. FRANCE. By the Rev. Richard Travers Smith, D.D., Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, and Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

8. AMERICA. By the Right Rev. Leighton COLEMAN, B.T.D., LL.D., Bishop of Delaware, U.S.A. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"Tells its story in a simple and unassuming way, which is pleasant and instructive, and puts together in a handy form just the information that the general reader most wants to have."—Guardian.

LONDON: GARDNER, DARTON & CO.,
8, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.

First Edition all Sold, Second Edition Now Ready. Third Edition in Preparation.

THOMAS HARDY'S NEW NOVEL THE WELL-BELOVED

In One Volume, uniform with The AUTHOR'S FAVOURITE EDITION.

WITH FRONTISPIECE ETCHING.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"A delightful romance, of the kind of which, with never-faltering freshness, the author has already given us so many."—Bookman.

"Mr. Hardy has never written anything finer than the pages in 'The Well-Beloved.'"—Saturday Review.

"It is impossible to imagine any story by Thomas Hardy lacking the distinction that has won him the position of the greatest novelist of the time."—Black and White.

"It is a visionary and yet curiously real book. The descriptive passages are as beautiful and vivid as any Mr. Hardy has written. The atmospheric effects, woven of the salt airs of the ocean, coloured with the brilliancy of that white land, linger on the memory as things seen, not read of."—Daily News.

"Every one knows that besides plot there is always in Mr. Hardy's stories a wealth of attraction in qualities that are rare in other writers."—Literary World.

THOMAS HARDY'S NEW NOVEL THE WELL-BELOVED

In One Volume, uniform with The AUTHOR'S FAVOURITE EDITION.

"It is absorbing in interest and set forth with all the old composure and distinction."—Academy.

"Mr. Hardy has not written many novels more marked by the subtle charm of his genius."—Scotsman.

"The writing is subdued and skilful, and there is abundant charm in the descriptions of the island and the island people. Through a great part of it we feel ourselves back with the writer of the older Wessex novels; and we delight in the complete assimilation of the material, the richness, fullness, and simplicity of the narrative. There is a certain sophistication in the idea which belongs to the Hardy of a later period, but the book as a whole has more in common with 'Life's Little Ironies' than with 'Tess' or 'Jude.' 'The Well-Beloved' will not please every reader, but its interest is unflagging; and in the skill with which it treats a whimsical subject full of pitfalls and difficulties it is altogether admirable."—Westminster Gazette.

"His new novel, though less elaborate than 'Tess' or 'Far from the Madding Crowd,' proves that his hand has lost none of its cunning. It is a book which intelligent readers cannot afford to miss; and we are glad that its publication affords us an opportunity to call attention to the completion of an edition of Mr. Hardy's works which will rejoice the hearts of book-lovers."—Publishers' Circular.

THOMAS HARDY'S NEW NOVEL THE WELL-BELOVED

In One Volume, uniform with The AUTHOR'S FAVOURITE EDITION.

WITH FRONTISPIECE ETCHING.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

LONDON: OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO.,
45, ALBERMARLE STREET, W.

MACMILLAN & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

FIFTH THOUSAND NOW READY.

MISS KINGSLEY'S TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

By Miss MARY H. KINGSLEY.
With 10 Full-page and numerous Text Illustrations.
Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

BY THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. CYPRIAN:

HIS LIFE, HIS TIMES, HIS WORK.
By EDWARD WHITE BENSON, D.D., D.C.L.,
SOMETIME ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.
8vo, 21s. net.

TIMES.—"In its main outlines full of dramatic insight and force, and in its details full of ripe learning, sound judgment, a lofty Christian temper, and a mature ecclesiastical wisdom."

BY THE LATE EDWARD A. FREEMAN.
SKETCHES of TRAVEL in NORMANDY and MAINE. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN.
With Illustrations from Drawings by the Author, and a Preface by W. H. HUTTON, B.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"The book abounds with historical research and antiquarian erudition."

NEW NOVEL BY CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.
Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE PILGRIMAGE of the BEN BERIAH. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.
SCOTSMAN.—"The hand of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge has not lost its cunning with the burden of years.... it is a book one feels glad to have read."

VOLUME VI, NOW READY.
EMINENT PERSONS. Biographies Reprinted from The Times, Vol. VI, 1894-96. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Containing, amongst others, Professor Jowett, Sir Samuel Baker, Lord Coleridge, the Tair Alexander III.
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Models of accurate knowledge, concisely expressed in dignified and polished prose, rounded off with temperate and judicious criticism."

VOLUME II, NOW READY.
A NEW SYSTEM of MEDICINE. By MANY WRITERS. Edited by THOMAS CLIFFORD ALLBUTT, M.A., M.D., F.R.S. Vol. II. Containing IRRITATIONS (continued), INTOXICATIONS, and INTERNAL PARASITES. 8vo, 25s. net.

With 46 Illustrations.—Pott 8vo, 1s.
FARM and GARDEN INSECTS. By WILLIAM SOMERVILLE, D.Sc. (Mon.), D.Sc. (Din.) B.Sc. (Edin.), F.R.S.E., F.L.S.

BY SIR ARCHIBALD GRIEKE.
ANCIENT VOLCANOES of GREAT BRITAIN. By Sir ARCHIBALD GRIEKE, F.R.S., &c. With 7 Maps and numerous Illustrations. 1 vol., super-royal 8vo, 30s. net.

MACMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS. NEW VOLUME.
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS in MODERN ENGLISH. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by JOHN MORRISON, M.A., B.D. Globe 8vo, 1s. 9d.

NOW READY, VOLUME LIII.
THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Volume LIII. (November, 1896, to April, 1897), 10s. 6d.
LEADING CONTENTS: A ROSE of YESTERDAY, by F. MARION CRAWFORD.—NELSON in the BATTLE of the NILE.—THE BATTLE of COPENHAGEN. NELSON at TRAFALGAR. By Captain ALFRED T. MAYN.—CAMPAIGNING with GRANT, by HORACE PORTER.

VOLUME XXXV., NOW READY.
S. T. NICHOLAS: An Illustrated Magazine for Young Folk. Volume XXXV. (November, 1896, to April, 1897), 6s. 6d.
LEADING CONTENTS: THE LAST THREE SOLDIERS, by WM. HENRY SHILTON.—MASTER SKYLARK, by JESS BENTLEY.—THE TRUE STORY of MARCO POLO, by NOAH BROOKS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

W. THACKER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

To be published Wednesday, April 14.

The NINTH EDITION of Kipling's
"Departmental Ditties."

Dedicated by SPECIAL PERMISSION to

FIELD-MARSHAL THE

Right Hon. LORD ROBERTS,

V.O., G.O.B.

DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES

And other Verses.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Printed from New Type on Antique Wove Paper.

WITH 12 ILLUSTRATIONS BY DUDLEY CLEAVER.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

Also an EDITION DE LUXE (Limited to 150 Numbered Copies)

With extra Illustrations.

Printed on Hand-made Deckle Edge Paper, Specially Manufactured for this Edition.

21s. net.

And 12 Copies on Japanese Vellum, 42s. net.

CAPT. HAYES' VETERINARY NOTES

for HORSE OWNERS. Fifth Edition, Revised.
With over 200 Illustrations. 15s. [Ready.]

CAPT. NUNN'S STABLE MANAGE-

MENT in INDIA and the COLONIES. Second Edition, Enlarged. 3s. 6d. [Ready April.]

THACKER'S INDIAN DIRECTORY

for 1897. 36s. [Ready April.]

THACKER'S DIRECTORY of the CHIEF INDUSTRIES of INDIA for 1897.

7s. 6d. [Ready April.]

MEDICAL HINTS for HOT CLIMATES

By Dr. HEATON. 3s. 6d. [Ready April.]

Prospectus and Catalogues on Application.

W. THACKER & CO., 2, CREED LANE,
LONDON, E.C.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

4th EDITION, COMPLETING 40,000.

MARGARET OGILVY.

By her Son, J. M. BARRIE.

With Etched Portrait by Manesse.

"It is marvellous with what consummate skill and triumphant ease the author has accomplished his single but most difficult purpose. Without narrative or preliminary disquisition, with never so much as a date or a detail, he has thrown, as it were, upon a white sheet one single image, the image of his mother, who passes rapidly before us, laughing, weeping, anxious, happy, full of household cares and hopes beyond the grave. To be endlessly interesting is the greatest of charms, and it was certainly Margaret Ogilvy."—Speaker.

NEW WORK BY LORD BISHOP OF DURHAM.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SOME LESSONS of the REVISED
VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Right
Rev. BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham.

NEW WORK BY THE REV. DR. HANDLEY MOULE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

PHILIPPIN STUDIES. Lessons in Faith and Love from St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians. By HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Principal of Ridley Hall.

CONTENTS: The Intimacy of Human Hearts in Christ—
The Apostle's Position and Circumstances—The Christian's
Peace and the Christian's Consistency—Unity in Self-Forgetfulness: the Example of the Lord—The Lord's Power in the Disciple's Life—Timotheus and Epaphroditus—Joy in the Lord and the Preserving Power: "That I may know Him"—&c.

SIR J. WILLIAM DAWSON'S NEW BOOK.

With many Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RELICS of PRIMEVAL LIFE. By

Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, LL.D., F.R.S., Author of
"The Story of the Earth and Man," &c.
"Written in a most Christian spirit, and is crammed with interesting information. The illustrations are excellent and appropriate."
—Expository Times.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE INCARNATION: a Study of Philippians ii. 5-11. By the Rev. E. H. GIFFORD, D.D., formerly Archdeacon of London.

With 8 Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TWENTY-SIX YEARS of MISSION-ARY WORK in CHINA. By GRACE STOTT, of the China Inland Mission.

"It is a story, in the outset, of heroic effort amid determined opposition. . . . Contains much interesting information as to Chinese life and customs."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

PRIMEVAL REVELATION. Studies
in Genesis i.-viii. By the Rev. J. CYNDYLLAN JONES, D.D.

8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 6s.

Cheaper Edition, price 3s. 6d.

THE PERSONAL LIFE of QUEEN

VICTORIA. By Mrs. TOOLEY. Illustrated by nearly 100 Pictures of the important Scenes and Events in Her Majesty's Life.

"The volume should meet the wishes of a large public in these days of Diamond Jubilee."—Times.
"For a lady's library there could be nothing of its kind more suitable; and even men, whose interest lies chiefly with the public and wider aspects of the Queen's life, will find many parts of it attractive."
—Standard.

Cheaper Edition.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED FACTS and SIMILES for SERMONS and ADDRESSES. By Rev.
J. F. B. TINLING, B.A.

"Mr. Tinling's book is to be recommended for the wide range, freshness, usefulness, and convenient arrangement of its contents."
—Leeds Mercury.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS FOR APRIL.

1. ST. JOHN'S "LAST HOUR." By the Rev. Prof. G. G.
FINDLAY, M.A., Headingley College, Leeds.

2. MR. CHARLES'S APOCALYPSE of BABUCH. By Prof. J. BENDEL HARRIS, M.A., Cambridge.

3. THE LAMB on the THRONE. By the Rev. G.
MATTHEW, M.A., D.D., F.R.S.E.

4. THE CENSUS of QUIRINIUS. By Prof. W. M.
RAMSAY, D.C.L., LL.D.

5. HENRY DRUMMOND. By the Rev. JAMES STALKER,
D.D., Glasgow.

6. GOD'S ENSIGN at REPHIDIM. By the Rev. H. CLAY
TRUMBULL, D.D.

7. A NEW SECOND CENTURY CHRISTIAN DIALOGUE.

By F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford.

London:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

*Mr. MACQUEEN has pleasure in announcing that he will publish on Monday, the 12th inst.,
a translation from the French, by Thérèse
Batbedat, of LUDOVIC
HALÉVY'S famous Novel, "ABBÉ CON-STANTIN." Crown
8vo, 3s. 6d.*

NEW FICTION.

A FLIRTATION with TRUTH.

By CURTIS YORKE,

Author of "Once," "A Record of Discords," &c., &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A well-written novel of fashionable life. . . . The dialogue is essentially 'smart.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A clever, witty, 'Dodo' kind of book. . . . It has grace and strength of style which it is impossible not to admire."
—Freeman's Journal.

"Excellent, told, and is nearly all in crisp and clever dialogue, which interests and amuses."—Scotsman.

"Curtis Yorke has told the story well, brightly, humorously, and with a sufficiency of pathos."
—Daily Chronicle.

TWENTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

THE SIGN of the CROSS: a Novel.

By WILSON BARRETT. With a Preface by the BISHOP of TRURO. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book, as well as the play, is a phenomenon of our time, the significance of which, we believe, is wholly for good."—Christian World.

DENYS D'AUVRILLAC. By Hannah

LYNCH, Author of "Daughters of Men," &c. Crown
8vo, 6s.

The Athenaeum.—"May be honourably distinguished from the rank and file of current fiction."
Pall Mall Gazette.—"It is by intrinsic quality of a superior order that this book excels."

WORKS BY MR. J. H. CRAWFORD, F.L.S., in uniform binding.

SUMMER DAYS for WINTER

EVENINGS. A Series of Nature Idylls. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

The Times.—"With Mr. Crawford's delightful sketches, sometimes telling alone of nature's aspects, sometimes with a thread of story to lend a touch of human interest, a reader must have little imagination if he does not speedily forget the tempest that beats against the casement and fancy himself between green earth and blue sky watching the kaleidoscope of the seasons and the changes of the year and the ways of furred and feathered creatures which are so sympathetically described."

THE WILD LIFE of SCOTLAND.

Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

The Spectator.—"This is a very delightful as well as informing book, which, in respect of style, recalls Thoreau rather than either Jefferies or Burroughs. . . . Altogether this book, which belongs to the rare order that can be taken up at any moment and easily read in instalments, is by far the best and most convenient hand-book to Scottish Natural History—in the most comprehensive sense of the word—that has ever been published."

"The best book on the subject."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

A NARRATIVE of the BOER WAR.

By T. F. CARTER. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Sheffield Telegraph.—"This great work is history, exhaustive, impartial, and realistic."
The African Critic.—"The book is generally recognised as a standard work on the subject."

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

A SELECTION FROM BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work may be had separately, price 6s.,
of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

THE MISTRESS OF BRAN FARM (2nd Edition).
SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.
BASIL LYNTHURST.
LOVE OR FRIEND?
FOR LILIAS.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX.
WEB WIFE.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
MABY ST. JOHN.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

SOYLLA OR OHARYBDIS?
A BEGINNER.
MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART!
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
BELINDA.
ALAS!

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

MY LADY NOBODY.
"GOD'S FOOL."
THE GREATER GLORY.
THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH.
AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

By W. E. NORRIS.

A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER. (Reprinting.)
MAJOR AND MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO. (Reprinting.)

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
KITH AND KIN.
FROM MOOR ISLES.
PROBATION. (Reprinting.)
ALDYTH.

By L. DOUGALL.

THE MADONNA OF A DAY.

By JANE AUSTEN.

[The only complete Edition.]
EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, AND THE WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, AND PERSUASION.
PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.
SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOLING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
THE HOUSE BY THE CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GIRTON GIRL.
SUSAN FIELDING.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS, AND HOW HE WON IT.
FICKLE FORTUNE.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE EYE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S NEW BOOKS.

With Portraits and Illustrations, cloth, price 1s.

LADY BLANCHE BALFOUR: A Reminiscence.

By Rev. JAMES ROBERTSON, D.D., Whittinghame.

This short sketch and study from memory of the mother of Mr. A. J. Balfour and the sister of Lord Salisbury will be read with interest by both followers and opponents of these eminent men.

In post 8vo, gilt top, price 5s.

A MAN'S VALUE TO SOCIETY. Studies in Self-Culture and Character. By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS.

"The Science of Living with Man" and "Making the Most of One's Self" are two chapter-headings which express the main scope of this book. The author is an American who writes with great freshness and vigour on these and kindred topics.

NEW BOOK OF MISSIONARY WORK AND ADVENTURE.

With Portrait and Illustrations, price 3s. 6d.

IN the TIGER JUNGLE, and other Stories of Missionary Work among the Telugus of India. By Rev. JACOB CHAMBERLAIN, M.D., D.D.

With Introduction by Rev. F. E. CLARK, D.D.

Dr. CLARK says: "The best of this volume does not lie in the taking titles of its chapters, in its fascinating style, or in the stirring adventure which it narrates; it lies in the genuine missionary fervour, and in the realistic and vivid pictures of missionary life, which make the countries described, and their people, and the work done for them, live again in the glowing printed page."

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "CRUISE SKETCHES."

THIS DAY, in crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

SPRAYS OF NORTHERN PINE By FERGUS MACKENZIE, Author of 'Cruise Sketches,' &c.

FAMOUS SCOTS—New Vols

Price 1s. 6d. each; or cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

FLETCHER of SALTOUN By G. W. T. OMOND. [This day.]

THE BLACKWOOD GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS. [In April.]

TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant SMERTON.

The Sheffield Telegraph says: "Mr. Smerston presents a very interesting pen-and-ink picture of one of the most remarkable figures in English literature."

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith LEASK.

The Morning Leader says: "The defence of Boswell in Mr. Leask's delightful study is one of the finest and most convincing passages that have recently appeared in the field of British biography."

NEW EDITION, completing Tenth Thousand of

SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By Eve BLANTYRE SIMPSON.

The Daily Chronicle says: "It is indeed long since we have read such a charmingly written biography.....There is not a dull, irrelevant, or superfluous page."

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.
TWELVE VOLUMES ARE NOW READY.

The TIMES says of "A Cycle of Cathay": "It is, perhaps, the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

A CYCLE OF CATHAY: China, South and North. With Personal Reminiscences. By the Rev. W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., Ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and numerous Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

BIBLE CHARACTERS—ADAM to ABRAHAM. By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., Author of "Bunyan Characters," "Lancelot Andrewes," &c. In post 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

NANSEN'S FARTHEST NORTH.

NANSEN'S FARTHEST NORTH.

"A masterpiece of story-telling."—Times.
"A book for everybody who loves a story of romance and adventure."
Westminster Gazette.

NANSEN'S FARTHEST NORTH.

"The genius of a Defoe could scarcely contrive a more absorbing story than we have in the second volume of the book."—Spectator.

NANSEN'S GREAT BOOK may be obtained at every Bookshop, at every Library, in England, in Scotland, in Ireland, in Wales.

NANSEN'S GREAT BOOK contains over 100 Full-page Illustrations, a large number of Text Illustrations, 16 Coloured Plates, 2 Photogravure Plates, and an Etched Portrait.

THE STORY of an AFRICAN CRISIS and the JAMESON RAID. By F. E. GARRETT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"Just the thing that was wanted to enable the ordinary business man to get in a few hours' reading a thorough grip of the events in a history-making episode."—Financial News.

Now First Issued in Book Form.

AN ESSAY ON COMEDY and the COMIC SPIRIT. By GEORGE MEREDITH. 2s. net.
"May without hesitation be put down as one of the subtlest, wittiest, and most humorous pieces of criticism in the English language."

Mr. WILLIAM ASCHER in the Westminster Gazette.

THE CRISIS IN THE EAST. READ THE NATION'S AWAKENING. By Spenser WILKINSON. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. Second Edition.

"The book points out the way that leads to the solution of the problems arising in the present and near future in the spirit of a truly national character."—Deutsche Rundschau.

ENGLISH ILLUSTRATION, 1857-1870. By GLEESON WHITE. With Photogravures and over 100 Illustrations. 43s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Gleeson White has done his work well."—Daily News.

THE CHRONICLE of VILLANI. A Book for Dante Students. Translated by ROSE E. SELFE. Edited by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Perhaps no one book is so important to the student of Dante as the chronicle of his contemporary Villani."—Athenaeum.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON. Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. With Frontispiece. 6 vols. fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per vol.; also half-morocco, 2s. net per vol. Sold in Sets only.

"Far and away the best Boswell, I should say, for the ordinary book-lover now on the market."—Illustrated London News.

PROBLEMS of MODERN DEMOCRACY.

By EDWIN LAURENCE GODKIN. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The most noteworthy book on Democracy since Mr. Lecky's."

Chicago Evening Post.

WHITMAN: a Study. By John Burroughs.

12mo, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

"Of all the books which have been published on Whitman this is the best."—Daily Chronicle.

THE LOVE of an OBSOLETE WOMAN.

Told by HERSELF. 2s. 6d.

CONSTABLE'S REPRINT of the WAVELEY NOVELS.

(The Favourite Edition of Sir Walter Scott.)

With all the Original Plates and Vignettes (Re-engraved). 1s. 6d. net per vol.; 4s. 12s. net the set. Also cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. net per vol.; 4s. 12s. net the set; and half-leather gilt, 2s. 6d. net per vol.; 4s. 12s. net the set.

"This is one of the most charming editions of the Waverley Novels that we know, as well as one of the cheapest in the market."

Chicago Herald.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS, 1546-1548. By A. F. LEACH, M.A., F.S.A., late Fellow of All Souls', Oxford, Assistant Charity Commissioner. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"A very remarkable contribution to the history of secondary education in England, not less novel in its conclusions than important in the documentary evidence adduced to sustain them."—The Times.

THE AMAZING MARRIAGE. By George MEREDITH. Fourth Edition. 6s.

"A masterpiece."—Daily News.

THE TRAGIC COMEDIANS. By George MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MADGE o' the POOL. By William Sharp.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Excellent."—Athenaeum.

SISTER JANE. A New Book by "Uncle REMUS." 6s.

"Of all Mr. Harris's recent stories 'Sister Jane' is the best."—Academy.

"A charming book. A most engaging book."—Daily Chronicle.

IMPERIAL DEFENCE. By Sir CHARLES DILKE and SPENSER WILKINSON. New and Revised Edition. 2s. 6d.

"A very suggestive and vitally important little work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ANGELA'S LOVER. By Dorothea Gerald.

Paper, 1s.; cloth extra, 2s.

A WRITER of FICTION: a Novel. By OLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife." Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"A striking story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE KNOWLEDGE of LIFE. By H. J. HARALD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Harald has set himself up as a breaker of many of the social images which most of us worship as blindly and devoutly as the Hindoos worship their gods, and no one who reads his arguments without prejudice can deny that he has common sense and justice on his side."—Daily Mail.

HER MAJESTY'S GREATEST SUBJECT:

A Novel. By A. C. THORBURN, I.C.S. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A very romantic and entertaining story."—Scotsman.

THE PREACHING of ISLAM. By T. W. ARNOLD, B.A. With 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"One of the most elaborate and careful accounts of the spread of Mahomedanism that we remember to have seen in any language."—Times.

THE POPULAR RELIGION and FOLK-LORE of NORTHERN INDIA. By WILLIAM CROCKE.

With numerous Full-Page Plates. 21s. 6d.

"The book is in every respect an admirable one."—Times.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., WESTMINSTER.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
Early Mediæval Geography	393
Wordsworth as Prose Writer	394
Oxford Politics	394
The Riddle of Existence	395
Beauty and Art	395
Early History of England	395
Stories of the Nations	397
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	398
FICTION:
Lads' Love—Quo Vadis—Wilt Thou have this Woman?—The Adventures of John Johns—The Master Beggar—The Career of Claudia—Out of the Darkness—A Matter of Temperament—The Jucklins—Margot	399
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	401
New Books Received... ..	402
NOTES AND NEWS	403
PARIS LETTERS	404
CHARLES LEVER	404
THEOLOGY IN FICTION	405
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XXII., Charles Darwin	406
THE BOOK MARKET: A Literary Sample Room	406
ART	407
MUSIC	407
SCIENCE	408
CORRESPONDENCE	409
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	409

REVIEWS.

EARLY MEDIÆVAL GEOGRAPHY.

The Dawn of Modern Geography. By C. Raymond Beazley, F.R.G.S. (John Murray.)

A HEARTY welcome will assuredly be given by all serious students of mediæval thought to this excellent treatise, the full scope and purport of which is clearly set forth in the sub-title, "A History of Exploration and Geographical Science from the Conversion of the Roman Empire to A.D. 900, with an Account of the Achievements and Writings of the Early Christians, Arab and Chinese Travellers and Students." In other words, an attempt, and, it must be at once added, a completely successful attempt, is here for the first time made by an English writer to deal comprehensively with that period of six centuries to which the expression "Dark Ages" more properly applies, and during which geography, like other branches of knowledge, seemed to be if not actually extinct, at least in a state of "suspended animation." After the break with the past, brought about by the irruption of the northern barbarians and the rise of Christianity, little survived of classical lore, and that little had to be re-cast in order to make it fit in with Biblical texts and narrow dogmatic teachings on the order of the universe. The progress made by antiquity was not merely arrested, but mainly forgotten. Hence the history of geographical science during this barren epoch is necessarily a history of decay and stagnation. But all the greater credit is due to the author of this work for his courage in taking such an unpromising subject in hand, and especially for the skill with which he has contrived to make it interesting to the student and even to the general reader. Of records for the elucidation of his theme he found no lack; but he had to gather them with infinite pains from the four quarters of heaven, visiting nearly all the important public collections in Great Britain and on the mainland, in order to study at first hand a large number of mediæval documents, either still unpublished or else accessible only in rare editions, or incunabula. No parade, however, is made of these thankless labours, which, in fact, are only once incidentally referred to in a note at the end of the book, though, of course, evident enough from the scholarly treatment of the subject conspicuous on every page.

Nor does Mr. Beazley anywhere convey the impression of being over-weighted by the superabundant materials thus brought together. On the contrary, the narrative, if not actually "light reading," flows almost as smoothly as the Decline and Fall itself, which in this respect it strongly resembles. In both works the lightness of exposition is secured by the same means—a thorough mastery of the numerous authorities consulted, and a judicious arrangement of the subject-matter. In the present work unity and clearness of treatment are secured by a general introduction of some fifty pages, which gives a broad outline of the whole ground under investigation, and of which the rest of the volume may be regarded as little more than a detailed expansion. Thus, in the three following chapters a full account is given of the itineraries of the early pilgrims to the Holy Places, with a due appreciation of the services, such as they were, rendered by these unconscious pioneers to geographical knowledge.

Then comes an important chapter, which, in two divisions, deals from the same standpoint with the traders and missionaries of the period under discussion. The practical work thus accomplished could not fail to give rise to a good deal of speculation, always within the limits of orthodoxy, on the extent, shape, movements, and general constitution of the globe; hence a special chapter of great interest is devoted to the prevalent theoretical views of the times regarding the "centre of the universe," as the world was held to be. These views are aptly illustrated by a series of mediæval attempts at cartography, including the Peutinger Table, the Ashburnham map, the curious plans attributed to Cosmas, and the Mappe Monde preserved in the library of Albi, Languedoc, which claims to be the earliest extant document of the kind. Some of these are here for the first time reproduced from photographs of the originals, and all of them betray an almost incredible ignorance even of the best-known quarters of the globe. Thus, in the Albi the Caspian is represented as an inlet of the all-encircling ocean; the Black Sea flows directly into the Mediterranean some distance west of Crete, which is larger than Britain; Sicily, despite of Virgil's "Trinacria," forms a regular square; Sardinia is smaller than Corsica; Italy is stunted out of all recognition; and the Mediterranean actually broadens out towards the Atlantic as if the very Columnæ Herculis had already been forgotten. It would be impossible to conceive a more utterly debased condition of geographical study since the days of Ptolemy, and even of Herodotus, than is represented by these infantile efforts at map-making.

Here and there the text seems to assume a controversial tone antagonistic to dogmatic teaching. But that is not the fault of the author. When theology usurps the chair of science a collision becomes inevitable, and the free right to independent research can be vindicated only by a line of argument which necessarily takes a somewhat polemical form. Thus a critical estimate of the cosmological theories of the Alexandrian monk Cosmas, "the first scientific geographer of Christendom," must needs abdicate its functions unless it points out that "his topography is, above all, a work of theological interest. It is both destructive and constructive. It denies the roundness of the earth, as asserted by the leading Greek geographers and astronomers; it denies especially the existence of the antipodes or land inhabited by human beings beneath our feet; and it attacks the belief that the world can be suspended in mid-air, or in any sort of motion. On the other hand, it alleges and tries to prove a positive system of its own, which has become proverbial among the curiosities of literature and of thought. According to this, the universe was a flat parallelogram, its length exactly double of its breadth. In the centre of the universe lay our world, surrounded by the ocean. Beyond the ocean was another earth, where men lived before the Flood, and from which Noah came in the ark. To the north of our world was a great hill (an Indian conception) round which sun and moon revolved, thus causing day and night. The sky consisted of four walls, meeting in the dome of heaven, on the floor of which we live; and those walls were glued to the edges of the outer world of the patriarchs. Heaven, moreover, was out in two by the firmament lying between our atmosphere and the paradise of God; below the firmament lived the angels, and above it were waters—the waters that be above the firmament."

Yet Cosmas before entering the cloister had been a trader and a traveller of sufficient note to have earned the by-name of "Indicopleustes," so that one asks in amazement, Si sic in viridi quid in sicco? But "the religious age of Christian travel was of necessity unprogressive and unproductive." The early pilgrims, inspired by religious emotion, had no eye for the physical surroundings, and in their peregrinations were attracted mainly towards sites famous in Biblical or Christian legend, or else went in quest of holy relics, which were treasured in proportion to their absurdity, and the supply of which ceased only with the demand. Thus broad geographical surveys, or even more modest topographical notes, are replaced by minute descriptions of such sites as the spot where the whale threw up Jonah, the shady oak beneath which Abraham entertained the angels, the dunghill on which Job received his comforters, the miraculous wells which healed broken limbs, expelled poison from the system, revealed secrets, and so forth. Then we have long and contradictory accounts of the finding of the holy rood, Solomon's amber ring, the earth of which Adam was made, the cup used at the Last Supper, the lance, reed and sponge, many nails and crowns of thorns, and the still liquid blood of John the Baptist brought back to Europe in a sea shell.

As this volume must necessarily become a standard work of reference on the subject of which it treats, attention may here be called to a few misprints and to the generally defective spelling of Arabic names, for which the author has unfortunately followed the system of M. Stanislas Julien without adhering to it consistently. Thus the French scholar's Abulfeda usually becomes Aboulfeda instead of the proper English form Abulfeda. Then we have both Haroun al Rashid and Haroun al Raschid for Harun er-Rashid; Cairoan for Kairwan; Djaber for Jabar, and dj generally for j, the proper English transliteration of the Arabic letter jim. Misprints are: Chaudragupta for Chandragupta (p. 508); tre parte for tre parti (p. 391); the younger for the elder Pliny (p. 321); from east to west for from west to east (ib.); and is it correct to say that "Iona, which had long been the capital of the Irish Church and its missions, was now passing under the obedience of Rome" (p. 131)? Surely Iona never was the "capital" of the Irish Church; and Romanists contend with some show of reason that it never was separated from communion with Rome. "Nos enim," writes Columbanus of Bobbio in a document still extant, "devincti sumus Cathedræ Petri."

WORDSWORTH AS PROSE-WRITER.

Prose Works of Wordsworth. Edited by William Knight. (Macmillan & Co.)

UNTIL Dr. Grosart published his edition, in 1876, the public hardly realised that Wordsworth had left a sufficient body of prose to be described by the title of "Works." Dr. Grosart's edition included not only the poet's letters, but those of his sister Dorothy. Mr. Knight has (we think wisely) reserved the letters for subsequent publication, and confined these two volumes to what might be regarded as independent and detachable prose. A few pieces which are ostensibly letters find place in these volumes. But they are really essays cast in epistolary form; and Mr. Knight has shown correct judgment in detaching them from the letters proper. He objects, justly enough, to Dr. Grosart's assigning of titles to some pieces which were not the poet's own, and to his inclusion of a letter by Prof. Wilson, without due notice in the body of the text that it was not by Wordsworth, but was only published to elucidate Wordsworth's answering letter. These minor errors are corrected in Mr. Knight's edition, which, moreover, contains prose writings of the poet not given by Dr. Grosart. This constitutes its independent value. For the rest, Mr. Knight confesses that some of the pieces (such as the "Letter to the Bishop of Landaff") are simply reprinted from Dr. Grosart. In the interval between the two editions, the MSS. from which Dr. Grosart drew have disappeared; so that to Dr. Grosart belongs the credit of having rescued from oblivion what, but for his timely enterprise, would have been lost to us. But there can be no doubt that Mr. Knight's additions and amendments make this edition an advance upon its predecessor.

These writings are very miscellaneous. They include, for example, a "Guide to the Lake District," the most unconventional guide-book ever published. It is full of valuable information about the Lake District in Wordsworth's time, conveyed in a characteristically Wordsworthian, but by no means popular, manner. There are observations of incidental, but far from transitory, interest. But the best-written part of it, to our mind, is a journal of a tour through some part of the Lake country, which the editor, in a footnote, ascribes to Dorothy Wordsworth. It is observant, sensitive, at once clear, pictorial, and restrained in its style; but when Mr. Knight says that it was written by Dorothy he can hardly mean more than that Dorothy was the amanuensis employed by her brother. At any rate, one finds such an expression as "when I was a boy." It would have been better if the editor had explained himself more clearly in this and one or two other footnotes. The journal reads very unlike any woman's writing; and we cannot but suppose that Mr. Knight has been loose in his statement. In fact, the writing harmonises absolutely with the descriptive portions of the rest of the "Guide," and leaves an impression that Wordsworth was an admirable master of that manner of prose description which is contented with the just and sufficient epithet, without aiming at the magical epithet. This is characteristic of all Wordsworth's prose. Our own day has seen the rise of a school which in some degree effaces the formal barriers between poetry and prose; which endeavours not only after the right, but the thrillingly right word. It may be said that a contemporary and friend of Wordsworth commenced this innovation—namely De Quincey; but Wordsworth's own writing rigidly observes the distinction between prose and poetry.

Poets, it has been said, are always good prose-writers. From this rule it has been the fashion to except Wordsworth; and if there be any prose-writing of Wordsworth's, which all critics and editors (until late years) described as dull and undistinguished, that writing was emphatically the pamphlet on the Convention of Cintra—which, thanks to some muddle between De Quincey (who saw it through the press), Wordsworth, and a third person commissioned by Wordsworth with a special revision, appeared too late, and fell utterly flat. Mr. Knight, being a Wordsworthian, of course considers the Convention of Cintra a masterpiece, and appeals to the authority of Rogers, the banker who once passed for a poet. The truth is, that it has some really magnificent passages, full of a grave and lofty passion unmatched in Wordsworth's prose, though easily to be paralleled in his poetry. Manifestly, in this effusion, he took for models such seventeenth-century writers as Hooker, whom Mr. Ruskin also followed in Modern Painters. There is the same length and involution of sentence which we find in that early work of Ruskin; but there the resemblance ends. The austere Wordsworthian mind will admit no flowers of beauty; and the sentence-structure is managed with far inferior skill. It is cumbersome, unwieldy, elephantine: it has no power, like De Quincey's equally periodic style, of accommodating itself to the variations of its subject-matter. But when the subject-matter comes into harmony with it when, with puffing and snorting, the ponderous organism has got itself into motion with a clear course before it, then, indeed, we have fine and sustained examples of antique and virile eloquence. Space will not serve for extracts, or we would gladly make them. But, when all is said, the most permanent value of Wordsworth's prose lies in the essays—prefatory or supplementary—which accompanied his poems, and are here brought together. His prose-style is rootedly abstract, and therefore shows at its worst in dealing with concrete subjects. But in philosophic criticism of poetic principles its austere abstraction becomes not only justified, but meritorious. In spite of the excessive and one-sided theories about "poetic diction," at which even Coleridge smiled, these essays are full of most original and invaluable statement of principles which can never be obsolete, in language which cleaves to its subject-matter like gold-leaf.

"Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For them the critics much confide in,"

said Byron. Whatever may be the confidence of critics, we say much more unhesitatingly, "Read all the prefaces of Wordsworth." They are stimulating, suggestive, concisely put: if you can think for yourself, they will help you to think.

OXFORD POLITICS.

Essays in Liberalism. By Six Oxford Men. (Cassell & Co.)

THE political condition of undergraduate Oxford has at last been deemed worthy of an exposition. In that ancient university politics have always been something more than a game to the generations of schoolboys who come thither to grow into manhood. Many look forward to a career where this interest will play some part, and many for the mere love of controversy muddle their brains with theories and their memories with statistics. At this special moment the subject has a unique importance, for Oxford, which has been obsessed by successive religious and art enthusiasms, is now in the bondage of a political interest; and the result is that there are many parties, all serious, all amusing, from the Tory High-Churchman, who languishes for the dear days of abuses, to the sturdy Fabian, whose scout is a man and a brother. These young gentlemen are diligent students of a multitude of newspapers; they learn to speak with fluency in the debates of the Union; in the various political clubs they condemn the deeds of their betters; and in the whole game find much healthy amusement and some solid benefit. But the politics of the undergraduate are fluid; the enthusiast who goes down a Socialist returns a hot Imperialist, and the undergraduate Jacobite becomes a graduate Radical. And this is well, for unless he has the good sense to see that, after all, he is an amateur, the political undergraduate is in danger of developing into the blameless prig.

The book before us is a protest against frivolity. It is a record of definite opinion, the work, we are assured in the preface, of "six men who know their own minds." The proposal is bold, but it reads not unlike a confession of weakness. A careful study of the classics and history, a diligent reading of newspapers, a little dabbling in election campaigns, and an average of some twenty-five years of age—is this all that is necessary for a final and epoch-making statement of political principles? The tone of the proposal is modest, but its words have unconscious arrogance. For to crystallise one's opinions thus early, to explain the world by a formula at a time of life when it should seem inexplicable, savours of a narrow and pedantic mind. The bold assertion of eternal principles is an argument against the perspicacity, the historical wisdom of the writers. Let them talk of eternal principles as they like in electioneering and platform-speaking; but when it comes to a statement in print, opportunism of a kind is the more promising attitude. Certainty, to be sure, is natural to youth, but certainty should stop short of the doctrinaire.

Yet when we turn to the essays themselves we find a singular amount of modesty and good sense. Mr. Belloc's contribution to the Liberal basis is a theory of universal moral sentiments, particularly the sentiment for property, which, when worked out, stands in strange relation to the Manchesterian economics of the essay following. Mr. Belloc's work, though clever and full of a certain crude eloquence, strikes us as confused and rather hysterical. We should point out that such phrases as "alien extraneous authority," "imitative emulous vigour" are scarcely elegant, while "the obscene tyranny of Stambuloff" and "Mr. Bloggs of Smokeville" are ostentatiously undergraduate. However, Mr. Belloc was part-author of a book called The Bad Child's Book of Beasts, and as such deserves a statue in the market-place. Mr. Hirst's paper on "Liberalism and Wealth" is a sane and vigorous piece of argument in defence of the accepted doctrines of economists against the attacks of Collectivism. His criticism of Mr. Williams's "Made in Germany" is clever, though he brings to the discussion an exaggerated scorn. Sometimes he strives to joke, and he will perhaps excuse us if we do not always find him successful. After his ponderous sentences a sudden friskiness leaves a painful impression of mountains leaping like rams. For the next essay, Mr. Simon's, on "Liberalism and Labour," we have little but praise. It is a clear and temperate exposition of the reasonable attitude in the matter. A love for alliteration (useful in Union debates, but scarcely in place in an essay), such as his account of "politicians who use Principles (with a big P) in the manufacture not of policy but of perorations," is his one fault; and such an admirable description of a certain party as "those who would fain create for themselves a vested interest in the purer emotions," makes us laugh in spite of ourselves. Mr. Phillimore's essay on "Liberalism and Foreign Policy" is full of good things, and we gladly support his defence of nationalism and his belief in a healthy military spirit. He is something of a phrase-maker, and is happy in such efforts as "the commercial traveller turned knight-errant" and "militant finance." But his style, for all its vigour, strikes us as singularly distorted and awkward. We do not wish to be impolite to Mr. Phillimore, who, we are willing to believe, is a scholar of distinction, but his essay gives the impression of a cultured foreigner—say, an intelligent Basque—in his early efforts with the English tongue. For the other two, Mr. Hammond treats of Education in a tone of high-principled virtue; and Mr. Macdonell writes a clear and judicious summary of the history of Liberalism in the last two centuries.

What, then, is the aim of the book as a whole? The establishment of a number of principles which are to be the basis of a party which has hitherto squandered its energies on details. The principles are stated; a clear position is taken up against Collectivism; but do the authors really define their attitude as against Conservatism? It is to be remembered that such principles are quite distinct from the hand-to-mouth policy of each party—such are the words of the essayists themselves. But it seems perfectly clear that all thinking Conservatives at the present day would accept this list of dogmas, with the possible exception of the one which declares for the publicity of diplomatic procedure. In the present state of affairs, when a hair divides the ultimate aims of the two parties, it is somewhat strange to find such principles claimed for Liberalism alone. It may be that they are more identified with historic Liberalism, but this does not change the fact of the present dual ownership. They are the foundation of a moderate and constitutional party, as opposed to the exponents of abstract social ideals. If the book is in any way typical of the younger Oxford we welcome it gladly, for the whole spirit of the essays is manly, generous, and honest.

THE RIDDLE OF EXISTENCE.

Guesses at the Riddle of Existence. By Goldwin Smith, D.C.L. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS is a very interesting but pathetic book. That a man of so strong and energetic a nature should have felt himself forced, towards the end of a long life, to abandon one after another religious convictions and doctrines which had given him comfort and support in earlier days, cannot but inspire a feeling of pity, however much we may admire the vigorous sincerity thereby manifested. Sunt lacrymæ rerum is a saying which may now frequently be used in the sense here given to it. For one conspicuous theological athlete, how many inconspicuous disciples have silently pursued the path which this book would assure us has sooner or later to be followed!

"There is no longer any use," he tells us in his preface, "in clinging to the untenable or in shutting our eyes to that which cannot be honestly denied. . . . The spirit in which these pages are penned is not that of Agnosticism, if Agnosticism imports despair of spiritual truth, but that of free and hopeful inquiry, the way for which it is necessary to clear by removing the wreck of that upon which we can found our faith no more."

His small volume of 244 pages is divided into five essays. The first—which bears the same title as the volume containing it—is a reprint of what was before published in America. It is a criticism of the late Prof. Drummond, Mr. Kidd, and Mr. Balfour, for the most part well justified. But we note with surprise that the author considers as religious difficulties the small size of our planet and the fact that we have but five senses.

To Prof. Drummond's attempt to console us for life's sufferings by saying "without this vigorous weeding of the imperfect the progress of the world would not have been possible," he quietly remarks, "Pleasant reading this for 'the imperfect'!" and he justly derides his mistaken view of evolution (which ignores its effects in degradation) as also his representation that the one cause of all love was the birth of a child; before which "man's affection was non-existent, and woman's was frozen"!

To Mr. Kidd's representation that progress is due to the presence of a non-rational sanction (by which he means belief in religion) for conduct, our author asks, as he well may, what does Mr. Kidd mean by reason, and then makes short work of his whole contention.

In his second article, "The Church and the Old Testament," Dr. Smith, of course, accepts the teaching of the "Higher Criticism," the main points of which hardly any educated man interested in the subject has failed to do. His own verdict he thus expresses (p. 93):

"That which is not a supernatural revelation may still, so far as it is good, be a manifestation of the Divine. As a manifestation of the Divine the Hebrew books, teaching righteousness and purity, may keep their place in our love and admiration for ever; while of their tribalism, their intolerance, their religious cruelty, we for ever take our leave. The time has surely come when as a supernatural revelation they should be frankly, though reverently, laid aside, and no more allowed to cloud the vision of free inquiry or to cast the shadow of primeval religion and law over our modern life. It surely is useless and paltering with the truth to set up, like the writer in Lux Mundi, and other rationalistic apologists, the figment of a semi-inspiration. An inspiration which errs, which contradicts itself, which dictates manifest incredibilities, such as the stopping of the sun, Balaam's speaking ass, Elisha's avenging bears, or the transformation of Nebuchadnezzar, is no inspiration at all."

He ends by declaring that in these troublous times the storm-centre seems to be in the region of religion.

His third paper, "Is there another life?" is not to us very interesting or important; but he makes some good remarks on the folly of seeing consolation for individual annihilation in the impersonal immortality put forward by Positivism.

"This immortality," he says (p. 116-125), "is not only imperfect, it is unconscious. . . . The sufferers of the past, at all events, derived no comfort amidst famine, plague, massacre, and torture from these theories of an 'ideal life,' of a 'Religion of Humanity.' . . . A selfish tyrant like Louis XIV. would on this supposition, at least while his fortune lasted, have been of all men the happiest."

All the consolation Mr. Smith has to offer us is the conceivability that goodness may be prized by the soul of the Universe, if the Universe has a soul, as capable of union with itself, and that we may thus transcend the limits of our being here and now.

The fourth article, devoted to a consideration of "The Miraculous Element in Christianity," is, as might be expected, an attempt to save the morality of the Christian religion while rejecting all evidence for it as a supernatural revelation, and very expressly and in detail that of the Resurrection. But his rejection of the Incarnation is again largely based on the small size of the earth, which he thinks (p. 166) makes it "hardly possible to imagine a Being who fills eternity and infinity becoming an embryo in the womb of a Jewish maiden." He twice speaks of Christ's "immaculate conception," not seeming to comprehend how inadequate that designation is to denote the Greek, Catholic, and Anglican doctrine on that subject, and that it need not imply the non-concurrence of a human father in such an act of conception. He also thinks that the Incarnation would have been purposeless apart from any "original sin," quite ignoring the contrary teaching of very High Church authorities. In his last essay, "Morality and Theism," he gives vent to earnest, Cassandra-like notes of warning as to the ethical consequences of the present rapid decay of religious belief. At its commencement he cites the wise words of Leslie Stephen (in his Science of Ethics), affirming that, in this world at least, "there is no absolute coincidence between virtue and happiness," frankly owning he cannot prove "that it is always prudent to act rightly, or that it is always happiest to be virtuous," and recognising that some men are "capable of intense pleasure from purely sensual gratifications." His own conclusion appears to be that an "ethical interregnum" is before us, and the moral prospects of the twentieth century are not encouraging.

He passes in review some attempts to construct a religion without a God, such as Positivism, Spiritualism, and Prof. Seeley's "Cosmic emotion," deducing small comfort from any one of them, and he concludes in favour of a combined sense of the mystery of existence and of the large size of the universe. This combination, he declares (in words which conclude the volume), is likely, "rather than Cosmic emotion, worship of humanity, or any other substitutes for theism, to take possession of the human mind if the belief in a God is withdrawn." But size is relative, and we can ideally reduce the universe to the dimensions of a mustard seed, while the "plain man," the "persistent voluptuary," and the eager pursuer of wealth, are usually little troubled about either the "mystery of existence" or the dimensions of the Cosmos.

We cannot find in his works, as a whole, much of that "hopeful inquiry" spoken of in the first essay, and we fear that if nothing better can be suggested, before the present age expires, we must leave the twentieth century to take care of itself.

BEAUTY AND ART.

Beauty and Art. By Aldam Heaton. (W. Heinemann.)

A COLLECTION of five miscellaneous—very miscellaneous—papers by Mr. Aldam Heaton on matters of art and furnishing has been issued in a volume called Beauty and Art. As a prefatory note informs the reader that the essay which stands first in order was written many years ago, one would prefer in charity to believe that the title-page was designed at some even remoter period, before book-decoration became a serious study among us. The page in question exhibits a villainous fashion of fancy lettering made up of oblique lines without outline, the words of the title itself being arched in the form of a bow; and also a would-be realistic representation of a blue gentian, about the crudest and most pernicious instance of colouring known in nature. This flower, indeed, is depicted not without object; the author purporting to prove that even where nature at first sight seems to employ the most violent colours, it will be found on analysis that the method of graduation and contrast is adopted instead. True enough; but a title-page is not the place for a didactic diagram. Mr. Heaton's work begins with an essay on "Taste," in which he shows that to talk of "bad taste" is a contradiction in terms. Taste being the faculty of discrimination, where no discrimination is made, no taste, good, bad, or indifferent exists, but the counterfeit substitute for it, which can only be described as false taste. The writer discusses the chief elements of the corruption of national taste, and attributes them first and foremost to French sources—an ascription which, though doubtless correct, will be a surprise to the many who have been in the habit of looking up to the French as our leaders and guides in such matters. The fact is, our neighbours are expert archaeologists; and combining as they do an innate deftness of manipulation with their acquired knowledge of style, they are unrivalled as reproducers, but do more than copy they cannot. When it is an affair of originating, their inferiority is apparent. If it be true, as has been said, that a nation must be in earnest at any rate in the memorials it provides for its dead, then an infallible test may be found by anybody who takes the trouble to visit the statuary shops leading to Père la Chaise. Should that test fail to convince him of the degraded condition of French art, then a man must be altogether blind to the evidence of his own eyes. Again, the author has the discrimination to perceive, and the courage to expose, the shallowness and the limitations of Japanese art—courage, because his view of the case is by no means popular, even among artists and connoisseurs, at the present day. However, he goes to the root of the matter when he says that among ourselves—nay, in the whole continent of Europe—no man is said to draw who is without training in the accurate delineation of the noblest of all forms—the human figure, and has not attained to a knowledge of perspective such as would enable him to depict the interior, say, of a cathedral,

"with arcades and vaultings in many planes.

Now a Japanese artist never under any circumstances does such things as these, and from what one sees of his work one may say with confidence that he is unable to do so. . . . You may search in vain," continues Mr. Heaton, "from the time that Sir Rutherford Alcock first brought Japanese work to this country, and never find a Japanese design which could be called well-balanced, and which readily arrived at a good repeat."

Mr. Heaton is right in his proposition that "whatever work of man's is thoroughly fine and noble in the world must always have been only a trifling advance upon a previous success"; right in deploring the absence of tradition among us, and in attributing to that fact the present chaotic condition of the arts. He is right, moreover, in the immense importance he attaches to architecture and to the architectural profession. After this it is with no slight sense of disappointment that one finds Mr. Heaton objecting to our old English furniture which continued to be made up to the middle of the last century on the ground that it was "architectonic"—its only merit, in fact—and, on the other hand, lauding the adaptations of Jones, Copeland, and the rest, which, as he frankly admits, are "not in any sense a development from the English furniture of Queen Elizabeth and the Stuarts," but imported from the corrupt and extravagant fashions of the Court of Louis Quatorze.

Moreover, one may reasonably take exception to the writer's arbitrary classification of conventional patterning, decorative art and fine art, as in an ascending scale. The distinctions he tries to draw are both artificial and unconvincing. Among objects which have any just claim to be regarded as works of art at all there is no essential difference in kind, but in degree only, and of the medium and material employed in any given case. It is rather a shock to meet with the recommendation to make for oneself a dado of imitation panels "formed by moulded laths, glued and bradded" on the wall. Neither, again, does that which Mr. Heaton proposes as a good, useful colour for painting a room, "something between bricks and leather," sound attractive. He is certainly mistaken in locating Sir Joshua Reynolds's sorry experiment in window-glass in King's or any other chapel in Cambridge. The American visitor would be able to put him right on this point, and to inform him that the glass in question is at New College, Oxford. And surely it is rash to assume that everybody knows the Cypromorpho by name. That it is a beautiful metallic butterfly from South America will be news at any rate to some people.

EARLY HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

Domesday Book and Beyond: Three Essays in the Early History of England. By Prof. Frederic William Maitland, LL.D. (Cambridge University Press.)

THIS is one of the rare books which are the fine flower of scholarship, a book of learning without pedantry, the excursion of a born investigator, moving liberally in an ample field, occupied in the selection of the really significant from a mass of innumerable details, and in the applying, testing, and rejecting of principles whereby incoherent knowledge may be transformed into an ordered whole. The three essays of which it is composed all deal with fragments of the same extensive problem; they are a contribution towards determining the structure of English society as it existed in the period immediately following the Saxon settlement, and the process of development by which it passed into the society of the eleventh century. It is a problem the very conditions of which are only slowly beginning to be understood. The first school-book one takes up will talk glibly of allodial tenure and of commendation; but the compiler thereof may charitably be supposed to know that these convenient terms in reality serve to cover a waste of admitted ignorance and rash hypothesis. If he does not know it, let him devote himself to the perusal of Prof. Maitland's luminous discussion. With the England of the eleventh century we are comparatively familiar. We have, of course, learned not to speak of "the feudal system"; there was no feudal system common and ubiquitous. But the conceptions of the English tenure by service, of the English manor and the English villainage, in their main outlines at least, are by this time fairly well established. But if we ask how these institutions came into being, what they replaced, and why they replaced it, we find ourselves at once in a world of disputed and contradictory conjectures. There is, in fact, no direct evidence on which to base an answer—we have to infer and indirectly reconstruct a civilisation from the records and landmarks of its decay. To get at the early Saxon land-tenures we have to work back from the land books or cartularies of the seventh and eighth centuries, and the Domesday Book of the eleventh. And the difficulties in the way are immense.

The documents before us were not written for the purpose of giving us information—the cartularies are the early title-deeds of monasteries; Domesday Book is a collection of statistics made as the basis for an assessment of taxes. Moreover, the facts of Domesday Book require complete re-arrangement to be of any service to us, and the cartularies are more than half of them under suspicion of being forgeries. It is another pitfall that we do not really understand the modes of thought of their writers. They use technical terms which had an earlier and a later history: how are we to avoid reading either the Roman or the mediæval implication into them? What precisely did the expressions "a free man" or "ownership" convey to the mind of the eighth century? We do not know. It is not even certain whether the land-unit of Domesday Book, the "hide," contained some 120 of our modern acres or only thirty. Once more, we must allow for local differences. We have no right to assume that there was ever an absolutely uniform system of land-tenure and land-cultivation over the whole of the country. Prof. Maitland shows us, by the aid of the modern ordnance map, that, whereas Devon and Somerset were a land of small scattered hamlets, Oxfordshire and Berkshire were a land of large villages standing in open fields.

It follows, then, that although Prof. Maitland's aim is constructive, his method is necessarily critical. It is all pioneer-work, groping in the dark, and, as he says, when you are groping in the dark you are sure to knock up against some of your fellow explorers. But too much praise cannot be given to the temper in which Prof. Maitland has entered upon his delicate task. He is as cautious as a scout and scrupulously unprejudiced: walking upon most debatable ground, he conducts his expedition without any of the usual acerbities of polemic. Such conclusions as he arrives at are admittedly partial and tentative, subject to revision and qualification. To the size of the hide he devotes an entire essay, and though inclining to the type of 120 acres, holds his judgment in suspense to the last. In discussing the theories of Anglo-Saxon land-tenure, he rejects that which would make the manor or vill the direct descendant of the Roman villa; he rejects the conception of a collectivist village community holding its lands in common ownership and periodically redistributing them, and inclines to that of the village as a group of free peasant-proprietors, each holding his strips of land in severalty. No one cause must be invoked to explain how this group of freemen was converted into the manor dependent upon its lord of the feudal centuries: nor must we assume that the change was of the nature of a cataclysm. As elements in the process, Prof. Maitland lays stress, firstly, on the necessity for a single well-recognised fiscal unit on which taxes could be levied; secondly, on the habit of granting to ecclesiastical bodies, for the sake of the king's soul, quasi-royal dominium within defined localities; thirdly, on the granting to corporations or to powerful individuals of the profits of jurisdiction within similar areas. In any case the process was a slow one, and had many phases and many variations at present dark to us.

STORIES OF THE NATIONS.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—Canada.
By J. G. Bourinot. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE present volume fully maintains the generally high standard of merit reached by the series. It was obviously fitting that the story of Canada should be told by a Canadian writer, and Mr. Bourinot has shown himself well qualified for the task. Within a moderate compass he has given a clear and concise view of the history of his country from its first discovery. At the same time his narrative is far from being a mere dry summary of facts. With all the limitations necessitated by the scale of the book he has managed to bring into prominence many of the picturesque and romantic episodes of which Canadian history is full, especially in its earlier portions. For the period of the French dominion our author has naturally mainly followed in the tracks of the brilliant American historian of France in the New World, who fortunately was able to complete his work before his untimely death.

When Mr. Parkman's guidance failed him his chief authority down to the war of 1812 was the elaborate history of Mr. Kingsford. Mr. Bourinot refers to the last-mentioned writer's volume on the war as being "especially valuable," and in many ways it is so. It is, however, unfortunately disfigured by a most excessive and regrettable bitterness with regard to the United States, and a disposition to stir up old sores which it is to be hoped is not general in Canada. In justice to our author, it must be said that his chapter on the war is commendably free from these defects.

For the period from 1815 down to the present time Mr. Bourinot has had to draw on more varied and miscellaneous sources, and he has certainly made a good use of his materials.

It is a remarkable fact that the French Canadians have retained their language without any degeneration, and in some rural districts the common speech of the people almost exactly reproduces that of France in the seventeenth century. In this respect they present a very marked contrast to a people in many ways resembling them, the Dutch Boers of South Africa, whose speech has undergone a most extraordinary transformation and degradation. It would be an interesting task to inquire into what causes have brought about such different results in cases so apparently similar.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—British India. By R. W. Frazer, LL.B., I.C.S. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. FRAZER begins his story quite at the beginning, with the days of Solomon, and concludes it with a reasoned survey of the conditions of the present day and the outlook for the future. It is a wonderful story, and it is written fittingly, in a spirit of grave historical accuracy, with balanced judgment, and with a strong faith. His attention, he tells us, has been centred rather upon the main factors which led to the foundation and extension of British empire in India than to mere details of military operations or of administration. But while he has adhered to this large purpose, he is never vague, nor does he fail to handle dramatically many of the more stirring episodes which claim a place in any history of the Indian Empire. One rises from the book with an added sense of dignity, with an added sense of responsibility, with a quickened consciousness, too, of the terrible possibilities which surround the situation. "England's mission," declares this grave Civil servant, "has as yet hardly commenced." "It is to be hoped," he writes elsewhere, after describing the military dispositions upon which the preservation of internal security depends, "that in the future no efforts will be spared for the necessary extension of similar defences and the construction of like harbours of refuge." Meanwhile, "the problem of defence against any possible attack from the north-west or east still occupies the earnest attention of Government." The book is a worthy addition to the series in which it figures, and the more it is read the better.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Romantic Richmondshire. By Harry Speight. (Elliot Stock.)

MR. SPEIGHT has already described the Craven and Nidderdale districts of Yorkshire. In Richmondshire he has a finer subject, and he brings to it the same enthusiasm of observation and research which distinguished his earlier books. There was room, moreover, for this work. Whitaker's History, published in 1822, and illustrated by Turner, is costly and, when obtained, inaccurate. Clarkson's and Longstaffe's works are equally rare and are both out of date. Mr. Speight has a happy versatility. He can write with confidence on the history, topography, geology, ecclesiastical antiquities, and ancient customs of these romantic districts in which he has spent his life. Starting from Richmond, that imperial little town on the Swale, which Mr. Swinburne has compared with Toledo, not to Toledo's advantage, Mr. Speight takes us from stone-walled village to village, through deep river-side woods, over heathery moors, by old coach roads and old Roman roads, past mansions and abbeys and ruined castles, till we exchange Richmond for Middleham, "the ancient capital of Wensleydale," the home of the Nevilles. And his talk is of everything local, from instances of longevity to the achievements of race horses, and from "finds" of iron ornaments of the Viking age to the haunts of the peregrine falcon. Much folk-lore, much family history, and many a streak of native humour lend variety to the pages, which are abundantly illustrated. One scrap of Mr. Speight's lore presses rather hard on Cockney pride. It is to the effect that the song of the "Lass of Richmond Hill" has no connexion with the Richmond to which lovers walk from Kew. It is quite settled that the heroine was Miss Fanny P'Anson, sister to Mr. Thomas P'Anson, who was Mayor of Richmond (Mr. Speight's Richmond) in 1780. But the author of the song, who was also her husband, and whose name was Leonard MacNally, was actually a Londoner. He was a King's Bench solicitor, and lived in Bedford Row, when that dull, straight street was fashionable, and received at its northern end the breezes from Highgate.

The Lives of the Saints. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould. New Edition. Vol. I. (John C. Nimmo.)

THE present edition of Mr. Baring-Gould's excellent compilation is to be completed in sixteen volumes, which will be issued monthly. The first edition was contained in one volume less, and was issued at intervals from 1872 to 1877. In his preface to that edition Mr. Baring-Gould dwelt on the magnitude of an attempt to set forth, even briefly, the lives of the saints. He had, in fact, to choose between the two courses of giving an outline, bare of detail, of the life of every saint, and of omitting the less important lives altogether. He adopted the latter plan, which holds good, of course, in the present edition. But with an exception: Mr. Gould has been struck by the need there is of a more general knowledge of saints who lived in the British islands, and he has accordingly added lives of certain Welsh, Cornish, and English saints whom he had not included in his work. Mr. Baring-Gould's general plan has been to give within the limits imposed by brevity an anecdotal and humanly interesting sketch of each saint. In defence of this plan, he says: "It is the little details of a man's life that give it character, and impress themselves on the memory. People forget the age and parentage of St. Gertrude, but they remember the mouse running up her staff."

The Book of Humbug. By C. J. Wilkey. (Skeffington.)

IN order effectually to lash the follies of the age it is not enough that a man should have an attack of the spleen. Mere ill-temper, a frown, and a curl of the lip will not suffice. The equipment of the sufficient satirist comprises also such qualities as discrimination, a sense of humour, and a polished literary style. Of these Mr. Wilkey possesses but a slender measure, if one should not rather say that he is quite destitute of them all; and his book, therefore, instead of exciting indignation and admiration (indignation against the shams he imagines himself pitilessly to lay bare, and admiration for the courage and brilliancy which he brings to his task) fills us with weariness. Only by a more than usually brutal attack upon some taste which should be criticised gravely, our boredom sometimes is turned to wrath. For example, it is quite competent to Mr. Wilkey to prefer Frith's "Derby Day" to "Beata Beatrix," but he is not therefore to be excused for writing of Rossetti's lovely picture in the terms that he employs.

The Story of the African Crisis. By F. E. Garrett. (Archibald Constable & Co.)

MR. F. E. GARRETT, who is the editor of the Cape Times, was only just in time in publishing his book on the crisis brought about by the grievances of the Uitlanders and Dr. Jameson's raid into the Transvaal. The South African Committee, which is now sitting, is crossing the t's and dotting the i's of many things to which Mr. Garrett is forced in his book to deal with speculatively. The work was originally intended for the South African public, but the present edition is for English readers, and is prepared with an introduction dealing specially with the House of Commons inquiry. Mr. Garrett had the great advantage of being on the spot at the Cape, of knowing most of the actors in the great drama, and of getting his news on the subject first hand. He, therefore, did not work under the difficulties which a writer in England would experience in dealing with the same series of events. But, still, though he had the Jameson trial, the trial of the Reformers, the report of the Cape Select Committee, and a mass of Blue Books and Green Books to go upon, his account must be by no means taken as final. Since Mr. Garrett wrote Mr. Rhodes has given his evidence, and many points before obscure are now cleared up. This process is going on week by week, and so the book must be read side by side with the evidence given before the Committee. The story of the crisis is written in that hysterio-historical style which we have learned to expect from those of the school in which Mr. Garrett was trained.

The Months: Descriptive of the Successive Beauties of the Year. By Leigh Hunt, with Biographical Introduction by William Andrews. (William Andrews & Co.)

A NICKNAME is never forgotten, and we have therefore no right to be surprised at Mrs. Southey's (Caroline Bowles) comment on The Months: "A beautiful like work, though the author sometimes betrays the cloven foot of cockneyism." On another passage she remarks, most impatiently, "He knows no more of a flower-garden than what he has acquired from nursing up half-a-dozen flower-pots in a London balcony." But the truth is that Hunt's genuine nature-worship was suburban rather than cockneyfied, and suburbs were "the country" when he knew them. He did not despise the city flower-pot or a nosegay on the breakfast table; but he was most at home in the fields and lanes with the smell of spring in the air, and probably some well-thumbed volume of the poets on his knee. Hedges and cultivation did not disturb his enjoyment, and the simplest beauties gave him delight: "Belle et douce marguerite, aimable sour du roi king-cup, we would tilt for thee with a hundred pens, against the stoutest poet that did not find perfection in thy cheek." His aim is to diffuse happiness through an appreciation of beauty, and to "herald the union of the two best things in the world—the love of nature and the love of each other."

Secrets of the Courts of Europe. By Allen Upward. (Arrowsmith.)

THESE stories profess to give the real inwardness of certain notable events in recent European history: the fall of Bismarck, for instance, the resignation of MacMahon, the purchase of the Suez Canal shares by Disraeli. They are, of course, purely fictitious, although they seem to aim at the attractions of a roman à clef. They are put in the mouth of an incredible diplomatist conceived by Mr. Upward as a garrulous old gentleman who leers at the mention of a petticoat and cheats at chess. He would, of course, have been kicked out of any Court in Europe. Some of Mr. Upward's observations are calculated to drive a reader to the verge of imbecility. "It was my good fortune," says His Excellency, "to be honoured with the particular confidence of Pio Nono, for it is by that name that Pius IX. was universally known in his lifetime." By what name would Mr. Upward have him be known? But as the point of the book consists in inventing perfectly gratuitous scandal and attaching it to the names of living people it is only fair to say that the puerility of the proceeding sinks into insignificance beside its bad taste.

FICTION.

Lads' Love. By S. R. Crockett. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

WHEN a writer has attained to the position enjoyed by Mr. Crockett he loses the right to claim indulgence at the hands of the critic; as he wins success so must his work be submitted to an examination proportionately more severe. Judging Lads' Love, therefore, by a high standard, we are compelled to discern, in the midst of much that is tender and touching, a certain crudity and want of finish which impel us to suspect that it has been produced with greater speed than a just regard for his art should have permitted. There is a certain looseness in the construction of the story; the characterisation is sometimes weak, as though consistency had been sacrificed to make way for an incident; and these are just the faults of a ready writer "scribbling" for a too willing and an uncritical public. But when all is said and done, the tale is full of the kind of charm which Mr. Crockett's admirers expect. A youth of the artistic temperament is the hero, and there are three fair damsels, daughters of the soil. Of these the youngest, the Hemptie, wears her skirts too short to be really interesting, though she is very fond of Alec, and they are accustomed to sit together upon opposite sides of the Wishing Well, throwing stones and turf at each other; "this we did because we despised love—or at least the silly kind which requires the sheltered and sequestered corners of orchards for its manifestation." But it was to Nance, the eldest, that Alec's heart was turned; and where he narrates the midnight intrusion of his hero into the society of the three sisters, and the audacious pertinacity which won him three kisses and his wager, Mr. Crockett is at his best. "If ye kiss as well as ye court, ye may try me wi' twa; and if I like them no that ill, I'll see if I canna gi'e ye the last back again, just to be rid o' ye"—this is Nance's pretty word of surrender. The Hemptie becomes the guardian-angel of their loves, watching over Nance while Alec is studying at the medical school of Edinburgh, and guarding her against the machinations of the rich rascal Nathan, and from the beguilements of other lads. The connexion between this slender tale and the fates of Rab An'erson with his offspring, the De'il and the Hoolet, supplies occasion to a seduction, a marriage contract made valid by the presence of three witnesses of whom the parties were not aware, a poaching expedition and other melodramatic incidents, including an attempt at murder, not wholly ineffective, with the subsequent inquest and the appearance of the heroine equipped with a fancy dress and an Irish brogue. Some of the illustrations by Mr. Warwick Goble are dainty and clever; but, in spite of the picture which is placed opposite to p. 196, we are not yet convinced that ten feet is the most convenient distance from which to salute a lady's hand.

Quo Vadis: A Narrative of the Time of Nero. By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Translated by Jeremiah Curtin. (Dent.)

WE understand that Quo Vadis divides the suffrages of American novel-readers with Mr. Stimson's King Noanett. Henryk Sienkiewicz is a Pole who has already written a striking trilogy on the rise of the Slavonic power in Eastern Europe. The present novel deals with even more momentous origines, the spread of Christianity in the Rome of Nero. It has many of the normal qualities of Slavonic fiction, a certain rude vigour of conception and picturesque power over masses of detail, and a certain incapacity to discriminate or to use detail as the background for a plot of vital unity. The hero is a prætorian tribune, Vinicius by name, who becomes a Christian for love of the barbarian girl Lygia. But this love and this conversion leave us cold. Vinicius and Lygia fail to dominate their environment: as in so many an academic picture, human interest is smothered in archæology. Mr. Curtin rightly describes the book as a series of "opening scenes in the conflict of moral ideas with the Roman Empire." A series of scenes, not a novel. But the archæology, as such, is admirable. To the resources of an exhaustive and minute erudition the author adds a power of imagination which enables him to shape his lore into vivid and convincing descriptions. Impressed alike by the unexampled splendour and the unexampled corruption of Imperial Rome, he leads before us a pageant of gorgeous scenes: a morning bath, a banquet at Cæsar's palace, a revel at the Pool of Agrippa, Cæsar on a journey, Cæsar declaiming his verses at the burning of Rome, martyrdoms of Christians in the amphitheatre, the Sarmenitii in the gardens. Of the portraits which Herr Sienkiewicz essays the most successful are those of Petronius, the arbiter elegantiarum, distinguished among the obscene Neronian rabble not by any higher morality, but by the natural superiority of wit, good nature, and good taste; and Nero himself, the bloated Ahenobarbus, the histrian emperor:

"He wore a white tunic, and a toga of amethyst colour, which cast a bluish tinge on his face. On his head was a laurel wreath. Since his departure from Naples he had increased notably in body. His face had grown wide; under his lower jaw hung a double chin, by which his mouth, always too near his nose, seemed to touch his nostrils. His bulky neck was protected, as usual, by a silk handkerchief, which he arranged from moment to moment with a white and fat hand grown over with red hair, forming as it were bloody stains, which he would not permit the epilatores to pluck, since he had been told that to do so would bring trembling of the fingers and injure his lute-playing. Measureless vanity was depicted then, as at all times, on his face, together with tedium and suffering. On the whole, it was a face both terrible and silly. While advancing, he turned his head from side to side, blinking at times, and listening carefully to the manner in which the multitude greeted him."

With the Christians Herr Sienkiewicz is less successful. His Asiatic manner is not adequate to make us feel the peace of the early Church as we feel it, for instance, in Marius the Epicurean. Peter and Paul, speaking Scriptural things which to a modern ear must inevitably sound like formulas, are only puppets. And therefore the contrast, which is the essence of the book as conceived, is not really attained: the one side is living, the other conventional.

Will Thou Have This Woman? By J. Maclaren Cobban. (Methuen.)

MR. COBBAN is some time getting under weigh with his story. But when the preliminaries are over, and the characters are being woven in and out of the plot, there is plenty of interest. As soon as we think we have plumbed one mystery, Mr. Cobban whips it out of sight and sets us hot foot on the track of another. Sir William Pierrepont, a wealthy banker of old family, is persecuted by a vulgar actress-wife, a legacy from his salad-days, and hides himself in London. He leaves sealed explanations with a young farmer, Lionel Coverley, who promptly losethem. Coverley, though he knows it not, is the son of the banker's unhappy marriage. The man who does know this is his cousin, Philip Pierrepont, who, with an eye on the inheritance for himself, tries to ruin Coverley. Everything is at sixes and sevens, while Sir William and the papers are missing. But they are found; the virtuous and honest are rewarded, and the intriguing Philip gets a Brummagem heiress. Further interest is afforded by Coverley's two love affairs—the first with a farmer's daughter; the second, which follows hard upon, with another cousin, Adela Pierrepont. Mr. Cobban tells his story freshly and vigorously.

The Adventures of John Johns. By Frederic Carrel. (Bliss, Sands & Co.)

JOHN JOHNS was the son of a Guernsey fisherman, who could barely afford to pay for his education at the local college. We are introduced to John on his arrival in London with a very few shillings in pocket after six years' unprofitable wanderings in Australia. He makes the most of a lucky introduction to a newspaper office. He is pushing and unscrupulous, but as brilliant as a journalist as he is resourceful as a liar. His leading idea is that "it was through women that men climbed fastest; their love was the lever which no barrier withstood," &c. The women of the story were one and all quite unable to withstand John's love, or, rather, what they imagined to be his love. Certainly he used the most impassioned language to each and all of them—language which would not disgrace a halfpenny novelette; and, no doubt, through them he climbed very fast indeed. From the most humble position in the Planet's office he rapidly becomes its editor, duly seducing his proprietor's wife, among other women, en route, precisely as did Bel Ami. His subsequent adventures include the subjugation of an elderly widow in society with £300,000 of fortune and, on her death, elopement with an American millionairess on her twenty-first birthday. Much of the book is an undoubtedly clever adaptation to English surroundings of the plot of the French novel. But Mr. Carrel has by no means been so successful in his attempts to rival Maupassant in another way. He lacks the Frenchman's delicate touch in describing in quite unnecessary detail what in English fiction is generally and better left to the imagination. And, even when he is not making love, the bombastic, platitudinous conversation of the hero cannot fail to jar upon the reader's nerves. We can assure Mr. Carrel that there is no real "realism" in making a journalist constantly talk in the language of a gutter-journal's leading article.

The Master Beggars. By L. Hope Cornford. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

In this novel Mr. Cornford has interwoven a pleasant, romantic tale into the historic doings of that swash-buckling horde of insurgents which swept over the Netherlands about the middle of the sixteenth century, in protest against the rule of the Spanish Governor-General, the Duke of Alva. It is a delicately written tale, full of local and contemporary colour, and many of its widely divergent characters are powerfully drawn, though its main plot is, after all, but of small fascination. Now and again Mr. Cornford fails in accuracy in certain matters of (no doubt) small importance. The Church of St. Gudule at Brussels, for instance, was never a cathedral, nor does the Roman Church chime its bells on the last two days of Holy Week. It also jars a little to have monasteries continually referred to as convents, though this is a curiously frequent blunder in English fiction. Such blunders, trifling though they be, may well make the cautious reader uneasy as to the author's accuracy in matters as to which he would be glad of sound information.

The Career of Claudia. By Frances Mary Peard. (Bentley.)

This is a difficult novel to criticise. It is a good deal above the ruck of magazine fiction; yet it is trammelled much by the same conventions. That Claudia's career is destined to early frustration is, for instance, a foregone conclusion: the magazine public would never tolerate a girl who succeeded as a landscape gardener! Hence Claudia must fall in love. We like her much better at her landscape gardening, and so, we suspect, did the author. In truth, Claudia the emancipated is a delightful girl—serious, enthusiastic, and generous—a girl of no humour described by a woman of a good deal. Claudia does not want men to assist her fads: "they just take it as a new variety of flirting"; but two men do meddle, and the end is quickly in view. The tale does not lack subtlety, the author knows how to produce a definite impression without being brutally obvious; and certain nuances (a mental family likeness, for example) are very cleverly used. It may be allowable to remark, however, that an intelligent girl like Claudia should not be permitted to talk nonsense about "opposing the laws of political economy" as if they were a system of ethics; also that she twice says "who" when she should say "whom." But these—and a very ugly binding—are trifling blemishes in a clever book.

Out of the Darkness. By Percy Fendall and Fox Russell. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE problem of the authors is to evolve out of a particularly unhappy marriage the happy ending which the healthy novel-reader continues to desire. The task is performed with some adroitness; and a somewhat exaggerated regard for the conventions of fiction does not prevent the book from being very pleasant reading. Sir Eustace Bevan, Q.C., goes into the country to recruit after a break-down. There he meets Monica Stanforth, and a friendship drifts unconsciously into love. It is a very innocent attachment—a term which cannot be applied to the vagaries of Sir Eustace's wife. Lady Bevan quarrels with her lover on account of that gentleman's projected alliance with an American heiress, and threatens to reveal all to her husband. Thereafter matters hasten to a crisis, which is, however, averted by the sudden death of the faithless wife. Perhaps the best-drawn characters in the book are Lady Bevan herself and a breezy old admiral of the type one finds in Rosemary. Certain of the scenes—as the courtship of the village doctor—are not free from a suspicion of buffoonery, though other chapters give evidence that at least one of the authors possesses genuine and spontaneous humour. It would appear, however, that neither of them knows much of Wagner, or they would not have made the heroine "sit down to the piano and rattle through the 'Ride of the Valkyries' with a good deal of unnecessary vigour."

A Matter of Temperament. By Caroline Fothergill. (A. & C. Black.)

THIS book would be dull if it were not so ingenuous. Simplicity is, indeed, its keynote—simplicity of plot, and a simplicity of character which, perhaps, ought not to be allowed to stray out of real life. We all know the kind of man whom the author chooses for her hero—a feeble, fickle character, unstable as water, and, like water, very prone to run down grade in the absence of any restraining influence. The restraining influence in the novel is Henrietta, who has to leave her fiancé, the doctor, to go to Egypt in attendance on an invalid sister. One closes the book with a sense of pity for the stout-hearted Henrietta, who in the end does not fear to marry as flabby a creature as any man-hater could desire to make a hero of.

The Jucklins. By Opie Read. (A. & C. Black.)

If one may suggest that Mr. Opie Read has read Lorna Doone, it is only to indicate that he has caught the fine romantic spirit of Mr. Blackmore's book. His hero, curiously enough, is not unlike the great John Ridd, being big of stature and strong of soul. But it is in the clear and nervous style of the book that the greatest charm is found. It is a book with individuality. One will read far before finding a more delightful character than brave old Jim Jucklin, whose passion for cock-fighting is hardly kept in check by his reverence for the Scriptures—"kiver to kiver."

"I'm a good Church member and all that sort of thing; I believe the Book from one end to the other; believe that the whale swallowed Jonah—I don't care if its throat ain't bigger than a hoe-handle; believe that the vine grew up in the night and withered at mornin'; believe that old Samson killed all them fellers with the jawbone—believe everything, as I tell you, from start to finish; but I'll be blamed if I can keep from fightin' chickens to save my life."

He compromises by permitting no combats on Sunday, and merely communing affectionately with the fowls, "though," he soliloquises, "how a preacher can eat a game rooster is beyond my understandin'." That deplorable incident had really happened—a much sadder reminiscence to him than the memorable occasion in which he allowed "Sam" and "Bob" to fight to a finish, and gave them honourable burial in Mrs. Jucklin's best lace curtain. The plot of the book is thick with the sort of incidents one would expect to find in North Carolina, where revolvers are handy and where antagonism to the new teacher reaches the point of blockading him in the schoolhouse and burning it over his head. Altogether, as bright and refreshing a tale as ever came eastwards. The Jucklins is an oasis in the desert of ordinary novels, for which one wanderer, at least, acknowledges his gratitude.

Margot. By Sidney Pickering. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

SHE a private secretary, "about five and thirty, good-looking, with tired eyes and a sprinkling of grey on his thick, close-cut hair," to play the innocent spy on an art student in Paris, "rather small, very young-looking, pretty, and a lady"; and only one thing can happen. But it is quite outside of the expectations that the lady should turn out to have a husband exiled in Siberia, and that that gentleman should turn out to have a previous wife who is still alive. These are a few of the complications which help to make Mr. Pickering's book excellent reading. The double secret is well kept, only enough of it being allowed to escape to spread the conventional atmosphere of mystery over the earlier part of the story. Add to that, with the usual love interest, a slightly burlesque flavour of Nihilism, and you get the chief ingredients of Margot. It is hardly necessary to say that the tangled skein is straightened out in the end—that Margot marries the secretary, who has by that time become the heir of her father's wealth. It is a clever book. To say that it is not quite convincing is to apply a standard which would be disastrous to ninety-nine novels out of a hundred.

SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1897.

No. 1301, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

THE TREASURE OF THE HUMBLE. M. MAETERLINCK's book of essays, Le Trésor des Humbles, has been in the hands of a few English readers for more than a year. For the same period its English version has been awaited by a larger band to whom, perhaps, the very title, The Treasure of the Humble, appealed. There is great virtue in titles, and this one aims at the heart and hits it. Mr. Alfred Sutro, the translator, has not given us all the essays. He has left out the three on "Emerson," "Novalis," and "Ruysbroeck l'Admirable." Mr. A. B. Walkley contributes an introduction, and his first care is to warn English readers of the difficulties of Maeterlinck's thought and style.

"With M. Maeterlinck as a dramatist the world is pretty well acquainted. This volume presents him in the new character of a philosopher and an aesthetician. And it is in some sort an 'apology' for his theatre, the one being to the other as theory to practice. Reversing the course prescribed by Mr. Squeers for his pupils, M. Maeterlinck, having cleaned w-i-n-d-o-w, winder, now goes and spells it. He began by visualising and synthetising his ideas of life; here you shall find him trying to analyse these ideas and consumed with anxiety to tell us the truth that is in him. It is not a truth for all markets; he is at no pains to conceal that. He appeals, as every mystic must, to the elect; M. Anatole France would say to the âmes bien nées. If we are not sealed of the tribe of Plotinus, he warns us to go elsewhere. 'If, plunging thine eyes into thyself'—it is this same Plotinus that he is quoting—'thou dost not feel the charm of beauty, it is in vain that, thy disposition being such, thou shouldst seek the charm of beauty; for thou wouldst seek it only with that which is ugly and impure. Therefore it is that the discourse we hold here is not addressed to all men.' If we are to follow him in his expedition to a philosophic Ultima Thule, we must have the mind for that adventure. . . . This means that the intelligence, the reason, will not suffice of themselves; we must have faith. There are passages in the book which may provoke a sniff from Mr. Worldly Wiseman; but we must beware of the Voltairian spirit, or this will be a closed book to us. 'We live by admiration, hope, and love,' said Wordsworth. And we understand by them, M. Maeterlinck would add. I fear we are not all of us found worthy of the mystical frame of mind. But it is a psychological fact, like another; and if we can only examine it from the outside we can at least bring patience and placidity to the task. The point is, has M. Maeterlinck anything to say? It will be found, I think, that he has."

A BOOK OF ESSAYS.

MR. ST. J. LOE STRACHEY has reprinted, after revision, a number of his contributions to the Spectator. From Grace to Gay is the general title under which they now appear in four groups: "Studies in Seriousness," "Literary Studies," "The Puritans," and "Humours of the Fray." In a modest introduction Mr. Strachey makes his bow as a journalist entering the field of authorship. "But," he writes, "though I am a journalist,

"I expect that my real reason for coming before the public with a book of previously printed matter is very much like that of regular authors. I want to try my luck like the rest, and to see whether I cannot get a certain number of readers to agree with me on the topics I have chosen. I shall be specially pleased if I can do so in the essays I have called 'The Puritans,' for there I have tried to show that the Puritans were not the harsh, dull sectaries they are so often described, but, in their truest and worthiest representatives, men inspired with the love of beauty in literature and art, and, above all, men of the noblest and widest patriotism."

OTHER BOOKS. Memories of Hawthorne, by Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, consists mainly of letters written by Sophia Hawthorne to her husband and friends. They describe the days of her engagement to Nathaniel Hawthorne, her early married life at Salem, the life of the family at Liverpool during Hawthorne's Consulate, and the travels of the family in Italy. The Connoisseur, by Frederick S. Robinson, is a series of essays "On the Romantic and Picturesque Associations of Art and Artists." The author acknowledges indebtedness for some of his material to Sir J. C. Robinson, Her Majesty's Surveyor of Pictures, and formerly superintendent of the art collections of the South Kensington Museum. The subjects treated of by Mr. Robinson include "What People Collect," "The Ideal Collector," "Vogue and Prices," "Famous Collections," "Pliny the Elder and Horace Walpole," "Art and War," &c. Naples in the Nineties, by E. Neville-Rolfe, is a sequel to the author's Naples in 1888. Mr. Neville-Rolfe is British Consul for South Italy, and it is evident that for him the instruction to "see Naples and die" reads: See Naples and write about it. We notice that the first chapter of this book contains a curious account of the annual miracle of the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius. "The Temple Dramatists" series is continued in The Two Noble Kinsmen, which is edited by Mr. C. H. Herford, who discusses the Shakespeare-Fletcher authorship of the play, sufficiently indicating the tendency of his own opinions by making Fletcher's portrait the frontispiece to the volume. It was Fletcher of Saltoun who said that if he could write a nation's songs he cared not who made its laws; but he has other claims, not too well known, on the memory of all good Scots. He now finds a place in the "Famous Scots" series, and has his biography written in due fulness and order by Mr. G. W. T. Omond. It appears that the only biography of Fletcher has been a volume of Essays on the Life and Writings of Fletcher of Saltoun and the Poet Thomson, written by the Earl of Buchan, and published in 1792. This, however, is pronounced inaccurate by Mr. Omond, who adds the interesting fact that Rousseau was asked to write Fletcher's biography and was furnished with materials. He neither wrote the one nor returned the other. There was room, therefore, for a systematic attempt to recover the threads of Fletcher's life and weave them into a connected story. Mr. Omond seems to have had every assistance. A handsomely published book is Mrs. Ernest Hart's Picturesque Burma. Mrs. Hart visited Burma with her husband for health and enjoyment in 1895—her book was an afterthought. But Mrs. Hart begins it with a eulogy of Burma which shows that her impressions of the country were profound enough to justify this literary undertaking.

MISS BRADDON describes herself on the title of her fifty-seventh novel as the author of FICTION. Lady Audley's Secret—her first. Under Love's Rule is a story of extravagant living and suicide; but the clouds turn a silver lining on the night; and the last chapter, "The Sweet Uses of Adversity," may be approached with confidence by those who insist on happy endings. There are a great many ways of making love: Mr. L. Dougall has made a selection and called it A Dozen Ways of Love. "Young Love," "Witchcraft," "The Syndicate Baby," and "The Girl who Believed in the Saints" are the titles of four of these sketches. Mr. Dougall's last book was The Madonna of a Day. A title of the prolix order is A Farrago of Folly: Being Some Vagaries and Verboisities of Two Vulgarians, by George Gamble. Mr. Gamble believes in his heroine so thoroughly that he dedicates his book to her—a rather bewildering proceeding. A Prince of Tyrons is a title of old Irish chieftain life in the time of Elizabeth. Its emotional key-note is indicated by the following lines from an "old manuscript" which face the title-page:

"Our life is like a narrow raft,
Afloat upon the hungry sea.
Hereon is but a little space,
And each man, eager for a place,
Doth thrust his brother in the sea.
And so our life is wan with fears,
And so the sea is salt with tears;
Ah, well is thee thou art asleep."

Another novel with an historical basis is Triscombe Stone, by Portland Board Akerman and Norman Hurst. The authors lay their story in the time of Monmouth's Rebellion, but base it "upon facts that we believe have never been hitherto used by novelists." Fierceheart the Soldier, by J. C. Snaith, is yet another historically flavoured story, its time 1745. The first chapter opens racily with an argument between a Parson and a General over a chess-board.

"Nightly they fought with the aid of a bowl, a box of the best high-dried, and a quarrel. They were the finest quarrellers of their time; it was the General's power to say a sour thing sweetly, and to smile resistance down; while the Parson rejoiced in a gift of insolence surpassing Johnson."

This opening to the tale is also its finish. The Parson and the General are again found playing chess; the story palpitates between the two games. A story of more modern military life is Scarlet and Steel, by E. Livingston Prescott. The author evidently holds strong views about military as distinct from ethical crimes, and on the effects of the punishments awarded for such.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

[In the following list prices are given where they have been supplied by publishers.]

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE HEBREWS IN EGYPT AND THEIR EXODUS. By Alexander Wheelock Thayer. E. S. Willcox (Peoria).
NOTES ON THE PROPHET JEREMIAH. By Charles H. Waller, D.D. Eyre & Spottiswoode. 1s.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMORIES OF HAWTHORNE. By Rose Hawthorne Lathrop. Kegan Paul. 7s. 6d.

POETRY.

SELECT POEMS OF ROBERT BURNS. By Andrew J. George. M.A. Isbister & Co. 3s. 6d.
AN ODE FOR VICTORIA DAY. By Samuel Jefferson. George Blackie & Son. 1s.

FICTION.

ELEMENTARY JANE. (By Richard Pryce. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
THE DAGGER AND THE CROSS. By Joseph Hatton. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
HIS DAUGHTER. By W. L. Alden. Neville Beeman, Ltd. 2s.
THE BIRTHRIGHT. By Joseph Hocking. James Bowden.
ANGELA'S LOVER. By Dorothea Gerard. A. Constable & Co. 1s.
ANGUS MURRAY. By Helen Davis. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 6s.
HER MAJESTY'S GREATEST SUBJECT. By S. S. Thorburn. Archibald Constable & Co. 3s. 6d.
TALES FROM THE ISLES OF GREECE. Translated from the Greek of Argyris Epthalotis by W. H. D. Rouse. J. M. Dent & Co.
THE KNIGHT'S TALE. By F. Emily Phillips. William Blackwood & Sons.
THE KESTYNS OF CATHER CASTLE. By Robey F. Eldridge. Digby, Long & Co. 6s.
A GALAHAD OF THE CREEKS, AND OTHER STORIES. By S. Lovett-Yeats. Longmans, Green & Co.
THE WHIRLPOOL. By George Gissing. Lawrence & Bullen.
IN THE NAME OF LIBERTY. By Florence Marryat. Digby, Long & Co. 6s.
A FARRAGO OF FOLLY. By George Gamble. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
A PRINCE OF TYRONE. By Charlotte Fennell and J. P. O'Callaghan. William Blackwood & Sons.
TRISCOMBE STONE. By Portland B. Akerman and Norman Hurst. Bliss, Sands & Co. 6s.
BEHIND THE STARS. By E. Longworth Dames. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s. 6d.
A NOBLE HAUL. By W. Clark Russell. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s.

SCARLET AND STEEL. By E. Livingston Prescott. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
UNDER LOVE'S RULE. By M. E. Braddon. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 6s.
FIERCEHEART THE SOLDIER. By F. C. Snaith. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.

BELLES LETTRES.

A SATIRY-CALL DIALOGUE. By William Goddard. Edited by John S. Farmer. Privately printed.
THE CONNOISSEUR. By Frederick S. Robinson. George Redway. 7s. 6d.

DRAMA.

THE TWO NOBLE KINSMEN. Edited by C. H. Herford. J. M. Dent & Co.

GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

NOTES ON THE KURIL ISLANDS. By Captain H. T. Snow, F.R.G.S. John Murray. 4s.
PICTURESQUE BURMA. By Mrs. Ernest Hart. J. M. Dent & Co.

MEDICINE.

A SYSTEM OF MEDICINE. Edited by Thomas Clifford Allbutt. Macmillan & Co. 25s. net.

FOREIGN.

LAZARILLO DE TORMES. Publicado á sus Expensas H. Butter Clarke, M.A. B. H. Blackwell (Oxford).

EDUCATIONAL.

JOURNAL: SATIRES XI, XIII, XIV. Edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A. W. B. Olive. 3s. 6d.
A COURSE OF ELEMENTARY EXPERIMENTS FOR STUDENTS OF PRACTICAL INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By Chapman Jones. Sampson Low. 2s. 6d.
SPINER: THE FARRIE QUEENE. BOOK I. Edited by W. H. Hill, M.A. 2s. 6d.
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. Edited by John Morrison, M.A. Macmillan & Co.

NEW EDITIONS.

THE WORKS OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW. Bliss, Sands & Co. 3s. 6d.
MARY BARTON. By Mrs. Gaskell. Bliss, Sands & Co. 1s. 6d.

PERIODICALS.

ST. NICHOLAS. VOL. XXIV.: PART I. The Century Co. and Macmillan & Co.
THE CENTURY MAGAZINE. VOL. LIII.: NOV.—APRIL, 1897. The Century Co. and Macmillan & Co.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.
STANFORD'S MAP OF CENTRAL LONDON. Edward Stanford. 3s. 6d.
COMENIUS' SCHOOL OF INFANCY. Edited by Will S. Monroe. Isbister & Co. 2s. 6d.
WOOD FINISHING. Edited by Paul N. Hasluck. Cassell & Co. 2s. 6d.
COSMOPOLIS. VOL. V.: JAN., FEB., MARCH, 1897. T. Fisher Unwin.
FAIRM AND GARDEN INSECTS. By William Somerville. Macmillan & Co. 1s.
OUTSPOKEN ESSAYS. By Ernest Belfort Bax. William Reeves. 2s. 6d.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BIOGRAPHIES and reminiscences of Mr. Coventry Patmore are in the air. Mr. Gosse was originally chosen to do the "Life" by the poet himself, who, however, later decided that only a Catholic could adequately treat the mystical side of his thought and work. He therefore approached a Catholic, who had also become his closest friend, on the subject, to whom he gave a number of highly interesting letters addressed to himself and to his father by the leading men of letters of their time. Whether a biography will ever take shape at the hands of this friend is, we believe, altogether uncertain.

MEANWHILE, Mr. F. G. Stephens is understood to have in hand a Memoir of the poet, with whom he was on terms of friendship from the days of The Germ, while it is to be hoped that Mr. Frederick Greenwood, who is one of the executors, may pay some sort of tribute to one to whom he was closely united by ties of affection and of literary association. Mr. Basil Champneys, by the way, who wrote the admirable Memoir of Mr. Patmore which appeared in The Guardian, is about to design a memorial for his grave.

MR. FRANCIS THOMPSON'S volume of New Poems, shortly to be published by Messrs. Constable & Co., will be dedicated to Mr. Coventry Patmore in the following lines:

"Lo, my book thinks to look Time's leaguer down

Under the banner of your spread renown;
Or, if these levies of impuissant rhyme
Fall to the overthrow of assaulting Time,
Yet this one page shall fend oblivious shame.
Armed with your crested and prevailing name."

THE scheme of the New Century Theatre has been carried a little farther, and a prospectus of the first season is now to be obtained, wherein dates of the opening performances are given and promises of further productions are made. This is encouraging. On May 3 will begin the first of four series of matinées. Ibsen's new play, "John Gabriel Borkman," will be the play with which the venture will start. Afterwards, in the autumn, we are to see "Admiral Guinea," by Mr. Henley and the late R. L. Stevenson; and, subsequently, a portion of Ibsen's dramatic poem "Peer Gynt," with Grieg's music. Thirty-two shillings purchase a stall for the four productions, twenty-five shillings a dress circle seat, and ten shillings an upper box.

THE provisional committee of the New Century Theatre consists of Miss Robins, Mr. Archer, Mr. Massingham, and Mr. Sutro. Mr. Sutro is also the hon. secretary and manager. The aim of the executive, says the prospectus, is "to provide a permanent machinery for the production, from time to time, of plays of intrinsic interest which find no place on the stage in the ordinary way of theatrical business. At the same time, they would have it clearly understood that they do not go in search of the esoteric, the eccentric, or the mystic; that they are devoted to no special school or tendency; that their productions will not be exclusively 'literary,' in the narrow sense of the word, and still less educational or instructive; that they do not propose, in a word, to present the undramatic drama in any of its disguises. They will welcome all acting plays, of a certain standard of intrinsic merit, which are likely to interest the intelligent public to whom they appeal."

MR. H. G. WELLS'S new romance, The War of the Worlds, which begins in the current number of Pearson's Magazine, has rich promise. The scheme of the story as unfolded in this first instalment is tremendous—no less than an attack made upon our world by the dwellers on Mars, grown desperate by the contemplation of the fate in store for them when the cooling of their own planet is complete.

THE immediate pressure of necessity, says Mr. Wells, using the historic present, has brightened the intellects of the dwellers on Mars, enlarged their powers, and hardened their hearts. "And looking across space, with instruments and intelligences such as we can only dream of vaguely, they see at its nearest distance, only 35,000,000 of miles sunward of them, a morning star of hope, our own warmer planet, green with vegetation and grey with water, with a cloudy atmosphere eloquent of fertility, with glimpses through its drifting cloud wisps of broad stretches of populous country and narrow navy-crowded seas."

THE story must be read by every one who esteems thrills. His calm, merciless method—so often a manifestation of the scientific mind—his convincing trick of verisimilitude, his dispassionate accumulation of terrifying evidence, describing horror on horror without more emotion than an appraiser's clerk would show—these gifts, allied to a very remarkable imagination, make any work of Mr. Wells notable and worthy of attention.

In the same number of Pearson's Magazine several novelists name the rate at which they are in the habit of writing. The request for these particulars, says the writer of the article, grew out of the statement that a certain well-known author writes at the rate of 6,000 words a day. Anthony Trollope, it will be remembered, averaged 10,000 words a week, though occasionally he did 25,000. Some of the figures of modern writers are tabulated below:

Mr. W. L. Alden ...	4,000
Mr. Frankfort Moore ...	4,000
Mr. Robert Barr ...	4,000
"John Strange Winter" ...	3,000
	to 4,000
Mr. Conan Doyle ...	1,500
	to 2,000
Mr. Max Pemberton ...	1,500
Mr. W. Le Queux ...	1,500
Sir Walter Besant ...	1,000
"John Oliver Hobbes" ...	150

ONE or two writers give less emphatic answers. Mr. H. G. Wells wrote The Island of Dr. Moreau and The Wonderful Visit at the rate of 7,000 words a day, but has since given up the practice; "George Egerton" does not write regularly enough to be any guide; Mr. Crockett has done as many as 5,000 words and as few as 800, and has been equally satisfied with both; Mr. Hall Caine is content to produce 6,000 words in three or four days; Mr. Rider Haggard works too irregularly to be able to compute a daily output.

LASTLY come "Ian Maclaren" and the author of Lorna Doone, with another kind of reply. Ian Maclaren considers his experience in writing so slight that he does not think it becoming to give any statement to the public as to his speed of production. Mr. R. D. Blackmore says:

"The proper point about a book—
Or be it praised or smitten—
Is not to ask how long it took,
But what it is when written."

THE ninth and concluding volume of Mr. Charles Booth's monumental work on the Life and Labour of the People in London is due on the 13th of this month. The nine volumes of this valuable series have occupied ten years in appearing, the first having been published in 1887. The new volume begins with seven chapters of comparisons. Trade is compared with trade according to the apparent poverty of those engaged in it, and again according to the average earnings. Then comparisons are made as to the proportions born in or out of London and living in the inner or outer portions of London: as to the numbers in family and proportion of dependents; as to the ages of those at work; as to the proportions of employers and employed; and, finally, as to increase or decrease in the numbers employed during recent decades. Then follows a detailed abstract of the whole work, which will be found of considerable use as showing the great scope and variety of the subjects dealt with and facilitating reference to any point on which information may be desired. The authors of the volume are Mr. Charles Booth and Mr. Ernest Aves. Mr. George H. Duckworth prepared the abstracts. The publishers are Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

ALTHOUGH this volume closes the series which has Life and Labour of the People in London as its title, Mr. Booth's inquiry is not yet over. Before he considers his work done another stage must be completed. This last stage in the inquiry will take cognisance of the influences by which the conditions of life in London are now affected for good or evil. These include such subjects as drink and early marriages, charity and its organisation, and the work of the religious bodies. The final completion of the work is promised in three years.

THE new volume of The Century magazine, which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have just issued, brings to mind Mr. Bret Harte's ballad of "The Aged Stranger." So rich are its pages in pictures and articles relating to the War that "I was with Grant" might be the book's motto. Indeed, "I was with Grant" might have been the motto of almost every number of The Century that as yet has been published.

At a meeting of the Anglo-Russian Literary Society, held at the Imperial Institute on April 6, a paper by Miss Gertrude Shepherd was read by Mr. E. Delmar Morgan on the principal "Heroines of Turgueniev." After pointing out the great moral influence which Turgueniev assigns to women in the development of Russia, forty years ago, the writer expatiated on the variety of types and the skill with which each is described; the vivid impression made by the principal women; the delicacy with which Turgueniev conveys impressions, for instance, of a woman's feelings, in a few words; the clever manner in which the development of character is traced, the beauty and charm of individual woman. The paper ended with a few words contrasting the younger women of Turgueniev with their English contemporaries.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING, who must now have enough short stories for a volume to succeed Many Inventions and Life's Handicap, has just delivered to the editor of the American magazine a new story, entitled "Number 007."

MR. RIDER HAGGARD has finished a new novel dealing with Boer life, entitled The Swallow.

THE title which Mr. Harry Furniss has chosen for his book on Parliamentary life—Men and Manners in Parliament—is dangerously near the title chosen by Mr. Lucy for the somewhat similar work which he wrote twenty and more years ago. The difference between them is merely an "s," Mr. Lucy's volume being called Men and Manner in Parliament. Mr. Furniss's book, which will, of course, be illustrated, is to be published by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.

THE last piece of literary work—finished only a few days before his death—which Lord Plunket wrote was an introduction to an English translation of Dr. Wilken's book on Spanish Protestants in the Sixteenth Century, shortly to be published by Mr. Heinemann. The late Archbishop's introduction represents the historical basis of his desire that a new Protestant Bishop of Spain might be consecrated with the view of setting on foot a new Reformation in that country.

MR. CLEMENT SHORTER has been commissioned by Mr. James Bowden to write a volume on Sixty Years of Victorian Literature. The book will be issued at two shillings, and will be ready before the festivities in June. A discreet silence will be maintained as to the younger reputations of the last decade.

A LONG poem by Mr. George Meredith will probably be acquired by the editor of Cosmopolis.

THE seventeenth annual Whitechapel Fine Art Exhibition will be opened next Wednesday by the Earl of Crewe at four o'clock. Prof. Herkomer will deliver an address in the evening on the work of Mr. G. F. Watts, which will be represented in the exhibition by no fewer than eighty-seven of his pictures, including the majority of those belonging to the Little Holland House gallery.

THE forthcoming number of the Scottish Review will contain an article by Mr. F. Legge upon "Primitive Religion and Primitive Magic," in which the writer seeks to show the origin of the priesthood among uncivilised peoples.

MESSRS. BELL will publish shortly, in four volumes, a selection of seventy of Vasari's "Lives," edited and annotated by Messrs. E. H. and E. W. Blashfield and Mr. A. A. Hopkins. The translation used is that of Mr. Foster. This edition is entirely distinct from the complete new translation of Vasari which Mr. Horatio Brown is preparing for Messrs. Bell to issue later.

THE ONLOOKER.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THANKS to the excellence of M. Hérélle's translations of Gabriel d'Annunzio's remarkable novels, this modern Italian has been cordially adopted in France, and may now be said to have a place in French literature. Except Byron, no foreign writer has ever enjoyed such a triumph. The doors of the two reviews—La Revue des Deux Mondes and La Revue de Paris—are wide open to his fame, and he is enthroned in each more royally even than any French master of the day. The austere Brunetière can forsake the frozen altitudes of predicative literature to welcome this voluptuous recruit; and, bewildered by the fire and radiance of his genius, discover an unwonted tolerance of his extravagances, his viciousness, and monstrous obscenities. The critic who has lashed the realists of France has not a word of censure for the morbid, turbulent sensualism of this Italian "child of the century." All the critics have written laudatory and sympathetic articles about this adopted favourite—Messrs. de Vogüé, Lemaitre, Laroumenet—and a new book by him is as much an event in the world of French letters as a book by Loti, Bourget, or France.

His last, Les Vierges aux Rochers, the first of the Lily series, of which two are in preparation, speedily followed in the Revue des Deux Mondes his striking and terrible Triomphe de la Mort. It is weaker in every way, both in construction and in analysis. The fatal lack in Annunzio is humour, alas! which makes his books heavy reading. There are splendid pages in this new volume, as might be expected from such an essential poet and artist, and there is something indescribably stately in the morose and fallen splendour of the Italian household he so brilliantly, poetically depicts. But nothing could be more grotesque than the picture of three superbly beautiful young women waiting for the hero, their guest and cousin, to make his choice and name the elected one. Like maidens in a naïve legend, they stand before the young sultan, with folded hands and quiet eyes, without any sense of rivalry or impatience, and each day the hero finds different reasons why it should be Anatolia, Masinnila, or Violante. He is enamoured of all three, and yet the handkerchief is not thrown. He departs, leaving these exquisite maidens to their tristful and harmonious solitude. There is one charming little picture in this uneventful and meaningless reverie of a sensual and conceited youth one cannot help connecting with the writer's own individuality. The type stands for the hero of all his books: morbid, fatuous, bestial, and artistic. He draws with a sure and vigorous hand the Siege of Gaëta, and evokes the noble silhouette of the young queen:

"An immense cry of joy and love saluted the apparition of the queen on the esplanade where shot hailed. She advanced with an audacious step, with all the supple grace of her nineteen years, in a tight bodice as splendid as armour, smiling under the plumes of her felt hat. Without a blink of lid at the whistle of the balls, she fixed her glance on the soldiers, as intoxicating as the wave of a flag; and beneath this glance, pride seemed to widen wounds, while those who were not wounded envied the glory of a blood-stain. . . . 'Ah, how lovely she was and how worthy of her throne!' exclaimed the prince. Her presence had a magnetic power over the soldiers. When she was by, each one felt a lion. The 22nd of January was the most glorious day of the siege, because she remained all night on the batteries."

Turning from Annunzio to a lesser light of naturalism, M. Paul Alexis, one understands why the austere and trenchant critic, M. Brunetière, is so hard on the French article and so lenient to the more exuberant Italian. At his worst Annunzio is always a poet, while a writer like M. Alexis is merely nasty and brutal. La Comtesse is a collection of obscene and worthless trivialities, supposed to be realistic studies of Parisian life. Oddly enough, one of the studies is of an eccentric who, just as others who love money, power, glory, wit, women, wine, play, or fishing, adores filth. Not haphazard filth, the writer explains, which is but an accident, but "thick and unctuous filth," finding his pleasure in it as a pig does. Lighting upon these coarse, crude pages, the exasperated reader cries "Halt"! If sin on paper must be, give us the perfumed folly of Annunzio's eternal lost hero. He may weary us, but we have no occasion to hold our noses.

Saphir, by M. Charles Buet, is the everlasting slice of Parisian life. Do these dear Parisians never weary of their Paris; never aspire to get beyond it; see, think, feel beyond it? As if this Paris of rustaqueres, of vulgar bankers, and dazzling demi-mondaines were all that is to be seen and known of the real Paris. Of the studious, honest, laborious, unselfish, austere, and scientific aspects of its life, never a word; of its virtue, self-sacrifice, poverty, and abnegation, no hint. Always, and inevitably, the group of foreigners (princes, barons, jockeys, and milords, English, Polish, Peruvian, and Austrian) of doubtful origin and still more doubtful means of existence, cocottes and heartless women of the world. Banquets, jewels, impossible splendours of toilet and establishment, light, frequently witty chatter, crisp but worthless characterisation, and the usual abuse of women: these are the ingredients for the insignificant society novel, here as well as in London; only here the writing is better, the forms more finished, and the observation finer. More original are the tales of M. Robert Scheffer comprised in the volume Le Prince Narcisse. Here there is some kind of distinction, a personal point of view, and an approach to art.

NEW BOOKS.

Le Prince Narcisse. Robert Scheffer.
La Comtesse. Paul Alexis.
Saphir. Charles Buet.
Les Vierges aux Rochers. Gabriel d'Annunzio.
Les Deux Rives. Fernand Vandérem.

NOTICE.

In consequence of the Easter holidays, the ACADEMY will be published next week on Thursday Morning instead of on Friday.

CHARLES LEVER.

THERE are certain authors whom one always associates with bad type and bad editions—with more words to the pages and more pages to the book than is at all desirable. Dickens is one of these, but Lever is the capital instance, and perhaps that is why people seldom read him after the age when they have come to realise that eyesight needs to be economised. For that reason one welcomes Messrs. Downey's project of a handsome edition, printed by Constable, on very creditable, though scarcely ideal, paper. Nowadays, when half the novels read as if they had been written during the influenza, animal spirits are cheap at any price, and nowhere are they to be had so easily as in a volume of Lever.

That is Lever's essential quality, the stock-in-trade with which he started; one has only to re-read his first book, Harry Lorrequer, to be quite sure about this. When he wrote it, as it appeared in the Dublin University Magazine fifty years ago, he was just thirty, simply the country doctor at Portstewart, a remote little town of co. Antrim. All the experience of life that he possessed was gained by a career in Trinity College, Dublin, and by a few years' exercise of his profession. The profession in itself pleased Lever, and there is no other which gives a man so deep and so wide an insight into human nature; yet the whole offered no great capital for a writer to draw upon—but how inexhaustible it seemed in his hands! In his preface to the collected edition of 1872 he notes himself the prodigality of this first book. As he grew older and left medicine for the diplomatic service, he gained a considerable accession of knowledge, his point of view changed, from farce he drifted towards comedy, his wit grew wittier if somewhat less lighthearted, his commentary on life was more searching, and superficially the character of his work changed a good deal. Yet fundamentally his method remains the same. It is always he himself who provides the entertainment; one never forgets Lever in his characters. With the most extraordinary fertility of brilliant improvisation, he was incapable, or almost incapable, of sustained invention. Harry Lorrequer began as a series of detached sketches; and scarcely any of his novels attained to the dignity of a compact and developed plot. Like Scott, he began a story without knowing where it was going; but, unlike Scott, he had not the art to draw the whole into a unity of action. His best novels are simply the recital of scenes in the life of a particular person, not connected by any continuous thread or intrigue; and in a chief faculty of the artist, the art of construction, he must be pronounced almost wholly deficient. You may begin to read him wherever you like and it will make very little difference to your enjoyment; but, after all, the important thing is that he remains enjoyable.

A great many people talk about Lever as if he were fit only for the school-room. In most cases that is because they have not re-read him; if it were a genuine opinion it would argue stupidity

Lever, it is true, belonged to a generation which had a robust taste in humour; he lived in the era of practical jokes; and in addition to that he had the fortune or misfortune to be illustrated by Phiz, who accentuated the horseplay and the farcical types of his characters. But the buffoonery is only an excrescence; he had above all the personal magnetism of a born storyteller, that easy flow of light description, which, without tedium or hurry, leads up to the point; and that extraordinary memory for stories which left his imagination nothing to do but to fill in picturesque details. A gentleman who lived at Portstewart when Harry Lorrequer was coming out in monthly parts remembers how he used to conquer the extreme shyness of his boyhood and creep into the drawing-room when Dr. Lever was there, to hear him rattling on in just the same pleasant way as in the printed pages. Lever's early attempts confined themselves chiefly to humorous narrative, in which he had felt his feet; but even in Harry Lorrequer there is already one masterpiece of grave storytelling—the adventure of Trevanion, an English officer, who dealt with a French duellist during the occupation of Paris. Another master of narrative, William Napier, has told the story—a true one—in one of the letters printed in his life; and to compare the two is to get a good notion of the vivid little inventions by which Lever brings the scene before one. As he made his hand, he widened his choice of themes; pathos and even tragedy came well within his range, quite real in their way. Even Dickens could scarcely have done anything more grim than the death-bed scenes which open Tom Burke. Lever could draw a very convincing villain.

He has an Irishman's prejudices and prepossessions; convivial qualities weigh with him, perhaps, more than they ought to; and he does not appreciate the commercial virtues. He could not write the romance of a merchant's honour, as Balzac did in César Biotteau and Daudet in Risler aîné; but if you want a roguish attorney or a pretentious upstart Lever is the very man to do him for you.

Yet, with all that, he has a large and humane tolerance even for his rogues; he likes the twinkle in the eye of a county horsedealer, or the suave manners of a continental swindler. Indeed, Lever is hard only on the people who bore him, especially upon the stupidity of arrogance. He delights to show the condescending Englishmen outwitted by the mere Irish. When he draws them, as he drew, for instance, Walpole in Lord Kilgobbin, the portrait is telling enough, but it lacks moderation. Indignation puts too much gall into his ink. He is best with his own people, for with them he is never wholly out of sympathy, unless, indeed, they are bailiffs or, worse still, mortgagors who have ousted an old family. In this, as in so many other ways, he is profoundly Irish.

It has become the fashion to say that he misrepresented Irish character; but the charge is unreasonable. Writers of to-day insist upon the Celtic melancholy, but the Celtic gaiety is quite as characteristic; and the melancholy is most conspicuous among the peasants, who only interested him by their love of adventure and sport, and by their undeniable humour and quickness of tongue. Mickey Free is not a literally truthful representation, but he is artistically true—a dexterously heightened rendering of a familiar type. Professional talkers and humorists abound in all classes among the Irish, but nowhere are they commoner than among peasants who converse much with the gentry. A water-bailiff on a Donegal salmon river—Neddy Gallagher, peace be to his ashes—was famous through at least two counties for his conversation, and in his own way he was as good a talker as the late Father Healy. If Lever had known Neddy, he could (and would undoubtedly) have reproduced his dialect and his particular turn of humour in dozens of admirable pages. The portrait might not have been profound, but it would certainly have been lifelike. Neddy's inner life was probably sad enough, but he would never have worn his heart upon his sleeve for the inspection of a stranger. All that Lever aspired to do was to sketch the amusing or the grotesque side of the people, their conscious or their unconscious humour, and he took the best types for his purpose; not the most characteristically Celtic nor the most poetic, but simply the most amusing. The bulk of his figures, however, belong either to the landlord class, which in the west and south remains very much as he painted it, or to that middle stratum which in Ireland consists almost exclusively of solicitors and priests. Lever painted society as he saw it, and a room in which Lever found himself was not likely to remain gloomy, and was exceedingly likely to become convivial. His own temperament throws a cheerful reflection on all his sketches; but they are not the less true for that. As an artist, he did not take himself seriously, he shunned all manner of filing work upon his productions, and would not even be at the pains to correct his proofs; but everywhere in his pages there is a genial and spontaneous humour, combined with a real knowledge of life, and a power of presenting character which increased steadily through his long career of writing. Lever never did anything better than the scene between Lord Kilgobbin and Miss Betty O'Shea in his last novel; and, above all, there is an ease of narration and a delight in the humour of his own situations which it would be hard to parallel except in the work of Dumas père. Perhaps the best way to praise Lever is to say that of all novelists he is the one who has most affinity with the creator of Chicot and D'Artagnan.

THEOLOGY IN FICTION.

You may read the Bible for the sake of its theology, or you may read it for its stories, or again as a convenient means of learning Hebrew and Greek. Similarly, you may read a novel for its story, which is the usual motive; or for its style, which is somewhat rarer; or, finally, for its theology. Mr. Thomas G. Selby has been reading novels for their theology, and has published the result in a volume, entitled The Theology of Modern Fiction (Charles H. Kelly). He has rather unaccountably overlooked the works of Mrs. Humphry Ward and Miss Marie Corelli, which would have enabled him to wallow in fictional theology. Rather has he taken such writers as Nathaniel Hawthorne and Thomas Hardy and treated them critically, not as story-tellers, but as theologians, squeezing from them such drops of doctrine as may be extracted from The Scarlet Letter and Tess. He has written an interesting book, but it is interesting rather as an instance of the perversion of criticism.

Mr. Selby has found in the course of his reading of Hawthorne that the theory worked out in his stories (notably in The Scarlet Letter) is that the paramount punishment of sin is inward, and that the confession of sin is its best practical atonement. The central point of Mr. Hardy's teaching he discovers in "the tendency to find a genesis for sin and sorrow in the best of motives." Tess, for example, tries all along to do the right thing, and ends up as a fallen woman and a murderess. Here we have the theology of Mr. Hawthorne and of Mr. Hardy; and the one is right, thinks Mr. Selby, and the other is wrong. But surely if this be theology, we have all of us been theologians, as M. Jourdain talked prose, without knowing it, ever since we were old enough to think at all. That open confession is good for the soul has been a proverb for centuries, and it was not left to Mr. Hardy to teach us that there is a certain "cussedness" in life which brings disastrous action out of the best motives. These are facts which the man in the street may observe for himself.

Indeed, Mr. Selby has committed the initial error of mistaking theology for something that is quite different. For the business of the novelist is to write a story, and to do this in convincing fashion he must look at the facts of life. He sees that men love, hate, fear, hope; that men are honest or dishonest, or perhaps something of either; brave or cowardly, blonde or swarthy; that they are prone to do certain things and to leave certain things undone. With these facts he weaves his story, nor is it his business to go behind them and ask who or what it was that made men as they are. But whereas it is the business of the storyteller to take the facts of life as a starting-point and work forward to their mundane consequences, it is the function of the theologian to take them as a starting-point and work backwards to their supernatural background. And as theologian and novelist have thus a common meeting-point in the facts of life, the superficial critic is apt to think that the novelist is writing theology and the theologian fiction, not perceiving that the two are starting from the same point in contrary directions. Nevertheless, having said so much in disparagement of Mr. Selby's critical method, we must admit that here and there the novelist gives us a peep of his opinion concerning the origin and destiny of man, and that Mr. Selby has built an interesting little theological peep-show.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XXII.—CHARLES DARWIN.

SHORT though it is, only a mere outline sketch, Darwin's autobiography, printed at the beginning of Mr. Francis Darwin's Life and Letters of Charles Darwin, takes a high place among work of its class. For brevity, for straightforwardness and true modesty, it certainly is not to be excelled. It is, indeed, if anything, too brief, too modest. Darwin set out to tell his children the salient things about himself, and he did it almost as dispassionately as if his subject was an entomological specimen. The autobiography is a marvel of directness. On the other hand, when writing about his father Darwin grew more humane and expansive: the subject warmed him as his own career never could; and we are left wishing that the great naturalist had found opportunity and time to describe other men for us. The art of saying in a small space a vast deal that is significant is so very uncommon. Darwin's account of his father is, indeed, one of the delightful things in literature, and it places that good man for ever in the gallery of great doctors. We know him body and mind: his enormous size—he weighed more than twenty-four stone, and was six feet two inches in height, his wonderful sagacity, his knowledge of men, his sympathetic imagination, his gift of clairvoyance. The portrait is lovingly done with the firmest and fewest strokes. Darwin, though he used it so little, had the true biographer's eye.

No one who was destined to write so much, we suspect, ever came to writing with less readiness than Charles Darwin. But, with that amazing patience and perseverance for which his name is a synonym, he made himself the perspicuous recorder of his discoveries.

"There seems [he wrote at the end of his life] to be a sort of fatality in my mind leading me to put at first my statement or proposition in a wrong or awkward form. Formerly I used to think about my sentences before writing them down; but for several years I have found that it saves time to scribble in a vile hand whole pages as quickly as I possibly can, contracting half the words, and then correct deliberately. Sentences thus scribbled down are often better ones than I could have written deliberately."

Elsewhere he says: "A man after a long interval can criticise his own work almost as well as if it were that of another person."

The passages concerning Darwin's æsthetic development, or rather retrogression, are of peculiar interest. Up to the age of thirty, or beyond it, he said, poetry of many kinds, such as the works of Milton, Gray, Byron, Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Shelley, gave him great pleasure (he admits to having read through "The Excursion" twice, which must be almost a record feat); and even as a schoolboy he took intense delight in Shakespeare, especially in the historical plays. He says also that pictures gave him considerable, and music very great, delight. At no time, however, did he have any ear for music. He tells that at Cambridge it was a form of amusement to set him an examination which consisted in ascertaining how many tunes he could recognise when they were played rather more quickly or slowly than usual.

"But now [he continued, writing in 1881, when he was seventy-two] for many years I cannot endure to read a line of poetry; I have tried lately to read Shakespeare, and found it so intolerably dull that it nauseated me. I have also almost lost my taste for pictures or music. Music generally sets me thinking too energetically on what I have been at work on, instead of giving me pleasure. I retain some taste for fine scenery, but it does not cause the exquisite delight which it formerly did."

A little later is a passage relating to the foregoing confession:

"This curious and lamentable loss of the higher æsthetic tastes is all the odder, as books on history, biographies, and travels (independently of any scientific facts which they may contain), and essays on all sorts of subjects, interest me as much as ever they did. My mind seems to have become a kind of machine for grinding general laws out of large collections of facts; but why this should have caused the atrophy of that part of the brain alone on which the higher tastes depend I cannot conceive. A man with a mind more highly organised or better constituted than mine would not, I suppose, have thus suffered; and if I had to live my life again I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once every week, for perhaps the parts of my brain now atrophied would thus have been kept active through use. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, and may possibly be injurious to the intellect, and more probably to the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional parts of our nature."

There was, however, one form of artistic production which attracted him to the end. "On the other hand," he wrote, "novels which are works of the imagination, though not of a very high order, have been for years a wonderful relief and pleasure to me, and I often bless all novelists. A surprising number have been read aloud to me, and I like all if moderately good, and if they do not end unhappily—against which a law ought to be passed. A novel, according to my taste, does not come into the first class unless it contains some person whom one can thoroughly love, and if a pretty woman all the better." This is a sound view. It is perhaps well that Darwin did not live to see the lovable and pretty woman of fiction suffer the temporary eclipse from which happily she is just emerging again.

THE BOOK MARKET.

A LITERARY SAMPLE ROOM.

AN INTERVIEW.

IT must be nearly two years since I declined to believe in the existence of the Library Bureau. The rumour ran that a large room had been fitted up as a permanent exhibition of new books. You had only to drop in and pick up the latest novel, the latest book of essays, the latest biography, and, looking through it in perfect peace, decide whether you would walk on to your bookseller and buy the volume or go home and sneer at it. Now this seemed improbable on the face of it. Such convenience, I thought, had been revealed only in dreams to wealthy Socialists. And yet it was true. The Literary Bureau is as real as Bloomsbury-street, and as real as Mr. Cedric Chivers, who is neither a phantom nor a Socialist, but an active business man with a mission to surprise people.

"Do my eyes deceive me, Mr. Chivers?" I said, as my heels sank into the Turkey carpet of the Bureau, "or do I see shelves of books all around me arranged under their publishers' names?"

"That is so," said Mr. Chivers, with a smile.

"And this—this drawing-room—is open to the public?"

"Oh, dear, yes."

"And all these new books are to be looked at by any man?"

"They are here for that purpose."

"Mr. Chivers," I said, "I would not delude the public, and if I should write some account of our little talk I would wish to be scrupulous. Do I understand that a man who reads a review of a new book may drop in here later in the day to see and handle that book and decide between his love of literature and his fear of his wife? May the professional man to whom the question of giving a guinea for a technical book is a serious one come here and judge of its value by a leisurely inspection? Is the novel-reading young lady at liberty to come and make out a list of happy endings for her mother, and a list of dismal ones for herself?"

"Certainly."

"Then, Mr. Chivers, will you tell me the story of your life?"

Mr. Chivers did so, with suitable omissions. His experience of books is not of yesterday. As a bookbinder at Bath, where he still conducts a large bookbinding business by deputy, Mr. Chivers had learned much. In particular, he had invented a special strong bookbinding for public libraries, which I have not space to describe. Suffice it to remark that he now supplies it to three hundred and fifty institutions.

"It was in the interests of public libraries and not of the public," Mr. Chivers said, "that I started this Bureau. I found that provincial secretaries and librarians had no central source of information and no London house of call. I could already do much for them in a business way with my patent bookbinding, and also with library appliances. But I conceived the idea of a literary sample room, to which everyone concerned in bookbinding on a large scale could come and examine current literature with a view to purchase."

"And your method?"

"My method was to interest publishers in the scheme, which was to them an entire novelty, and induce them to hire shelf-room here to keep representative collections of their newest books upon the shelves. I agreed on my part to give every facility to librarians and the public—"

"And the public?"

"Yes, the publishers insisted on the public being made free of the exhibition, and I am now entirely in agreement with them on this point."

CHARLES DARWIN

From a Photograph by Mrs. J. M. Cameron

"Had you many difficulties with publishers?"

"Oh, yes. But Mr. John Murray, whom I first consulted, at once approved the scheme. Here is the stack of shelves filled with his publications. Messrs. Macmillan, Smith Elder, Heinemann, Osgood & McIlvaine, Dent & Co., Ward, Lock & Co., the Cambridge University Press, and many others, soon took up the 'Bureau.' In some cases, of course, I was repulsed. One publisher laughed heartily when I explained my idea. The notion of giving the average man greater opportunity to hesitate in his book-buying struck him as too delicious."

"Well, but has the Bureau actually succeeded?"

"Yes, and no. After the first year I was sufficiently discouraged to propose abandoning it; but the publishers themselves encouraged me to keep it on. It is no profit to me; but then it is no essential part of my business. It would hurt me in no way to give it up to-morrow. On the other hand, I make it a matter of special interest, and I believe in its theory so thoroughly that I should like to see it carried out on a far more extensive scale. I would wish to see a permanent exhibition in which every, or nearly every, new book could be seen."

"But is not such an exhibition as yours open to abuse?"

"Mine, I can truly say, has never been abused by mere idle book-tasters. Of course, we should be down on any such trifling."

"Do you ever sell books?"

"Not under any circumstances. No entreaties would induce us to do so; and that is of the essence of our invitation to the public. People may come here to look at books in perfect freedom, and without incurring the smallest obligation."

"And do they come?"

"No."

"Why?"

"Simply because they do not know of the Bureau, which obviously I cannot afford to advertise. But it is becoming better known, and our number of promiscuous callers increases. I want it to increase. I want No. 10, Bloomsbury-street to be a house of call for the book-lover."

I said what I felt when I said it ought to be.

W. W.

ART.

THE New English Art Club is neither more nor less interesting than usual—that is, it remains the most interesting of all minor collections, but none the less its interest is not precisely various. As before, there is a tendency to promote some of the artistic qualities and to pay no heed to others. Of some of these others you do not so much as hear the name. For instance, in all that is said of "Blind Man's Buff," by Mr. Henry Tonks, there is no mention of its lack of the rare artistic quality of movement. The painter has a clever and rather delicate play of light, of colour, and of arrangement; the things that do not play are the people engaged in blind man's buff. There is, indeed, a girl stooping almost double, as a player stoops to evade immediate hands, but she does it with the blind man at such a distance that she is clearly only pretending; and when you discover this you at once perceive that everybody is at a standstill. On the other hand, with a figure intended to be at a standstill, Mr. Tonks has succeeded well; "The Rent in the Gown" is a pleasant bit of work and presents easily the easy expression of quiet attention. "In a Malay Courtyard," by Mr. C. W. Furse, has extraordinary life; but its art is not supreme enough to make really decorative use of a grotesque subject.

One of the best things in the Gallery is the same painter's portrait of Mrs. Cane, well contained, well limited, and with some distinguished painting in the interesting head. The "Vanity Fair" of Mr. J. E. Christie is rather dull in motive but by no means dull in execution. It has life, and the faces of the crowd are those of different, distinct, separate creatures, well perceived, not generalised, and solidly painted. There is spirit in the poise and action of the figure of the bubble-blowing "vanity." The vivid work of M. Renoir is notable; it has more qualities at once than one finds generally in English work excited by "a movement." There are two or three portraits—one of them labelled with the names of flowers—that do no great honour to a gallery believed to be exclusive.

Among the landscapes, special and singular praise must be given to Mr. Arthur Tomson for a group of small pictures, full of science and simplicity—"October," "July," "August," and "Heifers." They have a fine quality of transparent deep light, and very beautiful drawing in the horses and cattle. Mr. Moffat Lindner's "Christchurch Bay" has a lovely brooding sunlight on white cliffs—a thing for which one owes a painter gratitude; and if he seems to have set this distance in too great state and space of blue, we think it to be excessive merely because the nearer plane of beach and water does not keep its flatness; the middle sea is level, but the very foreground goes rather uphill. None the less is this a beautiful picture. Mr. D. S. MacColl has a delicate, but rather timid-looking, harmony—"a green thought in a green shade." Mr. Bertram Priestman's "Harbour Mill" takes the eye by a noble look of height and light; his white round mill is lifted up and illuminated above a harmonious region of smoke and colour, barges and mingled water and land; the composition is admirable. In "Nine Barrow Down," by Mr. H. Goodall, the downs are fine and vigorous earth, the sky is rather hard atmosphere. "Off Spaniards Road" has Mr. H. Muhrman's sweet, strong, and luminous quality; and there are decision and the movement of living landscape in Mr. J. R. Henry's "Walmer," with its cloud-shadow. Of Mr. Wilson Steer's "Richmond Castle" it must be owned that he has produced a speaking—a rustling—likeness of the leaves of a little company of alder-trees; yet an ugly likeness. He seems to have tried how literally (with a little exaggeration) they could be painted.

A. M.

MUSIC.

JOHANNES BRAHMS.

THE greatest of German composers is dead, and thus one of the strongest links with the past has been broken. It is now more than forty years since Schumann proclaimed the genius of Brahms, then in the first flush of manhood; he declared him "one of the elect." Schumann was acquainted with the three pianoforte sonatas—the only three, by the way, which Brahms ever wrote—with the earliest songs, and also with some chamber music. The terrible calamity which brought to an untimely end, first the art-career, and then the life of the elder master and sympathetic friend, was nigh at hand, yet when he uttered that prophecy his judgment, as events have proved, was clear and keen. The youth not only became a great composer, but down to the day of his death maintained his supremacy. Brahms commenced his career at a critical moment. Wagner was announcing the close of an old, the dawn of a new, dispensation. According to him Beethoven in his Symphonies had said the last word in instrumental music, and the only hope of progress in the future lay in the combination of the arts. Brahms may not have paid much heed to the declarations of the reformer, but then were there not the Beethoven Symphonies, to say nothing of more recent works, in themselves sufficient to cool the ardour of the most ambitious! Genius, however, gives confidence, and the prophetic words of Schumann—words neither hastily nor carelessly spoken—must also have exercised a beneficial influence over Brahms. He ever worked onwards and upwards, and whatever one may think of his music, there is no gainsaying the fact that he lived entirely for his art; and if he was more prosperous in a worldly sense than either Schubert or Schumann it was because he had in his young and also in his later days better chances. He never wrote down to the level of the great public. Never, indeed, did he, in the ordinary sense of the term, become a popular composer.

The growth of interest in the music of Brahms has been slow, but steady. There was never really any violent opposition to him—except on the part of some fanatics who thought by disparaging him to exalt Wagner—for he propounded no new art theories. He clung to the lines on which his great predecessors had worked, and thus there was not anything specially to distinguish him from other earnest workers in the same field of art. There was, of course, his own individuality, though in a composer who lived, moved, and had his musical being in Bach, Beethoven, Schubert, and Schumann that individuality was not always easy to detect. The influence particularly of Beethoven and Schubert clung to Brahms to the very last; he had no sham originality to keep up by out-of-the-way means, and therefore probably never sought to rid himself of influences from which he had received so much strength and inspiration.

In Schumann's music we have striking traces of his knowledge of, and affection for,

Beethoven, yet there is no dispute as to the originality of that composer. Neither ought there to be in the case of Brahms. Towards programme music the latter maintained an attitude almost hostile. He saw, perhaps even more clearly than Schumann, how certain composers, under very sanction of Beethoven's name, were dragging down the most ideal of arts to the lowest level of realism; and this may have rendered him a little too stern and unbending in regard to a branch of musical art reasonable enough within the safe limits of Beethoven's canon as laid down in his Pastoral Symphony.

The music of Brahms is sometimes spoken of as dry and obscure. The latter charge scarcely holds good; after patient study the most abstruse of his compositions becomes clear. Some certainly are dry: those, in fact, in which intellect predominates over emotion. Brain work is capable of demonstration; but though heart-throbs are only felt, they are none the less real. The impression made by music differs, however, according to the individual; hence the different appreciations one often hears of one and the same work.

It would prove unprofitable to name particular works which appear more or less weak in the matter of inspiration. Far better to recall the fine pianoforte Quartets and the magnificent Quintet, the noble first and second Symphonies, the Schicksalielied and the Requiem, all of which have won for Brahms undying fame. To these must be added the wonderful collection of songs by which the composer proved himself the legitimate successor of Schubert and Schumann.

M. LAMOUREUX and his orchestra, also the Bohemian Quartet, have recently shown us what a body of artists constantly practising together can accomplish. Yet, after all, the Joachim Quartet—MM. Joachim, Kruse, Wirth and Hausmann—seems to me still more wonderful. The associates of Dr. Joachim are accomplished performers, each capable of thinking and interpreting for himself. In surrendering their will to that of their chief they have not become mere servants scrupulously obeying all orders, but true associates, thinking, feeling and acting in union with Dr. Joachim, replicas, as it were, of his very self—these artists truly named the Joachim Quartet. Never has the distinguished violinist been heard in chamber music to greater advantage. On Monday evening, when the players made their second appearance, three Quartets were performed—Mozart in E flat, Brahms in A minor, and Beethoven in B flat (Op. 130). The rendering of the first was remarkable for its purity, delicacy and archness; the second for its tender charm and plaintiveness, the latter quality intensified, of course, by thoughts of the dead master, and by the special sympathy and reverence with which the interpreters naturally addressed themselves to their task; and the third for its intellectuality combined with deep emotion. There was no pianoforte solo, but Mme. Marchesi sang Lieder by Schubert, Brahms, and Schumann with immense success. The art in Schumann's "Die Zwei Grenadiere" was, perhaps, somewhat overdone, yet the rendering proved effective, taking, however, into consideration that the song ought not really to be sung by a lady. Her reading of Bach's "Erbarne dich" lacked breadth; the solo violin part was played by Dr. Joachim.

Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf is the title of a work by Mr. Edward Elgar, written expressly for the Worcester Festival of last November. It was performed for the first time in London last Saturday afternoon, at the Crystal Palace. The composer, like many another musician, was intended for the law, and actually spent some time in a solicitor's office. Law, however, was soon deserted for music. King Olaf is a work of great promise. The composer is still in his storm and stress period, but his music shows dramatic power, imagination, clever technique, and excellent orchestration. The solo numbers are less successful than the choruses. The performance, under the direction of the composer, and with Miss M. Heuson and Messrs. Lloyd and A. Black as soloists, was very good. J. S. S.

SCIENCE.

IT has been a week of Sturm und Drang for the Chemical Society, and even now the Fellows of that august body must be feeling supremely foolish all round. First of all there is the Council, which, without much consideration of the consequences, allowed the nomination of Prof. Dewar as President to be sprung upon it. Then there is a large body of the Fellows, practically half, who attempted to run Prof. Ramsay as an opposition candidate, and failed. Then there are Profs. Dewar and Ramsay themselves, the one of whom must be smarting under the discovery of his enormous unpopularity, while the other can scarcely be relishing the difficult position in which his supporters have placed him. Finally, there is Prof. Armstrong, who, by a judiciously timed circular, assisted to force the issue in favour of Prof. Dewar, but whose action in so doing is by no means universally admired.

I HAPPEN to know a good deal about the origin of this unfortunate episode; and as nobody else seems inclined to state it, I may as well do so. It was not entirely a revolt of the juniors against the seniors, as Prof. Armstrong states in his philippic, though the mismanagement of the Society's publications may undoubtedly have given some ground for this idea. The opposition to the Fullerman Professor is of long standing, and has grown during the last few years. It began at Cambridge, where Prof. Dewar is now rarely seen, over a personal matter relating to the laboratory; and I should not have referred to this at all were it not that Cambridge antipathy was a good deal responsible for the rancour imparted to a later discussion (in Nature) on the respective claims of Prof. Dewar and Prof. Olazewski as discoverers of the method of liquefying oxygen. Controversies of this kind breed opponents, even when the disputant holds so distinguished a post as Fullerman Professor of the Royal Institution. But there are other causes which I imagine have contributed even more to the action of Dr. Collie and the rest who opposed Prof. Dewar's election to the presidency of the Chemical Society. One of these has reference to the expert evidence matter related in last week's Saturday Review, and the other is the "cordite" case. The affair of the cordite committee was dealt with in some minuteness by the Pall Mall Gazette, and as one who followed the action Nobel v. Anderson in court throughout, and saw the whole of the papers produced in the case, I am not surprised that a large section of British men of science should object to the lines on which that committee worked, even though its legal position was unassailable. There is no need to revive the story, which is practically all in print; but if jubilee honours are likely to be distributed among the heads of the scientific societies during the coming year, I foresee that this explosive question will be brought into prominence once more, to the disadvantage of all those who were concerned with it.

It has taken the Duke of Argyll four months and two barrels to dispose of Mr. Spencer's article in the November Nineteenth Century. Moreover, his Grace's gun is a very large bore. Mr. Spencer's article itself was a reply to the remarkable gospel of evolution as set forth by Lord Salisbury at the British Association. In his gentlest but firmest manner the philosopher led the statesman over the various errors into which he had allowed himself to fall, and his remonstrance was a masterpiece of well-ordered, logical arrangement. By means of four great groups of facts, all converging to the same conclusion, the joint significance of which is enormous as compared with the significance of each one independently, he traced the main argument in favour of evolution as a process dispensing with special creation. He then showed how far Lord Salisbury had been from apprehending correctly either the facts of natural selection or the words of Darwin who expounded it, and ended by explaining, with a gravity that made the error itself more amusing, that Lord Salisbury had confounded natural selection with the more general theory of evolution, the part with the whole, the by no means indispensable adjunct with the great principle which could easily afford to discard it.

INTO this error the Duke of Argyll seems to have plunged afresh. In fact, it seems impossible for the adherents of the special creation theory to avoid it. In his first instalment he speaks of "that particular theory of evolution which was Darwin's, or that modification of it which was his (Mr. Spencer's) own." The whole article harps upon the one minor theme of specific development in the animal kingdom, ignoring everything else that is included in the term evolution. Most people, I imagine, feel it rather late in the day to be wrangling over the historical accuracy of the Book of Genesis, and would prefer even to accept the fact that life once came into the world without trying to explain the method. Not so the Duke of Argyll. He has invented a new theory which is not Darwin nor yet Genesis, but a mixture of both. It is that five germs were specially created to be the ancestors of the vertebrates, the molluscs, the crustacea, the radiata, and the insects respectively. He does not tell us whether these were the names that Adam gave to them, nor what they looked like, but that is essentially his idea. It does not help us much.

H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LANDSCAPE IN POETRY.

I should be obliged if space may be allowed me to clear up a little ambiguity which the writer of the very kindly notice of my Landscape in Poetry, and others elsewhere, seem to feel as to the limitation of the non-English (or, rather, non-British) poems included. The scheme of the book, both for the sake of unity in subject and to avoid undue length, was to deal only with those foreign literatures, ancient and modern, which have directly and notably influenced our own poets. This I ought to have expressed more clearly on p. vii. of the Preface; and (not to speak of Oriental or Scandinavian verse in earlier days) to have introduced modern French, German, Italian, or Portuguese landscape, would not only have required (as your reviewer remarks of French) another volume, but would also have involved an amount of English prose rendering at once methinks equally inevitable and intolerable.

I have, however, as has been justly pointed out by some critics, in the case of English seventeenth and eighteenth century work relied too much on its familiarity to readers. Meanwhile, reverting to your notice, as two-fifths of the whole volume are devoted to the nineteenth century, rich as it is in our landscape, may not this be accepted as an adequate allowance?

F. T. PALGRAVE.

THE LITERATURE OF SPORT.

Dresden: March 27.

In your recent review of the last volume of the "Badminton Library" dealing with the Poetry of Sport, by Mr. Hedley Peek, the author's want of editorial and technical care is criticised. As one interested in the literature of sport—past and present—I venture to express the opinion that severer censure should have marked the numerous grave inaccuracies to be found not only in that book, but in several articles on much the same subject by the same author which have appeared of late in the Badminton Magazine. Mr. Peek's nescience concerning such a generally known bibliographical fact, i.e., that Turberville's hunting-book—which, by the way, was published in 1575, and not in 1570, as he asserts on pp. 23 and 24—does not describe English hunting, but French sport leads Mr. Peek to draw many absolutely wrong deductions concerning (a) English hunting customs, (b) the authorship of certain poetry which he ascribes to English writers, (c) the chase, and (d) the habits of animals which were either not hunted at all in England, such as the wolf, bear, "buc," &c., or which had long ceased to exist in a wild state in British forests, such as the wild boar. As the following errors prove, Mr. Peek has no very extensive acquaintance with the literature of his subject. On p. 38, in a poem by Gascoigne, occurs the well-known term of ventry "harboured fast," which Mr. Peek says means "set watchers." On p. 22 he states that the hunters of old did not seem to trouble themselves about their hounds frequently changing the scent; a ridiculous assertion, as anyone must know who has dipped into the old authors. To nothing did the sportsmen of old lend more weight than to the staunchness of their hounds. In speaking of the German written in the latter half of the last century, he declares it to be obscure old German, a mistake which makes one smile, for, excepting a few orthographical changes, the German language is practically the same as it was 150 years ago. This error he repeats in the Badminton Magazine of last month, in an article which professes to describe "battue-hunting." This form of sport, as he describes it, never existed in any country at any period of history, for in his ignorance of old German and French hunting customs he mixes up battues, pütschen or stalking, deer-baiting, and the latter form of eingestelltes Jagen, a fashionable sport of the last century. He illustrates this article with engravings picked quite at random from the hundreds of sporting subjects produced by the famous German artist Ridinger, and by this heterogeneous hodge-podge of incorrect text and unsuitable illustrations only adds to the perplexing confusion of the various hunting methods. Of the last-named artist he declares (p. 311) that he has vainly tried to discover authentic information, "the man himself and his sporting history are wrapped in a cloud, none the less obscure by the old German of the period." No more ridiculously incorrect statement was ever put into print. No fewer than seventeen writers I can name have written at length about Ridinger, and there exists no less than four biographies of him. Two were written during his lifetime, one being annotated and signed by Ridinger himself, another was published by his sons soon after his death, which occurred only in 1767, and the fourth, published in 1856, contains not only a detailed account of his life, but on 300 octavo pages a full list is given of no fewer than 1,313 of his works. There is nothing whatever obscure about Ridinger's career from the day of his birth and his being apprenticed, at the age of fourteen, to the master-painter Resch, to the day of his death. Curiously enough the chief bit of information Mr. Peek does give about him, i.e. that he was a hunter at one time of his life, his biographers expressly state is entirely wrong (see Thienemann, p. xiv.). Mr. Peek acknowledges that though he writes on hunting in Germany he does not know German; those who have scanned his Poetry of Sport will hardly need this confession, for in the only German quotation I could find (p. 253) in that volume, consisting of six of the simplest words in the language, there are no fewer than three mistakes—a record!

Considering that Mr. Peek from beginning to end never tires of calling himself a student and an ardent lover of accuracy, productions on this subject by his pen can only tend to make English research ludicrous in the eyes of our foreign critics, who, as a rule, are exceedingly well up in old sporting lore.

W. A. BAILLIE GROHMAN.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

Mr. Anthony
Hope's
"Phroso."
(Methuen.)

A story of adventure, "every page of which," says the Speaker, "is palpitating with action and excitement," and containing "some of the best sketches of character that even his pen has yet produced. . . . Side by side with the record of stirring deeds . . . we see how characters reveal themselves, and how real men and women act under circumstances which are the reverse of commonplace." But hear Mr. W. L. Courtney: "They weary one sometimes, these puppets of superficial romance, that look as if they had been cut out of a fashion-plate and dressed to go to a fancy ball." Yet "the idea of the plot is so good and freshly original that we enter upon its perusal with no small measure of excitement and interest." With which compare the Morning Post: "The motive of Mr. Hope's story has done duty in a hundred novels." But he has never been more successful "in investing the dry bones of the novel of adventure with the life of a fresh and captivating style." Except Fielding no English novelist has recognised so fully "that the finest hero is not absolutely sans peur et sans reproche, and that the most delightful heroine is not entirely devoid of guile." The style, according to the Daily News, has the same "sparkle and buoyancy" as that of the Prisoner of Zenda. The Pall Mall complains that, in the second part, "adventure follows adventure somewhat mechanically, and with a suggestion that the author must have asked himself which he should throw in next." On the other hand, "Mr. Hope's pleasant style of narrative is as good as ever, less artificial than the Prisoner of Zenda, and always clear and to the point." "This . . . novel of adventure," writes the Manchester Guardian, "is distinguished by a quiet irony, lively but unpretentious dialogue, and the presence of a charming heroine."

"... OUIDA's imagination is so rapid, and under the stimulus of first impressions creates for her so vivid a landscape, that her first impressions transfigured often take for her the place of reality." Hence, in spite of the "temperate style" which marks the execution, the "singular skill" with which many of the characters are drawn, in spite of "situations dramatic in the highest degree," "it is more likely to do harm by misleading the general public than to do good by castigating a section of the world of fashion": for "the individuals in question, though they may be notorious, are not typical." So the National Observer. In the Telegraph, Mr. Courtney contrasts the book with those of an age in which "the chief preoccupation seems to be either the illustration of eccentric points of psychology or the enforcement of a dubious piece of ethics"; and is thankful "when a practised novelist, with no little experience, and with admirable technique, brings us back to older conceptions of her art—is able, in short, to compose a plot instead of giving us a disjointed series of didactic essays." For its abnormal length the Chronicle can find no excuse, since "the irrelevant padding . . . is only less flagrant than the barefaced repetition. . . . The sister of Lord Hurstmancaux certainly ranks high in Ouida's gallery of bad women. . . . The blunder which places her at the mercy of the millionaire and enables him to reduce her to the lowest depth of infamy makes the one simple and powerful episode in a story that is surcharged with exaggeration."

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY. BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE
English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the
houses of Subscribers) from TWO
GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,
and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and
post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.
The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;
46, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1861.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

NEW BOOK by the AUTHOR of "THE HONOUR OF SAVELLI." A GALAHAD OF THE CREEKS, AND OTHER STORIES.

By S. LEVETT YEATS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S POPULAR NOVELS.

THE GREEN BOOK; or, Freedom

Under the Snow. By MAURUS JÓKAI. With Engraved Portrait of Author. 6s. [Fifth Edition.]

"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"In its panoramic width of outlook, its inexhaustible fertility of invention and barbaric splendour of colouring, Maurus Jókai's great novel challenges comparison with Tolstói's 'War and Peace'. There is a succession of brilliant tableaux. To read this remarkable book is like witnessing a magnificent Oriental pageant. It is of enthralling interest and takes rank with the great novels of the century."—Spectator.

BLACK DIAMONDS. By Maurus JÓKAI. 6s. [Third Edition.]

"It is so well written, so abounding in all sorts of special knowledge, and displays so much real literary power, that we never feel tempted to leave any of its pages unread. There are some extremely fine descriptive passages in the book. Maurus Jókai is absolutely original in thought and treatment."—Daily Chronicle.

'MIDST the WILD CARPATHIANS.

By MAURUS JÓKAI. 5s. [Second Edition.]

"One of the best of his historical romances. Who can resist reading the book? We can promise that the most rapacious and exacting reader shall not be disappointed."—Black and White.

PRETTY MICHAL. By Maurus JÓKAI. 5s. [Second Edition.]

"It is part of the high art of the story that the author has kept the whole atmosphere free from the complexity, the subtle motives of a later and more sophisticated age. Maurus Jókai's novel is a book to be read."—Saturday Review.

NEW "GREENBACK" NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

"A story which can be enjoyed by every lover of wholesome fiction. The book is well put together and is a welcome relief from the novels of the hysterical school of writers."—Publishers' Circular.

THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN.

By MARGARET MOULE.

Author of "Wingrove's Ways," "Diok's Wife," "Miss Maidment," &c.

"The story is attractive in itself, with cleverly constructed plot and naturally as skilfully developed."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

ON TUESDAY NEXT. THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 330.—APRIL, 1897.—5vo, price 6s.

- I. A GREAT HISTORIAN.
- II. NOVELS OF THE ITALIAN RENAISSANCE.
- III. THE EXODUS OF PICTURES FROM ENGLAND.
- IV. OLD ETON AND MODERN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
- V. THE CRISIS IN AMERICAN AFFAIRS.
- VI. JOWETT.
- VII. THE SCULPTURED TOMBS OF HELLAS.
- VIII. UN ROYAUME ANGLO-NORMAN.
- IX. PAINTERS BEHIND THE SCENES.
- X. NATIONAL DEFENCE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

Now Ready, No. 22, price 3s.

NEW SERIES. MIND: APRIL, 1897.

A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy.

Edited by G. F. STOUT.

With the Co-operation of Professor H. SIDGWICK, E. CAIRD, Dr. VETZ, Dr. WARD, and Professor E. B. TITCHENER.

Contents.

1. SOME PROBLEMS OF CONCEPTION. L. T. HOBBES.—2. HEGEL'S TREATMENT OF THE CATEGORIES OF THE SUBJECTIVE NOTION (I). J. ELLEN MCGAGGART.—3. THE FUNCTION OF RELIGIOUS EXPRESSION. HENRY RUTHERS (MARSHALL).—4. ON THE NATURE OF THE NOTION OF EXTERNALITY. HOWARD V. KENT.—5. DISCUSSIONS In what Sense, if any, do Past and Future Time Exist? B. BOGART, S. H. HOBSON, G. E. MOORE.—6. CRITICAL NOTICES: Herbert Spencer's The Principles of Sociology (Vol. III). W. D. MORRISON; Wm. Caldwell's Schopenhauer's System in its Philosophical Significance, C. A. F. RYAN DAVIES; Jul. Bergmann's Die Grundprobleme der Logik, E. E. C. JONES; Gédéon Gory's L'Immortalité de la raison dans la Connaissance Sensible, S. H. MILLER.—7. NEW BOOKS.—8. PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS.—9. NOTES: Paramnesia, by H. ELLIS; The late Professor WALLACE. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY.

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

THE WESTMINSTER BUDGET.

A USEFUL COMPANION FOR THE WRITING DESK.

"Everybody agrees with Lord Lytton's king-cardinal that 'the pen is mightier than the sword.' As in other matters in this our day, it goes without saying that there are pens and pens. We are not confined to the reed, the stick, or the goose-quill for writing purposes. The Americans have changed all that. To-day the greatest dunce in facts knows that our cousins across the sea have their almost perpetual ink-well pen within itself, known as the Fountain pen, and also that smaller arrangement for the pocket, the Stylograph. Both are progressive inventions. When these items for writers first came into service there were little faults in their construction that made the user cry out, 'Bother this pen!' But those little irregularities are almost, if not quite, past history. And in many points the Caw Pen Company has been the magician. Caw's Safety Fountain and Stylograph pens have, because of their special points, a repute beyond most of their neighbours on the market. One of the little benefits of the Caw pens is that the pen is always in a well of ink, so that it never gets dry, and from this it follows that there is always a supply of the necessary fluid when the pen is in use, and further the pen never gets choked up; but the great feature of these Caw Safety Pens is the hitherto non-existent advantage that the pen need not be carried in a horizontal position, but can lie in the waistcoat pocket, or be held upside down, without possibility of leakage of ink. Then the 'Hexagon' stylo-pen, as its name infers, is not made as round as a rolling-pin, but is a bevelled plinth, and from this cause it has the happy quality of keeping on the spot where you put it down; hence the pen does not skate off your desk as if it were marble. The cost of the pens varies, of course, according to size and finish. You can invest in Caw's pens in any amount from 5s. up to 30s., and any one of them is a boon in writing. But they will give you all details in regard to each and every one at your stationer's, at the stores, or at the village chemist's shop. The British depôt is 46, Holborn Viaduct. M.P.'s and busy business men, make a note of Caw's pens. There may be a mine of wealth buried in the suggestion."

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

TRUTH.

"The latest Yankee notion in lead pencils: the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

THE EVENING NEWS AND POST (London).

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the 'Blaisdell Paper Pencil.' Penknives, blackened thumbs, and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

BLACK AND WHITE.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

THE LADY.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the 'Blaisdell' variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

"Has the death-day of the cedar pencil arrived? It may be so. At any rate, the 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is an innovation. Your pencil is never pointless—surely a boon to all busy people, be they writers, printers' readers, or warehouse folks; or others, a part of whose business it is to set their mark on this or that item or article."

MORNING LEADER (London).

"The ordinary blacklead pencil in its wooden case if of good quality does not promise much scope to the inventive genius thirsting to discover a real improvement, but a clever American firm have a design in lead pencils that deserves popularity for its ingenuity. The lead is as usual, but round it is wound a thin strip of paper to the ordinary pencil thickness, and slightly notched at intervals, so that a small portion can be removed at a time as the lead wears down, producing an ever-sharpened pencil, always in working order. The new device is known as the 'Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Paper Pencil.'"

THE QUEEN.

"In these hurrying days any invention that tends to economise time and labour is a universal boon, and such a one is the 'Blaisdell' paper pencil, which is winning golden opinions in America, and is now coming into use on this side the Atlantic. What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening! and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated. The 'Blaisdell' pencils are made in various colours."

The BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is

Manufactured in 5 degrees of Graphite, viz.: HB, H, B, HH, BB, price 2d. each.

5 varieties of Colours: Blue, Red, Green, Yellow, Soft Black 3d. ..

Shape, size, and use exactly the same as a cedar pencil;

BUT,

It is covered with paper—not wood! Its point is always perfect—no chips, no dust. It does not waste in re-sharpening—the only wear is the wear of the lead in writing.

SAVES TIME, TROUBLE, AND MONEY.

 If not found at any Stationers, a Set of 3 Black and 2 Coloured Pencils will be sent Post Free to any address in the United Kingdom for 1s., by THE BLAISDELL PENCIL COMPANY, Limited, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN & CO.'S LIST.

FICTION.

THE STORY OF A GREEK ISLAND.

PHROSO. A Romance. By Anthony Hope.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Anthony Hope has produced his latest novel in a happy hour. At a time when the chief theme of conversation is Crete and the islands of the Archipelago, the lawlessness of the Eastern races, and the inveteracy of old racial grudges, he has issued a book with all the elements of romance, recounting the fortunes of an eccentric Englishman, who, because he is tired of ordinary travel, purchases an island belonging to Turkey and inhabited by Greeks."—Daily Telegraph.

A HANDFUL of EXOTICS. Stories and Incidents, chiefly of Russo-Jewish Life. By S. GORDON. Crown 8vo, 3s 6d.

"Since 'Children of the Ghetto,' no more powerful pen has undertaken any Jewish theme in English than Mr. Gordon's."—Glasgow Herald.

GUAVAS the TINNER. By S. Baring-Gould.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"In the weirdness of the story, in the faithfulness with which the characters are depicted, and in force of style, it closely resembles 'Mehalah,' one of the writer's earliest and best efforts."—Daily Telegraph.

A MAN with BLACK EYELASHES. By H. A.

KENNEDY. Crown 8vo, 3s 6d.

"Original in conception, strikingly daring in treatment, and luridly dramatic in its closing incident."—To-Day.

WILT THOU HAVE THIS WOMAN? By J.

MACLAREN COBBAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"In the present day it is refreshing to come across a novel of this description. The story in its old-world charm and country setting reminds one of Anthony Trollope."—New Saturday.

UNDER SHADOW of the MISSION. By L.

STUDDIFORD M'CHESNEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The notable feature of the work lies in the exquisite descriptions of Santa Barbara scenery."—Glasgow Mail.

"Light, fantastic, original, charming."—Scotsman.

THE FAITHFUL CITY. By H. Morrah. Crown

8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Morrah is to be congratulated on having written a powerful story."—Glasgow Mail.

THE SPECULATORS. By J. Brewer. Crown

8vo, 6s.

"A pretty bit of comedy.....It is undeniably a clever book."—Academy.

"A clever and amusing story. In a word, it cleverly makes capital out of the comic aspects of culture, and will be read with amusement by every intellectual reader who takes it up."—Scotsman.

CLARISSA FURIOSA. By W. E. Norris. Crown

8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Norris has given us an exceedingly interesting story. It is like the best of his work, urbane, humorous, and genial, yet really penetrating and admirably observed."—Westminster Gazette.

"It ranks with the best of the author's productions; and to say this is, in our opinion, equivalent to placing it with the best novels of our time."—St. James's Gazette.

THE SUPPLANTER. By B. P. Neuman. Crown

8vo, 3s 6d.

"The story has a very real charm.....a book which it is a pleasure to praise, alike for its fine sentiment, its healthy moral, and its distinct ability."—Speaker.

THE SORROWS of SATAN. By Marie Corelli.

Thirty-fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BARABBAS. By Marie Corelli. Twenty-ninth

Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SOUL of LILITH. By Marie Corelli. Ninth

Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A CHILD of the JAGO. By Arthur Morrison.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Told with great vigour and powerful simplicity."—Athenaeum.

THE SEATS of the MIGHTY. By Gilbert Parker.

Sixth Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of the strongest stories of historical interest and adventure that we have read for many a day.....Through all Mr. Parker moves with an assured step, whilst in his treatment of his subject there is that happy blending of the poetical with the prosaic which has characterised all his writings. A notable and successful book."—Speaker.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS.

THE IMITATION of CHRIST. By Thomas

A KEMPIS. With an Introduction by DEAN FARRAR. Illustrated by C. H. Gere, and printed in black and red. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, buckram, 3s 6d; padded morocco, 5s.

"Amongst all the innumerable English editions of the 'Imitation' there can have been few which were prettier than this one, printed in strong and handsome type by Messrs. Constable, with all the glory of red initials, and the comfort of buckram binding."—Glasgow Herald.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By John Keble. With an Introduction and Notes by W. LOCK, M.A., Sub-Warden of Keble College, Oxford, Professor at Oxford, Author of the "Life of John Keble." Illustrated by R. Anning Bell. Fcap. 8vo, buckram, 3s 6d; padded morocco, 5s.

"The most acceptable edition of this ever-popular work."—Globe.

THE DOCTRINE of the INCARNATION. By

R. L. OTTLEY, M.A., Late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon, Principal of Passy House. In two vols., demy 8vo, 15s.

"A clear and remarkably full account of the main currents of speculation. Scholarly precision.....genuine tolerance.....intense interest in his subject—are Mr. Ottley's merits."—Guardian.

THE XXXIX. ARTICLES of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. Edited, with an Introduction, by E. C. S. GIBSON, D.D., Vicar of Leeds, late Principal of Wells Theological College. In 2 vols. Demy 8vo, 7s 6d.

"The book will be welcome to all students of the subject, and its sound, definite, and loyal theology ought to be of great service."—National Observer.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HISTORY of RELIGION. By F. B. JEVONS, M.A., Litt.D., Tutor at the University of Durham. Demy 8vo, 10s 6d.

"Displays a mental power of no ordinary kind, and is the result of much and well-directed study."—Scotsman.

ST. ANSELM of CANTERBURY. A Chapter in the History of Religion. By J. M. RIGG, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo, 7s 6d.

"Mr. Rigg has told the story of the great Primate's life with scholarly ability, and has thereby contributed an interesting chapter to the history of the Norman period."—Daily Chronicle.

FOUNDERS of OLD TESTAMENT CRITICISM:

Biographical, Descriptive, and Critical Studies. By T. K. CHEYNE, D.D., Oriental Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford. Large crown 8vo, 7s 6d.

"A very learned and instructive work."—Times.

SERMONS on SUBJECTS CONNECTED with the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A welcome companion to the author's famous 'Introduction.' No man can read these discourses without feeling that Dr. Driver is fully alive to the deeper teaching of the Old Testament."—Guardian.

CAMBRIDGE SERMONS. Edited by C. H.

PRIOR, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Pembroke College. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A representative collection. Bishop Westcott's is a noble sermon."—Guardian.

SERMONS to SCHOOLBOYS. By H. C.

BEECHING, M.A., Rector of Yattendon, Berks. With a Preface by Canon Scott-Holland. Crown 8vo, 2s 6d.

RELIGION in BOYHOOD. Notes on the Religious Training of Boys. With a Preface by J. R. ILLINGWORTH. By E. B. LAYARD, M.A. 18mo, 1s.

THE LIFE of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By

S. BARING-GOULD. With over 450 Illustrations in the Text, and 12 Photogravure Plates. Large 4to, 36s.

"Taken as a whole, we do not hesitate to say that this combined product of narrative writing and art will give the English reader a clearer and more complete idea of the complicated and colossal personality of Napoleon than it is possible to gather from any other work of equal extent."—St. James's Budget.

THE FALL of the CONGO ARABS. By Captain

SIDNEY L. HINDE. With Map, Portraits, and Plans. Demy 8vo, 12s 6d.

"His narrative is rife with thrilling interest, and abounds in descriptive matter throwing much new light on native life in Central Africa.....On the whole, there is not a page in the book which is not thoroughly readable. If merit be a criterion of success, The Fall of the Congo Arabs should achieve a widespread popularity."—Daily Telegraph.

INDUSTRY in ENGLAND: Historical Outlines.

By H. de B. GIBBINS, M.A., D.Litt. With Five Maps. Demy 8vo, 10s 6d.

"Mr. de B. Gibbins, as the title-page to this present work indicates, has extended his studies very far beyond the 'problem of the unemployed,' and has given us a book of very copious and well-digested facts and thought. His maps supply very fair material for the formation of reasonable ideas of England at various periods of her history, from times long prior to the period of the Domesday Book to times long subsequent to the settlement of the cardinal features of her constitutional as well as her industrial history. His tables place before the reader in a convenient form some of the vast changes in population, in local trades, and in the general trade of the country, and the comparisons are not in any noticeable case overdrawn. The author has produced at once a pleasantly-written and a very suggestive book."—Spectator.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. A New Edition. Edited, with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. In 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 6s 6d each; crown 8vo, 6s each. Vols. I., II., and III.

Messrs. Methuen's New Catalogue and Book Gazette sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1302.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES:—
No. 51 SENTINEL—Old Testament Theology. (1443 lots.)
No. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (752, 738 lots.)
No. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (540 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 77, SOHO SQUARE

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

BOOKS, a CATALOGUE of SECOND-HAND.
(1) Pertaining to Annals, Finance, and Political Economy
in general, post free; (2) General Literature, two stamps.
C. HERRICK, 333, Goswell Road, London, E.C.
Libraries Purchased.

TO AUTHORS.—Messrs. DIGBY, LONG & CO.
(Publishers of "The Author's Manual," 3s. 6d. net, eighth
edition) INVITE AUTHORS to FORWARD their MSS. (Fiction
Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Volume for prompt consideration.—
Address 16, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS of 27 and 28 West 57th Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 15, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.
Telephone 68121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS AND EXPORTERS,
3, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co.
Telegrams: MOPUSIL, LONDON. [Established 1819.]

EDITORS IN SEARCH of good FICTION should
write for J. F. SPRIGGS'S LIST of OVER ONE HUNDRED
WORKS offered for SERIAL PUBLICATION. The Authors include the most Popular Novelists of the Day.—J. F. SPRIGGS'S NEWSPAPER
SMALL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

TYPE-WRITING.—MANUSCRIPTS, PLAYS,
&c. COPIED. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words), or 5,000 words and over, 10d. per thousand; if in Two Columns, 1s. per thousand.
Paper included.—MISS NORTON, "Springfield," Walkers Road, Stamford.

TYPE-WRITING neatly, accurately, and ex-
pediently executed. Scientific MSS. a speciality.—MISS
MARTIN, 19, Beaumont Street, Portland Place, W.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS AFTER EASTER, 1897.
Lecture Hours, 3 o'clock P.M.

TEMPEST ANDERSON, M.D., B.Sc.—FOUR LECTURES on
"VOLCANOES." (The Tyndall Lectures).—On TUESDAYS, APRIL 27,
MAY 4, 11, 18. Half-a-Guinea the Course.
HERBERT HENRY STARLING, M.D.—THREE LECTURES on "THE HEART and its WORK."—On TUESDAYS, MAY 23,
JUNE 1, 8. Half-a-Guinea.
The REV. CANON AINGER, M.A., LL.D.—FOUR LECTURES on "SOME LEADERS in the POETIC REVIVAL of 1780-1820—COWPER, BURNS, WORDSWORTH, SCOTT."—On THURSDAYS,
APRIL 29, MAY 6, 13, 20. Half-a-Guinea.

PROFESSOR DEWAR, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., M.R.I.—THREE LECTURES on "LIQUID AIR as an AGENT of RESEARCH."—
On THURSDAYS, MAY 27, JUNE 3, 10. Half-a-Guinea.

The REV. J. P. MAHAFFY, D.D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin.—THREE LECTURES on "THE GREEK THEATRE according to RECENT DISCOVERIES."—On SATURDAYS, MAY 1, 8, 15. Half-a-Guinea.

J. A. FULLER MAITLAND, Esq., M.A., F.S.A.—FOUR LEC-TURES on "MUSIC in ENGLAND during the REIGN of QUEEN VICTORIA (with Musical Illustrations).—On SATURDAYS, MAY
22, 29, JUNE 5, 12. Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guinea. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-Office Order.

Members may purchase not less than Three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will be resumed on APRIL 20th, at 8 p.m., when Professor J. J. THOMSON will give a DISCOURSE on "CATHODE RAYS." Succceeding Discourses will probably be given by "ANTHONY HOPE," Professor HAROLD DIXON, the Right Hon. LORD REID, Professor H. MOISSAN,
Mr. W. H. FREERE, Mr. WILLIAM CROOKER, and other gentlemen. To those Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.
Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge. Payment: First Year, Ten Guinea; afterwards, Five Guinea a year; or a composition of Sixty Guinea.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 1st, 1897.
Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the collegiate regulations.
The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £200 are awarded annually.
The Medical School contains large Lecture Rooms and well-appointed Laboratories for Practical Teaching, as well as Dissection
Rooms, Museum, Library, &c.
A large Recreation Ground has recently been purchased.
For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN or the COLLEGE, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

TO LITERARY MEN and others. Experienced
M.D. OFFERS HOME to RESIDENT PATIENT or
BOARDER. Good house in sheltered part of Harrogate. Hunting,
Golf, Fishing, &c. Special advantages for Photography, and exceptionally good Library. No children. Close to Baths and Wells.
References given and required.—Apply M.D. Literary Club, Prospect
Hotel, Harrogate.

STAMPS.—NATAL PROVISIONAL, rare obsolete; Negri Sembilan, Niger Coast, Persia, Peru, Saint Helena, Levant, 8s. 6d. angkor, Shanghai, Sirmoor, Gold Coast, Gibraltar, Jhalawar, Lucania, 40 genuine varieties, 1s. 1d.—SKIRTS, Upper Park Road, Kingston, Surrey.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss EZISS, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.
1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £80, two of
£50, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 15 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next to fill up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT, FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the HEAD
MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

MEMORY.—Prof. A. LOISETTE'S ASSIMI-
LATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM.
The last, most complete and perfect edition. Arranged for Self-
Instruction.

Mind-Wandering cured. Speaking without notes. Indispensable in preparing for examinations. Any book learned in one reading.
Cloth bound, with portrait and autograph. Price net 3 dols. 50 cents.
American, 10s. 6d. English. Post free.
Prospectus with opinions of EDUCATORS, SCIENTIFIC, PROFESSIONAL
and BUSINESS MEN all over the world, free.
Address, A. LOISETTE, 27, Fifth Avenue, New York; or
Not sold elsewhere. 200, REGENT STREET, LONDON

TYPE-WRITING (Remington).—Authors' MSS.
COPIED with accuracy and despatch.—"CYRUS," Willing's, 166, Piccadilly, W.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

£40 OFFERED for BURTON'S ARABIAN
NIGHTS, 16 vols.—Z., ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery
Lane, W.C.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bozman, Walker, Pace, Cabot, Reverley, Giles; also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—MOORE, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES.—Any good Plates, or
parcels, purchased for cash.—HENRY HIGHAM, Second-hand
Bookseller, 16, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

W. MULLER, 1, Star Yard, Carey Street, London.
W.C.—ACADEMY, a complete set or a run.—Fortnightly
Review, 1896 to 1874, cloth.

H. S. NICHOLS, LIMITED, 62A, Piccadilly, W.—
Dumas' Œuvres Complètes, 8 vols.—Pierre de la Brosse—Books on the Louvre, in French or English, prior to 1890—Any Books in French on Philip de Bel and on Charles V.—Samond, 1 vol., 8vo, illustrated, early copy.—Irving's (Joseph) History of Dumbar-ton-shire, 4to.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the
leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING.

A Series of Autotype Reproductions of Works by JOHN SELL
COTMAN, OLD CROME, STARK, LADBROOKE, BRIGHT,
MIDDLETON, DANIEL, LEMAN, LOUND, &c. Forty Auto-type Plates, mounted on grey boards, in portfolio. Price Ten Guinea net.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.

This important Series of over Four Hundred Permanent Carbon Reproductions of the chief Pictures in this magnificent collection includes representative selections from the Italian, Flemish, Dutch, Spanish, French, and English Schools. By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 18 by 15 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of TWELVE SHILLINGS EACH.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.,

SIR E. BURNE-JONES,

D. G. ROSSETTI.

An Extensive Selection of the Works of these Masters at prices ranging from Three Shillings and Sixpence to Three Guinea.

Full particulars of Autotype Permanent Reproductions from the Old and Modern Masters sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY.

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

THE WESTMINSTER BUDGET.

A USEFUL COMPANION FOR THE WRITING DESK.

"Everybody agrees with Lord Lytton's king-cardinal that 'the pen is mightier than the sword.' As in other matters in this our day, it goes without saying that there are pens and pens. We are not confined to the reed, the stick, or the goose-quill for writing purposes. The Americans have changed all that. To-day the greatest dunce in facts knows that our cousins across the sea have their almost perpetual ink-well pen within itself, known as the Fountain pen, and also that smaller arrangement for the pocket, the Stylograph. Both are progressive inventions. When these items for writers first came into service there were little faults in their construction that made the user cry out, 'Bother this pen!' But those little irregularities are almost, if not quite, past history. And in many points the Caw Pen Company has been the magician. Caw's Safety Fountain and Stylograph pens have, because of their special points, a repute beyond most of their neighbours on the market. One of the little benefits of the Caw pens is that the pen is always in a well of ink, so that it never gets dry, and from this it follows that there is always a supply of the necessary fluid when the pen is in use, and further the pen never gets choked up; but the great feature of these Caw Safety Pens is the hitherto non-existent advantage that the pen need not be carried in a horizontal position, but can lie in the waistcoat pocket, or be held upside down, without possibility of leakage of ink. Then the 'Hexagon' stylo-pen, as its name infers, is not made as round as a rolling-pin, but is a bevelled plinth, and from this cause it has the happy quality of keeping on the spot where you put it down; hence the pen does not skate off your desk as if it were marble. The cost of the pens varies, of course, according to size and finish. You can invest in Caw's pens in any amount from 5s. up to 30s., and any one of them is a boon in writing. But they will give you all details in regard to each and every one at your stationer's, at the stores, or at the village chemist's shop. The British depôt is 46, Holborn Viaduct. M.P.'s and busy business men, make a note of Caw's pens. There may be a mine of wealth buried in the suggestion."

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

TRUTH.

"The latest Yankee notion in lead pencils: the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

THE EVENING NEWS AND POST (London).

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the 'Blaisdell Paper Pencil.' Penknives, blackened thumbs, and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

BLACK AND WHITE.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

THE LADY.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the 'Blaisdell' variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

"Has the death-day of the cedar pencil arrived? It may be so. At any rate, the 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is an innovation. Your pencil is never pointless—surely a boon to all busy people, be they writers, printers' readers, or warehouse folks; or others, a part of whose business it is to set their mark on this or that item or article."

MORNING LEADER (London).

"The ordinary blacklead pencil in its wooden case if of good quality does not promise much scope to the inventive genius thirsting to discover a real improvement, but a clever American firm have a design in lead pencils that deserves popularity for its ingenuity. The lead is as usual, but round it is wound a thin strip of paper to the ordinary pencil thickness, and slightly notched at intervals, so that a small portion can be removed at a time as the lead wears down, producing an ever-sharpened pencil, always in working order. The new device is known as the 'Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Paper Pencil.'"

THE QUEEN.

"In these hurrying days any invention that tends to economise time and labour is a universal boon, and such a one is the 'Blaisdell' paper pencil, which is winning golden opinions in America, and is now coming into use on this side the Atlantic. What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening! and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated. The 'Blaisdell' pencils are made in various colours."

The BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is

Manufactured in 5 degrees of Graphite, viz.: HB, H, B, HH, BB, price 2d. each.
5 varieties of Colours: Blue, Red, Green, Yellow, Soft Black 3d. ..

Shape, size, and use exactly the same as a cedar pencil;

BUT,

It is covered with paper—not wood! Its point is always perfect—no chips, no dust. It does not waste in re-sharpening—the only wear is the wear of the lead in writing.

☛ SAVES TIME, TROUBLE, AND MONEY.

 If not found at any Stationers, a Set of 3 Black and 2 Coloured Pencils will be sent Post Free to any address in the United Kingdom for 1s., by THE BLAISDELL PENCIL COMPANY, Limited, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
31, Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

THE ACADEMY.

PRICE 3d.

Published every Friday morning, and obtainable through any Bookseller at home or abroad.

A PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENT of UNIQUE INTEREST GIVEN WITH EACH ISSUE

The following Portrait Supplements have already appeared:—

1896.		1897.
BEN JONSON	November 14	S. T. COLERIDGE	February 6
JOHN KEATS	" 21	CHARLES LAMB	" 13
SIR JOHN SUCKLING	" 28	MICHAEL DRAYTON	" 20
TOM HOOD	December 5	WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	" 27
THOMAS GRAY	" 12	SAMUEL PEPYS	March 6
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON	" 19	EDMUND WALLER	" 13
SIR WALTER SCOTT	" 26	WILKIE COLLINS	" 20
1897.		JOHN MILTON	" 27
SAMUEL RICHARDSON	January 2	WILLIAM COWPER	April 3
THOMAS DE QUINCEY	" 9	CHARLES DARWIN	" 10
LEIGH HUNT	" 16	To-day's Issue.
LORD MACAULAY	" 23	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.
ROBERT SOUTHEY	" 30

Just published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A WOMAN'S PART IN A REVOLUTION.

By Mrs. JOHN HAYS HAMMOND.

* * This Book consists mainly of Extracts from Mrs. Hammond's Diary, and refers to the Incidents of Dr. Jameson's Raid, and the subsequent Imprisonment, Trial, and Sentence of the Reform Committee, of which Mrs. Hammond's husband was a prominent member.

LONDON, NEW YORK, AND BOMBAY: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS	COUNTRY
from ONE GUINEA per annum.	SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.;
46, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

E P P S ' S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

ESTABLISHED 1861.

B I R K B E C K B A N K,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Now Ready, No. 23, price 3s.

NEW SERIES. MIND: APRIL, 1897

A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy.

Edited by G. F. STOUT.

With the Co-operation of Professor H. SPENCER, E. CAIRD, Dr. VERN, Dr. WARD, and Professor E. B. TITCHENER.

Contents.

1. SOME PROBLEMS OF CONCEPTION. L. T. HOUGHES.—2. HEGEL'S TREATMENT OF THE CATEGORIES OF THE SUBJECTIVE NOTION (I.). J. ELLIS McTAGGART.—3. THE FUNCTION OF RELIGIOUS EXPRESSION. HENRY RIVERS MARSHALL.—4. ON THE NATURE OF THE NOTION OF EXTERNALITY. HOWARD V. KNOT.—5. DISCUSSIONS. In what Sense, if any, do Past and Future Time Exist? B. BONAQUENT, S. H. HODGSON, G. E. MOORE.—6. CRITICAL NOTICES: Herbert Spencer's The Principles of Sociology (Vol. III). W. D. MORRISON; Wm. Caldwell's Schopenhauer's System in its Philosophical Significance, C. A. F. RHYTS DAVIDS; Jul. Bergmann's Die Grundprobleme der Logik, E. E. C. JONES; Gédéon Gory's L'immanence de la raison dans la Connaissance Sensible, S. H. MELLOR.—7. NEW BOOKS.—8. PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS.—9. NOTES: Parmenides, by H. ELLIS; The late Professor WALLACE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

THE CHEAP EDITIONS

OF

Mrs. Henry Wood's Novels.

Each complete in One Volume, crown 8vo. Sold separately, in red cloth, gilt lettered, price 2s. 6d.; or, in green cloth, price 2s.

SALE OVER TWO MILLION COPIES.

East Lynne.	480th Thousand.
The Channings.	160th Thousand.
Mrs. Halliburton's Troubles	120th Thousand.
The Shadow of Ashlydyat.	90th Thousand.
Lord Oakburn's Daughters.	90th Thousand.
Verner's Pride.	65th Thousand.
Roland Yorke.	115th Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow. First Series.	50th Thousand.
Mildred Arkell.	68th Thousand.
St. Martin's Eve.	68th Thousand.
Trevlyn Hold.	54th Thousand.
George Canterbury's Will.	65th Thousand.
The Red Court Farm.	60th Thousand.
Within the Maze.	85th Thousand.
Elster's Folly.	50th Thousand.
Lady Adelaide.	50th Thousand.
Oswald Gray.	52nd Thousand.
Johnny Ludlow. Second Series.	33rd Thousand.
Anne Hereford.	45th Thousand.
Dene Hollow.	45th Thousand.
Edina.	40th Thousand.
A Life's Secret.	48th Thousand.
The House of Halliwell	15th Thousand.
Pomeroy Abbey.	40th Thousand.
Court Netherleigh.	22nd Thousand.
The Master of Greylands.	30th Thousand.
The Story of Charles Strangé.	15th Thousand.
Ashley.	15th Thousand.
Bessy Rane.	To appear May, 1897.

THE FOLLOWING STORIES are now issued in red cloth ONLY, price 2s. 6d. each.

Adam Grainger.	Johnny Ludlow.
Johnny Ludlow.	Fifth Series.
Third Series.	Lady Grace.
Johnny Ludlow.	Orville College.
Fourth Series.	Parkwater.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In demy 8vo, strongly bound in buckram, and printed on good paper, with broad margin for Notes and Additions, £1 7s. 6d. net.

THE NEW (TENTH) VOLUME OF BOOK PRICES CURRENT.

Being a Record of the Prices at which Books have been Sold at Auction, with the Titles and Descriptions in Full, the Catalogue Numbers, and the Names of the Purchasers from December, 1895, to November, 1896.

"The new Volume contains, for the first time in the History of BOOK PRICES CURRENT, a Subject Index of an extensive character; and a large number of entries, which seem to stand in need of elucidation or explanation, have been carefully annotated, either Bibliographically or Historically, and collations of many of the books have also been given."

AN INDEX TO THE FIRST TEN VOLUMES OF BOOK PRICES CURRENT IS PREPARING. THE NAMES OF INTENDING SUBSCRIBERS SHOULD BE SENT TO THE PUBLISHERS WITHOUT DELAY.

"The record is extremely useful for buyers and collectors of books, and is a valuable index to current phases of book-collecting and to fluctuations in the market."—Saturday Review.

In crown 4to, cloth, gilt edges, price 6s.
HUGO OF AVENDON.

A Drama in Four Acts. By E. L. M.
"The work reads well, and should be enjoyed by those who patronise the drama without leaving their own firesides."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

JENNIFRED, and other VERSES.

By SEPTIMUS G. GREEN.
"The title poem is finely, even richly, coloured, and is suggestive of the romantic period in which its scenes are set. Mr. Green infuses considerable vigour into his lines."—Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE HUIA'S HOMELAND,

And other Verses. By ROSLYN.
"These poems are welcome in that they evince a genuine love of national beauty and a poetic perception of its effect. They are beautifully coloured, and bring home to the reader a sense of what constitutes the charm of New Zealand."—Dundee Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW,
LONDON, E.C.

Will be ready shortly.

WANDERINGS IN BURMA.

By GEORGE BIRD,
Of the Educational Department, Burma.

Super-royal 8vo, cloth, gilt designs and top edges, 400 pages, superior paper, nearly 100 beautiful illustrations and Maps, 21s. net.

The above work, which is dedicated by special permission to His Excellency the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, K.P., treats exhaustively of the History, Administration, Geography, Climate, Language, People, Religion, Commerce, Places of Interest, Animals, and Sport in Burma. The History dates from the first occupation by the East India Company to the present day; its Administration by the Burmese, and latterly under British rule, being given in full.

The reader is conducted throughout the length and breadth of the Province, and the Old Cities, Villages, Pagodas, Monasteries, and other places of note are dealt with in a deeply interesting manner.

The author having had an experience of twenty years residence and study of the country and its inhabitants, and having had every facility afforded him in the compilation of statistics, has been able to produce a thoroughly authentic work in every detail.

To be had of any Bookseller.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 380.—APRIL, 1897.—8vo, price 6s.

- I. A GREAT HISTORIAN.
- II. NOVELS of the ITALIAN RENAISSANCE.
- III. THE EXODUS of PICTURES from ENGLAND.
- IV. OLD STON and MODERN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
- V. THE CRISIS in AMERICAN AFFAIRS.
- VI. JOWETT.
- VII. THE SCULPTURED TOMBS of HELLAS.
- VIII. UN ROYAUME ANGLO-CORSE.
- IX. PAINTERS BEHIND the SCENES.
- X. NATIONAL DEFENCE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

"The best book on the subject."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

A NARRATIVE of the BOER WAR.
By T. F. CARTER. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Sheffield Telegraph.—"This great work is history, exhaustive, impartial, and realistic."

The African Critic.—"The book is generally recognised as a standard work on the subject."

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE, NORFOLK
STREET, STRAND.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL.

THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

By the Author of "Black Diamonds," "Pretty Michal,"
"Midst the Wild Carpathians."

With Engraved Portrait of Author, 6s. [Fifth Edition.]

"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"In its panoramic width of outlook, its inexhaustible fertility of invention and barbaric splendour of colouring, Maurus Jókai's great novel challenges comparison with Tolstoi's 'War and Peace.' There is a succession of brilliant tableaux. To read this remarkable book is like witnessing a magnificent Oriental pageant. It is of enthralling interest and takes rank with the great novels of the century."—Spectator.
"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle.
Mr. Courtney says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigious variety he reminds one of the older Dumas."

HIS DOUBLE SELF;

Or, 'he Transformation of Keith Winstanley.

By E. CURTIS,

Author of "Dr. Malochi," "Queen or Bondwoman," "Lamé the Witch," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

NEW "GREENBACK" NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

"A story which can be enjoyed by every lover of wholesome fiction. The book is well put together and is a welcome relief from the novels of the hysterical school of writers."—Publishers' Circular.

THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN.

By MARGARET MOULE.

Author of "Wingrove's Ways," "Dick's Wife,"
"Miss Maidment," &c.

"The story is very cleverly told. The manner in which the case came to pass is very finely worked out by the gifted authoress. The characters are so splendidly presented as to become very real persons to the reader. It has been so with all this lady's books, but her best qualities and gifts as a writer are more fully shown in this, her latest work."—Western Daily Mercury.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and of the Booksellers.

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, LTD.

THE UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE and

FREE REVIEW: a Monthly Magazine. Edited by
"DEMOCRITUS."

CONTENTS OF THE APRIL NUMBER: The Case of Dr. Romanes—Cardinal Manning the Scientific Tourgenier—The Blasphemy Laws—Roden Noel—The Inertia of the English Universities—The Bible and the Child—The Whole Duty of Woman—Martin Turner—The Intellectual Movement in France.

PSEUDO-PHILOSOPHY at the END of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By HUGH

MORTIMER CECIL. 1. AN IRRATIONALIST TWO

(KIDD, DAWKINSON, BALFOUR).
A vigorous Refutation of the Works of the Three Irrationalists.

THE SAXON and the CELT. By

JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

CONTENTS: I. The Question of Race. 1. The Present Irish Trouble. 2. English and Irish. 3. French and Germans. 4. The Problem of Race Origins. 5. The Naming of Celts, Gauls and Teutons. 6. "Celtic" and "Teutonic" History. 7. The Ethic of Race Instinct. II. The Lessons of Irish History. 1. The Causation of the Past. 2. The Verdict of Europe. III. Hill Burton on the Scottish Celts. IV. J. R. Green on Celts and Teutons. V. The Duke of Argyll on Irish History. VI. Mr. Goldwin Smith's Polemic. VII. Mr. Froude on Ireland. VIII. Mr. Balfour on Irish Civilisation. Epilogue: A Programme for Ireland.

Will be published in April.—2s. 6d. net.

THE BLIGHT of RESPECTABILITY:

an Anatomy of the Disease and a Theory of Curative Treatment. By GEOFFREY MORTIMER.

CONTENTS: 1. What is Respectability? 2. The Pathology of the Disease. 3. Ladies and Gentlemen. 4. Specific Symptoms of the Malady in Women. 5. Respectability and Morals. 6. Cultured Gentility. 7. Plutocracy. 8. Villainy. 9. The Tyranny of Respectability. 10. Respectable Civilisation and After. 11. Conclusion.

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, LIMITED,
16, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
James Thomson	417
Through Unknown African Countries	417
Celtic Glamour	418
The Conquest of the Punjab	419
"An Irrationalist Trio" and their Critic	420
Austria, 1740-1750	420
Evolution and Dogma	421
The Making of France	421
A Book for Fishermen	422
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	423
FICTION:
False Dawn—The Faithful City—Mr. Blake of Newmarket—Love for a Key—The Episode of Alethea—Under Shadow of the Mission	425
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	426
New Books Received	427
NOTES AND NEWS	427
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XXIII., TENNYSON	428
A LONDON LANE	429
BOOKS OF YESTERDAY AND TO-MORROW	430
THE BOOK MARKET	431
ART	432
DRAMA	433
MUSIC	434
SCIENCE	434
CORRESPONDENCE	435
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	435

REVIEWS.

JAMES THOMSON.

The Poetical Works of James Thomson. With Memoir and Critical Appendices by the Rev. D. C. Tovey, M.A. (George Bell & Sons.)

WHAT are the chances of the poet as against the practical man—the politician, for instance—in the game of Fame? The politician sees his name daily in the papers, until even he is a little weary of seeing it there. The poet's name appears so rarely that the sight of it has a certain thrill for its owner. But time is all on the side of the poet. The politician's name is barely given a decent burial; it makes haste to its oblivion. Where be the Chancellors of the Exchequer of yester year? The poet, on the contrary, about whom in his life people speak shyly, has his name shouted from the housetop as soon as he is out of earshot. So great, indeed, is the gratitude of reading beings that a very little poet, such as the author of "The Seasons," is familiarly known by name to the English-speaking race nearly two centuries after his birth; and now a new edition of his works has been issued with a memoir that does not spare a detail, and with notes—"critical appendices" they are called—that indicate a laboured study of Thomson's text, on the part of so learned an editor as Mr. Tovey.

Yet Thomson, all the time, is a poet only by courtesy—you could not find in all his formal numbers one spark of the divine fire. Pope may have helped Thomson with "The Seasons," as Mr. Tovey thinks Warton right in saying; but between Pope and Thomson there is a vast dividing space of technical accomplishment. Between Thomson and Wordsworth, or any other of the poetical poets, there is more than space, there is an impassable gulf. Yet Mr. Tovey says "we can trace his influence, we think, in Keats; we can trace it also in Coleridge. Again, between Wordsworth and Thomson we naturally seek affinities." Coleridge, no doubt, wrote many unreal and pretentious things about nature—"The Hymn before Sunrise" we are bold to class among them: and these we can concede—a concession it is—to anybody to bracket with "The Seasons." The essential Coleridge is the only Coleridge that the world of letters cares to keep; and there we must say to Thomson's editor, "Hands off." Mr. Tovey thinks it worth while to suggest also a resemblance of "essential thought" between Keats' Grecian Urn Ode and Thomson's

"On the marble tomb
The well-dissembled mourner stooping stands
For ever silent and for ever sad."

The "essence" of the thing does not lie in the thought at all—the old and obvious thought of the permanent expression of emotion in sculpture. It is a matter of treatment; and Mr. Tovey himself does not fail to distinguish the essential difference there. As for Wordsworth (who, by the way, preferred "The Castle of Indolence" to "The Seasons," a preference we share), the association of Thomson's name with his has become a commonplace; and, like most commonplaces, it stands to be revised. Thomson is the link, we are constantly assured, between Milton and Wordsworth, as an observer and an interpreter of nature. A little feeling of heart-freshness in the Spring we may, by searching, find in him—not so much in "The Seasons" as in "A Hymn," where the phrase, "wide flush the fields," and the line—

"And every sense and every heart is joy," just seem to be a degree less distant and conventional than was usual with the eighteenth century Muse. But here, again, the thought is of ancient days; it is the presentment that is the essence; and three of the Spring lines in "The Intimations of Immortality" are worth many times more than all the six thousand or so lines of "The Seasons," however indefinitely multiplied. The difference is, in truth, of kind and not of degree; and these comparisons between things which have no relativity make us feel like "young Oeladon and his Amelia," when they "looked unutterable things"—the only phrase by which Thomson is likely to be spontaneously remembered. And this suggests to us that Mr. Tovey's elaboration has failed him for once—he has not coupled Thomson with Mr. Gladstone, who, of course, reproduced this "essential thought" in his "unspeakable Turk."

We do not forget that the Thomson-Wordsworth superstition had an illustrious origin—it began in Wordsworth's own saying that "from Milton to Thomson no poet had added to English literature a new image drawn from Nature." That is one of the generous obiter dicta great poets have made from time to time for the bewilderment of the unwary. Dr. Johnson, it is true, took Thomson seriously, or wrote as though he did; but we remember that when he read "The Seasons" aloud to his friend Shiels, and extorted the listener's praise, he added, "Well, sir, I have omitted every other line." He was angry, for all that, when Lyttelton, after the poet's death, abbreviated his poem on Liberty before publishing it—such mutilations, Dr. Johnson said, tended "to destroy the confidence of society and to confound the characters of authors!" Horace Walpole uttered his contempt for Thomson straight out; but Boswell was politic, as became him; and his own personal judgment is, no doubt, shrewdly pitted against Johnson's more favourable opinion in the phrase: "His 'Seasons' are indeed full of elegant and pious sentiments; but a rank soil, nay, a dunghill, will produce beautiful flowers." For and against Thomson, in seasons and out, the vain tale of opinions would take too long in the telling. But Cowper it was who said that Thomson's "lasting fame" proved him a "true poet." He would be a yet truer poet to-day, on that reasoning, for his "fame" is still lasting. His "Rule Britannia" has a place in anthologies even now; he is the bard in popular possession of the name he bears (a name that Præd hated), although stories are told of confusion in circulating libraries and book shops between the poet of "The Seasons" and the poet of "The City of Dreadful Night"—that later James Thomson who, conscious of the similarity of his name to his predecessor's, added stanzas to the "Castle of Indolence." The secret of this sustained name—we distinguish name from fame—is easily guessed. The common mention of Milton and Wordsworth in Thomson's company supports his superfluous immortality. Poet or no poet, he is mixed up with poets, and is a part of poetical history.

And the added irony of this careful preservation of a name that stands for little or nothing is this—that whereas Thomson's naturalism was, in his own time, sufficiently marked to set his reputation going, we, with all the great poets of Nature between him and us, read him now, if we read him at all, for the very opposite quality—for artificiality. We tolerate him for his last-centuryiness. We have a certain curiosity in observing an observation of Nature which was rewarded no more intimately than by a knowledge of the time-sequence of snowdrop, crocus, primrose, and "violet darkly blue." We like to hear him speak of young birds as "the featured youth"; of his women readers as "the British fair"; of Sir Thomas More as having withstood "the brutal tyrant's useful rage." Such phrases speak to us from another world than ours, from a world which had taste that was not touched with emotion; from a world, in short, which lacked the one thing needful for poetical life—inspiration.

EAST AFRICAN EXPLORATION.

Through Unknown African Countries. The First Expedition from Somaliland to Lake Lamu. By A. Donaldson Smith. (Edward Arnold.)

SINCE its discovery by Count Teleki in 1887 Lake Rudolf has been visited by more than one traveller from the south. But all attempts to reach it from the east had ended in failure and even disaster, until the American sportsman, Dr. Donaldson Smith, undertook to force the way three years ago. He was first attracted to this region by the big game, which still abound in many parts of East Africa, and it was during a sporting excursion to Somaliland in 1893 that he conceived the idea of combining pleasure with useful work by leading an expedition across the little-known tract of country lying between the Shabeli river and Lake Rudolf. Such an enterprise was not unreasonably regarded at the time as beset with almost insurmountable obstacles, due partly to the arid and rugged nature of the land and partly to the hostility of the natives, justly incensed against all white intruders by the high-handed doings of his Italian fore-runners, Capt. Böttogo and Prince Ruspoli. Even more serious was the determined opposition of King Menelek, of Abyssinia, who is at present engaged in reducing all the southern parts of Gallaland, and who for ulterior political purposes even claims, with the connivance of France and Russia, the whole region stretching thence south to Mombasa as the natural "Hinterland" of his empire.

Undismayed by these difficulties and by the well-meant warnings of his friends in England, Dr. Smith, having first qualified himself for exploring work by a course of instructions under Mr. John Coles, of the Royal Geographical Society, entered on the scheme with such zest that he was able to start from Berbera on July 1, 1894, at the head of a fairly well-equipped caravan, comprising two other whites—his fellow-sportsman and countryman, Mr. F. Gillett, and the London taxidermist, Mr. Edward Dodson—and an escort of some eighty Somali natives. The main results of the journey were communicated to the Geographical Society by the author soon after his return to England, and appeared in the Journal of the Society for August and September, 1896. But the present volume not only presents those results in a more accessible form, but also appeals to a much wider class of readers. The numerous geological, botanical, and zoological specimens, now deposited in the London and Philadelphia Museums, and here described by specialists in a series of valuable appendices, will be thankfully received by all students of nature. Sportsmen will eagerly follow the many thrilling adventures with wild beasts, and other incidents of the chase, which enliven almost every page. Statesmen will find much food for thoughtful reflection in the references to the political situation in Abyssinia and the surrounding lands, written with an eye to the serious events now pending in the Nile Valley. Geographers and explorers will receive as a revelation the vivid descriptions of many new lands, and their salient physical features, which abound in this instructive work. Allusion can be made here only to the curious Muhammadan settlement of Sheikh Hasein amid the Galla populations south-west of Harar; to the remarkable "Wyndlawn Caves" in the same district, where the underground current of the Shabeli has carved the limestone rocks into the fantastic forms of colonnades and temples; to the romantic scenery of the Tertala and Marsabit uplands, contrasting with the softer charms of the newly discovered Lake Abaya, where "we seemed to be in an artificial park, from the way in which the trees and bushes were scattered over a lovely grassy plain sloping toward the water. Far off in the distance, as our eyes passed across the lake, we could make out the great rugged mountains, forming countless dark little bays as they cut almost vertically into the water."

But here the disinterested reader will be disappointed, while intending explorers may perhaps secretly rejoice to find that Dr. Smith has just missed the chance of clearing up the mystery of the Omo river, one of the few hydrographic problems that still await solution in the African continent. After effecting a junction with Teleki's route at Lake Stefanie, thus completing the circuit of itineraries which sweep round from the Gulf of Aden through the "Great Rift Valley" to the Indian Ocean below the equator, he passed on to the north end of Lake Rudolf, and under great difficulties ascended the Niánam, its northern affluent, for a distance of 100 miles. Hitherto geographers had generally supposed this river to be the lower course of the Omo, which during the floods sends a large volume from the Kaffa highlands southwards in the direction of the lake. But Dr. Smith, finding it only forty yards wide at the highest point reached by him, thinks it must be a different stream, and consequently infers that "the river Omo must flow into the Ganana or Jub"—that is, to the Indian Ocean. It should, however, be noted that the survey was made at low water in the dry summer season, and had it been carried a little farther north our explorer might have settled the point, and also perhaps connected his route with Jules Borelli's farthest south.

Ethnologists will be more deeply interested in the results of this memorable expedition even than naturalists or geographers. As was already partly known by report, the region traversed was found to be mainly occupied by tribes belonging in the east to the Somal, and in the west to the Galla branch of the Hamitic family. But by the abundant details here supplied we are now enabled almost to complete the ethnographic map of the continent. For a considerable distance the route lay well within Somal territory. The Somali people, however, are wrongly described as a blend of Arab and Negro elements, while the Habr-Awal, Habr-Girhagis, and Habr-Toljala, given as "their three great divisions" (p. 15), are really only sub-groups of the Ishak branch of the Hasiya division. In the Galla domain by far the most important people are the Borán, of whom much had previously been heard, but who were now found to constitute a powerful and extensive state under King Abofilato, a potentate whose sway appears to extend across the whole region from the Middle Juba westwards nearly to the Tertala range east of Lake Stefanie. The Borán are of a light copper colour, closely resembling the Abyssinians in "their faces, broad foreheads, and generally intelligent cast of features, as well as in their height and good muscular development." They are likely to acquire some prominence in the near future—at least, should King Menelek persist in his efforts to enlarge the bounds of the Abyssinian empire to the utmost limits of Gallaland.

Other allied peoples visited and described by Dr. Smith were the Gere Gallas, the Konsos, Amaras, Jeratus, Arbores, and others of undoubted Galla stock. Then followed in the lacustrine district some interesting groups apparently intermediate between Gallas and the more remotely-allied Masai nomads. Such were the "Reshiats," first visited by Teleki, but whose true name we now learn is Rusia, and the more powerful Rendile, already described by Dr. Smith's fellow-countryman, Mr. Astor Chanler. But distinct from all these were the Dume of the Amar range, "probably the most interesting tribe in Africa." To some extent this is true, for the Dume were found to be "a race of pygmies," now for the first time identified with the Doko, who were already heard of by Harris in the thirties, and some of whom were actually seen in 1843 by M. Antoine d'Abbadie, whose recent death every naturalist deploras. We now learn from Dr. Smith that "doko" is not the name of any particular tribe, but a term of contempt applied by the surrounding populations to these inferior peoples. They cannot, however, be correctly spoken of as "pygmies," and Dr. Smith himself tells us that they average about five feet, while M. d'Abbadie states that "ce ne sont nullement des pygmées" (Bul. de le Soc. de Geogr. xix., p. 440). He adds that they hold a middle position between the Ethiopians [Hamites] and the true Negroes, and this description is fully confirmed by our explorer, as well as by the photograph of a Dume group here reproduced. Thus is at last cleared up the mystery which has hung round the "Doko" of Gallaland for the last half century.

The general equipment of this volume is creditable to the Harvard University Press; but it is too heavy for comfortable use, weighing nearly two and a half pounds, and it is, moreover, disfigured by some glaring misprints, such as "Lake Lamu" for Lake Rudolf on the title-page itself; "Curague" for Gurague more than once; Merka and Modisha [Magadosho] "on the Gulf of Aden" (p. 154) instead of the Indian Ocean; "September" for December (p. 117), and "July" for January (p. 126). Owing to the rare mention of the year, a too common defect of books of travel, these erroneous dates are likely to give some trouble to the reader desirous of following the course of events in their chronological sequence. There is a series of excellent sectional maps, and one general sketch map, all re-issues of those accompanying the author's papers in the Geographical Journal. The index is tolerably full.

CELTIC GLAMOUR.

Spiritual Tales; Barbaric Tales; Tragic Romances. Three volumes by Fiona Macleod. (Patrick Geddes & Colleagues.)

THE Celtic Movement we have always with us; "and yet it moves," as Galileo said. This reissue of Miss Fiona Macleod's shorter tales comes to remind us of the fact. It has been moving for several years; and what has come out of it all? It can hardly be said to have produced Mr. W. B. Yeats, for the simple reason that Mr. Yeats assisted to produce it. Yet, if we concede it that credit, then it has produced one man of genius. It has also produced Miss Fiona Macleod, and the dreaded name of "Gaelic glamour." Some years ago, when the wrongs of the "distressful country" were much to the front, and patriots were contending that Ireland was capable of making everything herself, from lace to constitutions, a number of Irish gentlemen met in England (if we remember rightly), and pointed out that Ireland wanted a literature, and resolved that a literature Ireland must have, and they were the boys to make her one. (These things are written in the spirit, not according to the letter which killeth.) So they said: "Let there be a Celtic Movement"; and the Celtic Movement was. And they made a new Celtic literature; and told the mere Saxon the right word to use about it, which the mere Saxon might otherwise never have stumbled upon: and that word was "Celtic magic." Of late, alliterative reviewers have altered it to "Gaelic glamour," which totally excludes the Cymry—let gallant little Wales look to it. Scotland has fallen into line with the movement, and even—in the person of Miss Macleod—drawn to the front. The founders of the movement have succeeded. They have made a new national literature, which is widely read—in England. Whenever a new volume belonging to the movement comes out, the mere Saxon says, "Gaelic glamour," and is satisfied that he knows his lesson. It is the thing which you are supposed to say about Miss Macleod. And since we are really curious as to the meaning of the mystic phrase, we rejoice at the opportunity of studying it given us by these three comprehensive volumes, which include all the short stories previously published in The Sin-Eater and The Washer of the Ford, with a handful of new ones in addition.

Miss Fiona Macleod constantly represents her stories as gathered from the Highland peasantry; but how far this is a dramatic device does not appear. Yet it is important, for much depends on how far we are to allow her the merit of invention. If we were to take these tales as having been "all carved out of the carver's brain," then we must needs give her the praise of an invention very fertile and very new. But the general supposition of the Saxon reader is, that the disciples of the new movement take their stories ready-made from old sources, as Tennyson took his; and that therefore we have not to concern ourselves with anything but the execution. This is also the conclusion to which the internal evidence of Miss Macleod's stories seems to point. The fables have usually the air of being adapted from ancient sources; and what is novel, what is strange, what is attractive in them belongs to those ancient founts. The mere fairy-tale-like interest of the fable accounts for much of Miss Macleod's popularity; and yet more is to be explained by the local colouring of the stories. The public loves local colour for its own sake, and Miss Macleod lays it on with a full hand. Everything that is quaint, strange, and incongruous in the legends, the customs, or manner of speech, she emphasises in crowded detail. Such phrases as—"It is for the knowing," "It is for the laughter," are insistently introduced. They are quaint at first, then they weary; but the many are never weary with such things. The incongruous mixture of paganism and Christianity belonging to the old legends is a device for startling readers of which she makes full use. God sits in "the great blue mainland of Heaven," where "a river of ale poureth ever," as if he were Odin. Celts and Celtic speech are brought into juxtaposition with Bethlehem and the Nativity. These things belong doubtless to the legends, and Miss Macleod makes the most of their naïf strangeness. But in the telling of her stories there is much to win a popularity less justifiable. It is full of a vague sentimentality, an effusive pictorialness. The style is intended to be poetical, in the Ossianic manner. And accordingly it is crowded with imagery which just falls short of being striking or fine; imagery which would not be quite good enough for poetry, and is therefore thought good enough for prose.

Yet there are exceptions. Miss Macleod really has that touch of fairy-fancy which is so strong in Mr. W. B. Yeats; and in The Harping of Cravethen there is a charming little passage of elfin fantasy. Again, The Melancholy of Ulad is a subtle allegory beautifully told, an allegory we should guess to be her own; and often her allegorical passages have real intuition, in spite of the sins against taste in the telling. Not always is her imagery without power or originality. But the legends she writes of lean towards the melodramatic in their passion, and her style too readily partakes of that leaning. Men "gloom"; their great black eyes flame under their cloudy mass of hair; &c. We will not deny this writer her foremost place among the writers of the Celtic Movement. But it is a vicious school, and her powers are corrupted by it. We have tired of the Wardour-street ballad; are we likely to embrace Wardour-street runes and sagas? The true poetic genius of Mr. Yeats is hampered by it; nor can we think that Miss Fiona Macleod will secure for this artificial form more than a passing vogue.

THE CONQUEST OF THE PUNJAB.

The Sikhs and the Sikh Wars; the Rise, Conquest, and Annexation of the Punjab State. By Gen. Sir Charles Gough, V.C., G.C.B.; and Arthur D. Innes, M.A. (Innes & Co.)

THIS history is a gallant attempt to vindicate the military wisdom of Lord Gough, the superseded conqueror of the Punjab. In effect, however, it does little to discredit the popular verdict which always accepted Lord Gough as a fine fighting officer, though denying him those higher qualities which go to make the general who can achieve success with the utmost economy of his soldiers' lives. The splendid courage of the man, his dogged determination under difficulties, and his single-minded devotion to duty stand out in high relief in these pages; but so also does his way of blundering into a massacre, and then massacring his way out of a blunder.

Indeed, these two campaigns which broke the Sikh power and ended in the annexation of the old Lahore State were decided by sheer hard fighting without much help from strategy. Down to the close of the day that saw the horrible slaughter at Chillianwalla, Lord Gough on every occasion found himself outmatched on the field by an enemy vastly superior in numbers, holding entrenched positions, and commanding heavier artillery. The Sikh armies were disciplined after European methods, and had practically the same weapons as the British; and the conditions under which fighting took place on the memorable fields of Aliwal, Ferozeshah, Sobraon, and Chillianwalla made a heavy loss to the attacking force inevitable. It was only after the orders for his recall had gone out that Lord Gough was able at the decisive battle of Gujerat to bring up sufficient guns to place himself on an equality with the foe in this important arm.

The authors, however, show successfully that for the tactics which preceded the first battle of Ferozeshah Lord Gough cannot be held responsible. The situation was probably without a parallel in Indian history. Sir Hugh Gough, as he then was, was Commander-in-Chief, but serving under him in the field was the Governor-General Sir Henry Hardinge, himself an experienced soldier.

"An experienced military officer, he had a very strong opinion as to the military necessities of the position which was in flat contradiction to that of his Commander-in-Chief, whose view was equally strong. Sir Hugh Gough could not surrender his judgment in favour of that of his subordinate in the field; Sir Henry could not escape his own sense of responsibility. Taking this view, there was only one course open—as Governor-General he must override the Commander-in-Chief on the very field of battle and in the presence of the enemy."

It is impossible, however, not to feel that a stronger man would have found means of preventing this extraordinary complication from arising, and have stipulated either for the absence of the Governor-General, or at least that there should be an undivided responsibility in the face of the foe. Lord Gough certainly must be acquitted of all blame for the fact that the battle was fought at an hour which made a decisive victory impossible; but it is not certain that if he had had his own way, and attacked earlier with a smaller force, the result would not have been a great disaster.

The plans and maps are admirably drawn, and enable the reader to understand the military operations with tolerable ease; but the descriptions of the campaigns are too crowded with details for great clearness. For instance, it is important to know the strength and composition of the opposing forces, and on the British side it is interesting to know the proportions of European and native troops. Our authors go much farther than this, and think it necessary to give the names and strength of each regiment engaged. In the same way, not content with stating the numbers of the killed and wounded, they again subdivide these among the various regiments, so that its due credit shall be given to each. This microscopic treatment of war, however well fitted for a regimental record, is out of place in a general history, and tends to obscure the broad features of the campaign.

For the sketch of the rise of the Sikh power which precedes the account of Lord Gough's share in its overthrow, we have nothing but praise. It is a clear, concise, and accurate history of a people who for generations were a barrier against the northern Mohammedans, who have fought pitched battles with British troops on even terms, and since have served their conquerors with a faithfulness which has stood every trial. The fact that essentially the Sikhs are a religious community rather than a nation is never forgotten. The gradual building up of a political State by the genius of Ranjit Singh, and the founding of the kingdom of Lahore, is described with much vividness; and though the comparison with the military Commonwealth in England under Oliver Cromwell will not bear very close scrutiny, it is quite sufficiently accurate to convey a general idea of the secret of the strength of that semi-sacred force, the army of the Khalsa. The separateness of the Sikhs among the peoples of India, their special abhorrence of Mohammedanism, as well as their special peculiarities—such as strict abstinence from tobacco and refusal ever to allow their hair to be cut—are all discussed with intelligent sympathy; and assuredly no words of ours ought to be needed to interest English readers in the story of a people which to-day not in India only, but also in the Straits Settlements and in Equatorial Africa, supplies men who, whether as soldiers or police, are among the most trusted and most efficient of the representatives of the authority of the Queen.

"AN IRRATIONALIST TRIO" AND THEIR CRITIC.

Pseudo-Philosophy at the End of the Nineteenth Century: 1. An Irrationalist Trio: Kidd—Drummond—Balfour. By Hugh Mortimer Cecil. (London: University Press.)

In the course of the last five years three books, in the day of their coming forth, have made some sensation among that portion of the public which permits itself to be interested in the questions at issue between the champions of orthodoxy and the exponents of the theory inadequately named naturalism. These are Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution, the late Prof. Drummond's Ascent of Man, and Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief. This the three have in common: that they are attempts at conciliation between religion, understood in its most elemental sense, and the proved facts of scientific research, and that each of them makes an endeavour to assimilate those facts, and to assign them a convenient niche in the religious categories. Mr. Hugh Mortimer Cecil will have none of this legerdemain;

the flank of the rationalist position shall not be so turned if his vigilance can frustrate the manoeuvre; and with a pen steeped in sulphuric acid he has set out to confute these writers one by one. And in spite of a vitriolic tendency unduly to condemn the intellectual powers of those who find themselves in the opposite camp, notwithstanding also a dangerous facility in attributing to them motives of an unworthy nature, he is one who must be reckoned with as a clear thinker, a cogent reasoner, a lucid and accomplished writer.

One of Mr. Kidd's main theses was to this effect: that the possession of reason is inconsistent with the will to submit to the conditions imposed on man as a member of society, that is, of a greater organism; the conclusion being that the progress to which the process of natural selection tends would have concluded in the day when the reasoning powers were perfected, but for a factor above and beyond reason—that is to say, the religious instinct. Of this contention Mr. Cecil disposes very effectually:

"Mr. Kidd conceives 'natural selection' to be a 'force' acting upon man against his own interests. In reality, however, the strife of evolution is not between man and natural selection, but between men themselves, and natural selection is only the name for the result of this conflict."

Against Prof. Drummond's workshop-and-machine argument Mr. Cecil effectually retorts:

"There is no value in his argument that we ought to seek the meaning of evolution in its end, not in its beginning—in man, not in the atom—for the reason that we do not know the end of evolution yet; and for the reason that while we are external to the atom we are not external to ourselves, and so cannot avoid the egoistic fallacy of interpreting the universe in terms of ourselves."

This is a perfectly true and just comment, for "it appeareth not what we shall be," as Mr. Drummond might have been expected to remember. Also Mr. Cecil points out once more that the Scots professor was mistaken in supposing himself to be the first to observe the importance of the altruistic principle in biology.

Coming to the third essay we have somewhat against the writer—that he attempts to prejudice his readers against the author of Foundations of Belief, by suggesting a suspicion as to his sincerity; and that in so futile a fashion as to throw doubt upon his possessing the coolness and patience requisite for profitable controversy. At a certain Church Congress Mr. Balfour read a paper on the "Religion of Humanity," in the course of which he argued that Christianity holds out a more consoling hope; that it is, therefore, not hastily to be thrust aside in favour of any such substitute as Comte conceived. With this Mr. Cecil would have us compare the conclusion of the Fragment on Progress, the rectorial address to Glasgow University, in which Mr. Balfour said:

"It is easy, no doubt, to find in the clouds which obscure our path what shapes we please; to see in them the promise of some millennial paradise, or the threat of endless and unmeaning travel through waste and perilous places. But in such visions the wise men will place but little confidence."

There is, in fact, no inconsistency between these passages, as will be evident to any one attentively reading them with their context. In both Mr. Balfour draws a dingy picture of the outlook for the human race; and it is in rosy visions of this corporate future that in the rectorial address he declines to place confidence. In the paper before the Church Congress he goes one step further, and from the hopelessness of the racial outlook deduces an argument wherewith to buttress the Christian hope of a personal immortality.

It is impossible in the space at our disposal to consider at large Mr. Cecil's criticism of Foundations of Belief. It is a very serious and capable attack, which will have to be reckoned with. Especially damaging is the criticism of Mr. Balfour's theory of authority. That argument can be employed with effect only by one religious body, and it is not that body of which Mr. Balfour is a member. And here we venture to suggest to Mr. Cecil that it would be well were he to find out, before the issue of a second edition, the meaning of the Roman Catholic dogma of the Immaculate Conception, to which he more than once alludes: he appears to be under the impression that the phrase is equivalent to parthenogenesis.

AUSTRIA, 1740-1790.

"FOREIGN STATESMEN" SERIES. — Maria Theresa. By Rev. J. Franck Bright, D.D.

Joseph II. By the same Author. (Macmillan & Co.)

In the present dearth of English historians of any considerable fame it is satisfactory to be able to point to the really useful work done by such a series as Messrs. Macmillan's "Foreign Statesmen." Dr. Franck Bright's brilliant monographs on Maria Theresa, the great Austrian stateswoman of the eighteenth century, and her clever and ambitious son, the Emperor Joseph II., are the latest contributions to this series, and they are altogether admirable. Dr. Bright has done wisely in treating the two reigns as practically inseparable, and in not attempting to give more than a titular distinction to the two volumes, the first of which ends with the death of Maria Theresa's husband, the Emperor Francis, and the adoption of Joseph as co-regent with his mother. For fifteen years Joseph was associated with the Empress in the government, and to dissociate her political action from the character and views of her son would be to give an entirely inadequate estimate of this critical period; while Joseph's sole rule, after his mother's death, was but the working-out of the ideas of the joint régime. A further unity is caused by the predominant influence of the great Chancellor Kaunitz during the two reigns, making them one single episode in the history of Europe.

In the rise and fall of monarchies there is no more interesting, and in many ways pathetic, story than that of this period of Austrian development, on the eve of the French Revolution, and the European changes consequent on it. The systems of the Middle Ages had broken up, leaving the monarchical principle supreme by force in Europe, but unbased on any popular sanction. Austria was an unwieldy Empire, with scattered provinces; and the death of Charles VI. without male heirs left it to that scramble among jealous Powers which his famous Act, the Pragmatic Sanction, settling the succession on his daughter, Maria Theresa, only managed to convert into the War of Succession. The young girl who had to fight for her throne was, in truth, a noble and enlightened woman, who, under happier auspices, might have shown the highest possibilities of a benevolent despotism. But the irony of events compelled her to defend her territory by arms and intrigues against Frederick the Great, the greatest soldier of the age, and to shift from one system of alliances to another, in order to counteract the advance of Prussia and the diplomacy of Russia, England, and France. Maria Theresa is essentially a finer and more interesting character than her son. Joseph, with all his acute qualities, and a liberalism far beyond his age, was essentially a doctrinaire, arrogant when thwarted, fascinating when he chose, but with none of that grand temperament which makes Maria Theresa so extraordinary a figure among the statesmen and sovereigns of her time.

Dr. Bright's picture of Kaunitz, the diplomatic genius of this period, is one which gives special value to these two volumes. They may be commended on this account as a most stimulating and suggestive sketch to competitors for the Oxford Arnold Essay in 1898, for which this subject is set. Dr. Bright's chapters on the change of alliances in 1756, by which Kaunitz at last fulfilled his dream of an entente with France, instead of the old Austrian policy of alliance with the Maritime Powers, put the whole matter with admirable fairness and brevity. It was the irony of Austria's fate that the schemes of Kaunitz unfortunately neglected, as they were bound to neglect, the historical fact that the rivalry of England and France, and not the supremacy of Austria, was then the real governing force in the history of nations. But none the less, there has never been a greater diplomatic coup than the accomplishment of the Treaty of Versailles by Kaunitz. The character of the man, too, is very ably delineated. Conceited, faddy, pedantic, he was a patriot to the core, ever ready to merge his own glory in that of his mistress, and to devote his vast industry unswervingly to the interests of his country as he saw them. During the co-regency his position was most difficult, with the Empress pulling always in the direction of peace, and her son actively working for his own schemes at whatever cost. Dr. Bright holds the scales of justice even for all three; and nothing could be better and more psychologically true than the clear historical explanations by which he indicates in each case the justification for policies of the most diverse character.

EVOLUTION AND DOGMA.

Recent Advances in Theistic Philosophy of Religion. By James Lindsay, Minister of St. Andrew's, Kilmarnock. (Blackwood & Co.)

We must confess to having opened this book—a bulky volume of some five hundred and fifty pages—with a certain amount of prejudice. Its cumbrous title seemed to be too assertive. For “advances” must mean definite progress made towards a definite end, and how can this be predicated of speculations upon matters which, by their very nature, belong to a region where we can apply no system of measurement? We think Mr. Lindsay would have been wiser if he had made use of some term more modest and less open to misconstruction. But it is only fair to him that we should state his case as he himself presents it, though, necessarily, in smaller compass. He maintains that theistic philosophy has long been at a standstill because those who treated of it ignored the progress of science. There can be no question that the theory of evolution is the most important that modern science has constructed or accepted, and it therefore follows that no exposition of Theism can, in the writer's opinion, be adequate which fails to recognise it. Accordingly, Mr. Lindsay has sought “to write as one conscious of the evolutionary atmosphere in which the thought of our time lives.” It is, then, chiefly by the use which he has made of the theory of evolution that the foundations of theistic belief have been strengthened and extended.

Not the subject only, nor the reverent manner of its treatment, but the learning and research which every page of the book exhibits, compel us to regard the author with sincere respect. He certainly is not liable to the charge which he brings against the churches generally, that they shelter “dense and unprogressive thought.” By his study of all the more important contributions to theistic philosophy which writers in Europe and America have made he has secured a fulness and breadth of thought for the execution of his difficult task such as few can possess.

The ground covered is far too extensive for anything more than a brief survey on our part. The three main divisions are respectively entitled “Recent Philosophy of Natural Religion,” “Recent Philosophy of Theism (God),” and “Recent Philosophy of Religion (Man);” but under each of these heads there are several subdivisions, the contents of which are as varied as they are copious. Teleology, Freedom and Law, Man's Intellectual and Spiritual Nature, his Needs and Goal, the Being and Attributes of God, Immortality and Materialism—these are among the subjects handled, but form by no means an exhaustive list of them. They are discussed with ability and fairness, though a greater simplicity of language, and sometimes also of method, would have contributed to the reader's pleasure and advantage. Mr. Lindsay does not shirk the difficulties which, in his inquiries, present themselves at every turn; in some cases he claims to have met them with new arguments, in all he discusses them exhaustively.

Thus, the difficulty which exists in many minds of reconciling the idea of personality with that of infinity is, he holds, the result of regarding the infinite as a mere aggregate of things finite. Viewed thus, personality is necessarily limited. But this is a wrong view. Personality must not be confounded with corporeity. Conscious selfhood has nothing essentially to do either with shape or time, or with location in space or any of the other conceivable limitations that mark personality in the usual sense. The very absence of personality in God—the lack of sensibility and self-determining power—would really constitute limitation in Him as the impersonal. Again, as Mr. W. S. Lilly says, personality in man is but the dimmest shadow of the perfect selfhood of the infinite. The idea of personality, like all ideas, is realised only in that self-existent—the original of all existence—which transcends those ideas, indeed, but in transcending includes them. Moreover, we cannot ignore the argument that as there is not in the known cosmos any higher fact than that of personality, to deny personality to the most perfect form of being involves a contradiction of terms. We see creation struggling towards personality, and mounting step by step through the preliminary stages of the vegetable and animal world until in man it actually attains to individual personality and becomes a self-conscious mind. Is it, then, reasonable to suppose that the pre-eminence of man over the inferior creation due to his personality is wanting in the highest Being of all?

The pages of this journal are not wholly suitable for the discussion of such problems as Mr. Lindsay examines, and in which comparatively few will find the fascinating interest they possess for him. Pfeleiderer's words again and again come into our thoughts: “We can know God only so far as His relations towards us disclose Him; all else is as dark as is the moon's other side to the inhabitants of this earth.”

We desire to do the fullest justice to the unstinted labour which Mr. Lindsay has given to his work, and the excellent spirit which it displays, but we sometimes wish that the English language, as it is usually written, could have sufficed for the expression of his thoughts, and that we could have been spared so many specimens of “word-building” and a terminology “made in Germany.”

THE MAKING OF FRANCE.

The Growth of the French Nation. By George Burton Adams. (Macmillan & Co.)

“The History of Institutions,” writes Bishop Stubbs, “cannot be mastered, can scarcely be approached, without an effort”: and in Mr. Adams's work we are glad to recognise many of the rare qualities needed. He shows strict fairness with clear and independent judgment, and he tells his story pleasantly. There is wanting, perhaps, a certain flavour of sympathy with the great, patient, toiling people; but that may be due to the limits set, which (as he regrets) forbade him to dwell on the various stages of their social and economic progress. We hope he may hereafter be able to do so.

Four short interesting chapters deal with the earliest history—the Gauls and Franks, the great battles of Châlons and Tours, and the real and legendary glories of Charles the Great; and though Mr. Adams modestly excludes the present century from his review, he has given a brief account of the fortunes of post-Revolutionary France also. But his main task—no easy one—has been to show by what steps Hugues Capet's little dukedom grew up, through centuries of effort, into the mighty, compact Republic of our own day, with almost boundless resources and ambitions world-wide. The history falls naturally into four periods. France first takes rank in the modern system of Europe, and begins to play her great part among the nations in the reign of crafty, unscrupulous Louis XI., who tricked Burgundy, fooled Charles the Bold to his ruin, and cajoled England. By what gradual steps the Capetian kings extended their rule, and how their wise statecraft led ever steadily towards the unity of France—whether by the policy of Philip Augustus, the mild, firm justice of St. Louis, or the steadfast tenacity of Charles the Wise; how the steel of French patriotism was forged in the long wars with England and consecrated in the blood of Jeanne d'Arc; how the barriers of feudal principalities were broken down and the great nobles transformed from rival kinglets into the "first servants of the Crown"—all this is well and clearly told. Next comes a period of foreign wars with varying success, a pushing south and east and north, trials of strength with Austria, Italy, Spain; times of domestic strife, civil and religious, marked by the hideous massacre of St. Bartholomew, and ending in peace for France, reunited under Henry of Navarre. All this stage of growth, with the very significant episode of the flickering life and fitful activity of the States-General, France's counterpart of the Parliament of England, and the sterile protest of the Gallican Liberties, is admirably narrated. Our third age is that of the earlier Bourbons, from Henry IV. to the close of Louis XIV.'s long reign. This was at first a time of rest, prosperity, and peace; then of expansion and success under Richelieu; lastly, it was marred for a time by the frivolous and wicked wars of the Fronde, when the nobles of France showed a cynical want of principle not easily matched elsewhere. Thereafter the costly glories of Louis XIV.'s earlier reign, and the shame of its later years, sowed the seed of the Revolution, which swept away the Royal house of France. But it was in our fourth period that, under the last two Bourbons, the evil seeds of extravagance and intolerance ripened, in a hotbed of vice and unbelief, to that harvest of death.

In telling his story Mr. Adams has scarcely given weight enough to the civilising action of the Roman Church. It was there that the germs of freedom from feudal tyranny and the sense of man's dignity were kept and fostered. So too, at the Reformation in France, Calvin addressed the Letter of Remonstrance, prefaced to his "Institutes," to Francis I. himself. (This fact has not been noted by the author in its place.) Again, sufficient prominence is not given to the disastrous results of revoking the Edict of Nantes. The defeats of Louis's reign came after this (1685); it broke up the peace of the realm, and drove into exile much of its best manhood, and the memories of the dragonnades and the camisades embittered the stripes of the revolutionary years. But Mr. Adams is not dazzled by Louis's pomp. He plainly tells us that "Grand Monarque" was somewhat commonplace, and that his policy, from the first mistaken, was in the end very mischievous to his country. Against the harsh judgment on Fouquet we should set Mme. de Sévigné's more favourable verdict; and Mr. Adams will find few to agree with his sentence on the literature of France's Augustan age. Surely Racine, La Fontaine, Molière, and the great pulpit orators did not confine their study to the "somewhat artificial man of society" (p. 231). In another particular he is less than just. Louis XI. and Henry IV. did great things for France; but it is strange to miss in the former case all mention of De Commynes, and in the latter to seek in vain the names of D'Aubigné and De Mornay.

The portraits and other illustrations, all apposite and interesting, lend grace and charm to the book. A few maps would have added to its value. Oddly enough, two maps are referred to (pp. 159 and 281), but are not in our copy. It is only right to note a few slips: Charles VIII.'s sister was Anne of Beaujeu, not "Beaujeau" (p. 143); "Charles I." should be Charles II. (p. 210); Marie Antoinette's mother (p. 278) was the Empress-Queen Maria Theresa, not "Louisa"; it is as wrong to speak before 1806 of the "German Emperor" instead of the Emperor of Germany as it is now to do the opposite; and, lastly, the poor little dauphin, titular Louis XVII., though perhaps killed by ill-usage, was not "executed" (p. 319). We must, of course, put up with established American modes of spelling; but we do not like "reënfacement"; "boss-principles" seems out of place in serious writing; States-General is too firmly established for "Estates" to take its place; and "make over" is not a good substitute for refashion, remake, &c., especially as it already has in English the meaning of to hand over, transmit.

A BOOK FOR FISHERMEN.

Fish-Tails and Some True Ones. By Bradnock Hall. (Edward Arnold.)

THE festive patriarch of anglers strikes a note in his immortal book which fishermen have not been slow to catch. Piscator tutors his "honest scholar" in many a humorous paragraph, to say nothing of the amusing episode of the gypsies and beggars. The last generation of anglers were fond of bringing out this side of their art, and, as a natural consequence, a reaction has set in of late. Angling books, therefore, have been grave, decorous, sometimes dull: Four in Norway and a few others are distinguished exceptions. Mr. Hall's chapters on fishing are written in a fulsome, affected manner, and his preface especially is verbose, six pages when six lines would have been sufficient. This is a pity, because his accounts of fishing in Norway are adventurous and interesting. He is overcome, however, by the desire of being smart, and his book suffers accordingly. Thus, when a salmon rises he describes it as "a subaqueous eruption, the exhilarating whack of a big tail"; a grilse is called "Zoar, a little one"; while a flood in a salmon river is explained, from the fishes' point of view, as "an infusion of chicory, and tree-roots are their portion to eat." Nauseous as is this style of writing, what shall be said of the following?

"There are perhaps few, if any, who have killed their first half-dozen salmon hooked, and the risk of losing a good fish is, of course, infinitely greater to a man, however skilful, who cannot rely on his knots and his gut as he would on his mother's affection; but if he is really expert, he will have served his apprenticeship, and will not fear a vote in reduction of his salary for negligence."

Small wonder if the critic shudders lest this kind of writing should again become popular in angling books.

Mr. Hall has several good fishing stories to tell, their fun lying, of course, in exaggeration, and the portraits he draws of his two Norwegian gillies are sufficiently characteristic and amusing. This is just the book for an angler to take up for an odd five minutes, and now that the fishing season is beginning Mr. Hall's enthusiasm will be found catching. It almost passes the wit of man to invent (or describe) novel fishing incidents, but anglers are fortunately so constituted that they never tire of the old ones dressed afresh. Like their prey, too, they are omnivorous, so that it is not difficult to cater for them. When illustrations are added fishermen are still more pleased, so that Mr. Hall's own etching here and the dozen engravings of Mr. T. H. McLachlan ought to earn their gratitude. The sombre tones of the frontispiece, "Homewards," are well caught by Mr. Hall's needle, and the different views in Norway will bring back pleasant recollections to many a Northern angler. Occasionally practical hints drop from the author's experience, as when he recommends a gold Devon spinner. The glitter of it seems irresistible. A pin-head swivel is also much to his mind.

A glance into Mr. Westwood's Bibliotheca Piscatoria shows what a number of competitors Mr. Hall has in writing about fish in a popular manner, and how few have succeeded in this style of literature. Kingsley has done it to perfection and his Chalk-stream Studies are yet unsurpassed. It demands a happy combination of skill and fancy, of appreciation of natural beauty tempered with kindness for man as well as the lower animals. The unconscious tone of the narrative commends it to the reader. Like a strain of music one false note on the side of affectation, or a straining after effect, is at once fatal. Charles St. John is another master in this style, as is evinced whenever he chances to name fishing in his excellent books on Scotch natural history. The attempt to write in a smart manner is a snare into which Mr. Hall constantly falls. If he would only be natural and write in a plain matter-of-fact fashion, his anecdotes are mostly so instructive that anglers would gratefully accept the volume. Though Fish Tails will not increase his reputation, it shows, at all events, that Mr. Hall possesses that enthusiasm for fly-fishing and love of scenery which go so far to produce a good book on angling.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

The Church of the Sixth Century. By William Holden Hutton, B.D. With Illustrations. (Longmans.)

A SERIES of six lectures at Cambridge on the Birkbeck foundation furnishes the contents of Mr. Hutton's interesting volume. The task the lecturer has set himself has been rather to illustrate, than either to outline or fully to treat, the period which he has chosen. This period extends from the reunion of East and West, in 519, to the consecration of St. Gregory the Great, in 590. That is to say, the controversy concerning the "Three Chapters" furnishes the chief subject-matter, the Emperor Justinian is the principal figure, Constantinople and Ravenna are the centres of interest. Mr. Hutton has no mercy upon the weakness of the unfortunate Pope Vigilius, the defence of whom has so severely tasked the ingenuity of Roman Catholic controversialists. The Emperor Justinian is his hero, and at great length he combats the evidence for his having in his last days fallen away from the integrity of the faith into the heresy of Aphotodocetism, which denied the corruptibility of Christ's body. As to Vigilius, Mr. Hutton has nothing new to adduce. Sarcastically premising, "Roman Catholic writers assure us that no one save a member of their body understands the true meaning of the dogma of Papal Infallibility," he clearly outlines the course of events in which Vigilius' wisdom was at fault, and so leaves the matter where he found it. But with regard to the alleged lapse of Justinian, for whom, whether as a prince or as a theologian, his enthusiasm knows no bounds, he pleads powerfully and well for a re-opening of the question. Against the testimony of Eustathius, Evagrius, and Nicetius, which he critically examines, Mr. Hutton alleges the inherent improbability of the Emperor's lapsing into a heresy with which he had long been familiar, and which in many passages he had incidentally controverted. He cites the testimony of the majority of contemporary writers, including St. Gregory the Great, as unanimous in witnessing to Justinian as a pillar of orthodoxy. Further, there is the general judgment of the universal Church, to which Dante gives voice in the Paradiso, where Justinian stands like the sun in his strength, hiding himself in excess of light. Mr. Hutton's tentative hypothesis is that, in refining between incorruptibility and de facto incorruption, "Justinian may have seemed—from some writing which, perhaps, we have lost—to approach too near to the opinion of Severus. Exaggerated reports may have spread, and distant bishops have taken alarm." However, in the present state of the evidence, he concludes that a definitive solution is impossible.

There is an informing chapter on Byzantine art, and it is under the glamour of this subject—under the spell of the city's historic stones—that Mr. Hutton writes. It throws a glow over the whole of his treatise, warming the dried bones of decayed controversies into something like vivacity, and adding a certain completeness to the treatment of a subject instinct with literary possibilities.

* * *

"ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA."—Chalukyan Architecture. By Alexander Rea, M.R.A.S. (Trübner & Co.; W. H. Allen & Co.)

THIS is the twenty-first volume brought out by the officers of the Archæological Survey of India. It treats of the remains of temples and shrines situated within a circle twenty-four miles in diameter in the Ballāri district of the Madras Presidency. Within this small extent of territory no less than ten temples have been found worthy of illustration. The drawings have been made to scale from careful measurement, and are good examples of sectional and elevational drawing. The plans have been set out with an equal solicitude; they show well the instinct for effect and the faculty of suggesting mystery possessed by the builders. An artistic plan is quite as essential in architecture as a good elevation; it is as it were the thesis of the structure; to it the elevations are but as commentaries, elaborations and the consummation. A cruciform arrangement is quite usual in these temples; some of them suggest a Christian church. The ceilings, on which much geometric thought was lavished, are shown in detail; they seem to be all of trabeated construction and cover a considerable span. Some of them have small domes cut out of the flat surface, elaborate pendants being hung from the centre coming down three or four feet. The doorways are the richest features in the elevations, and are surrounded and crowned with carving; but bases and cornices, niches and pilasters decorate almost all the surfaces. The mouldings which contrast so admirably with the sculptural parts are bold and piquant. Viollet-le-Duc has said that mouldings are the language of the architect; these natives of South India were eloquent indeed. The material used in these relics of outworn creeds was a species of black hornblende which has much of the effects of marble: it is soft when quarried, but hardens under exposure, and is thus suited for the creation and preservation of delicate ornament. The drawings are produced in photo-print with a light blue line; perhaps black would have been more satisfactory as giving more strength to the page; but they have about them as they are a delicacy not unsuited to the subjects represented. These bring home to us the devotion and wealth of dynasties and peoples whose almost only record they are; they show also the passion for building which in the periods of their vigour has dominated all nations. The builders of the world might repeat, with greater reason, the wondering boast of the Roman: "Quæ regio in terris nostri non plena laboris?" This volume is a worthy record of a small part of that all-pervading labour, and should attract the many Anglo-Indians: indeed, we are all Anglo-Indians nowadays.

* * *

Demon Possession and Allied Themes. By the Rev. John L. Nevius, D.D. (London: Redway.)

SOME forty-five years ago, the late Dr. Nevius—for this book is posthumous—joined the American Presbyterian Mission in China. He took with him, to quote his own words,

"a strong conviction that a belief in demons, and communications with spiritual beings, belongs exclusively to a barbarous and superstitious age, and at present can consist only with mental weakness and want of culture."

But the native preachers and catechists attached to the mission soon changed all that. He was perpetually hearing from them of unconverted Chinese who appeared to be possessed by evil spirits under nearly the same circumstances as the demoniacs in the New Testament, and of their wonderful cure by the prayers of the same preachers. At length his strong conviction began to waver, and an "experience" at which he himself assisted seems to have sent it to the right-about. Thereafter he issued a circular to his brother missionaries asking them to obtain answers from "intelligent and reliable native Christians" to a list of questions on such cases as had fallen under their notice. Some of these questions were of the kind that lawyers call leading, and he gives only a few of the replies in the volume before us. The replies quoted all justify Dr. Nevius's later credulity rather than his earlier scepticism; but it would be interesting to know the positions taken up by those of his correspondents whose answers he has not reproduced.

It cannot be said that the evidence thus collected forms a convincing body of testimony. In only two instances were the observers Europeans, and in neither case did the phenomena exhibited go beyond the limits of an ordinary hysterical fit. The rest of the evidence is mostly hearsay of hearsay, and, although doubtless reported and perhaps given in good faith, it rests finally on the accuracy of native witnesses. What this is worth may be judged from the remark here quoted of a well-known English missionary that "the Mongols are so thoroughly imbued, one and all, with the spirit of lying that I have found it useless to repeat what the most respectable say, even when they have no conceivable motive for not telling the truth."

To these stories Dr. Nevius and his editor have appended an account, discursive rather than profound, of the different theories by which the phenomena of so-called possession is accounted for by science. He finds, as might be expected, the theory to be drawn from a literal interpretation of Scripture more rational than any of them; but he does not seem well versed in Greek ideas of spiritual influence at the beginning of our era, or in the latest researches into what is called hystero-demonopathy.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling and other writers have already prepared us for the one conclusion that stands out plainly from Dr. Nevius's book. This is, that persons of European blood, when settled for a long time in Oriental countries, insensibly contract some of the superstitions of the natives by whom they are surrounded. By so doing they get nearer to the mental level of their neighbours than they are probably aware. In the present instance the Chinese call the missionaries foreign devils, and the missionaries retort that the only devils in the case are in the Chinese. Is there so much difference between the two?

The Nicaragua Canal and the Monroe Doctrine.

By L. M. Keasbey. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

PROPERLY to understand Mr. Keasbey's book we must adopt his point of view, and for the moment cease to look upon England as the centre from which all trade routes radiate. According to Mr. Keasbey, the natural westerly route of trade is round the inconvenient Cape Horn, and he holds that a canal across the Isthmus of Central America would divert all trade to an artificial westerly route through that short cut. Mr. Keasbey examines at some length all the possible lines for the Canal, and comes to the conclusion that the route through Lake Nicaragua alone is feasible. The Suez Canal precedent would naturally point to a joint protectorate of the Isthmus Canal by Great Britain and the United States, and this adjustment has already been secured by the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. But Pan-Americanism and the Monroe Doctrine are both involved in the controversy over the Canal route, and, as these are considered vital questions to the United States, the States will, of course, continue to deny the logic of European tradition in the matter, and insist upon American control. This will bring them into direct conflict with the British Imperial system. Mr. Keasbey thinks that England, being confronted by powerful opponents in every part of the globe, will prefer to abandon the American continent to the Americans in return for their undivided support in the international affairs of the world. This might, perhaps, be a solution were it not that we could hardly trust the promise of the States to give us their "undivided support," and that it would be the basest treachery to abandon the loyal Canadians.

Some Thoughts on the Textual Criticism of the New Testament. By George Salmon, D.D. (Murray.)

THERE is, as Dr. Salmon apologetically observes, no immodesty "if one who is not an expert himself attempts to form some judgment of his own between the views of those who are." He hesitates to follow Hort, for whom, nevertheless, he has a profound veneration, in the first place, on account of "a certain exaggeration of judgment": he will never allow that a less probable may exist side by side with a more probable opinion. Thus his work in conjunction with Dr. Westcott is epoch-making, indeed, in the sense in which Darwin's Origin of Species was epoch-making, but not in the sense that it is final. On the contrary, while he has no expectation that Burgon will ever "be set on his legs again," he finds something servile in the general readiness with which Hort's history of the text has been accepted, and even his nomenclature adopted, "as if now the last word had been said on the subject of New Testament criticism." Hort's nomenclature, he complains, partly tends to confusion, partly begs questions at issue; Dr. Salmon disputes the evidences of a Syrian revision on which some base their preference for the Vatican and Sinaitic MSS. as almost final authorities; he complains that the origin of the Synoptic Gospels suggests a problem bearing on the reconstruction of an authentic text which they have almost overlooked; and, finally, he has something to say against Hort's rejection of the theory of double editions as a method of accounting for Western variants. The writer's tone is modest and conciliatory, his treatment of the subject-matter is lucid and cogent, his style is free from pedantry and touched with humour.

Elementary Solid Geometry and Mensuration.

By Henry Dallas Thompson, D.Sc., Ph.D., Professor of Mathematics in Princeton University. 200 pp. (Macmillan & Co.)

The first seven chapters of this treatise are entitled respectively: "Lines and Planes and their Intersections," "Angles of Planes and Lines," "Polyhedral Angles," "Polyhedrons," "Cylinders and Cones," "The Sphere," and "Conic Sections," and the eighth, occupying fifty pages, is devoted to "Mensuration of Solids." Mr. Thompson does sound journeyman work, free from glaring defects, but text-books on well-worn themes are not easy to write, and though he is an evident master of the subject, his hand betrays inexperience in bringing it home to others. Not that he avoids difficulties, or soars too high for a beginner; just the contrary. The few emphatic propositions of Euclid, Book XI., are cut up by him into an enormous number of small propositions. They are all carefully numbered and conscientiously referred to at every turn, so that the industrious student need never lose hold of the logical thread. Thus the book makes easy reading, but its success as a text-book is very doubtful.

Section 301—to establish the formula $4\pi r^2$ for the surface of a sphere—is terribly long-winded and amateurish; a murderous copy of the concise and elegant proof in Wilson's handy text-book on the same subject, with which the present work unfortunately challenges comparison. Among the demonstrations which seem to us well conceived are § 20: If two planes meet, they meet in at least two points; § 67, to obtain the shortest distance between two straight lines; § 86, Euler's Theorem that $F + V = E + 2$ (although the demonstration, which is Cauchy's, appears in nearly all text-books); § 210, which proves by an ingenious method the geodesic property of great circle arcs on the sphere; and § 210, Steiner's formula with proof for the volume of a prismatoid.

The More Abundant Life: Lenten Readings.

Selected chiefly from Unpublished MSS. of the Right Reverend Phillips Brooks. By W. M. L. Jay. (Macmillan & Co.)

TEN years ago the late Bishop of Massachusetts preached before the University of Oxford, and the present discourses, selected and abridged with a wise discretion by Mr. Jay, bring back very vividly to mind the burly form, the silvery voice, and the lightning rapidity of the great American preacher. They remind one, too, how good it was to hearken to the man; how fresh his thought was, yet without laborious research; how apt, yet how spontaneous, the word to fit it. From the point of view of scientific theology, it is true he was invertebrate; but as a professor of natural religion, seeking his inspiration in the depths of his own clean, virile nature, he stands alone. The present volume appears pat with the ecclesiastical season.

Life after Death. By Bishop Lars Nielsen Dahle. Translated by the Rev. John Beveridge. (T. & T. Clark.)

THIS is a translation, from the Norse, of a book by a Lutheran bishop upon the Future State and the Second Advent. The author accepts the doctrine of eternal punishment, he rejects that of purgatory, but is inclined to look with favour on prayers for the dead. As to the Second Advent, he receives the Apocalypse of St. John as being a literal prophecy of that which is to come, believes firmly in the personality of Antichrist, and gives yet another reading of the Number of the Beast. Yet the book is learned and tolerant, and the Bishop shows a very complete acquaintance with the writings of English and American theologians. He takes, however, writers like Mr. Grattan Guinness and the prophet Baxter much too seriously.

The Natural History of the Year. By J. A. Thomson. (Melrose.)

THERE seems no end to the books which describe the phenomena of nature during the year. This little volume is meant for the young. Giving some half-dozen chapters to each of the seasons, it does not confine itself merely to the interesting facts of outdoor life in the British Islands. Winter is largely illustrated from the familiar features of Scandinavian and Arctic existence. A good deal of repetition is probably due to the fact that these chapters were originally informal lectures delivered at Edinburgh. They treat of seedlings, the flight of birds, tadpoles, the coast fauna and the like, and are well calculated to aid an intelligent boy in his researches. Occasionally what is here stated as a fact may be questioned. For instance, lemmings on their migrations undoubtedly swim into or even across fiords, but they have never been known to rush into the North Sea, and thus speedily commit suicide, although it is a legend that they do so.

FICTION.

False Dawn. By Francis Prevost. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

THE story of John Avon and Nina Wendover is the story of the love of a man for a married woman. Such a theme, which we accept as inevitable in French fiction, has too often of late been the sport of incompetent hands in our own. We confess, therefore, to a distinct feeling of prejudice against Mr. Prevost's book from the beginning; and this is perhaps exasperated by certain audacities of sensuous description. But before we have gone very far the prejudice is dispelled. The outcome, indeed, proves to be renunciation and not licentiousness; but long before that point is reached Mr. Prevost's writing has got its grip upon the reader. For False Dawn, whether you dislike or are wearied of its motive or not, is at least admirably and, in places, even beautifully written, with real and rare powers both of psychology and of word-painting. If Mr. Prevost continues to take his art as seriously in the future he should do well. The weak point of the book is in its opening stages, which are marked by a curious lack not only of ethical purpose, but even of ethical consciousness about John Avon, and in Mrs. Wendover by an equally curious inconsistency between the superficial manner and the inward delicate soul of the woman. We gather that she coquets, and, to put it plainly, romps with Avon, in the hope of evading the coming issue; but we feel that such a woman would have chosen another way of keeping the man who attracted her at arm's length, and that, with such a man, the way she did choose would certainly not have failed to repel him.

The Faithful City: a Romance. By Herbert Morrah. (Methuen.)

MR. MORRAH's romance is disappointing. The conception of it is good; the great new city, built as the expression of a new ideal, the product of one man's shaping brain and one man's untiring energy; and then the slow struggle with the forces of disintegration, and the closing of the first period of history in a dramatic crisis. There are picturesque possibilities, too, in the situation between Benjamin Harris, the maker and ruler of the city, and Stella Léonos, his principal opponent. Both in their way are sympathetic figures, and they are inevitably pitted against each other. Nor is the book without some touches of poetic suggestion in the handling of it—in the symbolism of the Great Tower, for instance, and in the fiery Cross, which gives warning of oncoming danger. Good as Mr. Morrah's scheme is, however, his execution of it is faltering and ineffective. The story is all in the air. The ideal of Benjamin Harris remains misty and undefined. The situation has hardly been shaped into anything that resembles a plot. The characters are only vaguely suggested and not individualised. The book is long to verbosity, and we constantly seem on the point of something vivid and dramatic; but Mr. Morrah goes about it and about, and never comes to terms with his action at all. Although he has not at present achieved a success, he has made it clear that he has ideas, and that he will in all probability do much better before long.

Mr. Blake of Newmarket. By E. H. Cooper. (Heinemann.)

It is a matter of surprise to us that there can be any demand for such a book as Mr. Blake of Newmarket. It is a sordid chronicle of gambling-hells and racing-stables and restaurants, written in a style that savours of nothing but the columns of the sporting papers. Perhaps it may appeal to the man who reads the sporting papers, if he ever reads anything else, but to the ordinary devotee of the circulating libraries it will surely prove but weariness of the flesh. What story there is centres round a foolish young man who owns a small racing stable at Newmarket. His trainer is dishonest, and lets him in for some heavy losses. These Mr. Blake tries to recoup, first by plunging and then by headlong gambling at Monte Carlo. But all to no purpose, for he becomes more and more heavily in debt, and finally has to sell his stables, house, and horses, and betake himself to South Africa with an equally foolish young woman who is willing to share his poverty. There are some other characters who try ineffectually to bring Mr. Blake to his senses before the crash comes; but they all, peers and stable-boys, think the same thoughts, and talk the same jargon—horses, horses, and again horses. The cover of the book is ingeniously and obtrusively hideous.

Love for a Key. By G. Colmore. ("Pioneer Series": Heinemann.)

THIS is a melancholy, wistful little story of grey clouds and mists and swampy meadows, and a woman's weariness and disappointment. Annette Gray marries for love, and her husband marries for money. She is plain and dowdy and unready: he is good-looking and smart and popular. Disillusion and disaster are the rapid issue. But the love persists, and in the end, though too late for happiness, is victorious. Ruthen Gray loses his beauty and his popularity, and returns to his wife, when she is on her death-bed. It is all depressing enough, but delicately written, and with a certain fine idealism. The society background is done cleverly and unobtrusively. The weak point is the husband, who is rather crudely objectionable. The motive of the story requires a soul of goodness somewhere in him, but even during his repentance one has to take it very much upon trust. Annette is much more subtly and intimately drawn. There is charm in the atmosphere of the book, in the quiet landscape, and in the feeling for some of the less obvious and salient aspects of nature.

The Episode of Alethea. By Isabel Clarke. (Innes.)

ANOTHER story of the blind artist, and, except by the comparison it inevitably challenges, not a bad one. Gilbert the artist, secretly encumbered with an insane wife, loved Alethea; and Alethea loved Gilbert. In temper she was emancipated; her descent was through a disgraced woman; her principal care, her sister Morna, died and left her responsible for her actions to herself alone. Yet she elected to bid Gilbert a final farewell, lying in his arms with her cheek pressed against his blind face, and to resign herself to a marriage next April with the uninteresting and unexceptionable Dyce. Then Gilbert drank the contents of a little bottle, and with quotations from Little Eyolf and the fifty-first Psalm upon his lips, composed himself to a decent attitude against the coming of the coroner. The interest of the book has the person of Alethea for its centre, and the author has put her best work into it. She would have us to understand that the temperament which in the mother had taken such direction as led her into disgrace had found in this girl another object than illicit amours—had concentrated itself upon the sister to whose life she devoted herself, and to whose reported wish, even after her death, she sacrificed her lover's happiness and her own. The minor characters are essentially commonplace, and the smart dialogue is occasionally rather dismal. Miss Clarke should not call newspapers "mental pabulum," nor a husband a "liege lord"; "phenomenal" does not mean wonderful; things do not differ to, but from, other things; "partakes of the nature of the problem" is not a good equivalent for "is a riddle"; nor is the busy squeaking of a quill well expressed by the phrase "nimble but noisy peripatetics." With all its signs of inexperience and its occasional crudity of expression, a thoughtful and promising book.

Under Shadow of the Mission: A Memory of Santa Barbara. By L. S. McChesney. (Methuen.)

SANTA BARBARA is a health resort in California. This book details the conversations of two men and a chorus of women who happened to be staying there together. All the characters have symbolic names: the Crusader, Themis, Artista, and (save the mark!) Ultimata, who "always has the last word"—except Dorothy, a little girl of eleven, who talks like this: "What makes you talk so, mamma? You are a constant parody on yourself." Conversation turns upon scenery, love-making, woman's position, mesmerism, and kindred subjects. Some of the things said are notable. "The broadened, deepened woman will find a dress expressive of herself." How broad? one asks. Or again, to a man who thinks that women should not vote because they take no share in war—"Have you forgotten their prayers?" This suggests a very complete division of labour. Some of the words, too, are delightful: "her presence was inspirational"; and "the joy of selfhood," which is, one may explain, the antithesis not to wifehood but to angelhood. For those who like this sort of thing absolutely unrelieved by any plot or the faintest incident, but diversified with the description of many costumes, it can be had Under Shadow of the Mission.

SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1897.

No. 1302, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE WEEK.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

[This article is a chronicle of books published during the week. Reviews will follow in due course.]

ANCIENT BRITISH VOLCANOES. THE earthquake which shook the Midland and Southern counties of England a few months ago must have brought home to many minds certain impressive geological truths. Incidentally it may have prepared a larger public to enjoy the monumental work which Sir Archibald Geikie has just completed on The Ancient Volcanoes of Great Britain. In his Preface Sir Archibald describes the growth of the subject.

"In no department of science is the slow and chequered progress of investigation more conspicuous than in that branch of geology which treats of volcanoes. Although from the earliest dawn of history men had been familiar with the stupendous events of volcanic eruptions, they were singularly slow in recognising these phenomena as definite and important parts of the natural history of the earth. Even within the present century, the dominant geological school in Europe taught that volcanoes were mere accidents, due to the combustion of subterranean beds of coal casually set on fire by lightning, or by the decomposition of pyrites. Burning mountains, as they were called, were believed to be the only local and fortuitous appearances, depending on the position of the coal-fields, and having no essential connexion with the internal structure and past condition of our planet. So long as such fantastic conceptions prevailed, it was impossible that any solid progress should be made in this branch of science. A juster appreciation of the nature of the earth's interior was needed before men could recognise that volcanic action had once been vigorous and prolonged in many countries where no remains of volcanoes can now be seen."

Sir Archibald Geikie accords to France the credit of having led the way in the study of ancient volcanoes. Germany, as represented by Werner, comes out badly in Sir Archibald's historical review of the subject. To Werner volcanoes were "a blot on the system of nature he had devised," and he did all he could to explain them as accidents—mere conflagrations in coal-fields. Between Werner's disciples, called Neptunists from their affection for water as the great formative agent in the disposition of the earth's service, and the disciples of Demarest, called Vulcanists or Plutonists from their defence of volcanic fire, a long struggle ensued. The ending of that struggle in favour of Demarest's school may be said to have placed the study of volcanoes in its present important position in geology. Many British geologists have worked in this field with success. Murchison, Sedgwick, Scrope, Maclaren, Ramsay, Selwyn, and Jukes have all added something to our knowledge of the subject. Sir Archibald Geikie's own studies extend back over forty years, and in the two large volumes before us he has embodied the results which he has communicated at various times to learned societies. The work is illustrated with seven maps and numerous drawings and photographs.

PHILIP AND ALEXANDER OF MACEDON.

MR. DAVID G. HOGARTH has made Philip and Alexander of Macedon the subject of two essays in biography.

The father has been too much obscured by the son, and Mr. Hogarth has recognised this. He writes:

"I treat the two makers of Macedon, not in proportion to their respective bulk in history, but to the number of books already written about them. Philip, so far as I know, supplies the central figure to no extant biography; Alexander has inspired a whole literature."

Mr. Hogarth's book, which is published by Mr. Murray, is bound in red cloth, and in the front cover a gilt embossed medallion portrait of Alexander in the deific character of Heracles has been inserted; the effect is excellent.

MR. ARBER'S HARVEST HOME.

MR. EDWARD ARBER's eighth volume of the English Garner completes his interesting series of "ingatherings" from our history and literature. The volume opens with John Lydgate's rhymed account of the Siege of Harfleur and the Battle of Agincourt—"imprinted at London in Foster-lane, in Saint Leonard's parish, by me, John Skot." Bravo, John Skot! Another interesting item is John Proctor's account of Wyatt's rebellion. The work is dedicated by Proctor to Queen Mary. A True Report of the Burning of the Steeple and Church of St. Paul's in London was also worth garnering. But perhaps the historical gem of the volume is an account of the burial of Mary Queen of Scots at Peterborough, near Fotheringhay. It is from a unique tract in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. The poetical contents are varied, and include a collection of Cupid's Posies:

"For Bracelets, Handkerchers, and Rings,
With Scarfs, Gloves, and other things."

Twelve Odes by Michael Drayton, first printed in an undated volume of Poems Lyrical and Pastoral, and dating from 1606 to 1619, form another poetical sheaf.

OTHER BOOKS. In Court and Kampong, by Hugh Clifford, is a series of nineteen tales and sketches of native life in the Malay Peninsula. The appetite for faithful delineations of savage or semi-civilised life in remote countries and islands has been curiously strong of late years. Mr. Clifford writes of his Malay sketches: "My stories deal with natives of all classes; dwellers in the courts of kings; peasants in their Kampongs, or villages, by the rivers and the rice-fields; and with the fisher-folk on the seashore." Another book, and a bulky one, about the Sultan! In The Sultan and His Subjects, which appears in two large volumes, Mr. Richard Davey attempts "to set forth the chief characteristics of those heterogeneous nationalities which have in process of time and by virtue of conquest fallen under the dominion of the Sultans. . . . The author has studied his subject with a serious desire to bring before the intelligent reading public of this country such facts and such anecdotes (elucidating and explaining facts) as may enable an impartial reader to form a fair conclusion as to the present condition, and the probable destiny, of that great Oriental Empire on whose action and fate so much of the peace and welfare of Western Europe depends."

FICTION.

MR. LAURENCE HOUSMANN is an artist of unusual variety and accomplishment. His black and white drawings give him a high place among modern draughtsmen; while as a writer of the decorative school he is becoming well known for careful fanciful work. From his pen have already come poetry, romance, and fairy tales: he now appears as the author of a study in fantastic humour, entitled Gods and their Makers (John Lane). From his dedicatory preface we gather that this new book has been some years in preparation. Cottage Folk is the title given by Mrs. Comyns Carr to nine short stories of country life, of which "The Hoppers," "A Farm Tragedy," and "An Only Son" are typical titles. The first two stories at least are laid within sight of the Sussex Downs. Yekl, the latest volume of the "Pioneer" series, by A. Cahan, is a tale of the New York Ghetto, and opens in a sweating shop in New York. The Happy Hypocrite: a Fairy Tale for Tired Men, by Max Beerbohm, is the first of a series of Bodley Booklets, to be published by Mr. John Lane. Mr. Beerbohm's story has appeared in the Yellow Book. Mrs. Harold Day, the author of The Dream of Pilate's Wife, explains that her romance is "founded on historical facts rather than recorded as matter of pure history, the accession of Caius Caligula having been thrown at a much earlier date in order to bring him on the scene in intimate association with other characters." The old idea of metempsychosis is one of the elements in the story.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

[In the following list prices are given where they have been supplied by publishers.]

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE OLD ENGLISH BIBLE, AND OTHER ESSAYS. By Francis Aidan Gasquet, D.D. John C. Nimmo. 12s.
 PHILIPPINE STUDIES. By H. C. Moule, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.
 EXPLANATORY ANALYSIS OF ST. PAUL'S FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY. By the late H. P. Liddon, D.D. Longmans, Green & Co.
 A CONCORDANCE TO THE GREEK TESTAMENT. Edited by Rev. W. F. Moulton, D.D., and Rev. A. S. Geden, M.A. T. & T. Clark.

HISTORY.

- ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS (new edition): THE COMMENTARIES OF CÆSAR. By Anthony Trollope. HERODOTUS. By George C. Swayne, M.A. William Blackwood & Sons.

BIOGRAPHY.

- TOLD FROM THE RANKS. Collected by E. Milton Small. Andrew Melrose.
 PHILIP AND ALEXANDER OF MACEDON. By David G. Hogarth. John Murray. 14s.
 LIFE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. S.P.C.K.

POETRY.

- THE ACID SISTERS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Thomas Wright (Olney). Published by the Author.
 AT MINAS BASIN, AND OTHER POEMS. By Theodore H. Rand. William Briggs (Toronto).
 THE DESOLATE SOUL. By Maria Monica. S.P.C.K.
 THE SILVER CROSS. Compiled by Helen Douglas. George Bell & Sons. 3s. 6d.
 NATURE WORSHIP, AND OTHER POEMS. By George Herbert Kersley. Bickers & Son.

FICTION.

- COUSIN JEM. By L. Higrin. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
 THE DREAM OF PILATE'S WIFE. By Mrs. Harold Day. The Roxburghe Press. 3s. 6d.
 IN COURT AND KAMPONG. By Hugh Clifford. Grant Richards. 7s. 6d.
 HIS DOUBLE SELF. By E. Curtis. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
 LATANIES OF LIFE. By Kathleen Watson. James Bowden. 2s.
 THE LOVE OF AN OBSOLETE WOMAN. Chronicled by Herself. Archibald Constable & Co. 2s. 6d.
 BROKEN AWAY. By Beatrice Ethel Grimshaw. John Lane. 3s. 6d.
 ZALMA. By T. Mullett Ellis. Illustrated edition. Ash Partners, Ltd.
 COTTAGE FOLK. By Mrs. Comyns Carr. William Heinemann. 6s.
 YERL. By A. Cahen. William Heinemann. 2s. 6d.
 MR. PETERS. By Riccardo Stephens. Bliss, Sands & Co. 6s.

SCIENCE.

- SOME UNRECOGNISED LAWS OF NATURE. By Ignatius Singer and Lewis H. Berens. John Murray. 18s.
 THE ANCIENT VOLCANOS OF GREAT BRITAIN. By Sir Archibald Geikie, F.R.S. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. 36s.

BELLES LETTRES, &c.

- BURNS AND HIS TIMES. By J. O. Mitchell, LL.D. James MacLehose & Sons (Glasgow).
 AN ENGLISH GARDEN. By Edward Arber, F.S.A. Vol. VIII. Archibald Constable & Co. 5s.

POLITICAL.

- THE SULTAN AND HIS SUBJECTS. By Richard Davey. 2 vols. Chapman & Hall.

FOREIGN.

- CATALOGUE DES MONNAIES MUSULMANES DE LA BIBLIOTHÈQUE NATIONALE: ÉGYPT ET SYRIE. Par Henri Laroix, Imprimerie Nationale (Paris).
 LA TURQUÉE ET L'HELLÉNISME CONTEMPORAIN. Par Victor Bérard. Felix Alcan (Paris).

MISCELLANEOUS.

- IS SCIENCE GUILTY? By Avery W. H. Forbes, M.A. Marshall Bros.
 CAKES AND ALB. By Edward Spencer. Grant Richards. 5s.
 THE MUNICIPAL YEAR BOOK OF THE UNITED KINGDOM, 1897. By Robert Donald. Published at the offices of London. 2s. 6d.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE task of annotating a volume describing the Wordsworth and Coleridge MSS. in the possession of Mr. T. Norton Longman, of the firm of Messrs. Longmans & Co., has been entrusted to Mr. Hale White, whose real name is less familiar to readers than is his pseudonym. As Reuben Shapcott Mr. Hale White has a large and increasing company of admirers. His Mark Rutherford books, The Revolution in Tanner's Lane, Catherine Furse, Miriam's Schooling, and, the latest, Clara Hopgood, stand out luminously from the ruck of fiction.

"ANTHONY HOPE" will lecture on "Romance" at the Royal Institution on the evening of Friday, May 7.

In commenting upon the stories which clustering together have made up what is called the Jowett Myth, a correspondent of a contemporary says: "Among these a favourite was that when a Balliol man on one occasion attempted unsuccessfully to cut his throat the Master promptly fined him five shillings." The ambiguous use of the possessive pronoun causes us to point out that it was his own throat that the Balliol man tried to cut, and not Jowett's. Had it been Jowett's the story (which was told of a Master of Balliol as long ago as 1721) would be still funnier.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS announces a very interesting work which he is preparing to issue in a limited number of parts. This is a series of lithographed heads by Mr. Will Rothenstein, to be entitled English Portraits. They will appear monthly, two at a time, twenty-four in all, and will have accompanying letterpress "by various hands." The first part, due on May 1, will contain drawings of Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., and Mr. Thomas Hardy; while among those who have already sat, or who have promised to sit, are: Mr. Grant Allen, Mr. William Archer, Mr. Robert Bridges, Mr. Sidney Colvin, the Bishop of London, Mr. George Gissing, Mr. W. E. Henley, Mr. W. Holman Hunt, Prof. A. Legros, Mr. A. W. Pinero, Mr. John Sargent, R.A., Mr. George Bernard Shaw, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. William Watson, and Mr. J. McNeil Whistler.

A NEW magazine devoted to Genealogy and kindred subjects is about to be published by Mr. Elliot Stock under the title The Genealogical Magazine: a Journal of Family History, Heraldry and Pedigrees. The first number will be issued on May 1, and will contain among other articles one on "The Red Book of the Exchequer," by Mr. J. H. Round; "A New Pedigree of Shakespeare" carried farther back than any hitherto published; and a paper on the "Mayflower Log," with a facsimile of its register.

THE dinner recently given by the Authors' Club of New York in honour of the American poet, Mr. R. H. Stoddard, was in every way successful. Mr. E. C. Stedman presided, and addressed the guest of the evening in a felicitous speech in the name of the club. From Mr. Stoddard's rhymed reply the following lines are an extract:

"A long and honourable line
 Is yours—the Peerage of the Pen,
 Founded when this old world was young,
 And need was to preserve for men
 (Lost else) what had been said and sung,
 Tales our forgotten fathers told,
 Dimly remembered from of old,
 Sonorous canticles and prayers,
 Service of elder gods than theirs
 Which they knew not: the epic strain
 Wherein dead peoples lived again!
 A long, unbroken line is ours;
 It has outlived whole lines of kings,
 Seen mighty empires rise and fall,
 And nations pass away like flowers—
 Ruin and darkness cover all!
 Nothing withstands the stress and strain,
 The endless ebb and flow of things,
 The rush of Time's resistless wings!
 Nothing? One thing, and not in vain,
 One thing remains: Letters remain!"

THE letters of many authors who were invited, but could not be present, were read at the dinner. M. Alphonse Daudet, in declining, added: "Thanks for having thought of the youngest honorary member, who is terribly old all the same." Mr. Dobson wrote: "If there is one thing to which a literary man should be specially desirous of paying his tribute of respect it is persistent devotion to literature in those conditions (not exclusively literary) in which we live"; and Mr. Gosse promised that the Omar Khayyám Club should drink Mr. Stoddard's health at its dinner in London on the same evening.

MR. C. K. SHORTER on Saturday performed the ceremony of re-opening the Brontë Museum at Haworth. Last year four thousand persons paid for admission, notwithstanding the comparatively remote situation of the moorland village, and this number amply justifies the committee in their selection of a new and more accessible site for the museum. There are now two hundred and sixty members of the Society, and ten of the number reside in the United States. Mr. Shorter expressed an earnest wish that someone, preferably a Yorkshireman, would arise to write a really artistic biography of the Brontës—a book worthy to stand side by side with Boswell's Johnson. Dr. Robertson Nicoll also delivered an address, occupied principally with the ethical significance of the work of the three sisters, and particularly of Charlotte. In his opinion the keynote of their life was fortitude.

MR. MILLER CHRISTY writes from Pryors, Bromfield, near Chelmsford, stating that he is engaged upon a Life of Joseph Strutt (1749-1802), author of Sports and Pastimes and other well-known antiquarian works; and asks whether any of our readers possess, or know of the existence of, any of Strutt's letters or any documents connected with him, and, if so, whether they would allow Mr. Christy to borrow the same for the purposes of the biography. Any letters or documents sent to him, he adds, would be returned as soon as copied.

A LESS satisfactory book has rarely been published than the edition of The Pilgrim's Progress "in modern English" which Mr. John Morrison, M.A., B.D., has just prepared for Messrs. Macmillan. Of all old writers none so little needs clarifying as John Bunyan. Bunyan's language is clear as crystal. Mr. Morrison, however, thinks otherwise, and has therefore undertaken his task of revision. Parallel passages from the obscure archaic Bunyan, which most persons know and love, and the new illuminated Bunyan will show the thoroughness of Mr. Morrison's method. Let us take the conversation with Mr. Worldly Wiseman:

BUNYAN.

"World. How now, good fellow, whither away after this burdened manner?"

"Chr. A burdened manner indeed, as ever, I think, poor creature had! And whereas you ask me, whither away? I tell you, sir, I am going to yonder wicket gate before me; for there, as I am informed, I shall be put in a way to be rid of my heavy burden."

"World. Hast thou a wife and children?"

"Chr. Yes; but I am so laden with this burden that I cannot take that pleasure in them as formerly: methinks I am as if I had none."

And in the trial-scene Mr. High-Mind is no longer permitted to call Faithful "sorry scrub." He now says "contemptible creature."

MR. MORRISON.

"World. How now, good fellow, whither bound in this burdened manner?"

"Chr. A burdened manner, indeed, as ever I think poor creature had! You ask me, 'Whither bound?' I tell you, sir, I am going to yon wicket gate before me; for there, as I am informed, I shall be told how to get rid of my heavy burden."

"World. Have you a wife and children?"

"Chr. Yes; but I am so laden with this burden that I cannot take the same pleasure in them as formerly: I feel as if I had none."

THE introduction to the book gives us Mr. Morrison's views on Bunyan, and the reasons for his emendations. "The grammar and spelling," he writes, "has been made to conform to present usage." Has they?

APPROPOS of Bunyan, an amusing mistake is reported from the Hub of the Universe. There was recently such an unprecedented demand for The Pilgrim's Progress in the juvenile department of the Boston Public Library that an inquiry was instituted. It was then discovered that the teacher of history in a well-known school, in discoursing on the seventeenth century colonists of New England, had recommended Bunyan as an historian of the Pilgrim Fathers!

IN honour of the Diamond Jubilee the Clarendon Press has put forth The Queen's Diamond Jubilee Bible and The Queen's Diamond Jubilee Prayer Book. Each book is illustrated by portraits of her Majesty as she now is and as she was at the beginning of her reign, together with certain sacred pictures. The new Bible, for example, contains reproductions of the designs made by Sir Joshua Reynolds for the windows in New College Chapel. Those who like pictures in Bibles will perhaps like these. The two books are bound in red leather, with a crown at each corner.

THE cast of "John Gabriel Borkman," to be played at the New Century Theatre (the Strand Theatre) on the afternoons of May 4, 5, 6, and 7, will include Miss Geneviève Ward, Miss Elizabeth Robins, Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. W. H. Vernon, and Mr. James Welch.

MARK TWAIN'S new book, the description of his lecturing tour round the world, somewhat in the manner of A Tramp Abroad, which he is now writing in London, will be published in the autumn. Meanwhile a uniform American edition of his works, in fifteen volumes, is being prepared, of which there will be an édition de luxe of 250 copies signed by the author.

THE publication of the new sixpenny weekly paper Mayfair has been postponed till the autumn.

MR. EDWARD BELLAMY, the author of Looking Backward, who has been silent for ten years, has completed a new book, which will very shortly be published under the title Equality. This work, also socialistic in tendency, is nominally a story, and some of the characters in Looking Backward reappear in its pages. The special purpose of Equality is "to account for the institutions of the world of to-morrow by explaining not only their righteousness and reason, but likewise the course of historical evolution by which they were born out of the very different order of things existing to-day."

MR. R. A. JOHNSON (president of the Oxford Union) and Mr. O. W. Richards, both undergraduates of New College, Oxford, have written a reply from the Conservative standpoint to the recent Essays on Liberalism. It will appear in the National Review.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON will have ready in a few days a new edition of A Handbook of English Literature, originally compiled by Mr. Austin Dobson, and now revised and extended to the present time by Prof. W. Hall Griffin.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will issue immediately a reprint of Nepenthe, a poem in two cantos, by George Darley, the author of Sylvia; or, the May Queen. Nepenthe was privately printed in the year 1839, and is now extremely rare—indeed, it is possible that the copy which has recently been acquired by the British Museum, from which Mr. Mathews's reprint has been made, is actually the only one in existence.

Twenty Years on the Saskatchewan (N.W. Canada), by Canon Newton, is announced to be published by Mr. Elliot Stock immediately.

MR. FRANK R. STOCKTON'S new work, entitled A Storyteller's Pack, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. about the end of April.

ACADEMY PORTRAITS.

XXIII.—TENNYSON.

THERE was a time—in the Early Victorian period—when to admire Tennyson was to be advanced, when it was the test of a recherché and innovating taste. There was a time when this supremacy had become unquestioned matter of course; and, finally, when he was buried in the Abbey amid the mourning of a nation, the taste for Tennyson was regarded among les jeunes—or the more advanced of them—as bourgeois and outworn. The late Laureate himself lived to see the laurel a little faded on his brow, and to be extremely sensitive about the change. Reaction had much to do with it, but his own ill judgment more. Like Wordsworth before him, he did not recognise when the hour had come for silence; and he had to deal with an England more irreverent towards its great men, less patient with the infirmities of their age.

"The painful warrior, famoused for fight,
After a thousand victories once foiled,
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toiled."

In the treatment of Tennyson there was too much of this spirit. "Æneid" and "The Lotus Eaters" should have secured toleration for those latest poems which we will willingly let die.

Tennyson's early friends and admirers were most of them disappointed in their expectations of him. Not unreasonably, for to his early period belong the lines afterwards inserted in "Maud"—"I have led her home," &c.—lines unmatched and matchless. Leaving these out of account, the very marrow of his quality is found in those earlier poems. From the time he began to write long and important poems, the glamour (the word will not be refused) ceased from him. "The Princess," first of these experiments, is an avowed capriccio, showing the narrative skill in which he never failed, full of those jewelled lines and passages which were always in his power if nothing else was, but appealing solely to picturesque fancy, and more wrought than inspired. It depends for its vitality on the exquisite lyrics, and on that lovely episodic pastoral in miniature, "Come down, O maid, from yonder mountain height," where he returns to his finest early manner. "Maud" is singularly original in scheme and skilful in execution; but the bulk of it is too obviously executed, though there are lovely "bits," including the famous song. Its two finest things have lesser fame. One is that most pathetic and exquisite section: "Oh, that 'twere possible," &c. The other is the passage already referred to as having been written in youth: "I have led her home." It is in reality a perfectly detachable little poem; and nothing so wonderful in beauty, in music, in passionate intuition, did Tennyson ever write—or, it might almost be said, any other man. It is "of a higher mood" than the rest of his work; and both in style and for its insight into the very heart of love recalls some of the odes of Mr. Coventry Patmore, without losing anything of Tennyson's softer and more sensuous charm. Of "In

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON
From a Photograph by H. H. Hay Cameron

Memoriam," the weakness is that small and shallow, if admirably expressed, philosophy which did much to make it popular; nor is the pose of perpetual intensity without a feeling of unreality and affectation. If he were mourning a woman, it would almost be suspect; in the case of a male friend, it is impossible to resist the sensation that the poet is laying out his capital of grief to the very best interest. On the other hand, that Tennysonian faculty for which "description" is too dull a phrase, and "word-painting" too vile, is here carried to the highest point of skill. The poem contains a marvellous series of miniatures in this kind. Lastly come the "Idylls." Their finish and brilliancy are undeniable. Their narrative power is not matched in modern poetry; such a poem as "Gareth and Lynnette," for example, is a supreme example of a picturesque romance told with a pictorial beauty which holds the reader to the end. The pathos of some is not destroyed by the fact that there are details in which the pathos leans a little towards stage-effect. Diction and imagery retain their power, though with more evidence of labour. But the best critics are unanimous in refusing to consider the "Idylls" a great and unified work. Beyond the "Idylls" we, at any rate, will not go. The rest is dying embers.

To the earlier poems, then, we return. There Tennyson was content to be lyric and idyllic, and to be brief; his genius lay in miniature, and he kept to miniature. There is no attempt to make a long poem out of a sheaf of small poems. There he is magic and wonderful; his inspiration spontaneous enough not to be sicklied over by the careful choice of diction. There we have the series of classic idylls, the noble "Ulysses," "Æneid," with its glorious descriptive opening, the magical beauty and soft music of "Tithonus," "The Lotus-Eaters," that Tennysonian "Kubla Khan"; the "Palace of Art" and the "Dream of Fair Women"—which carry richly imaginative picture-making to its acme; the "Vision of Sin," with its strange melodiousness; all those smaller pieces, too numerous to name, which are filled with the very breath of young romance, and numbers of exquisite songs and lyrics; these belong to the early Tennyson. Those smaller pieces, indeed, we think the most quintessential of all Tennyson's work. The attempt to enumerate is an injustice, for the things we leave out are the very things we would have mentioned; and this shows the fertile richness of his genius at that youthful epoch. Here is the haunting Tennyson—the Tennyson, we believe, who will hold the ear of the ages.

That he is immortal let no reaction, no wish to be elect and distinguished from the multitude, make us dispute. Whether he or another was the greatest poet of his day is a thing of no moment to inquire. There is no such master of external finish in our tongue; his genius was like his style; he was not a prophet, save as every true poet has his measure of prophecy, greatest when he least dreams of it; he had little of the inward sight, but he saw outer things perfectly, and painted them unsurpassably. What remained constant in him throughout his career was the power of concentrating external images in a line or a phrase, so that they are veritably thrown and focussed on the retina of him who reads. The greatest masters, even Milton, did not surpass him in this; he cultivated it all his life, and it is the appropriate gift of a master of miniature. Examples can be taken by handfuls, even from those later poems which we have declined to think his greatest: we need go no further than the "Idylls."

"He bore
What dazzled all, and shone far off as shines
A field of charlock in the sudden sun
Between two showers, a cloth of palest gold."

That "leaps on the eyes," as the French say. Here is another vivid picture, vitalised by his exact observation of natural things:

"Bowl-shaped, thro' tops of many thousand pines
A gloomy-gladed hollow slowly sank
To westward—in the deeps whereof a mere,
Round as the red eye of an Eagle-owl,
Under the half-dead sunset glared."

The same minute observation could furnish him with felicitously imaginative images for internal things:

"Some, whose souls the old serpent long had drawn
Down, as the worm draws in the wither'd leaf
And makes it earth."

Not less could he draw from it images Homeric in their homely but beautiful aptness:

"Slowly falling as a scale that falls,
When weight is added only grain by grain,
Sank her sweet head upon her gentle breast."

His style, in the Greek idylls and the finest parts of "In Memoriam," had the classic calm, dignity, and order, combined at will with modern richness. No man was more capable of gnomic utterance, couched in language of memorable justness and restraint: witness "Of old sat Freedom on the heights," and many another piece. The truths were not subtle or original; but you felt that they were delivered straight to the target, and they were barbed to quiver in your mind. But the early poems had all these things and more. They had the air of the "golden clime" and the fields of dream, the "something afar," which is at the heart of all romance; and they conveyed it with a richness, as of spices and incense, which was like nothing else in our poetry. "Sir Galahad," the "Lady of Shalott," "Recollections of the Arabian Nights," the verses on "The Poet," all breathe it in different ways, as do the poems already enumerated. Then, too, Tennyson had passion, golden and wonderful. "Love and Duty" ranks with the Elizabethan love-poetry, with that great poem we have spoken of in "Maud," and with certain of Coventry Patmore's love-poems, for ardour and beauty, sublimated by imagination and the pathos of the "tears that are in human things." Grandeur and stateliness as a rule he did not reach. But that little fragment "The Eagle" is so splendidly fine as to be not far from sublimity. And in one of the poems of his middle period, "Lucretius," it is impossible to deny grandeur. There the melodiousness of his own blank-verse reaches at times something of a Miltonic involution and majesty. It is a masterly mingling of stateliness and beauty; his very greatest poem in the kind to which it belongs.

As a song-writer, looking to the number and the perfect beauty of his songs, we question whether he be not the greatest in the language. Wherever else he fails, in them he is never less than Tennyson. The tour de force of this versatile poet in experiments less purely or strictly poetical we do not care to discuss: it is not "The Northern Farmer" and its kind that will decide his place in song. At his best, he expressed external loveliness, whether of nature or romance, with beautiful perfection. It may not be the greatest thing a poet can do, but to the poet who can do it greatly I see not how we can deny greatness. What should be his place among other greatneses—does it matter very much? Unhappy the man who, in the presence of a beautiful woman, must vex his soul regarding her place among other beauties!

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

A LONDON LANE.

ITS LITERARY TRADITIONS.

THE announcement that the "Magpie and Stump" inn in Fetter-lane is about to be pulled down has revived the tradition which connects this place with the least happy episode in the life of Edmund Waller. Fetter-lane claims an even closer connexion with Dryden, and although neither tradition derives much support from history neither is unreasonable in itself. Other literary associations of Fetter-lane are secured to the street by good evidence; and, indeed, a tributary of Fleet-street which was ancient in Stow's day must needs have been walked in and dwelt in by notable men. But the "Magpie and Stump" story offers us something more definite. We are told that it was in a room on the second floor of this inn that Edmund Waller concocted with Mr. Chaloner and with his brother-in-law, Mr. Nathaniel Tomkins, the plot in favour of King Charles known as the Waller Plot. True, Clarendon, in relating the affair, says nothing about Fetter-lane. The best biography of Waller, the one prefixed to the edition of his poems dated 1711, is also silent on the scene of the plot, and so is Stockdale in his Life of the poet, and so is Johnson. Yet the tale which the landlords of the "Magpie and Stump" have told for more than two centuries is not so unlikely to be true that it need be harshly dealt with when the old inn is threatened with the crow-bar. The "Magpie and Stump" dates from 1605, and would, therefore, be well established in 1643, when Waller and his friends required its private room night after night. Tomkins and Chaloner were important men in the City, and it was their part to collect opinions there, as it was Waller's to bring news from Parliament. Tomkins, we know, had his house in Holborn, close to the top of Fetter-lane. The neighbourhood would be a convenient meeting-place between Westminster and the City.

But not only are the conspirators said to have met here for drink and conference; here they were captured on the day of their detection. The chronicler of the "Magpie and Stump" does not spare to be graphic, and we hear of Cromwell's steel-capped soldiery filling the Lane and catching the poet and his friends in a trap; also of stout oaken doors being beaten in before the party could be made prisoners. It is matter of history that the plot was betrayed by a servant of Tomkins, and at the "Magpie and Stump" it is among the articles of faith that this man "contrived to gain admission to the room before the conspirators arrived, and, concealing himself behind some hangings, overheard all that passed, and when they had departed hurried off to acquaint Mr. Praise-God Barebones, the leather-seller at the corner of Crane's-court in the Lane, one of the most bitter of Puritans, with what he had overheard."

It must have been a proud moment for Praise-God Barebones. Nor did he, though a Puritan, spoil dramatic effect; for it is recorded that the message which gave Pym his news of the plot was delivered to him in mid-sermon at St. Margaret's, Westminster, in the presence of the members of both Houses, the day being one of solemn fast. Pym whispered with various of his friends and hurried out of church. It was the sermon that was spoilt. Guards were sent hither and thither, and in the evening Parliament learned to its astonishment that the popular Mr. Waller and a number of persons of high and low degree had been arrested, and a great plot nipped in the bud. Probably it was not so great a plot as the accusing party made out. The Fetter-lane conspirators were charged with intending to secure the King's children, to seize Pym and the Puritan Lord Mayor, and to capture the Tower and the outworks of London. Clarendon, however, scouts these notions, and believes that the most Waller intended was to organise opposition to the granting of supplies to carry on the war, the issue of which had been rendered doubtful by the success of the King's arms at Bath, Bristol, and Edgehill. He suggests that violent measures may have been talked of by Lord Conway, who had joined the plot, and, being a soldier, might hint at using force—as, indeed, he might if the good liquor of the "Magpie and Stump" had loosened his gallant tongue.

There is nothing more terrible than frightened justice, and it was this that was meted out to the prisoners. History, not mere tradition, records the hanging of Tomkins at the top of Fetter-lane, within sight of the "Magpie and Stump" windows. Chalonier was hanged by his own front door in the Cornhill. Hassel, who had conveyed letters to the King at Oxford, saved his neck by promptly dying in his bed. Lords Portland and Conway were imprisoned, and a duke was admonished. And Waller? Waller now made those paroxysmal efforts to save his skin which are so little to his credit, but of which the success was so advantageous to literature. He feigned a remorse so acute that his trial was put off till he had "recovered his understanding." He used the interval to flatter or bribe every powerful person he could meet. He then pleaded his cause before Parliament with so much skill and assumed humility that he got off with a fine of £10,000 and a sentence of banishment. His personal and mental graces completed his reconciliation to his friends, and Clarendon says that the affair did him no harm in the end. This is easy to believe, since a few years later the author of the "Waller Plot" was entertaining Cromwell at his country home at Beaconsfield. In 1654 he published that panegyric of the Protector for which he made the wittiest of apologies to Charles II. in 1660. As for the "Magpie and Stump's" claims, nothing in this story can be apocryphal, except the locality; and when historians are wilfully dumb a Magpie may be allowed chatter.

The "Magpie and Stump" will follow to limbo a house which was standing twelve years ago in the lower part of Fetter-lane, against Fleur-de-Lys-court. This house, according to tradition and Peter Cunningham, had been occupied by Dryden. The poet's biographers know nothing of his residence there; but the house bore an inscribed stone, which it is hard to believe was built into its walls for nothing. It read:

"Here liv'd
John Dryden
Ye Poet,
Born 1631—Died 1700.
Glorious John!"

Otway is said to have lived here, opposite to Dryden, and there is a familiar story told of Otway's impatience at finding that Dryden was always breakfasting with some aristocratic person instead of being at home to a poor brother in rhyme. He chalked on Dryden's door the line:

"Here lives Dryden, a poet and a wit."

To which Dryden added:

"This was written by Otway, opposit."

Such trivialities never die. Hobbes, who really did live in Fetter-lane, and worked here on his Leviathan, is not noticed by Mr. Laurence Hutton in his Literary Landmarks of London. Here, fresh from Paris in 1651, he consorted with Selden and Harvey. And here, it must have been, that Evelyn found Hobbes on December 14, 1655: "I visited Mr. Hobbes, the famous philosopher of Malmesbury, with whom I had been long acquainted in France." Aubrey has left us a pleasing portrait of Hobbes when he was toiling at his Leviathan.

"He walked much, and contemplated; and he had in the head of his cane a pen and ink-horn, and carried always a note-book in his pocket; and as soon as a thought darted, he presently entered it in his book, or otherwise might have lost it. He had drawn the design of the book into chapters, and he knew whereabouts it would come in. Thus that book was made."

Just out of Fetter-lane, in Pemberton-row, lived the poet Flatman, from whom Mrs. Thrale thought Pope borrowed "The Dying Christian to his Soul," an opinion which Johnson met by calmly quoting Rochester's lines:

"Nor that slow drudge in swift Pindaric strains,
Flatman, who Cowley imitates with pains,
And rides a jaded Muse, whipt with loose reins."

The connexions of Fetter-lane with literature cannot be exhausted here. In Bartlett's passage, close to the "Magpie and Stump," Charles Lamb went to school under Mr. Bird. The schoolroom looked "into a dark, discoloured, dingy garden in the passage leading from Fetter-lane into Bartlett's buildings." Here from pot-hooks and hangers, Elia tells us, he advanced to a proficiency which enabled him to copy the motto: "Art improves nature."

BOOKS OF YESTERDAY AND TO-MORROW.

Of the futilities of contemporary judgment many books might be written. You have but to open the old reviews to see how entirely the great judgment that is not for a day sets aside the day's verdict. Time has swept with the wind of his scythe names writ in sand that contemporary critics had sworn to be written in marble. The dust of oblivion covers them, and even the most alert about literature have no association with their names.

It is not that criticism in those days was more inept than in our own. Every day the critics are making reputations that the great ultimate verdict is as steadily unmaking. Few of us are so young as not to have seen the rise and fall of names.

Perhaps, in a way, it is only just that the mediocrities should taste the sweets of to-day, seeing that to-morrow they are dead, and for all the to-morrows after that. Charles Lamb, who advocated, whimsically, that all the poor devils, ugly and old, should marry the beautiful young girls, and vice versa, might have wished the people of no future to enjoy the hour that is. Anyhow, it seems a law of literature that they should. The critics of a future age will laugh at and reverse our judgments of to-day, as we laugh at and reverse their judgments. It behoves the critic not to be proud.

But what is the unseen force behind the critics and the public, the tide that sweeps the false reputations into oblivion and the true to their own? What was it brought George Meredith to his kingdom after over twenty years of shameful neglect? No one that one knows of had written about him or suddenly boomed him into the public ear. The guides of public taste were dumb, and the people were deaf and blind, but the inevitable happened, and all at once we knew that we were dullards, and had had a great man among us for years, waiting "till this crowd should go by."

It is a hope and a faith we may take to our hearts, that in the end everything good is saved. The sifting is going on for ever out of sight that shall keep the wheat and let the chaff through. The sifting takes time. Mr. George Gissing has only lately emerged from neglect. He was recognised by a few from the beginning, but they were as a voice crying in the wilderness. There is always this measure of recognition for good work, that in fewer or greater number a body of sympathetic readers have taken it to their hearts. No good work is so neglected as not to have this.

The ear of the circulating-library public is one thing, the ear of the reading and book-buying public another. Women are the great patrons of Messrs. Mudie and W. H. Smith, and women of passive rather than active minds. This class nearly invariably goes wrong in its reading. It will choose the lesser before the greater, the pupil before his master. Mr. Crockett before Mr. Barrie, for example, and Mr. Ian Maclaren before both. But the other class, slow as it is to see the light unless it is flashed upon it in coruscations and fireworks, is loyal once it has found the light. With this class, sooner or later, the turn of the young writer of merit will come.

Of course, there are always critics who are true tasters, though the noise of the crowd may temporarily prevent their being heard. I would say that critics to-day, as a class, are men and women who honestly and humbly endeavour to serve literature. Of "log-rolling" I have no knowledge and no experience. Critics are gentler nowadays than of old. They will not trample the life out of a Keats, or scarify subjects too robust to die of their treatment. That many of them go wrong is inevitable. The noble pleasure of praising intoxicates some out of discretion, but at least it is a nobler form of failure than the criticism that lay in wait to bludgeon genius and garrot young talent.

People engaged in literary work will understand the difference between a literary reputation and a public one. Those whom writers, in their own circles, delight to honour in more or less degree are just those whose names have never reached the outside public. Yet in those circles all work of real merit is known and praised, and it is but the beginning of the wave that will carry a reputation in ever-widening circles farther than we can see.

Of course, the time of waiting is hard, and often enough it may be too hard for the probationer's faith and hope. I should like to mention the names of a good many young writers whose books have not yet met due recognition, though they must have a fit audience, however few. One name that specially occurs to me is that of Mr. J. H. Pearce. Mr. Pearce has written novels of which I know nothing as to their merit, or the extent of their success or failure. The two books of his I know intimately are Drolls from Shadowland and Tales of the Masque. These half-allegorical incidents and stories are at once fairly elusive, and yet full of heart's blood and tears. A mist of dreams lies on them, and they are of the stuff of human life. Honestly, I believe these little books to be the work of genius. More than this I cannot say, in face of what I have written of far more competent critics in their day.

Another book that occurs to me is By Thrasna River, by Mr. Shan F. Bullock. It is not surprising that this book should not have made a popular success as it did a literary. With perfect patience and perfect quietness, bit by bit it builds up the life of the North of Ireland. It is realism of the finest sort, and as one turns the pages to one familiar with the country there comes a whiff of the peat-smoke which is the all-pervading atmosphere of Ulster.

And this brings me to a little and sweet immortality which is for many writers whose work would never survive in the great body of English literature, and which is surely for By Thrasna River. Anglo-Irish literature is not so overcrowded yet that one has not the conspicuousness which belongs to comparatively early English writers. Perhaps immortality is too big a word for mortals. Remembrance were a better, and even a sweeter.

KATHARINE TYNAN.

THE BOOK MARKET.

MORE "BOOK SALES."

MR. TEMPLE SCOTT apologises so handsomely for the lateness in the appearance of his Book Sales for 1896 (George Bell & Sons) that it would be ungracious to refer to the matter in any other terms. Many bookmen will consider this volume worth the long wait. In bulk, in paper and type, and in general thoroughness it strikes us equally favourably. Mr. Scott gives reports of about seventy important book sales, in the compilation of which he has borne in mind the needs both of the book-collector and the book-seller. A feature of these reports is the number of careful notes explanatory of the "points" of individual books. In a thoughtful introduction Mr. Temple Scott generalises on the facts and figures tabulated in the body of the work, and draws five general conclusions on the tendencies of prices, which we take the liberty of printing below.

"1. Illustrated sporting books are bringing higher prices than ever—particularly those illustrated in colours by Henry Alken and John Leech. Collectors of these and other works seem bent on securing them at any price. The year which could point to the purchase of a Walton's Angler for £415 is a year in which collectors who have bought 'Sporting Books' in the past may begin to congratulate themselves.

"2. An increasing interest and a consequent increase in price of first editions of books which may be classed as 'English literature.' This is proved by the prices paid for such works as Shakespeare's Pericles (£171); Burns's Poems (£121); Goldsmith's Traveller (£96); Browning's Pauline (£145); Wycherley's Miscellaneous Poems (£46); Herick's Hesperides (£38); Milton's Lycidas (£85); Spenser's Faerie Queen (£85); &c.

"3. A revival of the mania for extra-illustrated books. In connexion I need only cite Wangen's Treasures of Art (£40); Ames's Typographical Antiquities (£248); Forster's Life of Dickens (£252); and Gilray's Caricatures (£59). Of course, the values of such books always depend on the quality and quantity of the illustrations with which they have been Grangerised.

"4. A continued interest in Americana. A few of these books sold this year have been particularly rare; but it is astonishing how high the prices have been—Morten's New England's Memorial (£50); Pynchon's Place of Man's Redemption (£15 10s.); Hubbard's Troubles with the Indians (£111); Raleigh's Guiana (£51); Smith's Virginia (£204); Vespuccio's Letter on Mundus Novus (£176).

"5. An increasing demand for the first editions of the works of Robert Louis Stevenson and Rudyard Kipling. For Stevenson's works the prices have, if anything, slightly decreased. Yet a set of them brought £67, and a copy of his Charity Bazaar realised as much as £15. The most notable of Mr. Kipling's books was a copy of the Anglo-Indian Civil and Military Gazette, the first recorded appearance of this work in a sale room. It fetched £15.

Mr. Scott notes also a decline in the value of first editions of Dickens and Thackeray, and "a sudden revival in interest for Kelmscott Press publications."

BOOKSELLERS' WINDOWS.

PICCADILLY.

A few yards westward of Piccadilly-circus stands the shop of Mr. Quaritch. In sober phrase "Quaritch's" is one of the greatest second-hand bookshops in the world. But it does not look it, and the multitude pass by, conscious only of a black, plain, symmetrical shop-front displaying folios.

If proof were needed that Mr. Quaritch were a great bookseller it would surely be found in his magnificent contempt for the ordinary roving book-buyer. Here in pleasure-loving Piccadilly, in the midst of restaurants and theatres and ladies' shops, on a pavement crowded with money-spenders—what wares does Mr. Quaritch offer to the eye? Distant's Rhopalocera Malayana may be amusing reading, but it hardly looks it. Legge's History of the Birds of Ceylon, Badger's English-Arabic Lexicon, Collinson's History of Somerset, the Catalogue of the Exhibition at the Ironmongers' Hall, and Seeborn's Geographical Distribution of Plovers, Sandpipers, and Snipes are books that one respects on sight; but who but Mr. Quaritch could put them, without relief, into a West End shop window? Yet a thoughtful Londoner is grateful for "Quaritch's." Piccadilly has need of such an anomaly, and who can measure the force of persuasion and protest which that display of quiet, dingy folios has exercised these forty years! How many minds has it recalled from frivolity and vain quests to seriousness and the beauty of learning! How many has it made to ponder with Milton:

"Alas, what boots it with incessant care
To tend the homely, slighted shepherd's trade?

Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair?
Fame is the spur which the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble minds,
To scorn delights, and live laborious days?"

Scholarship, however, is for the few; culture is for all; and Piccadilly gives us the modern bookshop in its highest development. "Sotheran's" and "Hatchard's" appeal to modern men and women, and their shops are wonderful proofs of the intellectual appetites of the day. And their invariable admixture of books which appeals to the "Barbarians" does but give a welcome stiffening and a local flavour to the windows of Piccadilly booksellers. The Badminton Library is always well to the front, old coaching books and sporting prints are never far to seek, and the biographies of pugilists and foxes mingle pleasantly with those of statesmen and authors.

ART.

VICTORIAN PAINTERS AT THE GUILDHALL.

IN the Guildhall collection we may show to Frenchmen—who are more interested than we in what is nationally English art—an historical record of the past sixty years that does us, on the whole, no shame. Two or three representative painters, one of whom is Rossetti, do not appear well, though the pre-Raphaelite room is generally well furnished; and the latter years of the sixty are not illustrated by a single example of the work of Mr. Henry Tuke, Mr. Arthur Lemon, Mr. Arthur Tomson, Mrs. Stanhope Forbes, or Mr. Shannon. A beautiful little Cotman is the picture which most directly takes us back into a good time before English art had even begun the lifeless and vulgar phase against which the young pre-Raphaelite arose. John Sell Cotman was the last of a band of painters, noble colourists, profound impressionists, and students of light in its relation to the darker side of the palette—a relation lost, it seems, for many years, but sought for once more now by some of the younger Scottish painters. Not one of these last is at Guildhall, though their very different elders, Mr. Peter Graham and his contemporaries, are fully represented. In fact, one begins by praising the choice of the collection, because absences do not immediately suggest themselves; but little by little they come to mind in the form of so many little queries to which there is no evident answer. The faults of omission are obviously less painful to speak of than the faults of commission, but these also are many.

Sir John Millais, who, like Tennyson, always had a public of his contemporaries, and was as young as his first admirers and as old as his latest, appears by some of his most famous works—"The Huguenot," a careful picture of rather defective dramatic action, or so it seems to us now; and "Chill October," and "The Blind Girl." In the landscape one admires the literal painting of a foreground of sedges, although the whispering company has no great beauty; but the distance is rather dull, the sky rather lifeless; the picture has not quite enough of the unmistakable daylight to excuse its lack of sweetness. "The Blind Girl" is a singularly complete example of the point-blank painting—the painting at exceedingly close quarters—which the English pre-Raphaelites really seem to have contributed, as their very own, to the history of art. It is unlike anything done in Siena, Flanders, Florence, or Umbria, if our eyes have any power of comparison. With Millais this work à bout portant, which puts us on such strange terms with distant things, is executed with fulness and richness of execution. But in Ford Madox Brown's work—"The Last of England" is the instance—the painting has not this kind of beauty: there is lack of style in the mere manner of striking the unwilling eye with details of distant figures—the gaps in this man's teeth and the black edges to that man's nails. Is it not Schopenhauer who had the wit to inquire after one of the puzzles of human conditions, and found that a man born blind, to whom sight was given, tried to grasp the things that he first saw and clutch them within his own eyes; they had to hold his hands? Now, Ford Madox Brown seems to lodge all the detail of "The Last of England" somewhere closer than nature has seated the sense of sight, and we would willingly remove the things he so presses upon us. They are overcharged with laborious, but otherwise cheap, ingenuities, and are painted like a second-rate miniature out of place. Mr. Holman Hunt is also among the pre-Raphaelites, with his shrill picture of "May Morning on Magdalen Tower, Oxford"; Mr. Sandys, showing far less well as a painter than his fine work in black and white seemed to promise; Mr. Arthur Hughes, with a distressing green and purple picture—"April Love"; Mr. Brett, with an acute high-pitched "Stone-breaker"—a view of Box Hill and the distant country—a painting the tone of which in its relation to the tone of nature, as art traditionally feels and renders it, is something like the note of a bat in relation to a note of music. The work is carried far in completeness, and not without an extraordinary skill and intentness upon natural fact; and to some it may seem a picture. A most interesting name—that of Mr. Simeon Solomon—reappears; he is represented by a beautiful "Dawn," imaginative, graceful, and decked with soft plum colours, in sweet contrast to the violet of Mr. Hughes, close by. The catalogue is rather capricious in dating some pictures and not others; Mr. Simeon Solomon painted some twenty years later than the very pre-Raphaelites. And it is worth while to say that the catalogue has several faults. In the description of Lord Leighton's "Cymon and Iphigenia" there is a too sprightly passage about a time when "lovely ladies might sleep under the breath of a May night . . . with no guard save two lady attendants." A man is very plainly to be seen slumbering with his back against a tree. This picture, by its extreme beauty of design, in which a world of studies comes to an inanimate close, by its refined and educated feeling, by suggestions of a freer beauty in the landscape and the rising moon, and by the singular lifelessness of the Western light that lies upon the figures, represents the painter completely. Lord Leighton used to find that his visitors, when he showed the picture, were as like as not to take the moon, rising in the east, for a sun—whether rising in the east or setting in the west they would no doubt have been puzzled to say. Nor were they prepared with a theory of the warm light that reveals all the sleeping figures with their local colours to the visiting Cymon; but some little of this perplexity is chargeable less upon the general carelessness in regard to the career of day and night than upon the painter's rendering of a light that is light without vibration of nimble and lively atmosphere.

One of the greatest of the chief Constable landscapes, "Fording the River," is Victorian only in so much as the master died in the year of the Queen's accession. Turner is represented as a figure-painter, not without credit, and fairly as a sea-impressionist, by two—the Venice twilights. Müller's famous "Chess-Players" is here, and Wilkie's "Penny Wedding." By Mason there is the lovely "Harvest Moon"; and by Walker one of the best of his oil-pictures, "The Old Gate."

None of the pictures at the Guildhall would be in an absolutely bad place but for the glass that turns some of them into mirrors once for all. There is no point wherefrom you can see Mr. Albert Godwin's "City of Dis." It may be conjectured to be a work of imagination; there are high towers that lead up the flame from within the streets, but they vent it against a sky, and the local hell of Dante had any thing in the world except a sky. It is perhaps with an intention of interesting the City that pictures with a story are here so much in the majority. A "Lady Godiva," a "Le Roi est Mort," a "Queen Elizabeth Receiving the French Ambassador after the Massacre of St. Bartholomew," and a "Babylonian Marriage Market," were probably chosen for this kind of adventitious interest. In the last-named, by the late Edwin Long, that interest was so strong that the picture was sold, during the painter's lifetime, for six thousand guineas. It is really a work—ingenious as an illustration—of very little character, of low vitality, and essentially dull. Against Mr. Frith's "Ramsgate Sands" it is hardly necessary to protest; but Mr. Alma Tadema's "Women of Amphiassa" has hardly more true distinction or spirit, in spite of the altogether different and advanced execution. Lady Butler's "Roll-Call" is lent by the Queen for exhibition, not for the first time since the famous picture held its record crowd in the Academy, and a more recent memory is that of Mr. Waterhouse's beautiful "St. Cecilia." This is the work of a colourist and of a master of pictorial vision, so noble is the quality of the white, the blue, and the gold, so pure a picture-scene is the central distance. Mr. Swan's two works, "Tigers at Dawn" and "The Piping Fisher-Boy," are both masterly, the latter being one of the most tenderly painted and delicate pictures of its time. Mr. Sargent is represented by his brilliant portrait of "Mrs. Hammersley," painted in gleams and flashes of lighted surfaces, with life in the traces and touches of the painter's hand The figure, by the way, is not on the point of rising, as is shown by the position of the feet, it is simply resting with spirit. Different is this from the balloon lightness of a figure weakly drawn, by the way. It is a pleasure to see again the "Hopeless Dawn" of Mr. Bramley, and the "Fish Sale on the Cornish Coast" of Mr. Stanhope Forbes, both full of beautiful quality and of living daylight. Mr. Peter Graham's picture is a highland hillside wildness without distance—short views of solitude, for the bluish mist fills the prospect; horned cattle are there, but not so much as a single Sabbatarian is in sight. "A Corvette Shortening Sail to Pick up a Shipwrecked Crew" is by far the best mid-sea picture. The postscript of omissions—sudden and sufficient—is that there is no Mr. Whistler at Guildhall. A. M.

DRAMA.

ANY play written in whole or part by M. Sardou is praised for its "stage-craft" as a matter of course. But I confess I am quite unable to see any ingenuity of construction in "Madame Sans-Gêne." The interest is centred in Catherine, and yet the crisis of the play does not really concern her, except as an occasion for talk, and is brought to a solution by somebody else. It is a one-part play, and that part, though productive of some amusing comedy—farical comedy, to be sure—is exaggerated beyond all plausibility. The comedy is simply in the juxtaposition of vulgarity with high position. But one cannot believe that so shrewd a woman could have remained so unobservantly vulgar, or, at least, that a life of dangerous activity could have left her so trivial. I have an objection to historical plays which are unhistorical, when I happen to know that they are so, but that is a comparatively unimportant matter. It is a worse fault that the play does not stand the test of any knowledge of character, but it is a far worse that its merely theatrical interest is not brought to anything like a fitting climax. Such a climax would have been the triumph of Catherine over the malicious sisters and the prejudice of Napoleon; as it is, when that triumph, which, in spite of the old washing bill, is not very dramatic, is all over, there is an anti-climax of the fate of Neipperg, whom nobody cares about, and of Marie Louise, whom nobody sees. No; "Madame Sans-Gêne" is not a good play.

Its one merit is that it gives a clever actress an opportunity for a study in vulgarity. To that everything was sacrificed originally, and Mr. Comyns Carr, recognising the situation, completed the sacrifice by a free use of contemporary English slang, reducing the play to absurdity, as a play, and destroying any vestige of illusion in it, but allowing Miss Ellen Terry to give us a close and literal study of Cockney womanhood. In this rôle, so utterly alien to her familiar parts, she entered with all the abandonment of the artist she is. One has seen her in so many parts in which she was refined and gentle, or at the most arch and coquettish, and one is so unused to versatility in English actresses, that the sight of Miss Terry flopping about, putting her arms akimbo and the rest of it, took one's breath away. I am not sure that her accent, though by no means Miss Terry's, was broad enough, but that apart there can be nothing but praise for her playing in the prologue, in which she has to be the young washerwoman simply. She reminded me, as she seems to have reminded a more eminent critic, of Miss Bessie Bellwood, and I can imagine no greater compliment to an actress playing a Cockney girl. I am not sure that her acting in the play proper was equally admirable. I will not say, indeed, she overdid the vulgarity: that was accomplished by Messrs. Sardou and Moreau and Comyns Carr, and without the excessive vulgarity the play would be nothing at all. But I think she might have combined with it a little more of an air of self-respect in the scene with Napoleon's sisters—an ill-written scene, since Catherine's manners are infinitely better than those of the sisters themselves—and a little more sense of Napoleon's power and strength in her interview with him. Her comedy here was not on the same level of meaning with Sir Henry Irving's. However, on the lines of her conception she was excellent throughout, and one salutes gratefully a distinguished tour de force of acting.

It is impossible, in noting the acting of a well-known historical personage, to free one's mind from physical accidents. However much of the Napoleonic spirit Sir Henry Irving may have expressed, it was impossible to forget that he is tall and thin, and that Napoleon was short and stout. The very cleverness of his make-up made me think of the contrast all the more. But allowing for that so far as I can, I do not think he was like Napoleon. There was a certain loftiness about him which Napoleon expressed, no doubt, at times, but which one cannot associate with his fits of temper and scolding. His humour was grim, as was Napoleon's, but it had not that smack of fun which one associates with the anecdotes. There was something remote in Sir Henry Irving, something northerly austere; he was not the Corsican, full of power, no doubt, but also full of life, and with a relish for it. But this is merely to bring out my own preconception, as one must, inevitably, in watching such a part. Sir Henry made every point the authors had given him, exposed every grade of feeling, from passionate anger to playfulness, with the certainty one expected; but I have liked him better in a dozen other parts.

On the too few occasions on which I have seen Mr. Mackintosh he has seemed to me an admirably delicate and resourceful actor. His parts have not allowed me to call him an actor of the first rank, but that I shall be able to call him so some day I have little doubt. His Fouché is as good as can be; it is perhaps the one part in the piece which the authors have allowed to be "convincing," and Mr. Mackintosh does every justice to it. I have read some memoirs of Fouché which quite support the character in the play—selfish, humorous, able, conceited, unscrupulous. Mr. Mackintosh expressed it all. Miss Gertrude Kingston had the trying part of the Queen of Naples, and played it, I thought, very cleverly and with an excellent air. Miss Julia Arthur, looking very stately and proud, followed her lead with effect. Their quarrelling scene was delightful. Mr. Cooper as Lefebvre, and Mr. Webster as Neipperg, played carefully and adequately. Mr. Norman Forbes made much of the amusing little part of the dancing-master. The rest of the very large cast lacked opportunity of distinction.

I SUPPOSE Mr. Comyns Carr did well in using contemporary slang and a modern mode of speech generally. It enabled him to give Miss Terry a most effective part. And the play was not good enough to stand as an exotic. That being allowed, his translation was racy and vigorous. All the scenes were well mounted, but especially the prologue, in which, besides, there was an excellent management of crowds.

G. S. S.

MUSIC.

THE BACH FESTIVAL.

A SUCCESSFUL Bach Festival is a welcome sign of progress, and one, indeed, for which the musical public is in no small measure indebted to Wagner. He not only spent his life fighting against the false, fighting for the true, but by his wonderful polyphonic writing he revived the spirit of the music of the old master. Mendelssohn, it is true, did much to make Bach known; Wagner more to make him understood. Many, no doubt, look upon the Bach Festival as a religious function. To a great extent the same may be asserted of the Handel Festival; but Bach's sacred music was written for church service, and not, like that of Handel, for concert performance. If religious feeling prompts any persons to listen attentively to Bach, it is a proper one; religion and art may be distinct, but in this instance the one ennobles the other. It is only sad to see how sometimes music of a very inferior kind gains a hold merely by reason of the sacred words with which it is associated. While on the subject of sacred music, I would notice the request made in the programme-book of the Matthew "Passion," that the audience should abstain from applause. It was, perhaps, necessary, but surely it was equally so in the case of the "Hohe Messe," when foolish applause both jarred against religious and artistic feeling.

The Festival commenced at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening with the Matthew "Passion." Of the five vocalists—Miss Fillinger, Mme. M. McKenzie, and Messrs. Kaufmann, Rumford, and Harford—the first and third were the most satisfactory. There was some good singing on the part of the choir, yet, altogether, the performance was very far from impressive. I shall speak presently of the conductor, whose coldness was at its lowest point on this evening. In the week previous Mr. Henschel gave the same work at his closing concert, so that comparison was inevitable. To discuss the respective merits of the companies of solo vocalists—Mme. McKenzie sang in both—would involve too great digression, but the rendering of the "Passion" under Mr. Henschel was altogether more sympathetic, and therefore more satisfactory. Dr. Stanford's attempt to reproduce the tone-colour of Bach's orchestra fully justified the use of a harpsichord for the ordinary recitatives; with an arranged score a grand pianoforte would, however, prove more suitable.

I must deal very briefly with the selection on Wednesday. It included two of the Church Cantatas, "Wachet, betet," and "Wachet auf," the latter of which is certainly one of the finest. And in this same cantata the choir sang with spirit and intelligence. Sir Walter Parratt played the "Tocatta and Fugue in D minor" in admirable style. To hear that fine piece on the organ was indeed a treat; it is so frequently heard as a pianoforte transcription, and, however skilful the player, more or less caricatured. Dr. Joachim was the soloist in the "Concerto in E for Violin and Orchestra." He also gave the "Chaconne." In Bach's music Dr. Joachim, although hard pressed by younger men, is still without a rival.

On Saturday afternoon was performed the Mass in B minor, a work specially associated with the Bach Choir. In the Matthew Passion, with exception of the opening chorus, the composer keeps as it were in the background—he is not so much setting a text to music as illustrating, illuminating it by means of his art. Bach, of course, was engaged in a similar task in his Mass, only here he was able to make freer and grander display of his musical gifts. In the Passion not only is the Gospel narrative strictly followed, but the musical, also the dramatic, thread is inconveniently broken at times by the Chorales. Wonderfully are they harmonised by Bach, and in their way most impressive, yet if the musician forget—as flashes of genius in the recitatives and short choral numbers, also the rich details in the accompaniments to the arias may tempt him to do—that he is, or rather ought to be, taking part in a service, he is apt to kick against these chorales. A fine cathedral is really the only edifice in which readers can really feel, or fancy themselves, worshippers. In the Mass, on the other hand, the words determine the various moods, but not the form of the various movements; in this work, therefore, Bach was able to reveal his powers in higher degree. And yet the moods are so strong that science is felt rather than perceived. It is not the wonderful counterpoint in the five-part chorus, "Confiteor unam baptismam" which renders that movement so deeply convincing. Musicians may be lost in wonder at the striking harmonies of the "Crucifixus," and at the bold, stately progressions of the "Sanctus," yet anyone of sensitive nature, without being able to analyse a single chord, must be spell-bound by the pathos of the one, the dignity of the other. Analysis may show the skill of the workmanship, but cannot reveal the secret which gives life and power to the music.

I am tempted to write about the Mass rather than about the performance. I readily acknowledge that some of the solo vocal numbers were well rendered; of the four singers—Mmes. M. Henson and M. McKenzie, and Messrs. Kaufmann and Black—the first and third entered best into the meaning and spirit of the music. I enjoyed the earnestness of the choral singing in the "Gloria," the "Et resurrexit," and the "Sanctus," three movements of superlative difficulty, although the quality of tone of the sopranos in high notes was not good, neither were the basses powerful enough in the "Sanctus." The Leeds Choir are announced, and this, of course, tends to make one hypercritical. There were, however, two drawbacks—the conductor and the composition of the orchestra. Dr. Stanford is an accomplished musician, and no doubt much of the excellent singing of the choir was due to his exertions. But his attitude towards the music is for the most part cold: this was especially noticeable in the accompaniments to the solos, which were often left in a happy-go-lucky sort of way to take care of themselves. Were the "Choral Symphony," "Tristan," or "Parsifal" performed in similar fashion, how disastrous would be the result! And yet Bach's music demands the same attention to details of phrasing and expression. Dr. Stanford's manner appears cold, but of this it would be unfair to complain. I am judging him by results. And now for a word respecting the orchestra. We accept the "Messiah," "Samson," and other oratorios of Handel with orchestration more or less modern. Why should we not do something as much for Bach's great Mass? The attempt to present the music with original scoring is only partially successful, and however interesting from an archaeological point of view it may be to see and hear the old trumpets, the sounds they reproduce are often the reverse of pleasant. I believe that if the Mass were judiciously arranged, to meet modern requirements, by a thoroughly competent master of modern orchestration and one also thoroughly familiar with Bach's music, the effect would be stupendous. Bach did not select his orchestra as the fittest, but took the only one at his disposal. This question of modern accompaniments generally provokes wrath; the strong desire to preserve the past as long as possible is praiseworthy, though only up to a certain point; after this it argues, if not ignorance, obstinacy.

SCIENCE.

THERE was a notable meeting last week held for the purpose of instituting a national memorial to Edward Jenner. The Duke of Westminster, whose broad-mindedness on the subject of scientific research is a set-off against his superlative sensitiveness about Armenia, took the chair and proposed the first resolution, which was that this country should take active and effective steps to preserve the great legacy which Jenner left behind him, and to forward the movement for the prevention of disease which he so successfully started a century ago. Most civilised nations have already celebrated the centenary of the discovery of vaccination with a fervour which could not have been exceeded had Jenner been their own countryman. It is only England—the happy hunting-ground of the faddist and the sentimentalist, the country which prefers to see its soldiers dying like flies of a loathsome disease rather than incur even the suspicion of encouraging vice—it is only England which has forgotten to honour the name of Jenner.

BUT this reproach at least is to remain no longer. The commemoration scheme, as explained by Lord Lister, is that funds should be collected to endow the recently erected laboratory of the British Institute of Preventive Medicine on Chelsea Embankment, the income of which at present does not amount to more than £700, and that if the resulting sum is really considerable the Institute should change its somewhat unwieldy title to the simpler one of "The Jenner Institute." The Jenner Institute would work in friendly rivalry with that magnificent and far-reaching laboratory in Paris which bears the name of Pasteur, its founder; and as the work which will be done by it is the most humane and the most necessary that it is possible to imagine, I should like to recommend to the Cobbes and the Haweises that they should cease from vilifying its objects and subscribe handsomely to its funds. It would be the most graceful and sensible act that the Victoria-street Society ever committed, if it could be persuaded to abandon its career of misguided opposition and divert its revenues to furthering the cause of humanity and the prevention of disease.

LORD LISTER, in detailing the scope of the new institution, quoted a few recent instances of successful work on similar lines to that first laid down by Jenner. Dr. Koch, who was lately invited by the Cape Government to investigate the causes of rinderpest, has found out that by using the bile of an infected animal to inoculate healthy ones the latter can be protected against the pestilence for some months certainly. Time is still required to show how long the protection lasts. Again, Dr. Yessin's treatment of the Bombay plague, so far as native prejudices allowed it to be tried, have been strikingly successful; and hundreds of English parents have reason to know and to bless the properties of the diphtheria antitoxin which is now in common use. Besides these instances, cholera, tetanus, puerperal fever, and among animals anthrax and swine fever, are all being treated successfully by means of researches carried out on the principle of Jenner; nor should one forget to include in the connexion Lord Lister's own great work, the introduction of antiseptic surgery, which has saved so many lives. And after all this one's mind reverts to Gloucester, where, within a few miles of Jenner's own home, a foolish revolt against vaccination has but lately played havoc with the population, and left behind it a sorry trail of scarred and blinded children, and one wonders whether to a certain class of intellect facts present any meaning at all.

In the current number of Blackwood Dr. Louis Robinson has given a fresh turn to the lament for the vanishing naturalist. The latter is, he says, a survival of the prehistoric instinct, and, therefore, worthy of utmost cultivation, instead of the snubbing which it is his lot to receive at British Association meetings, and so forth. I like the pretty imaginative touch which Dr. Robinson has. His vision of the cave-man sallying forth to hunt, and of the signs that befall him by the way, is as convincing in its manner as a description by Fenimore Cooper of a Red Indian on the trail. Dr. Robinson's article, by the way, is a plea for the cultivation of Darwinism by amateurs, quite as much as of amateurs by professionals, and puts very forcibly the advantages of a thorough scientific training to those who intend to pursue the study of nature. I think he rather ignores the influence of field clubs and the like in encouraging this pursuit, and regards the amateur as more nearly extinct than the facts fully warrant. Otherwise there is no doubt that the tendency of the times is for field naturalists to diminish or become converted into laboratory specialists, and that the habit of minute observation, especially when accompanied by an instinct for reasoning back to causes or forward to effects, is associated with the earliest needs of man, and is as vital to his nature as the olfactory sense is to that of the dog.

H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

National Liberal Club: April 10.

In his review of my Adventures of John Johns your reviewer says: "Much of the book is an undoubtedly clever adaptation to English surroundings of the plot of the French novel" (Maupassant's).

Will you therefore allow me to deny that there is any adaptation in my story of the plot of Bel-Ami? If in some few features there is a slight resemblance, it is either fortuitous or incidental to development from a somewhat similar starting-point.

I am obliged to your critic for his assurance that there is "no real realism" in my portrayal of the journalist in John Johns; but my experience has been different to his. It is, however, a frequent error of reviewers to imagine that whatever they do not happen to have met with in real life cannot exist.

FREDERICK CARREL.

WORDSWORTH AS PROSE WRITER.

Balham: April 12.

In your review of Mr. Knight's prose works of Wordsworth (ACADEMY, 10th inst.), a couplet from Swift's "Poetry, a Rhapsody," is attributed to Byron. The passage runs:

"Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For these our critics much confide in,
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling."

AVARY H. FORBES.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Wise and the Wayward." By G. S. Street. (John Lane.)
"THE commonness of the theme [an unhappy marriage] is not," says the St. James's, "associated with commonplace treatment. Nothing could be further removed from the undistinguished and the ordinary than Mr. Street's method and style." "Seldom," writes the Pall Mall, "do we find a story-teller whose style and thought are in such perfect harmony. Just as the effectiveness of Mr. Street's tale does not depend upon glaring incident or impossible smartness of dialogue, so his style disdains the noisy altogether. . . . His humour is not obtrusive but of the pervasive sort." So also the Chronicle: "His smartness is well restrained, his cleverness is not troublesomely in evidence. . . . Mildred Ashton is delightful but just a trifle overdrawn. Mr. Street has underlined her too much. . . . It is a seamy world to which he introduces us; a world of tepid amours, of feeble and futile flirtations, of paltry intrigues inspired by the narrowest kind of selfishness. But Mr. Street knows his world, and presents it with fidelity and with literary dexterity." "A favourite blemish of the author's," says the Manchester Guardian, "is a certain frivolous egoism in his comments."

"Hilda Strafford." By Beatrice Harraden. (Blackwood.)
"THE curious, elusive charm," writes the Chronicle, "with which Miss Beatrice Harraden succeeded in investing" her two earlier works "is strangely wanting in these two stories. They are good, straightforward, well-told stories, but . . . Californian life and scenery seem to have had a deleterious effect upon Miss Harraden's imagination. . . . The book is not so strong or so interesting as we had been led confidently to expect from Miss Harraden's earlier work." "The volume maintains the high level reached by Miss Harraden in her former work," says the Daily News; also, her talent "has a certain quality of uniqueness in its delicacy and quaintness. It is at once very feminine and very original. . . . The tragedies she records are rather implicit than explicit." "Slight, but good," the Standard pronounces the tales to be; and "the book has a value, apart from that of a story, in the hints it gives of what life must be in those far-off regions that some imagine must hold fortune simply because they are distant." To the Manchester Guardian's mind the contradictions in the character of the heroine "are not convincingly reconciled."

"The Man of Straw." By Edwin Pugh. (Heinemann.)
SAYS the Telegraph: ". . . The Man of Straw places its author in the front ranks of the new realism: . . . every stroke of his pen carries conviction with it. . . . The author writes, nevertheless, with the instinct of an artist; he selects his incidents with marvellous skill." But "there can be no excuse for any contemporary of Mr. Whistler who persists in seeing only dirt in a misty day." The author's "whole mental horizon is pervaded by gloom, and Nature shares for him in the degradation of humanity."

His cleverness "is in no way proportionate to the requirements of a book of this nature," says the St. James's, "... and the essentially horrible elements of the story entirely outweigh Mr. Pugh's literary capacity." "At times," says the Athenæum, "Mr. Pugh shows considerable literary skill. . . . But the gruesome narrative soon comes to the surface again, and effaces every pleasant impression." So also the Manchester Guardian opines that the author's "undeniable power . . . fails to reconcile the reader to his choice of a subject." An "epic of scoundrelism," pronounces the Chronicle, which has not felt so miserable for a long time; for "he writes with an air of reality that carries unquestioning conviction. With the best intentions in the world, we are unable to doubt a word he says."

"Clarissa Furiosa." By W. R. Norris. (Methuen.)
"PERHAPS the elaboration may be a trifle in excess of the limit which art imposes," writes the National Observer, "but having regard to the difficulty of the main motive [which the Athenæum hints might be suspected to be a reductio ad absurdum of A Yellow Aster], and the obstacles standing in the way of its refined treatment, the delicacy of Mr. Norris's method more than compensates for any excess of elaboration." The Pall Mall has only to regret that in the case of Loosemore the author "has broken his rule of compassionate large-minded tolerance, and written vindictively." To the Standard it is "a little unexpected to find Mr. Norris suddenly dealing with the marriage question," but it is "with so much good humour and moderation that his book becomes at once a notable one." Clarissa, to the mind of the Telegraph, carries its author "a step higher than any point to which he had previously attained." The amalgamated National Observer and British Review devotes an article to the book under the heading, "A Novel by a Gentleman."

"Lads' Love." By S. R. Crockett. (Bliss, Sands.)
"DECIDED symptoms of decline and deterioration" are noted by the Pall Mall in Mr. Crockett's new book: "it shows how limited is his range of characters, how slender his ingenuity in devising a plot, and how commonplace his diction." "Rarely," writes the Athenæum, "has the author drawn more truly from life than in the cases of Nance and the Hempie . . . never more typical Scotsman . . . than Peter Chrystie, their father, and so of the rest. "The charm of the book lies in its healthy sentiment" ["vague sensuality": "Criticus" in the Saturday], "its overflowing humour, and its sympathetic insight into life and character." "Are they human? Are they Scotch? Are they anything?" inquires "Criticus." Also "Criticus," in his article "Muscular Presbyterianism," observes: "That he happens to hit so exactly the public's taste is not his fault, but rather his misfortune. No one reading this book will really suppose that Mr. Crockett is a hypocrite who loves not his own work. . . . I am sure that Mr. Crockett is a really stupid and (if I may say so without impertinence) a really good man."

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEARLY READY.—Price to Subscribers, Twelve Shillings net, payable in advance.
A SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME TO "THE OXFORD CHAUCER."
 EDITED BY PROFESSOR SKEAT.

Demy 8vo, pp. lxxxiv. + 608, uniform in all respects with the Library Edition of Chaucer's Works in Six Volumes, 1894.

CHAUCERIAN AND OTHER PIECES.

Edited from numerous Manuscripts by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

This Selection includes all the most important among the numerous pieces in prose and verse which have been appended to Chaucer's Works in various editions, including those of Thynne, Stowe, Speght, and Tyrwhitt. Nearly every piece reprinted now appears in an improved form; and in several cases MSS. not previously examined have been collated, and have proved to be the best. The NOTES are nearly all new.

* * The Subscription List will be closed before the publication of the Work, when the price will be advanced to Eighteen Shillings.

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.
 I.—THOMAS USK: THE TESTAMENT OF LOVE.
 BOOK I.: PROLOGUE AND CHAPTERS I.—X.
 BOOK II.: CHAPTERS I.—XIV.
 BOOK III.: CHAPTERS I.—IX.
 II.—THE FLOWMANS TALE.

III.—JACK UPLAND.
 IV.—JOHN GOWER: THE PRAISE OF PEACE.
 V.—THOMAS HOCCLEVE: THE LETTER OF CUPID.
 VI.—THE SAME: TO THE KINGES MOST NOBLE GRACE.
 TO THE LORDS AND KNIGHTES OF THE GARTER.
 VII.—HENRY SCOGAN: A MORAL BALADE.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Two new Sections, 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d. each.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

DISTRUSTFUL—DOOM. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. 2s. 6d.
 FLEXUOSITY—FOISTER. Edited by Mr. HENRY BRADLEY. 2s. 6d.

FORTHCOMING ISSUE TO BE PUBLISHED ON JULY 1, 1897.

DOOM—DZIGGETAI: being a Double Section. Edited by Dr. MURRAY (completing Vol. III.). 5s.

Crown 4to, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

A STUDENT'S DICTIONARY of ANGLO-SAXON. By HENRY SWEET, M.A.

Brevity and conciseness have been aimed at throughout. The meanings are given in plain modern English. References have been omitted, irregular forms are noticed very briefly, and cognate words are given only in Old English itself.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"Compiled with the greatest care, and laudably free from those more than doubtful forms which have found their way into the earlier dictionaries."

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, Vol. I., 12s. 6d.

BURNET'S HISTORY of MY OWN TIME: the Reign of Charles II. A New Edition based on that of M. J. ROUTH, D.D., and Edited by OSMUND AIRY, M.A.

SCOTSMAN.—"There can be no doubt that this edition will at once take its place as the leading edition of the work for the use of modern readers."

Just published, 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, pp. lxx.—876, 18s.

BRITISH MORALISTS: being Selections from Writers principally of the Eighteenth Century. Edited, with an Introduction and Analytical Index, by L. A. SELBY-BIGGE, M.A., formerly Fellow and Lecturer of University College, Oxford.

SCOTSMAN.—"A reader interested in the ethical thought of this country in the last century could find few books, if any, by which he could be better informed."

Second Edition, Revised, extra fcap. 8vo, half-buckram, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PRINCE. By Niccolò Machiavelli. Translated from the Italian by NINIAN HILL THOMPSON, M.A.

NOW READY, Vol. I., Part II., WEST and WEST-CENTRAL PHRYGIA.

With Illustrations. Royal 8vo, linen, 21s. net.

THE CITIES and BISHOPRICS of PHRYGIA: being an Essay of the Local History of Phrygia from the Earliest Times to the Turkish Conquest. By W. M. RAMSAY, D.C.L., LL.D.

Part I., THE LYCOS VALLEY and SOUTH-WESTERN PHRYGIA, has been already published, price 18s. net.

ATHENÆUM.—"Professor Ramsay grasps with a sure hand epigraphy, numismatics, philology, geography, and bends all to his purposes. Every inscription that he reproduces in this volume gains in lucidity and authority by his handling of it; and of every city which he treats we rest assured that we now know all that is to be known at the present moment, and far more than has been known at any previous moment since the East shut out the West from Anatolia."

Small 4to, with Five Plates, stiff boards, 12s. 6d. net. GREEK PAPYRI. Series II.

NEW CLASSICAL FRAGMENTS and other GREEK and LATIN PAPYRI. Edited by BERNARD P. GRENFELL, M.A., sometime Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Queen's College; and ARTHUR S. HUNT, M.A., Craven Fellow, late Scholar of Queen's College.

SMITH (ADAM).—LECTURES on JUSTICE, POLICE, REVENUE, and ARMS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by EDWIN CANNAN. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

Now ready, Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Portrait and Facsimile, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

STEELE. Selections from the "Tatler," "Spectator," and "GUARDIAN." With Introduction and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON.

Just published, Second Edition, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE POEMS of LAURENCE MINOT. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by JOSEPH HALL, M.A.

In this (Second) Edition the Quotations have been corrected by the aid of improved Texts which have appeared since the issue of the First Edition, and the Glossary has been revised.

A HISTORY of GREECE from its CONQUEST by the ROMANS to the PRESENT TIME, B.C. 146 to A.D. 1864. By GEORGE FINLAY, LL.D. A New Edition, Revised throughout, and in part Re-written, with considerable Additions, by the AUTHOR, and Edited by H. F. TOZER, M.A. 7 vols., 8vo, £3 10s.

ITALY and her INVADERS. With Plates and Maps. By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L. (A.D. 376-553).

Vols. I.-II., THE VISIGOTHIC INVASIONS—THE HUNNISH INVASION—THE VANDAL INVASION, and the HERULIAN MUTINY. Second Edition. 21s.

Vols. III.-IV., THE OSTROGOTHIC INVASION—THE IMPERIAL RESTORATION. Second Edition. 36s.

Vols. V.-VI., THE LOMBARD INVASION, and the LOMBARD KINGDOM. 2s.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"Mr. Hodgkin writes like a man in earnest..... He has risen up to the level of a great subject. He has spared no research, and he is as disinclined to mere rhetoric as he is to unveridical statements. His work must prove of the utmost service, and is one of the most valuable additions recently made to historical literature. It is scholarly, correct, and convincing on disputed points; it is written in a style at once bold and finished."

THE DYNASTY of THEODOSIUS; or, Seventy Years' STRUGGLE with the BARBARIANS. By the SAME AUTHOR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.—"As a popular account it leaves little to be desired."

THE HISTORY of SICILY from the EARLIEST TIMES. By the late E. A. FREEMAN, M.A., D.C.L.

Vols. I. and II. 8vo, £2 2s.

Vol. III., THE ATHENIAN and CARTHAGINIAN INVASIONS. 21s.

Vol. IV., FROM THE TYRANNY of DIONYSIUS to the DEATH of AGATHOKLES. Edited from Posthumous MSS., by ARTHUR J. EVANS, M.A. 21s.

TIMES.—"The conception is a grand one, and for its adequate treatment the name and reputation of Professor Freeman are a more than sufficient guarantee..... A monument of learning, industry, and ingenuity."

A HISTORY of FRANCE. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D. Third Edition. In 3 vols. Crown 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I., to 1453.

Vol. II., 1453-1624.

Vol. III., 1624-1793.

A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. By O. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Colonial Office, London.

INTRODUCTION. With 8 Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Vol. I., THE MEDITERRANEAN and EASTERN COLONIES (exclusive of India). With 11 Maps. 6s.

Vol. II., THE WEST INDIAN COLONIES. With 12 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Vol. III., WEST AFRICA. With 5 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Vol. IV., SOUTH and EAST AFRICA. In Two Parts. With 11 Maps. 9s. 6d.

Also sold separately, Part I., HISTORICAL, 6s. 6d. Part II., GEOGRAPHICAL, 3s. 6d.

ACADEMY.—"Mr. Lucas enjoys access to materials of the first importance; and he can deal with those materials with the skill which comes of daily practice."

SOUTH AFRICA.—"A better geographical treatise could scarcely be desired."

A CATALOGUE OF THE CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1303.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.,
PUBLISHERS AND IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS
in all Languages.
New and Standard Books in all Branches kept in Stock or supplied
promptly to order.
Foreign Periodicals supplied.
Catalogues and terms on application.

LARGE STOCK OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS
in all Departments of Literature.
LATEST CATALOGUES—
No. 51 SEMITICA—OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY. (1443 lots.)
No. 52, 54, MISCELLANEOUS. (763, 723 lots.)
No. 53, PHILOSOPHY. (340 lots.)

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General
Literature (No. 114, for March), at reduced prices, post free.
Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street
East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

BOOKS, a CATALOGUE OF SECOND-HAND.
(1) Pertaining to Annals, Finance, and Political Economy
in general, post free; (2) General Literature, two stamps.
C. HERBERT, 323, Gower Road, London, E.C.
Libraries Purchased.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate
prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities
presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing
illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of the most Recent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating
subjects required.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and EXPORTERS,
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co.
Telegrams: MORFUSIL, LONDON. [Established 1819.]

AUTHORS OF NOVELS and SHORT STORIES
adapted for Serial Publication are invited to communicate with Mr. J. F. Spence's Newspaper SERIAL AGENCY, 21, Paternoster
Square, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street,
London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED BOOKPLATES.—Any good Plates, or parcels, purchased for cash.—Henry Henshaw, Second-hand
Bookseller, 16, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1894. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

WANTED, BOOKPLATES of Bozman, Walker,
Giles, Revelley, Cabot, Pace; also any Old Specimens. Very best prices will be paid.—Moore, 6, Trelawn Road, Leyton, Essex.

E. DURRANT & CO., Chelmsford.
Perkins's (J.) Elements of Materia Medica. Vol. II., Part 2.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

TUESDAY NEXT (April 27th), at 3 o'clock.—TEMPEST ANDER-SON, M.D., B.Sc.—FIRST OF FOUR LECTURES ON "VOLCANOES."
(The Tyndall Lectures.) Half-a-Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY (April 29th).—The Rev. Canon AINGER, M.A., LL.D., will be UNABLE to DELIVER his FOUR LECTURES ON "SOME LEADERS in the POETIC REVIVAL of 1760-1820"—COWPER, BURNS, WORDSWORTH, SCOTT.

SATURDAY (May 1st), at 3 o'clock.—The Rev. J. P. MAHAFY, D.D.—FIRST OF THREE LECTURES ON "THE GREEK THEATRE
according to RECENT DISCOVERIES." Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.
FRIDAY EVENING (April 30th), at 9 o'clock.—Professor J. J.
THOMSON, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., on "CATHODE RAYS." To these Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

COURSE of TEN Popular LECTURES on BIRDS will be delivered in the LECTURE ROOM in the SOCIETY'S GARDENS, Regent's Park, on THURSDAYS, at 5 p.m., commencing MAY 6th, by Mr. F. E. BEDDARD, M.A., F.R.S., Professor to the Society.
Tickets for the whole Course, including Entrance to the Gardens,
10s. each; or 1s. each Lecture, not including Entrance, to be obtained at the Society's Office, 3, Hanover Square, W. Fellows admitted free.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-
The ANNUAL EXHIBITION will OPEN on MONDAY, April 26th.
SIR FREDERICK H. HERKOMER, Jun., Secretary (pro tem.).

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

LORD LISTER, Pres. R.S., will preside at the 107th ANNIV-ERSARY DINNER of the ROYAL LITERARY FUND, on WEDNESDAY, May 5th, at the WHITEHALL ROOMS, HOTEL
METROPOLITAN, S.W., at 7 for 7.30 p.m. precisely.

SECOND LIST OF STEWARDS.

JOHN ANDERSON, ESQ., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
R. ROWAND ANDERSON, ESQ., LL.D., F.R.S.E.
ROBERT BARNES, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.C.S.
R. S. FANOURT BARNES, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S.E.
RICHARD BENTLEY, ESQ.
SIR HENRY BESSEMER, F.R.S.
WILLIAM BLACKWOOD, ESQ.
R. EDWARD BRODHURST, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
THOMAS BUZZARD, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P.
HENRY W. CAVE, ESQ.
PROFESSOR JOHN CLELAND, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.
THE REV. THE PRESIDENT OF CORPUS.
GEORGE COWELL, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
THE LORD DAVEY, F.R.S.
CLINTON T. DENT, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
FRANCIS WILSON, ESQ., LL.D., F.R.S.
HON. ARTHUR D. ELLIOT.
SIR JOHN EVANS, K.C.B., F.R.S.
WICKHAM FLOWER, ESQ.
MICHAEL FOSTER, ESQ., M.D., D.C.L., F.L.S.
J. P. GASTON, ESQ.
F. W. GIBBS, ESQ., C.B., Q.C.
SIR ROBERT GIFFEN, K.C.B., LL.D., F.R.S.
I. GOLLAZCO, ESQ.
A. PEARCE GOULD, ESQ., F.R.C.S., M.B.
W. E. GREEN, ESQ.
JONATHAN HUTCHINSON, ESQ., LL.D., M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.S.
DR. HENRY JACKSON, LL.D.
THE LORD KELVIN, F.R.S.
JOHN LEIGHTON, ESQ., F.R.A.
J. NORMAN LOCKYER, ESQ., C.B., F.R.S.
T. NORTON LONGMAN, ESQ.
H. LOWENFELD, ESQ.
FRANK MCLEAN, ESQ., LL.D., F.R.S.
JOHN MACINTYRE, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S.E.
GEORGE W. MACKENZIE, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
FREDERICK MACMILLAN, ESQ.
SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B., K.C.V.O.
N. STORY MASELYNE, ESQ., F.R.S.
PROFESSOR HENRY A. MILES, F.R.S.
C. LLOYD MORGAN, ESQ.
JOHN MURRAY, ESQ., F.R.A.
DR. JOHN MURRAY, LL.D., F.R.S.
EDWARD NETTLESHIP, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
JOHN W. OGLE, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S.
PROFESSOR THOMAS OLIVER, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S.E.
HERBERT W. PAGE, ESQ., F.R.C.S.
J. C. PARKINSON, ESQ.
SIR RICHARD QUAIN, BART., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
THOMAS RALEIGH, ESQ.
MAJOR F. I. RICARDE-SEAFER, F.R.S.E.
BARON FERDINAND DE ROTHSCHILD, M.P.
SIR WILLIAM ROBERTS, M.D., F.R.S.
THE REV. THE MASTER OF ST. JOHN'S, CAMBRIDGE.
PROFESSOR C. S. SHERRINGTON, M.D., F.R.S.
HON. W. F. D. SMITH, M.P.
WILLIAM STEBBING, ESQ.
W. DOMETT STONE, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.S.
J. WILSON SWAN, ESQ., F.R.S.
R. LAWSON TAIT, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.S.
T. SLINGSBY TANNER, ESQ.
THE LORD WALSHINGHAM, F.R.S.
THE REV. DR. WACE.
G. KNIGHT WATSON, ESQ., F.S.A.
HERMANN WEBER, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P.
HENRY WILDE, ESQ., F.R.S.
C. THEODORE WILLIAMS, ESQ., M.D., F.R.C.P.
E. PERCEVAL WRIGHT, ESQ., M.D.
PROFESSOR SYDNEY YOUNG, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Gentlemen invited to be Stewards are requested to be so kind as to reply as soon as possible to the Secretary,
A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS.
7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

TO LITERARY MEN and others.—Experienced
M.D. OFFERS HOME to RESIDENT PATIENT or
BOARDER. Good home in sheltered part of Harrogate. Hunting,
Golf, Fishing, &c. Special advantages for Photography, and exceptionally good Library. No children. Close to Baths and Wells.
References given and required.—Apply M.D. Literary Club, Prospect
Hotel, Harrogate.

EDUCATIONAL.

SWITZERLAND.—Highly recommended HOME-
SCHOOL for a limited number of girls. Exceptional advantages for Study of Languages and Arts. Visiting Professors. Beautiful situation. Health studied.—Prospectus, Miss HENRI, Bienne.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.—SCHOLARSHIPS.
1897.—EXAMINATION, JULY 6th, 7th. One of £50, two of
£30, and Minor Scholarships of £15 to £30. Candidates to be under 16 years of age.
For particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—An EXAMINA-
TION will be held in July next for all up not less than FIVE
RESIDENT, FIVE NON-RESIDENT QUEEN'S SCHOLARSHIPS,
and TWO EXHIBITIONS.—Details may be obtained from the HEAD
MASTER, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 1st, 1897.
Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the collegiate regulations.
The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £500 are awarded annually.
The Medical School contains large Lecture Rooms and well-appointed Laboratories for Practical Teaching, as well as Dissecting Rooms, Museum, Library, &c.
A large Recreation Ground has recently been purchased.
For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

TYPE-WRITING neatly, accurately, and ex-
pediently executed. Scientific MSS. a speciality.—Miss
MARTIN, 19, Beaumont Street, Portland Place, W.

TYPE-WRITING (Remington Machine), 10d. per 1,000 words.—Authors' MSS. COPIED with accuracy and returned promptly.—Address "CYPRUS," Willing's Advertisement
Office, 162, Piccadilly, W.

MEMORY.—Prof. A. LOISETTE'S ASSIMI-
LATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM.
The last, most complete and perfect edition. Arranged for Self-
Instruction.
Mind-Wandering cured. Speaking without notes. Indispensable in preparing for examinations. Any book learned in one reading.
Cloth bound, with portrait and autograph. Price net 2 vols. 50 cents.
American, 10s. 6d. English. Post free.
Prospectus with opinions of EDUCATORS, SCIENTIFIC, PROFESSIONAL,
and BUSINESS MEN all over the world free.
Address, A. LOISETTE, 237, Fifth Avenue, New York; or
NOT SOLD ELSEWHERE. 200, REGENT STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c.,
&c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free.
FRANCIS RAYNSCROFT, Manager.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY.

Caw's Safety Fountain Pen.

Caw's Stylographic Pen.

THE WESTMINSTER BUDGET.

A USEFUL COMPANION FOR THE WRITING DESK.

"Everybody agrees with Lord Lytton's king-cardinal that 'the pen is mightier than the sword.' As in other matters in this our day, it goes without saying that there are pens and pens. We are not confined to the reed, the stick, or the goose-quill for writing purposes. The Americans have changed all that. To-day the greatest dunce in facts knows that our cousins across the sea have their almost perpetual ink-well pen within itself, known as the Fountain pen, and also that smaller arrangement for the pocket, the Stylograph. Both are progressive inventions. When these items for writers first came into service there were little faults in their construction that made the user cry out, 'Bother this pen!' But those little irregularities are almost, if not quite, past history. And in many points the Caw Pen Company has been the magician. Caw's Safety Fountain and Stylograph pens have, because of their special points, a repute beyond most of their neighbours on the market. One of the little benefits of the Caw pens is that the pen is always in a well of ink, so that it never gets dry, and from this it follows that there is always a supply of the necessary fluid when the pen is in use, and further the pen never gets choked up; but the great feature of these Caw Safety Pens is the hitherto non-existent advantage that the pen need not be carried in a horizontal position, but can lie in the waistcoat pocket, or be held upside down, without possibility of leakage of ink. Then the 'Hexagon' stylo-pen, as its name infers, is not made as round as a rolling-pin, but is a bevelled plinth, and from this cause it has the happy quality of keeping on the spot where you put it down; hence the pen does not skate off your desk as if it were marble. The cost of the pens varies, of course, according to size and finish. You can invest in Caw's pens in any amount from 5s. up to 30s., and any one of them is a boon in writing. But they will give you all details in regard to each and every one at your stationer's, at the stores, or at the village chemist's shop. The British depôt is 46, Holborn Viaduct. M.P.'s and busy business men, make a note of Caw's pens. There may be a mine of wealth buried in the suggestion."

The Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Pencil.

TRUTH.

"The latest Yankee notion in lead pencils: the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

THE EVENING NEWS AND POST (London).

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the 'Blaisdell Paper Pencil.' Penknives, blackened thumbs, and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

BLACK AND WHITE.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

THE LADY.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the 'Blaisdell' variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

"Has the death-day of the cedar pencil arrived? It may be so. At any rate, the 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is an innovation. Your pencil is never pointless—surely a boon to all busy people, be they writers, printers' readers, or warehouse folks; or others, a part of whose business it is to set their mark on this or that item or article."

MORNING LEADER (London).

"The ordinary blacklead pencil in its wooden case if of good quality does not promise much scope to the inventive genius thirsting to discover a real improvement, but a clever American firm have a design in lead pencils that deserves popularity for its ingenuity. The lead is as usual, but round it is wound a thin strip of paper to the ordinary pencil thickness, and slightly notched at intervals, so that a small portion can be removed at a time as the lead wears down, producing an ever-sharpened pencil, always in working order. The new device is known as the 'Blaisdell Self-Sharpening Paper Pencil.'"

THE QUEEN.

"In these hurrying days any invention that tends to economise time and labour is a universal boon, and such a one is the 'Blaisdell' paper pencil, which is winning golden opinions in America, and is now coming into use on this side the Atlantic. What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening! and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated. The 'Blaisdell' pencils are made in various colours."

The BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is

Manufactured in 5 degrees of Graphite, viz.: HB, H, B, HH, BB, price 2d. each.
5 varieties of Colours: Blue, Red, Green, Yellow, Soft Black 3d. ..

Shape, size, and use exactly the same as a cedar pencil;

BUT,

It is covered with paper—not wood! Its point is always perfect—no chips, no dust. It does not waste in re-sharpening—the only wear is the wear of the lead in writing.

SAVES TIME, TROUBLE, AND MONEY.

 If not found at any Stationers, a Set of 3 Black and 2 Coloured Pencils will be sent Post Free to any address in the United Kingdom for 1s., by THE BLAISDELL PENCIL COMPANY, Limited, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8 6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4 6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2 6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY. BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE
English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED,
St. Dunstan House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

JARROLD & SONS' LIST

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL. THE GREEN BOOK;

Or, Freedom Under the Snow.

By the Author of "Black Diamonds," "Pretty Michal," "Midst the Wild Carpathians."

With Engraved Portrait of Author, 6s. [Fifth Edition.

"Altogether a great book and worth all the novels of native growth we are likely to see this season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"In its panoramic width of outlook, its inexhaustible fertility of invention and barbaric splendour of colouring, Maurus Jókai's great novel challenges comparison with Tolstoy's 'War and Peace.' There is a succession of brilliant tableaux. To read this remarkable book is like witnessing a magnificent Oriental pageant. It is of enthralling interest and takes rank with the great novels of the century."—Spectator.

"The author has given us a group of striking personalities, of every one of whom it is not too much to say that it is brilliantly drawn and vividly presented. From every point of view 'The Green Book' is a book to be read. It is a work of fine art."—Daily Chronicle.

Mr. Courtney says in the Daily Telegraph: "It is truly an astounding book. In force and fire and prodigious variety he reminds one of the elder Dumas."

HIS DOUBLE SELF; Or, the Transformation of Keith Winstanley.

By E. COURTIS,

Author of "Dr. Malochi," "Queen or Bondswoman," "Lamar the Witch," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

"The tale is not without a certain cleverness in working out a plot such as Dickens only, among modern novelists, could keep seriously going. There is something enjoyable in the plausible fluency with which the tale maintains its air of mystery."—Scotsman.

NEW "GREENBACK" NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

ALLANSON'S LITTLE WOMAN.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

"A story which can be enjoyed by every lover of wholesome fiction. The book is well put together and is a welcome relief from the novels of the hysterical school of writers."—Publishers' Circular.

THE THIRTEENTH BRYDAIN.

By MARGARET MOULE.

Author of "Wingrove's Ways," "Dick's Wife," "Miss Maidment," &c.

"The story is very cleverly told. The manner in which the cutie came to pass is very finely worked out by the gifted authoress. The characters are so splendidly presented as to become very real persons to the reader. It has been so with all this lady's books, but her best qualities and gifts as a writer are more fully shown in this, her latest work."—Western Daily Mercury.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.
At all Libraries and the Booksellers.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL OF PAINTING.

A Series of Autotype Reproductions of Works by JOHN SELL COTMAN, OLD CROME, STARK, LADBROOKE, BRIGHT, MIDDLETON, DANIEL, LEMAN, LOUND, &c. Forty Autotype Plates, mounted on grey boards, in portfolio. Price Ten Guinea net.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.

This important Series of over Four Hundred Permanent Carbon Reproductions of the chief Pictures in this magnificent collection includes representative selections from the Italian, Flemish, Dutch, Spanish, French, and English Schools. By the aid of the most recent improvements in Photographic Science, absolutely faithful and Permanent Copies have been secured, on a scale which adequately represents the Original Paintings. These are printed in rich brown pigments, on specially prepared paper, size 18 by 15 inches, and are sold at a uniform price of TWELVE SHILLINGS EACH.

G. F. WATTS, R.A.,

SIR E. BURNE-JONES,

D. G. ROSSETTI.

An Extensive Selection of the Works of these Masters at prices ranging from Three Shillings and Sixpence to Three Guinea.

Full particulars of Autotype Permanent Reproductions from the Old and Modern Masters sent post free on application to

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, LTD.

THE UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE and FREE REVIEW: a Monthly Magazine. Edited by "DEMOCRITUS."

CONTENTS OF THE MAY NUMBER: Bentley and Anthony Collins—Roden Noel—Tourgenieff—The Downfall of Olive Schreiner—Marie Corelli and her Public—Moral Instruction without Theology—The Social Purity Hallucination—Current Pseudo-Philosophy—Slumland by Night—William Blake and Modern Problems—The Social Evil and the Moral Law—Periodicals—New Books.

PSEUDO-PHILOSOPHY at the END of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By HUGH MORTIMER OCEIL. 1. AN IRRATIONALIST TALE (KIDD, DRUMMOND, BALFOUR). 10s. net.

A vigorous Refutation of the Works of the Three Irrationalists.

THE SAXON and the CELT. By

JOHN M. ROBERTSON. 8s. net.

CONTENTS: I. The Question of Race. 1. The Present Irish Trouble. 2. English and Irish. 3. French and Germans. 4. The Problem of Race Origins. 5. The Naming of Celts, Gauls and Teutons. 6. "Celtic" and "Teutonic" History. 7. The Bible of Race Instinct. II. The Lessons of Irish History. 1. The Causation of the Past. 2. The Verdict of Europe. III. Hill Burton on the Scottish Celts. IV. J. R. Green on Celts and Teutons. V. The Duke of Argyll on Irish History. VI. Mr. Goldwin Smith's Polemic. VII. Mr. Froude on Ireland. VIII. Mr. Balfour on Irish Civilisation. Epilogue: A Programme for Ireland.

Will be published in April.—2s. 6d. net.

THE BLIGHT OF RESPECTABILITY:

an Anatomy of the Disease and a Theory of Curative Treatment. By GEOFFREY MORTIMER.

CONTENTS: 1. What is Respectability? 2. The Pathology of the Disease. 3. Ladies and Gentlemen. 4. Specific Symptoms of the Malady in Women. 5. Respectability and Morals. 6. Cultured Gentility. 7. Plutocracy. 8. Villainy. 9. The Tyranny of Respectability. 10. Respectable Civilisation and After. 11. Conclusion.

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, LIMITED,
16, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.

Now ready, 8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 270, APRIL, 1897.

CONTENTS.

- | | |
|----------------------------|--|
| 1. QUEEN VICTORIA. | 5. LAMMENAIS. |
| 2. THE PSALMS IN HISTORY. | 6. THE HUMAN MIND and ANIMAL INTELLIGENCE |
| 3. BENJAMIN JOWETT. | 7. RISE of the GERMAN INFANTRY. |
| 4. FRENCH ART. | 8. HISTORICAL WRITINGS of FRANÇOIS PIERRE. |
| 5. THE JERNINGHAM LETTERS. | 9. THE POLITICAL SITUATION. |
| 6. CRIME IN ENGLAND. | |
| 7. THE POETRY OF SPORT. | |

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST

Just ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MAY, 1897.

1. DEAR FAUSTINA. By RHODA BROUGHTON. Chaps. XIII.-XV.
2. A POET OF SPRING.
3. A HUMAN BUNDLE.
4. A LAND OF DERELICTS.
5. DEUS IN MACHINA.
6. AN UNAPPRECIATED DIARIST.
7. SENT BACK by the SEA.
8. THE CARTHUSIANS.
9. TWO TALES from the RUSSIAN of ANTON TSCHECHOW.
10. COLERIDGEIANA.
11. OUR VENETIAN BABY.
12. REDPOLL'S MARRIAGE.

SEVENTEENTH EDITION NOW READY.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Forty-one Years in India:

FROM SUBALTERN TO COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

By FIELD-MARSHAL
LORD ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR, V.C.

Besides Maps and Plans, the Volumes contain Portraits on Steel and Copper.

NEW NOVELS.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

NOW READY.

IN A COUNTRY TOWN.

A STORY UNFOUNDED ON FACT.

By HONOR PERCEVAL.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NEAR NEIGHBOURS."

THE CAREER OF CLAUDIA.

By F. M. PEARD.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "EAST LYNNE."

ASHLEY.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 2s. 6d.; green cloth, 2s.

FLORENCE MONTGOMERY'S STORIES.

I.
MISUNDERSTOOD. Twenty-fifth Edition. With 6 Illustrations by Du Maurier. Crown 8vo, 6s.II.
THROWN TOGETHER. Twentieth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.III.
SEAFORTH. Ninth Thousand, with Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.IV.
THE BLUE VEIL, and other Stories. Small crown 8vo, 3s.THE HEAVENS. An Illustrated Handbook of Popular Astronomy. By AMÉDÉE GUILLEMIN. Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.S., and RICHARD PROCTOR, F.R.A.S. Demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.CURIOSITIES of NATURAL HISTORY. By FRANÇOIS TREVELYAN BUCKLAND. late Her Majesty's Inspector of Fisheries. Popular Edition, with a few Illustrations. Each Series separately, in small 8vo, price 2s. 6d.THE MODERN COOK. By Charles ELME FRANCESCHI, late Maitre d'Hotel to Her Majesty. Demy 8vo, Thirtieth Edition, containing 1,500 Recipes and 60 Illustrations, 7s. 6d.THE COOK'S GUIDE. By the Author of "THE MODERN COOK." Sixty-fourth Thousand. Small 8vo, containing 1,000 Recipes, with Illustrations, 6s.
"An admirable manual for every household."—Times.A YOUNGER SON'S COOKERY BOOK
By a YOUNGER SON'S DAUGHTER. Crown 8vo, 6s.RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

IBSEN.

In view of the approaching Ibsen season in London, the announcement of the following Cheap Editions of Separate Plays by Ibsen will be of interest:—

Crown 8vo, paper covers, price 1s. each.

THE LADY from the SEA. (1888.)
Translated by Mrs. F. E. ARCHER.THE WILD DUCK. (1884.) Translated by Mrs. F. E. ARCHER.GHOSTS. (1881.) Translated by WILLIAM ARCHER.ROSMSERSHOLM. (1886.) Translated by CHARLES ARCHER.AN ENEMY of the PEOPLE. (1882.) Translated by Mrs. ELEANOR MARX AVELING.

Paper covers, 2s.

A DOLL'S HOUSE. With a number of Photographic Illustrations.

COUNT TOLSTOY'S LONGEST AND MOST MAGNIFICENT WORK.

IN TWO DOUBLE VOLUMES, 7s.

WAR and PEACE. By Count Tolstoy.

Contains 1,800 pages, printed in very clear type. This is not only one of the finest, but probably one of the longest novels ever written, occupying, as it does in this edition, 1,800 large and closely printed pages. Notwithstanding its vast length, its multitude of figures, the number of events it deals with, the interest of "War and Peace" is not only intense, but unbroken throughout the immense march of the story, so that no reader, great though the undertaking is, will fail to read to the end once he has started on the book.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

NEW EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. With Numerous Illustrations.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS. Second Edition."Mr. Havelock Ellis belongs, in some measure, to the Continental school of anthropologists; but while equally methodical in the collection of facts, he is far more cautious in the invention of theories, and he has the further distinction of being not only able to think, but able to write. His book is a sane and impartial consideration, from a psychological and anthropological point of view, of a subject which is certainly of primary interest."—Athenaeum.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FOURTH EDITION, COMPLETELY REVISED.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. Albert Moll."Marks a step of some importance in the study of some difficult physiological and psychological problems which have not yet received much attention in the scientific world of England."—Nature.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE TWO CYCLING BOOKS OF THE SEASON.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, elegant, 2s. 6d.

LADY CYCLING. By Miss F. J. ERSKINE."Should be useful to many a novice, and, indeed, if they would only act on the advice it gives, to many who are not novices."—Times.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, elegant, 2s. 6d.

ALL ROUND CYCLING. By Sir

B. W. RICHARDSON, G. LACY HILLIER, EVELYN EVERETT GREEN, C. RIVERS VINE, JOHN WATSON, F.C.S., F. A. THOMAS, B.A.

"A little book that cyclists will know how to value, of whatever description they may be."—National Observer."A useful and entertaining volume."—Daily Mail."Bound to interest all cyclists."—Black and White.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

IMPORTANT ADDITIONS.

WORKS BY ROBERT BROWNING.

THREE VOLS. NOW READY.

VOL. I.

PIPPA PASSES, and other Poetic Dramas. By ROBERT BROWNING. With an Introductory Note by FRANK RINDER.

VOL. II.

A BLOT in the 'SCUTCHEON, and other Poetic Dramas. By ROBERT BROWNING. With an Introductory Note by FRANK RINDER.

VOL. III.

DRAMATIC ROMANCES and LYRICS, and SORDELLO. By ROBERT BROWNING. To which is Prefixed an Appreciation of Browning by Miss E. DIXON.

BINDINGS.

The above Volumes are supplied in the following Bindings: IN GREEN ROAN, Boxed, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s. 6d. net.

IN ART LINEN, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s.

IN WHITE LINEN, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s.

IN BROCADE, 2 vols. in Shell Case to match (each vol. with Frontispiece), 4s. per Set, or 3 vols. 6s. per Set.

And in the ordinary SHILLING BINDINGS, green cloth, cut edges, and blue cloth, uncut edges (without Photogravure).

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

MACMILLAN & CO'S
NEW BOOKS.

BY THE LATE

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.
CYPRIAN:

HIS LIFE, HIS TIMES, HIS WORK.

By EDWARD WHITE BENSON, D.D., D.C.L.,

Sometime Archbishop of Canterbury.

8vo, 21s. net.

CHURCH TIMES.—"If we could do so we should like to follow out each of the divisions of this book. Almost every section of each chapter is engaged in the discussion of some important and interesting subject."

BY SIR ARCHIBALD GEIKIE.

ANCIENT VOLCANOES of GREAT

BRITAIN. By Sir ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S., &c. With 7 Maps and numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. super-royal 8vo, 30s. net.

TIMES.—"An exhaustive treatise, which may be supplemented by the researches of the future, but which can hardly be superseded.....To geologists it is unnecessary to commend it; to all who are interested in the checked career of this earth of ours it will be found to abound with interest."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE QUEEN of the MOOR: a Tale of Dartmoor in the Days of Waterloo. By FREDERIC ADYE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Lovers of the picturesque in nature will render grateful thanks to Mr. Abye for the admirable sketches he gives of romantic Dartmoor. There is a charm about these descriptions which remind us of those of Mr. R. D. Blackmore. We never tire of them, for they are never twice the same. Each time we get a new glimpse, and each time we feel more strongly drawn to this land of heath and tor."

1897 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK

A Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World for the Year 1897. Thirty-fourth Annual Publication. Revised after Official Returns. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"It is, as usual, the most important of all the books of reference for the politician and the statistician."

BY THE LATE REV. F. J. A. HORT, D.D.

THE CHRISTIAN ECOLESIA A

Course of Lectures on the Early History and Early Conceptions of the Ecclesia, and Four Sermons. By FENTON JOHN ANTHONY HORT, D.D., Lady Margaret's Reader in Divinity in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN

SECONDARY SCHOOLS. Suggestions to Teachers and Parents for Lessons on the Old and New Testaments, Early Church History, Christian Evidences, &c. By Rev. GEORGE C. BELL, M.A., Master of Marlborough College.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. A

Commentary on its Nature and Growth. By JESSE MACY, M.A., Professor of Political Science in Iowa College.

VOLUME IX. NOW READY.

LIFE and LABOUR of the PEOPLE in LONDON. Edited by CHARLES BOOTH. Vol. IX. Comparisons, Survey, and Conclusions (with an Abstract of Vols. I.-IX.). Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

MORNING POST.—"The inquiry itself is complete; and it is not too much to say that it is a piece of economic work unequalled for the vastness of its range and the thoroughness of its accomplishments."

SECOND EDITION, REVISED, NOW READY.

THE THEORY of INTERNATIONAL

TRADE with SOME of its APPLICATIONS to ECONOMIC POLICY. By Professor C. J. BASTABLE M.A., LL.D., Author of "Public Finance," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS:	PAGE
Mr. St. Loe Strachey's Essays	441
Unthinkables	441
Romance and Allegory	442
Nathaniel Hawthorne	443
Mountain Climbing	444
The Indian Village	444
Choir Stalls and their Carvings	445
Carthage and Canterbury	446
FROM CROWDED SHELVES	446
FICTION:
The Outspan—A Galahad of the Greeks—Midst the Wild Carpathians—Captain Castle—Allanson's Little Woman—A Passing Madness—Ivan Alexandrovitch—They that Sit in Darkness—The Queen of the Moor—God, Man, and the Devil—From Grub to Butterfly—That Affair Next Door ...	448
THE WEEK:
Chronicle of New Books	450
New Books Received	451
NOTES AND NEWS	451
"O. S."	453
LITERARY SKITFLIES	454
DR. JAMES MARTINBAU	455
ACADEMY PORTRAITS: XXIV., HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW	455
THE BOOK MARKET	456
MUSIC	456
SCIENCE	457
CORRESPONDENCE	458
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED	459

REVIEWS.

MR. ST. LOE STRACHEY'S ESSAYS.

From Grave to Gay. By J. St. Loe Strachey. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

WE are glad that Mr. St. Loe Strachey has found time, in the midst of his editorial labours, to reprint a selection from his essays in the Spectator. The subjects are exceedingly diverse, but a certain uniformity of tone pervades the book, resulting probably from the single standpoint from which the author looks on life and letters. The attitude is clearly defined in the first few papers, and our impression is strengthened by the chain of studies on the Puritans and the fragments of literary criticism. A clear-sighted view of human nature, a love of honesty, toleration and healthiness in all the details of life, much vigour, a desire to emphasise neglected commonplaces, a pleasant humour of the variety which we may call domestic, and considerable interest in the exposition of the minor moralities—these, with a clear, speaking style, make up the author's equipment. The book has a strong kinship with the journal from which it is reprinted, just as most volumes of essays in recent years have borne on them the impress of another and less serious periodical.

The first section, which is headed "Studies in Seriousness," is the least valuable. The "Study in Conversation" is a lucid and sensible piece of work, but the others seem to lack insight, form, and perfection of language, while their class is one to which these qualities are the essential of success. If a man will write on such themes, he can only redeem his work from the commonplace by great nicety of thought or delicacy of language. Mere sensible talk, even when garnished with familiar quotations, becomes more or less dull and superfluous. But in the section "The Humours of the Fray" Mr. St. Loe Strachey redeems his credit. Here, with very much the same kind of subject, he allows some measure of humour to temper his common sense, and the result is entertaining. The papers on "Every Boy in His Humour" are full of wise and witty things, though we are not quite sure that some of his sayings are not open to the terrible charge which he brings against the ordinary man in "Inane Jocularities." The whole thing is an attempt at something which we have seen little of since Mr. Hamerton's Human Intercourse—the talk of a kindly and cultivated man on the humours and oddities of the common round of life.

But it is in the "Puritans" and the "Literary Studies" that we find Mr. St. Loe Strachey at his best. His admiration for what is "clear and bright" in character and literature makes him a shrewd and kindly critic of Cromwell, Milton, and the Hutchinsons, and of those different Puritans—Pepys, Swift, and Abraham Lincoln. "A Puritan Courtship" and "A Puritan Micawber" are quaintly amusing, and in the two papers on "Puritan Politics" there is much to interest. If we are offended now and then by an over-rhetorical note or an excess of adulation, we are recompensed by the sanity of his judgment of Cromwell and the admirable portrait of Swift. The whole series of studies is so moderate in tone, so appreciative, vigorous and well-ordered, that whatever our private reading of history may have been we are compelled to assent to Mr. St. Loe Strachey's interpretation.

We have left the literary studies to the end, because in this direction lies the author's real gift. He has the insight, the true critical faculty; his chief fault lies in the lack of that synthetic power which makes a clear proof of a mere intuition. He gives us the bones of a fine criticism, he presents us with the observation, the mere record of the critical act, but he fails to give us the rigorous and accurate analysis of the psychical process. We may illustrate this from the essay on William Barnes, in which the Dorset poet is compared to Frederick Walker. The analogy has all the essentials of a good criticism, as every one who is familiar with the work of the two must admit; but when we come to the explanation of the comparison the critic takes refuge in generalities. So, too, in the most important essay in the book—the study of Stevenson—Mr. St. Loe Strachey accounts for the absence of the "true soul-satisfying quality" in Stevenson by the attitude in which he approached literature.

"Most men," he says, "begin by an over-mastering desire to say something, and then work out for themselves a style as adequate and as sound as they are able. Mr. Stevenson, on the other hand, began at the other end—learned first to write, and then looked out for something to write about."

Again, he explains the fault which prevented Stevenson's poetry from rising to the highest rank as "the lack of that true note of inevitability." Both of these criticisms are true and good, but not all the truth, or, at least, the truth stated too baldly and crudely—a note for a criticism rather than a criticism itself.

But it is time to have done with carping, and do justice to Mr. St. Loe Strachey's

